PRODUCTION AND EFFECT OF EVIDENCE

CHAPTER VII

OF THE BURDEN OF PROOF

101. Burden of proof.—Whoever desires any Court to give judgment as to any legal right or liability dependent on the existence of facts which he asserts, must prove that those facts exist.

When a person is bound to prove the existence of any fact, it is said that the burden of proof lies on that person.

Illustrations

(a) A desires a Court to give judgment that B shall be punished for a crime which A says B has committed.

A must prove that B has committed the crime.

(b) A desires a Court to give judgment that he is entitled to certain land in the possession of B, by reason of facts, which he asserts, and which B denies, to be true.

A must prove the existence of those facts.

102. On whom burden of proof lies.—The burden of proof in a suit or proceeding lies on that person who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side.

(a) A sues B for land of which B is in possession, and which, as A asserts, was left to A by the will of C, B's father.

If no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession.

Therefore the burden of proof is on A.

(b) A sues B for money due on a bond.

The execution of the bond is admitted, but B says that it was obtained by fraud, which A denies.

If no evidence were given on either side, A would succeed, as the bond is not disputed and the fraud is not proved.

Therefore the burden of proof is on B.

103. Burden of proof as to particular fact.—The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on that person who wishes the Court to believe in its existence, unless it is provided by any law that the proof of that fact shall lie on any particular person.

1. Burden of proof—Meaning and scope of.—As to meaning of "burden of proof" and the rules governing it, see 145 I.C. 413: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 211. See also A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 355.

Onus of proof in its primary sense means the duty of establishing a case. This remains throughout the entire case exactly where the pleadings originally place it. It never shifts. It is a question of law. In its secondary sense onus means no more than the duty of adducing evidence and in this sense the burden may shift constantly throughout the trial. This involves no question of law but one of fact only: A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 230. See also A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136; A.I.R. 1970 All. 51 (F.B.); 1977 Cr.L.J. 665; A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 276.

There is a difference between the burden of proof on the pleadings and the burden of adducing evidence. The former depends upon the facts asserted or denied and is determined by rules of substantive or statutory law or by presumption of law or fact. Such a burden never shifts. If the entire evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the tribunal feels it can make up its mind as to the truth or the version of either party, then the ultimate decision of the Court will not turn upon the burden. But where the Court finds that the evidence is conflicting or equally balanced so as to make it difficult for it to arrive at a determinate conclusion then the burden of proof on the pleadings turns the scale. The question of onus may also be decisive where one or both of the parties have not adduced any evidence at all on the particular issue. Then again in regard to the shifting of onus of the other kind, it would be inexpedient, even if it were possible, to lay down at what particular stage in the course of the evidence it shifts from one party to the other: 1956 An.W.R. 65.

Distinction between burden of proof as a matter of law and pleading and as a matter of adducing evidence: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 294 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1474; A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 103 (D.B.).

There is an essential distinction between "burden of proof" and "onus of proof"; burden of proof has two distinct meanings: (1) the burden of proof as a matter of law and pleadings; and (2) the burden of proof as a matter of adducing evidence; S. 101 deals with the first meaning and S. 102 with the second; the first does not change but remains constant whereas the second shifts. Where the claimant, by sufficient and acceptable evidence proves his case, the onus then shifts to the opposite party to establish such facts and circumstances which may dislodge or affect the claimants' evidence; thus, though the legal burden as a matter of law and pleadings remains constant, it changes often times as a matter of adducing evidence: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 308: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 28: (1982-1) 23 Guj.L.R. 785 (D.B.).

There is an essential distinction between burden of proof and onus of proof: burden of proof lies upon the person who has to prove a fact and it never shifts, but the onus of proof shifts: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136; A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 224: (1970) 1 Cut.W.R. 433.

The distinction between the legal burden and the evidentiary burden is important; legal burden does not shift but the evidentiary burden—"a continuous process of shifting of onus of proof"—does; it is more accurate to describe them as "burden of proof" and "onus of proof", respectively, to separately denote them (case law elaborately discussed). [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136 and A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 278, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Del. 70.

The party on whom the onus of proving the existence of a fact lies, must produce sufficient evidence thereof before the opposite party can be asked to adduce evidence to show that the fact does not exist; if the party having the initial burden does not discharge it, the fact is said to be "not proved"; but if the prima facie evidence of the first party is resulted by the opposite party, the fact is said to be "disproved". There is a similar distinction between "disbelieving" a statement and holding it to be "false"; disbelieving requires no evidence but involves only the process of reasoning; holding it false needs rebuttal evidence: 1966 I.T.J. 195: (1966) 61 I.T.R. 744 (All.).

The burden of establishing case rests on the party who asserts the affirmative: I.L.R. 35 Cal. 1051: 9 W.R. 190; 41 P.L.R. (J.&K.) 21; 1939 M.L.R. 86. Affirmation of facts and onus, see A.I.R. 1954 Tripura 11.

The rules of evidence contained in Chap. VII of the Evidence Act are no more than statements of rebuttable presumptions of law and do not appear to be necessarily exclusive or independent of each other as if operating in secluded or exclusive spheres. Courts have, in the exercise of their judicial judgment, to see as to which of these rules can consistently, with the dictates of justice and the facts and circumstances of a given case, operate together or separately in order to impose the burden of proof on the contesting litigants: Per Dua, J. in I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 290: 1962 Cur.L.J. 225.

An order or notification containing a recital, technically correct on the face of it, raises a presumption of fact under S. 114, Illus. (e). This presumption, however, is one of fact. It is an optional presumption. It can be displaced by circumstances indicating that the power lodged in an authority or official has not been exercised in accordance with the law. The original or stable onus laid down by S. 101 and S. 102 cannot be shifted by the use of S. 106, although the particular onus of proving facts and circumstances lying especially within the knowledge of the official who formed the opinion which resulted in the notification rests upon that official. The recital, if it is not defective, may obviate the need to look further. But, there may be circumstances in the case which impel the Court to look beyond it. And, at that stage, S. 106 can be invoked by the party assailing an order or notification. It is most unsafe in such cases for the official or authority concerned to rest content with non-disclosure of facts especially within his or its knowledge by relying on the sufficiency of a recital. Such an attitude may itself justify further judicial scrutiny. A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 183: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 133: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 763: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 17.

The full effect of evidence on record is determined not only in the context of the general duties imposed by Ss. 101 and 102 but also on special or particular duties imposed by Ss. 103 and 106; the outcome of lis is determined by appraisal of the totality of the facts, circumstances and presumptions in favour or against parties to the lis; it cannot for final appraisal at the end of the trial be split up into disjointed and disconnected parts as they came on the record at various stages through which the trial developed because of the procedural law; what is weighed at the end is one totality against another and not selected bits or scrapes of evidence against each other: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 183: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 133: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 763: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 17.

Per Krishna Rao, J. (in dissenting judgment): S. 101 gives effect to the ancient rule founded on considerations of good sense that the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of an issue has to prove it. It is well settled that the effect of the rule cannot be circumvented by manipulating the words of the issue: 1958 An.L.T. 985: I.L.R. (1959) Andh. Pra. 337: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 215 (F.B.).

The terms "burden of proof" and "onus probandi" are somewhat confusing; after issues have been framed, "onus probandi" is sometimes called "right to begun" which would fall on the party which would lose if no evidence is adduced by either side; after such evidence has been recorded, it is for the Judge to determine as to on which party the burden has shifted: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 887.

The strict meaning of "onus probandi" is that if no evidence is given by a party having the burden of proof the issue must be found against him: A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 156.

When it is contended that a power conferred by a statute is not merely discretionary but it is coupled with a duty to exercise it, it lies upon those who contend that an obligation exists to exercise the power to show that there is an obligation to exercise it: 1959 Nag.L.J. 506: (1960) 62 Bom.L.R. 86.

Onus and proof—Question whether onus is rightly placed on a party is a question of law—Whether onus is discharged is only a question of fact: A.I.R. 1967 All. 513. See also A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 199 (D.B.).

Rr. 1 and 3, Ch. X of the Delhi High Court Rules having the effect of requiring a defendant to examine his witnesses on commission before examination of the plaintiff's witnesses, held, do not in any way amend Ss. 101 to 103 which provide for placement of burden of proof: A.I.R. 1977 Del. 49 (D.B.).

An inquiry under the Commission of Inquiry Act, 1952 is not a lis; it is merely a fact finding exercise. The technical rules of "burden" embodied in S. 101 are not attracted to such proceedings even if the word "burden" is used by the Commission. Therefore, merely because in the inquiry into the killing of ten persons by the Police, the Commission asked the aggrieved persons and not the Police to lead evidence first, that order is not vitiated: A.I.R. 1993 All. 343 (D.B.). See however A.I.R. 1973 Bom. 171 [The directions by the Commission that the parties who claimed that the firing was unnecessary or that it was excessive should lead their evidence first and that the officers who resorted to the firing will lead their evidence later on, held, are inconsistent with the normal principles which should guide any Commission of inquiry and thus, such directions are liable to be set aside.]

2. Initial burden of proof.—The burden of proof as to any particular fact lies on the person who wishes the Court to believe it; if he fails to discharge the burden, his plea can be deemed to have been rejected for want of evidence: (1991-1) 99 Punj.L.R. 38.

Onus is always on the person who asserts a proposition or fact which is not self-evident: A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 66.

The general rule as to the onus of proof and consequent obligation of leading evidence on any particular fact lies on the party who alleges it and not on him who denies it: A.I.R. 1915 Lah. 445; A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 36; (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 369.

What plaintiff has to prove—Presence of reasonable and probable cause—Onus of proof: 29 Cut.L.T. 357.

Party putting forward claim must establish facts supporting claim: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 303: A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 255.

The burden is on the plaintiff to prove his case, and in this connection the position of the defendant who is impleaded at his own request and who denies the allegations in the plaint is not different from that of a defendant who is impleaded in the plaint. In the former case, the defendant need not make out a prima facie case before the plaintiff is asked to meet it: A.I.R. 1949 Ajmer 34. Also see A.I.R. 1980 All. 253 [It cannot be accepted on a proposition of law that the plaintiff has to prove by positive evidence a fact which cannot be in its knowledge and which is in the special knowledge of the defendant.]

When the plaintiff alleges existence of certain facts on which he bases his claim, an obligation is cast on him to prove the existence of those facts. In a given case, if the plaintiff on whom the onus of proving the existence of certain facts lies, does not lead any evidence at all or leads evidence which is not sufficient to prove his claim, then the defendant is not obliged to lead any evidence and the suit would be liable to be dismissed. But in a case where onus of an issue is wrongly placed, then the party on whom the onus is placed would be required to disprove the existence of facts which have not been proved by the party who have alleged them. [A.I.R. 1954 Raj. 83 (F.B.), Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 397, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1975 P.&H. 174: (1975) 77 Punj.L.R. 686 (F.B.).

Plaintiff to prove case set up in plaint—Defect in issues—Effects. See A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 45: I.L.R. (1955) 5 Raj. 191.

Essential facts constituting cause of action—Proof of—Burden on plaintiff unless it is admitted: A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 500.

Knowledge—Burden of proof is on plaintiff: I.L.R. 40 Pat. 488: (1962) 1 S.C.R. 492: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1474.

The plaintiff cannot obviously take advantage of the weakness of the defence. The plaintiff's case must stand or fall upon the evidence adduced by him: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 64; A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 558 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 242 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1948 Oudh 139; A.I.R. 1949 Ajmer 34; I.L.R. (1975) 1 Del. 445; A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 280 (Cal.); A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 50.

The burden of proving the case is always on the plaintiff who must adduce reliable and admissible evidence to prove the case. The plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title and not be sustained by any weakness in the case of defendant: A.I.R. 1991 Madh. Pra. 15. See also A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 35; A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 95.

Where the initial onus was not discharged, the opposite party need not adduce any evidence: 1983 M.P.W.N. 214.

The onus to prove deposit of the amount in bank is on the party alleging such deposit but not the onus to prove as to why it was not recorded in the bank books: A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 218.

Even where the burden of proof initially lies on the plaintiff who fails to discharge that burden by his evidence but all the same the defendant's evidence admits the material facts or tends to prove the plaintiff's case, held, there is no bar to the Court's decreeing the suit; it is well settled that on adduction of evidence by both sides, the question of burden loses all importance: A.I.R. 1971 Assam 168: 1971 Assam L.R. 341.

Where a defendant pleads occurrence of a fact, burden is on him to prove its occurrence and not on the plaintiff to prove its non-occurrence: A.I.R. 1916 Oudh 216. See also A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 467 (D.B.).

It is true that evidentiary admissions are not conclusive proof of the facts admitted and may be explained or shown to be wrong, but they do raise an estoppel and shift the burden of proof on to the person making them or his representative-in-interest: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 861.

The ordinary rule regarding the onus, incumbent on the plaintiff, has really no application to cases where the true boundary is to be ascertained. A precise boundary with scientific accuracy is hardly to be expected in every case substantial justice being all that is necessary for practical purposes. It is the duty of either party to aid the Court in ascertaining the true boundary. Where any other rule is recognised, the result might be that some boundaries would remain incapable of judicial settlement for all times: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 1043: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 199.

Though the form in which the issue was framed cast the burden of proof on the defendant, the form could not affect the burden of proof on the pleadings which is on the plaintiff. As the evidence adduced did not disclose how or when the property was acquired or whether the property was treated at any time as one attached to the office of sthanom, the plaintiff must fail: 1960 Ker.L.J. 1401: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Ker. 67: 1961 Ker.L.T. 846: A.I.R. 1962 Ker. 93 (F.B.).

Burden of proof is generally on plaintiff—Suit on handloan—Defendant denying loan—Decision should rest on rule as to burden of proof under law and also the admitted or proved circumstances of the case: 1961 An.L.T. 404: A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 461.

When the petitioner claims his social status as backward class, the burden is on him to conclusively establish that he in fact belongs to a backward class: A.I.R. 1986 Andh. Pra. 196: (1986) 2 A.P.L.J. (H.C.) 183; 1980 Jab.L.J. (Notes) 58.

In a suit for declaration that the orders of the plaintiff's demotion and subsequent dismissal were illegal and ultra vires on the ground that the statutory procedure was not followed, the onus is on the plaintiff to show by proper evidence that the requisite legal procedure was not followed, and so the orders were vitiated and ultra vires. S. 102, Evidence Act and not S. 106, is applicable to such a case: 1959 B.L.J.R. 703: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 162.

It is on the person who asserts that a transfer is in contravention of S. 12 of the C.P. Tenancy Act, that the burden of proving it lies, for it is his application that would fail, if no evidence at all were given: 1938 Nag.L.J. 474. See also 1939 M.L.R. 149.

Where the plaintiff came to the Court with a definite case that the deceased was a Hindu, although the fact was that she was buried according to the Christian rites, held, the burden was on plaintiff to prove that the lady had not converted her religion and it was not for the defendant to prove the conversion. [A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 186 and A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 289, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1988 Mad. 132: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 895: (1987) 2 M.L.J. 481.

Where the plaintiff wants to prove the fact that a grant has been made to his ancestors of land revenue alone and that they were ordinary Muafidars, he should produce proper material before the Court and facts mentioned in various judgments could not be used as evidence to prove his contention: 1954 All.L.J. 641: A.I.R. 1955 All. 1 (F.B.). A plaintiff claiming relief on the basis of heirship, held, should prove the same: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 299.

Plaintiff contending that the grant was service grant and was inalienable has to prove his contention. See A.I.R. 1955 Assam 23.

Where on an escheat by the Crown the plaintiff brings a suit for declaration that he is entitled to the malguzari in question as reversioner of the last male holder and for possession, the onus lies on him to prove that the malguzari rights in question were held by the common ancestor. It is not for the defendant State to prove that the last proprietor died heirless: A.I.R. 1953 Him. Pra. 79.

Conversion of goods—Essentials necessary to be established by plaintiff. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 357.

3. Question of onus after evidence is let in.—The expression "burden of proof" really means two different things. It means sometimes that a party is required to prove an allegation before judgment can be given in its favour; it also means that on a contested issue one of the two contending parties has to introduce evidence. The burden of proof is of importance only where by reason of not discharging the burden which was put upon it, a party must eventually fail. Where, however, parties have joined issue and have led evidence and the conflicting evidence can be weighed to determine which way the issue can be decided, the abstract question of burden of proof becomes academic: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 100.

The question of onus probandi is certainly important in the early stages of a case. It may also assume importance where no evidence at all is led on the question in dispute by either side. In such a contingency the party on whom the onus lies to prove a certain fact must fail. Where, however, evidence has been led by the contesting parties on the question in issue, abstract considerations of onus are out of place and truth or otherwise of the case must always be adjudged on the evidence led by the parties: (1964) 3 S.C.R. 191: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 880.

Though where entire evidence has been adduced by both the parties and the Tribunal feels that it can make up its mind as to the truth of the version of either party, then the ultimate decision will not turn upon the burden; but where it finds that the evidence is conflicting or equally balanced so as to make it difficult for it to arrive at a determinate conclusion, then the burden of proof on the pleadings turns the scale: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 264 (D.B.).

The question of burden of proof acquires importance, only where, by reason of not discharging the burden which was put upon a party, it must eventually fail. Where, not only parties have joined issues, but have led evidence, the two versions can be gone into, with a view to determine which way the weight of the evidence turns. In such a case the abstract question of onus probandi loses its significance, as the Court determines the controversy, on the weight of the evidence led on the contested issue, and not upon the abstract question or burden of proof, which becomes purely academic. Of course, if the mind of the Judge, determining the suit, is left in doubt as to the point on which side the balance should fall in forming a conclusion, the doctrine of onus probandi will become a determining factor: I.L.R. (1960) 2 Punj. 506: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 624: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 500.

Where both the parties have led evidence, the burden of proof would assume secondary importance: A.I.R. 1981 Cal. 9: (1981) 1 Cal.H.N. 131 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2085 (D.B.).

Where on evidence adduced by both the parties the Courts below gave a concurrent finding of facts, held, the question of the onus of proof would pale into insignificance. The concurrent findings could not be disturbed merely because the burden of proof was not correctly placed. [A.I.R. 1983 All. 81, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1986 All. 185: (1986) 12 All.L.R. 52: 1986 All.C.J. 130.

Burden of proof and presumption—Function of—They have to be considered together—Their importance vanishes in the face of evidence given by both sides: A.I.R. 1970 All. 51: 1969 All.L.J. 659 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1971 Assam 168.

Where there is a good deal of evidence on both the sides, the question of burden of proof is not important and the same will be relevant only when the evidence placed is meagre and where there is uncertainty due to equibalanced evidence on some point in issue. [A.I.R. 1970 All. 51 (F.B.), Foll.]: 1971 All.L.J. 600 (D.B.).

Both parties adducing evidence—Question of burden of proof is not of importance—Court has to come to a decision on a consideration of all materials: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 158; A.I.R. 1920 P.C. 67; A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 435; A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 195; A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 292; A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 233; A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 641; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 61; A.I.R. 1939 All. 257; A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 108: 1938 P.W.N. 773; A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 207; (1949) 54 Mys.H.C.R. 451; I.L.R. (1953) 32 Pat. 803; A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 64; A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 64 (D.B.); I.L.R. (1960) 12 Assam 1; A.I.R. 1961 All. 14 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 88; A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150; A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 126 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 172 (D.B.); I.L.R. (1965) 2 All. 901; A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 240; (1967) 2 Mys.L.J. 210 (D.B.); 1970 B.L.J.R. 919 (D.B.); 1970 All.L.J. 102 (D.B.); 1971 All.W.R. (H.C.) 41; (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 736; 1981 B.L.J.R. 246; 1981 All.L.J. (N.O.C.) 115; A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 79; A.I.R. 1994 Karn. 247: (1994) 1 Hindu.L.R. 595 (D.B.).

Burden of proof on wrong party—When parties have actually led evidence this question would be merely academic: (1966) 62 I.T.R. 367: (1966) 18 S.T.C. 482: (1967) 1 I.T.J. 40 (Guj.).

When evidence has been adduced on both sides or opportunity has been given to litigants to produce evidence, question of burden of proof ceases to have any practical importance: 1969 Raj.L.W. 107: I.L.R. (1968) 18 Raj. 1212; I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 868: A.I.R. 1957 Hyd. 29.

After the evidence was recorded in the case, it becomes wholly immaterial as to on whom the onus lay to prove a particular fact: (1992) 2 Rev.L.R. 445.

In a civil proceeding when the evidence has been gone into by both the sides, the question of onus is immaterial and it is for the Court to find out the truth unless the evidence on both sides is hopelessly worthless: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 490.

The question of burden of proof has no importance when both the parties had adduced evidence and the trial Court and the appellate Court had appreciated that evidence: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 626: (1973) 3 S.C.C. 718.

The question of onus of proof is of no importance if all the relevant evidence has been given: A.I.R. 1950 P.C. 25; I.L.R. (1951) 1 Cal. 295; A.I.R. 1954 Kutch 39; 1955 An.W.R. 459; 1958 All.L.J. 526: A.I.R. 1958 All. 22; (1980) 3 S.C.C. 451.

If the entire evidence is adduced by both the parties and Court feels that it can make up its mind as to the truth of the version of either party, then the ultimate decision of the Court will not turn upon the burden of proof. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1204, Rel. on]: (1992) 1 M.L.J. 636 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 278.

The question of burden of proof at the end of the case, when both parties have adduced their evidence is not of very great importance and the Court has to come to a decision on a consideration of all materials: 1958 Ker.L.T. 721: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 31; A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1204.

Burden of proof—Both sides adducing evidence—Evidence adduced on both sides—Appraisal of: 1964 B.L.J.R. 701.

Where the Courts below had concurrently found on evidence, both oral and documentary, led by the parties, held, the question of placing the onus would be of no more than of academic significance: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 472.

The person on whom the burden lies has to adduce evidence, but when the evidence has been recorded, the question of burden of proof becomes academic; it assumes importance only when a party fails for not discharging the burden. The burden of proof is not a weapon of oppression in the hands of the Court and never in the hands of the opponent. The failure to apply the correct legal test and the resultant judgment constitutes a substantial error of law: (1984) 1 An.W.R. 129.

Where the parties have produced all their available evidence, the dispute on the point of onus is mainly of an academic nature: I.L.R. 9 Lah. 224: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 432. See also A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 183; I.L.R. 56 Cal. 805: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 425; I.L.R. (1940) Kar. 235 (P.C.) ; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 936; A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 134; A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 542; I.L.R. (1954) Cut. 171: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 225.

Once the parties have been permitted to produce evidence in support of their respective cases and it is not their grievance that any evidence was shut out, held, the question of burden of proof loses significance and remains only academic: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1040. The case then has to be judged on consideration of probabilities: 1982 All.W.C. 501; (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 40 (D.B.).

Onus of proof immaterial—Both sides adducing evidence—If each side has adduced evidence, the question of onus of proof loses all the great importance—which at one stage it had, and would only resume its importance if on considering the evidence as a whole—irrespective of which side adduced it—the Court is left in reasonable doubt on any material question: 80 Cal.L.J. 297: I.L.R. (1945) 1 Cal. 565.

The question of burden of proof pales into insignificance when the parties have entered upon evidence and the evidence has been duly considered by the Court in its totality: A.I.R. 1984 All. 180: 1984 All.W.C. 203.

Where both the parties have led evidence on an issue, held, the burden of proof is rendered only of academic importance; it does not affect the outcome based on appreciation of evidence: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 173: 1983 All.C.J. 183: (1983) 2 Ren.C.J. 15; 1984 All.W.C. (Supp.) 642; 1982 M.P.W.N. 154; 1982 M.P.W.N. 196; (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 36; 1980 All.W.C. 258: 1980 All.L.J. 344.

The onus as a determining factor of the whole case can only arise if the Court finds the evidence pros and con so evenly balanced that it can come to no definite conclusion and then the onus will determine the matter. But if the Court after hearing and weighing the evidence comes to a definite conclusion, the need for placing the onus does not arise. In other words, the question of onus at the close of a case only becomes important if the circumstances are so ambiguous that a definite conclusion is impossible without resort to it: (1955) 68 Mad.L.W. 192: (1955) 2 M.L.J. 36.

It is always open to the defendant not to lead any evidence where the onus is upon the plaintiff but after having gone into evidence, he cannot ask the Court not to look at and act on it. The question of burden of proof at the end of case when both parties have tendered evidence is not of any great importance and the Court has to come to a decision on a consideration of all materials: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 288 (S.C.).

In a case where all the facts are proved by ample evidence and the Court is in a position exactly to say what happened, no importance need be attached to the rule as regards burden of proof. It is only in cases where evidence is meagre and the Court is not in a position definitely to know what happened that the technical rule as to burden of proof is to be observed: 1939 M.L.R. 244 (Civ.). See also I.L.R. (1940) Kar. 235 (P.C.); 1945 Nag.L.J. 489; A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 64; A.I.R. 1957 Hyd. 29.

No objection can be taken to the broad proposition that when the parties have led evidence the question of burden of proof becomes immaterial. But when there is an admission in the document between the parties of the passing of the consideration, burden lies on the party making the admission to explain the admission and the admissions can be taken into consideration in assessing the value of the evidence produced by the parties. The question of burden of proof also is material with a view to assess the value of the evidence produced by the parties: I.L.R. (1963) 15 Assam 104: A.I.R. 1963 Assam 41.

The principle that after recording of both the parties evidence, the question of onus loses all relevance and pales into insignificance is not peculiar to civil cases only; it applies to criminal cases as well. Thus, where the accused, despite having no onus to do so, had nevertheless adduced evidence sufficient to convict him even though the prosecution has not, held, the accused could well be convicted; to insist that the prosecution must nevertheless fail would tantamount to stretching to the breaking point that the prosecution must establish the guilt of the accused on the evidence adduced by it: 1989 Cal.Cr.L.R. 122: (1988-89) 93 Cal.W.N. 1035: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 78: (1989) 1 Cal.H.N. 352 (D.B.).

When all evidence is let in the question of burden of proof has little or no importance in appeal: 103 I.C. 166; A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 183. See also 162 I.C. 247: 1937 R.D. 170; A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 1016; (1939) 52 Mad.L.W. 57: A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 93 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 336; 1939 M.L.R. 244 (Civ.); I.L.R. (1940) Kar. 235 (P.C.); 63 M.L.J. 694: A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 228 (P.C.); I.L.R. 60 Cal. 1158: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 900; 29 Nag.L.R. 298: A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 379; I.L.R. (1945) 1 Cal. 565; A.I.R. 1950 P.C. 25; A.I.R. 1951 Madh. Bh. 77.

Where the entire evidence is on the record the question of onus has lost all importance. Had the evidence left any doubt, the question of onus might have been of importance because then the party on whom lay the onus would have failed: A.I.R. 1958 All. 546.

Where all available evidence is considered without reference to onus and without relying on the circumstances that the onus lies on a particular party, the issue is determined on facts, and the onus cannot be said to have influenced the decision: I.L.R. (1953) 5 Assam 173: A.I.R. 1954 Assam 49.

The question of onus loses its efficacy when it is never objected to in the lower Courts and evidence having been led by the parties, at the appellate stage the Court has to adjudicate on the material before it: (1968) 34 Cut.L.T. 890.

Petitioner objecting to transfer of village C to Pakistan under Part relating to Berubari Union No. 12 in Sch. 2 of the Constitution (Ninth Amendment) Act, 1960—Petitioner alleging that no part of the Union falls south of east to west horizontal line and therefore, Amendment Act is impossible of implementation—Onus lies on him to show that attempt made by Government to transfer the village is illegal and unconstitutional—Petitioner if unable to produce evidence in support of plea cannot require the Government to show his plea untenable—Claim by petitioner that location of different villages is a matter within special knowledge of Government and should therefore, be established by them is also not right—Further where both parties have produced the maps relied on by them and the Court accepts the maps produced by Government as reliable, no question of onus really arises: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 644.

The burden of proving that the purchase had been made by a person as an agent for the plaintiff and that the former fraudulently made the purchase in his own name and concealed the fact from the plaintiff is entirely on the latter but when evidence has been led by both sides, the Courts are entitled to consider the entire evidence bearing on the points involved instead of merely resting on the abstract doctrine of onus of proof: A.I.R. 1955 Assam 177.

4. Burden of proof—When wrongly placed.—Question whether particular sale was sham—Burden of proof put on wrong party—Finding, held, was vitiated in law: (1964) 5 Guj.L.R. 678: A.I.R. 1964 Guj. 174.

A wrong approach with regard to onus of proof vitiates a finding of fact. The bias created by a wrong approach with regard to onus of proof also affects the reasoning and conclusions derived from the evidence: 1981 All.W.C. (Rev.) 19.

Where in the trial Court a party accepted the onus of proof upon him and undertook to discharge the same, but failed to discharge it, held, he cannot be allowed, in appeal, to turn round and say that the trial Court committed error in placing the burden of proof on him: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 238: 1974 Raj.L.W. 106. See also 1939 Nag.L.R. 244 (Civ.); A.I.R. 1954 Raj. 135.

Party accepted burden of proof in trial Court—It cannot complain in appeal: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 1019; A.I.R. 1952 Trav.-Co. 185; A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 284.

Burden wrongly placed—Entire evidence before High Court in second appeal—Mistake can be corrected in second appeal—Remand is not necessary: A.I.R. 1960 Manipur 11.

Burden of proof—Wrong placing of—Ground not included in memo. of appeal—Evidence led—Question at appellate stage is immaterial: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 134: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 232; I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 233: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 115.

Finding of fact—Wrong approach with regard to onus of proof—High Court can interfere: A.I.R. 1966 All. 39.

5. Shifting of onus.—31 Cut.L.T. 1082: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 332; A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 529; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2085; A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 184.

S. 102 shows that the initial burden of proving prima facie case in his favour is cast on the plaintiff; after he has led the necessary evidence in that behalf, the onus to rebut that evidence shifts on to the defendant; as the case continues to develop the onus may shift back to the plaintiff. It is not easy to decide at what particular stage in the course of evidence the onus shifts forth or back. However, when the entire evidence has been adduced and the Tribunal is still unable to make up his mind as to which of the two versions is true, it will hold that the party on whom the burden was cast has not discharged it, and decide against it; but if it finds no difficulty in accepting one of the version as true, the question of burden would be of no significance and recede into the background. [A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 274; A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 370; A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 114, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Del. 70.

The evidence required to shift the burden need not necessarily be direct evidence, i.e., oral or documentary evidence or admissions made by opposite party—It may comprise of circumstantial evidence or presumption of law or fact. See A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1316; 1975 Tax.L.R. 625 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.); (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 225: (1979) 2 M.L.J. 137.

In civil cases, onus of proof is never permanently fixed, it constantly fluctuates: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 276 (D.B.).

There is an essential distinction between the burden of proof as a matter of law and pleading and as a matter of adducing evidence; the burden in the first sense is always upon the party who comes to Court to get a decision on certain facts he asserts; but the burden to prove in the sense of adducing evidence "shifts from time to time", having regard to the evidence adduced by one party or the other or the presumption of fact or law raised in favour of one or the other: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1474; A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 184.

There is an essential distinction between burden of proof and onus of proof: burden of proof lies upon the person who has to prove a fact and it never shifts, but the onus of proof shifts. Such a shifting of onus is a continuous process in the evaluation of evidence: (1964) 1 S.C.A. 593: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 933: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136. As the case continues to develop the onus may shift back again to the plaintiff. It is not easy to decide at what particular stage in the course of evidence, the onus shifts from one side to the other: A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 278; A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 264 (D.B.).

The burden of proof in a case must be determined with reference to the law and the pleadings. The burden to prove in the sense of first adducing evidence is called onus of proof; it may shift from time to time considering the evidence adduced; and the shifting of onus must be judged with reference to the standard of proof required on a contested issue which in civil law is only the balance of probabilities: (1984) 1 An.W.R. 129.

The Court ought to fix burden according to law and not to shift it by redundant averment in pleadings or by incautious acceptance of an issue: A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1054 (F.B.).

Evidence and proof—Publication of statements—Falsity of—Proof—Onus—Petitioner proving falsity—Burden shifts on maker of statements to prove truth of statements: 1965 Jab.L.J. 1176: A.I.R. 1965 Madh. Pra. 55.

The burden of adducing evidence is not constant and it shifts as the case continues to develop. When once the entire evidence is adduced and on the entire evidence on record the Court is able to come to the conclusion that the case pleaded by the plaintiff is established, it will be a case for holding that the plaintiff has discharged his burden. On the contrary, if the Court is not able to come to a definite conclusion as to which version, i.e., either of the plaintiff or of the defendant, is true, in such an event, as the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, it will be a case where the plaintiff has failed to prove the case pleaded by him and thereby he has failed to discharge the burden of proof: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 405 (Karn.) (D.B.).

The burden of proof is not stationary. The expression burden of proof is used in two senses, i.e., the burden of proving an issue sometimes termed the "legal burden" and the burden of proof as a matter of adducing evidence during the various stages of the trial. What is called the burden of proof on the pleadings should not be confused with the burden of proof of adducing evidence which is described as "shifting". These two aspects of the burden of proof are enunciated in Ss. 101 and 102 of the Evidence Act. S. 101 shows that the initial burden of proving a prima facie case in his favour is on the plaintiff when he gives such evidence as will support a prima facie case, the onus shifts on to the defendant to adduce rebutting evidence. As case continues to develop, the onus may shift back again to the plaintiff. In the case of a bond when execution and consideration are both denied by the defendant, the primary burden to prove execution as well as consideration is on the plaintiff. But once he proves that the signature or the thumb mark is of the defendant, the burden shifts to the latter. That burden the defendant can discharge either by establishing circumstances as would vitiate the contract, e.g., fraud, coercion, undue influence, mistake, want or failure of consideration or he can make out circumstances to show that no presumption fairly arises against him under S. 114, Evidence Act. As soon as the defendant succeeds in this, the burden shifts back to the plaintiff. The recital in the document that the defendant has received consideration is not conclusive and the defendant can show that the recital is not correct. In cases of this nature it is the clear duty of the Court to analyse the evidence: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 143: 1963 Jab.L.J. 113: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 15.

Plaintiff's evidence amply established by evidence—It is incumbent on the defendant to meet that evidence by personal testimony: 10 I.C. 963 (P.C.).

Proof of acknowledgment of receipt of consideration does not necessarily shift burden: A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 156 (D.B.). See also Note 31, infra.

Where the plaintiff's title to the suit property is challenged by the defendant, the initial burden of proof is on the plaintiff and when the plaintiff produces judgments of competent civil Courts declaring the title of the plaintiff to the suit property, he discharges the initial burden of proving his prima facie case. Even though the judgments produced by the plaintiff are not inter partes or in rem, they cannot be said to be of no value as document of plaintiff's title. The plaintiff having thus given some proof of his title, the burden shifts on to the defendant either to prove a competing title in himself or to dislodge the evidence of the plaintiff: 1962 Ker.L.J. 1277.

Burden of proof whether discharged is question of fact but whether it shifts is matter of law: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 143: 1963 Jab.L.J. 113: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 15.

Onus—Shifting of—Stolen articles conforming to specifications of Railway standards—That they belonged to particular Railway need not be proved: 30 Cut.L.T. 275.

Prosecution for unauthorised construction—Burden of proof—Prosecution producing copy of the plan retained in office with clear marking of refused portions—Burden shifts on the accused—Failure of accused to rebut it by producing copy of the plan sent to—Onus, held, not discharged: 1961 Jab.L.J. 1448.

Where a witness proved a letter received by him to be in the handwriting of a particular person, held, the burden then shifts to the other party to prove that the letter was either not written by that person or it was written in collusion with the witness; merely putting the suggestion of forgery or collusion—two inconsistent pleas—to the witness in cross-examination who denied them, is not sufficient to discharge the shifted burden: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1949.

Where the defendant intended to non-suit the plaintiff on the ground that the plaintiff was a "firm" and was not registered, it was for the defendant who raised this plea in the first instance that the plaintiff was a "firm" as defined by the Partnership Act, and after that it was for the plaintiff (if found to be a "firm") to prove that the firm was registered, to get over the objection: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 848.

Plaintiff's suit resting on partnership and breach of terms thereof by second defendant, i.e., by breaking one of the terms of the partnership in as much as he got the rent bill in his name and became direct tenant under the first defendant, the landlord—Defendant pleading a letter from plaintiff's Solicitor to first defendant that plaintiff had no objection to second defendant, sub-tenant, becoming direct tenant under the first defendant—Solicitor examined as witness by defendant—Held, lack of authority on the part of the Solicitor was so patent upon his evidence that question of onus, be it of proving a negative in the first instance became of an academic interest—To put it in another way landlord defendant had discharged plaintiff's onus though unwillingly by examining Solicitor as his witness—Plaintiff thrown over-board by questionable means in 1956 by defendant—Plaintiff's suit filed in 1958—No full knowledge on part of plaintiff—Held, acquiescence of plaintiff was not acquiescence in the context of facts—Plaintiff could not be held to have ratified action of the solicitor: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786.

Once the landlord discharges his initial burden of proving that the defendant was permitted to occupy the premises as a licensee, held, the burden clearly shifts on the defendant to prove his tenancy: A.I.R. 1984 All. 180: 1984 All.W.C. 203.

Even when the burden of proof is on plaintiff who asserts a right, having regard to the circumstances of each case, the onus may also shift to the defendant. But that is not to say that no duty is cast upon the plaintiff even to show that he acquired knowledge of the defendant's action very late. Placing the entire burden on the defendant in such a situation would be contrary to the tenor of the provisions of the Limitation Act and also rules of Evidence. Where defendants pleaded bar of limitation in a suit and the plaintiffs were conscious of their belated action, held, it was for the plaintiffs to show that the suit was within time: A.I.R. 1993 J.&K. 14.

Letters Patent (Cal.), Cl. 12—Carrying on business what constitutes—Burden of proof—Is on plaintiff—Prima facie case made out—Burden shifts on defendant: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 302.

When the plaintiff seeks a declaration to the effect that it is not liable under the Employees' Provident Funds Act and also seeks a permanent injunction restraining the Department from enforcing the provisions of Act because even though he has not led sufficient evidence, no positive evidence has been adduced by the Department, the reliefs which the plaintiff claims are equitable reliefs and the initial burden of proving that he is entitled to these equitable reliefs is upon the plaintiff. It may be that very slight evidence may be sufficient to satisfy the Court that the burden has been discharged. It may be that, in some cases, slight evidence may be considered as sufficient to shift the burden of proof on the other side. But, the important point to notice is that there must be some such reliable evidence adduced by plaintiff in the first instance which would permit the Court to hold that the burden has either been discharged or that it has been shifted on the other side: I.L.R. (1965) Guj. 408: (1966-67) 30 F.J.R. 1: A.I.R. 1966 Guj. 116.

Misapplication of capital of company resulting in loss—Onus—Once liquidator shows that there was declaration of dividend resulting in misapplication—Burden shifts on to directors to show that it was not actually paid: A.I.R. 1970 Ker. 131 (D.B.).

In a case when a transaction is between the brothers and at a time when one of the brothers is found to be involved in debt and his property is threatened to be sold and the consideration money as stated in the deed is abnormally low, a slight evidence challenging the genuineness of such transaction shifts the onus on the shoulder of that person who claims to have derived his title by the same: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 211: (1974-75) 79 Cal.W.N. 282 (D.B.).

Credit entry of deposit by wife of assessee partner in account book of firm—Source of money need not be proved by assessee—Burden to prove it false shifts on Department: A.I.R. 1968 Assam 1.

Where in a money suit the defendant pleaded payment and produced an entry in his bahi on which he claimed plaintiff's thumb-mark, held, as soon as it was found that the thumb-mark was that of the plaintiff, the onus shifted to the plaintiff: (1930) 32 Punj.L.R. 407: 133 I.C. 867 (D.B.).

Burden of proof—Injury to workman—Prima facie case entitling to compensation proved by workman—Shifting of onus: (S.) A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 601.

Admission and shifting of onus: (S.) A.I.R. 1957 All. 1: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1.

Once supply of articles is admitted, the onus to prove the factum of making payment shifts: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 150.

Admission to Medical College—Charge of mala fide against Selection Committee at the time of interview—Held, the charge has to be proved by satisfactory evidence and the fact that the petitioner could not get outside evidence to establish what happened at the time of interview cannot shift the burden that is on him to prove his allegation: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2085.

Shifting of onus in criminal cases—See Note 14, infra.

6. Discharge of onus.—In ordinary civil proceeding a party on whom the burden of proof lies to prove a fact must discharge the burden to the satisfaction of the Court. He is not entitled to any benefit of doubt. If he fails to discharge the burden, his plea must be rejected: 1951 All.W.R. (Rev.) 50: 1951 R.D. 45.

Where the burden of proving a particular fact lies upon a person, held, he, before closing his case, has to produce all the evidence which he thinks to be necessary and which are available: A.I.R. 1934 All. 406 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1949 F.C. 88.

Where the plaintiff not merely failed to discharge the onus that was cast upon him but had also positively disproved his case, held, there was no need for the defendants to adduce any evidence on their side: A.I.R. 1952 Trav.-Co. 185 (D.B.).

A party on whom onus lies may take advantage not only of evidence adduced of him or on his behalf but also of any fact or circumstances in his favour appearing in evidence adduced by, or on behalf of, other party: A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 170 (D.B.).

The onus is not discharged by producing evidence which is just as consistent which the allegation of the party on whom the onus of proof lies as with the denial of the opponent: A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 225. The party upon whom the burden of proof lies, does not discharge that burden by showing that other side could equally have proved the contrary: A.I.R. 1920 Pat. 441 (D.B.).

Law does not prescribe any quantitative test to find out whether onus in a particular case has been discharged or not: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2439: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 872. Whether onus is disharged is only a question of fact: A.I.R. 1967 All. 513.

Whether any party has discharged its burden of proof may be determined on the basis of their own depositions in the Court; no rule of law lays down that, unless corroborated by other evidence, depositions of the parties by themselves are no evidence; while appreciating such evidence the Court may rely upon legal presumptions including those under S. 114: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 62 (Ker.).

Onus — Discharge — Preponderance of probability is enough: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1357: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1762.

Difference between burden of proof on pleadings and burden of rebutting prima facie case made out by opponent—When burden of proof on pleadings is deemed to have been discharged. See A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 276 (D.B.).

Where the evidence is conflicting, the party on whom the onus lies does not necessarily fail as in the case where no evidence is led on either side: 123 I.C. 612: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 134.

Onus is not discharged by merely showing that the opponent had wilfully omitted to adduce contra evidence in its possession: A.I.R. 1920 Pat. 441 (D.B.).

Where a suit is instituted within time even though a plaintiff is guilty of laches, it cannot be dismissed as barred by limitation, but when the result of a delay is that almost every bit of evidence that would have been available to an alienee had the suit been brought promptly disappears in the meanwhile, the Court would be justified in holding that the onus to prove necessity and consideration for the sale which lies upon the alienee is very light and in an appropriate case, even in finding that mere recitals in the deed of alienation as regards necessity and payment of consideration are sufficient to discharge that onus: I.L.R. (1953) Patiala 351: A.I.R. 1954 Pepsu 39.

It is absolutely necessary for the occupant of a premises to establish positively and decisively that he was in the premises prior to the date he contends; where no such proof was on record and long years had already lapsed, held, the case may be decided on the basis of the burden of proof; the occupant must fail for non-discharging of burden: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 581.

Sending sample of food for analysis—Burden of proving that sample sent for analysis is part of sample retained by Food Inspector and also given to accused, is on prosecution—Burden can be discharged by producing the sample retained by Food Inspector—Burden cannot be shifted by asking accused to produce his sample, when it is pleaded in defence that no such part of sample was given to accused: (1967) 2 An.W.R. 424.

7. Presumptions and onus of proof.—(See also Notes under S. 114, infra). Presumption is a decisive factor for the decision of cases only when the evidence is so evenly balanced that the case cannot be decided in favour of one party or the other without taking into consideration the presumption: A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 308: I.L.R. (1953) Nag. 233. Question of raising presumption arises only when the facts are not known and there are gaps in the evidence which have to be filled in with their aid but where all the facts are known, no question of applying presumption arises: A.I.R. 1958 All. 42 (D.B.).

Compromise decree—Presumption as to its validity: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 345.

A presumption in itself is no evidence; it only makes out a prima facie case for the party concerned; it is a rule concerning evidence; it indicates the person on whom the burden of proof lies. If the presumption is conclusive, it obviates the production of any other evidence, whether in support or in opposition. In case of a rebuttable presumption, the other party may produce evidence, fairly and reasonably tending to show that the real fact is not as presumed; the purpose of presumption is then over; then only the evidence of the parties will determine the true nature of the presumed fact: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1099: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 30: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 486.

Joint family—Partition—Burden of proof—Burden is on person who sets up partition—One coparcener separating from others—There is no presumption whether rest continue joint or separate: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 933: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136.

Suit for partition—Plaintiff admitting previous partial partition—Presumption of jointness is wiped out—Onus to prove that properties in dispute are still joint and partible is on plaintiff: (1960) 2 Ori.J.D. 449. See also Note 60, infra.

Recitals in document as to admission by person executing document—Presumption—Rebuttal of presumption—Onus: I.L.R. (1962) Andh. Pra. 431: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 17.

Acceptance of gratification—Presumption—Nature and scope of—Rebuttal of presumption—Burden of proof must be discharged by proof in accordance with S. 3, Evidence Act: I.L.R. (1963) Guj. 837: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 291: A.I.R. 1964 Guj. 206.

Suit on bond—Defence of coercion, undue influence and want of consideration—Burden of proof—Presumption as to passing of consideration—Rebuttal—Rule as to—Held, that the conclusion by the lower appellate Court was ambiguous and indefinite. It was a matter of substantive law that the debtor must repay the amount borrowed by him. It was a rule of evidence that where execution was not admitted, it was the plaintiff who must prove it. As soon as the execution was admitted and proved a presumption arose that the defendant must have borrowed. But it was only a presumption of fact, it could always be rebutted either by producing evidence or by establishing from the plaintiff's own evidence that what appeared on the face of the document was not the truth. As soon as that presumption was destroyed the onus again shifted to the plaintiff to show that although the consideration was not paid in the manner described, yet the amount was otherwise due to him from the defendant. That he had to prove positively. The natural presumption regarding passing of consideration which arose under S. 114 of the Evidence Act could be rebutted on the basis of the evidence adduced by the plaintiff, even though the defendant, on whom the burden lay, did not lead any evidence: 1964 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 92. See also Note 31, infra.

Estate—What constitutes—Burden of proof—Explanation creates no presumption as to whether minor grants had been granted prior to or subsequent to grant of named village—Burden lies on party contending that land is not estate to prove that minor inams were granted subsequent to inam grant of named village: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1715.

Question whether particular land was estate and owner of it was zamindar—Evidence and proof—Presumption—Entry in khasra is not conclusive proof: A.I.R. 1963 All. 119.

Registered letter containing notice sent to tenant in arrears—Letter refused—Presumption of receipt of notice by tenant will be raised: 1963 All.L.J. 25: A.I.R. 1963 All. 250.

In a suit for money on the basis of account books containing entries countersigned by the defendant relating to transactions which are described as cash transactions, the initial presumption about the nature of transaction is in favour of the plaintiff and the burden lies heavily on the defendant who pleads that the entries were in respect of prohibited transaction in linseed and not cash transactions, to prove his allegation: 1963 Jab.L.J. 218: 1963 M.P.L.J. 325: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 323. See also Note 17, infra.

Merely because the defendant, in a suit, admits encashing of cheque issued in his favour by the plaintiff, held, there is no presumption that the amount received was by way of loan; the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that it was a loan: I.L.R. (1974) 1 Del. 856; (1980) 2 Karn.L.J. 202.

Settlement entry—Presumption of correctness—Presumption of correctness attaching to the Settlement entry will prevail unless the contrary is proved by the plaintiffs as required by sub-S. (3) of S. 167: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 175: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 121. See also Note 91, infra.

Death of several persons by same calamity, at same time—Presumption as to survivorship: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 66. See also Note 37, and Ss. 107-108, infra.

In any action by an inamdar to evict his tenants and by a zamindar prior to the enactment of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1901, to evict his ryots from their holdings, the burden was on the plaintiff to make out the right to evict by proving that the grant included both the melvaram and the kudivaram interests or that the holders of land or their predecessors were let into possession by the inamdar or the zamindar under a terminable lease. This presumption applies in a suit between persons claiming under the ryot as well as in a suit against the ryot by the zamindar: (1962) 3 S.C.R. 653: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 342.

The initial burden of proving the execution of a document when it is denied must rest upon the person alleging its execution. But where a document is admitted to bear a certain signature and it comes from proper custody, that would be enough to raise an inference that it was signed with the intention of execution. Such an inference arises under S. 114 of the Evidence Act. Where, therefore, a person having signed a document wants to show that he signed it blank, it is he who relies on an exceptional circumstance, and therefore, the burden of proving that exceptional circumstance must rest upon him. But the question of burden of proof is hardly of any materiality when both parties led their full evidence, and the only question for the Court to determine is which of the two versions, namely, that put forward by the plaintiff, or the other one by the defendants, is correct: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 103: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 231. See also Note 47 and S. 114, Note 88, infra.

Appeal to Central Government under S. 111(3) of the Companies Act, 1956—Refusal of registration of shares—Presumption in favour of directors—Burden of proof on person appealing against refusal order of directors—Central Government being Tribunal should record reason: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1669.

A party wall which stands between two houses must generally be presumed to be the common property of the owners of both the houses as tenants in common. It is only where the wall stands partly on one man's land and partly on other's and the precise extent of land which originally belonged to each party can be ascertained that the presumption of tenancy in common gives way to the inference that each owns that portion of the wall which stands upon his land: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 184.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (IV of 1887), S. 7—S. 7 only raises a presumption that the raided place from which instruments of gaming were seized was a common gaming house but it does not raise a presumption that the accused was the keeper of the gaming house on the date of raid. It is to be established by the prosecution: (1967) 8 Guj.L.R. 145.

Withholding of material witness by prosecution—Adverse inference: 1968 Cr.L.J. 925: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 63. See also S. 114, Note 51, infra.

8. Onus in appeal.—Onus in appeal lies on the party asking for a finding of fact to be disturbed on the ground that it is wrong: (1968) 1 I.T.J. 117: 65 I.T.R. 424: A.I.R. 1967 All. 557; A.I.R. 1916 Cal. 964 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 39; A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 127 (D.B.); (1922) 65 I.C. 182 (Cal.) (D.B.); A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 66; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 208; A.I.R. 1950 East Punj. 296 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1952 All. 808 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 99 (D.B.).

Although the initial burden in regard to the proof of a pedigree lies upon the plaintiff, after a finding has been given and appeal preferred, the onus lies on the appellant to show that the decision of the trial Court is wrong. The onus is not discharged by merely showing that there is an equal possibility of the judgment in favour of one party or the other being correct: I.L.R. 22 Luck. 249: 1947 O.W.N. 197: A.I.R. 1947 Oudh 164.

The burden to show that the judgment appealed against is wrong, held, lies on the appellant; if the impugned judgment is shown to be nicely balanced indicating equal possibility of the judgment being right on either side, the second appeal is liable to be dismissed: A.I.R. 1972 Him. Pra. 87.

Appeal—Error of lower Court—Onus an appellant: 10 O.W.N. 201: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 142 (D.B.).

Where the lower Court has held that a party was guilty of breach of contract, the burden of proving that the decision is wrong is on him: A.I.R. 1955 All. 24. See also A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 249.

The right of filing an objection and that of filing appeals are intended to provide opportunities to the assessee of proving the assessment to be wrong or excessive. Where the assessee fails to show that the assessment is prima facie wrong, the taxing authority is under no obligation to prove that it is justified and the assessee is bound to fail in his objection and his appeal when he fails to make out his point: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 413.

Where the findings arrived at by the Courts below are based on evidence, both oral and documentary, adduced by the parties, held, the consideration of question of onus in appeal will be only academic: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 472; A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 18; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 514 (1); A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 382; A.I.R. 1930 Nag. 225 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 769 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1951 Pepsu 33 (F.B.).

Concurrent finding of two Courts below—Finding is binding in appeal under Art. 136—Onus is upon appellant to prove that finding is erroneous: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 146: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 290.

9. Withholding of best evidence.—(See also Notes under S. 114). If relevant evidence is withheld by the plaintiff, even if the burden of proof does not lie on the plaintiff, the Court may draw an adverse inference on the basis that an important document in the possession of the plaintiff which would have thrown light on the facts in issue, had been withheld. [A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 6 and A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Foll.]: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 751.

It is an inversion of sound practice for those desiring to rely upon a certain state of facts to withhold from the Court the written evidence in their possession which would throw light upon the proposition, trusting to the abstract doctrine of the onus of proof: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 224: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 417. Notwithstanding the burden of proof, an adverse inference may be drawn if a party withholds evidence in his possession which can throw light on the facts and issues: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 636 .

Parties must produce best evidence and if they have personal knowledge, they must themselves appear as witnesses. In case of their failure to do so, without any cogent explanation, the Court can legitimately draw inference against the party in default; such party in that eventuality may not successfully take advantage of the abstract doctrine of onus of proof: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 119; A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 190 (D.B.).

Where a defendant had not come out with the best evidence in his possession, held, he cannot be permitted to rely upon the abstract doctrine of onus of proof: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. 693 (D.B.).

Evidence entirely in hand of defendant—Suit cannot be decided on abstract—Principle of onus—Defendant cannot succeed on ground that no evidence has been produced by plaintiff: (1953) 55 Punj.L.R. 28: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 94.

Application by landlord under S. 14 of the Delhi Rent Control Act (LIX of 1958) for ejectment of tenant—Plea in appeal by tenant that original notice of demand did not bear signature of person giving such notice on behalf of landlord—Plea not taken in written statement—Original notice in possession of tenant but not produced at the hearing of the case before Rent Controller—Held, the Court will be justified in presuming that had it been produced it would have gone against the tenant—The mere fact that the main onus to prove the case was on the landlord was immaterial—The appellant-tenant by suppressing the notice in spite of being in possession of the same, cannot be allowed to take advantage of abstract doctrine of the onus of proof: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 1019.

Where original appointment file of the petitioner was called for but he failed to produce it and gave no justifying reasons for withholding the record from the Court, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the petitioner that if the record had been produced it would not have supported the case of the petitioner: (1977) 44 Cut.L.T. 181 (D.B.).

P alleging existence of contract for payment of good-will money between him and D—When D possessed account books, he could have produced them to refuse P's plea—D cannot be heard to say, relying on abstract doctrine of onus of proof that it was no part of his duty to produce them unless he was called upon to do so: 1968 Raj.L.W. 163: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 278.

10. Burden when no evidence let in.—S. 102 embodies a test as to which party would be successful if no evidence at all were given: 162 I.C. 21: A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 243: 38 Pat.L.R. 427; (1946) 36 Trav.L.J. 19 (F.B.).

If no or insufficient evidence is given, party who has to prove his case in order to succeed in an action, must fail (obiter): A.I.R. 1969 J.&K. 36; A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 134 (D.B.).

A party though in a position to adduce better evidence, deliberately abstaining from doing so, held, adverse inference may be drawn against him: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 182 (D.B.).

11. Onus when evidence is equally balanced.—Where the evidence of both sides is equally balanced and it is not clear which version is correct, the onus of proof plays an important part. [1975 Lab.I.C. 94 (Cal.), Rel. on]: 1976 Lab.I.C. 202 (Cal.); A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 66; A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 84 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 210; 1970 All.L.J. 102.

When there is ample evidence from both sides, the facts of the case are not determined by presumption or burden of proof but by a careful selection of the correct version, based, no doubt, on preponderance of probabilities: 1987 All.W.C. 1432.

12. Burden in civil cases.—Standard of proof—Civil case involving allegation of charges of criminal or fraudulent character—Insistence on proving charges clearly and beyond reasonable doubt is wrong: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1734.

In a civil suit, there is no burden cast on any party similar to the one in criminal prosecutions which requires the prosecution in all fairness to produce even evidence against its case: (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 222: 1968 Mah.L.J. 492: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 388.

In a civil suit, the burden lies on the plaintiff to establish his case. He is not entitled to the decree merely because the defence was defective or inconsistent: A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 178: (1989) 1 An.L.T. 91.

The burden of proof in civil proceedings is not something static and it keeps on changing on the proof of certain facts from which the Court could legitimately draw an inference: (1977) 2 Ren.C.J. 828.

13. Burden in matrimonial cases.—The burden of proof in the cases of marriage is to the extent of preponderance of probabilities and proof beyond reasonable doubt is not required in such cases: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 189 (Madh. Pra.). Matrimonial wrong may be proved by preponderance of probability: (1986) 2 Cal.L.J. 109.

Matters of a civil nature are always decided on a preponderance of probabilities and the burden of proof in such cases is not to be discharged as conclusively as would be expected in a criminal trial. To seek corroboration to a fact alleged by a spouse to a marriage, regarding the healthy or unhealthy character of their intimate relations which belong to the sacred and secret precincts of marital life, and which are known only to the spouses and which are not supposed to be known to any other living soul on the surface of the planet, would amount to shutting one's eyes towards the facts of life and reality: A.I.R. 1985 Guj. 121: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 939: (1985-1) 26 Guj.L.R. 119.

The standard of proof in respect of matrimonial offences, is as in a civil case being preponderance of probability and not of "beyond reasonable doubt" as in a criminal trial: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1534: (1975) 2 S.C.C. 326; A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 329: (1982) 1 Karn.L.J. 441: 1982 Hindu L.R. 413: (1982) 2 D.M.C. 84 (D.B.); (1985) 1 Cur. Civ. Cas. 243 (Del.).

S. 23(1)(d) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 creates a bar to the proceedings under the Act in case there is improper and unreasonable delay in approaching the Court; whether or not the delay is improper and unreasonable is a question to be determined on the facts of each case and the explanation offered for the delay; only culpable delay is fatal to the proceeding, not a mere wrong; the burden to prove that the delay is inexcusable lies on the respondent: A.I.R. 1977 Del. 24: (1976) 12 Del.L.T. 200: 1976 Rajdhani L.R. 526: I.L.R. (1976) 1 Del. 887: (1977) 79 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 221: 1977 Hindu L.R. 751.

The burden of proof in proceedings under the Divorce Act, 1869 is as in a civil case and not in a criminal case; it should be proved by preponderance of probability and not beyond reasonable doubt; graver the charge, the greater should be the degree of proof required to satisfy the Court. Grave allegations of cruel treatment, desertion and sodomy in the petition, it is settled law, cannot be directed to be proved on affidavit. S. 14 of that Act specifically requires the Court to be satisfied on the petitioner's proof on record: the Court can neither direct any party to prove the case on affidavit nor permit it to read an affidavit as evidence. Evidence has to be recorded as contemplated under O. 18, R. 2 or R. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure: A.I.R. 1985 Kam. 47: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 670 (F.B.). See also A.I.R. 1985 Kam. 135: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 658 (S.B.).

14. Burden in criminal cases.—See A.I.R. 1954 Madh. Bh. 145: 55 Cr.L.J. 1347; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 23: 55 Cr.L.J. 253; A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 366; (1957) 2 An.W.R. 131; A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 12; I.L.R. 36 Pat. 141.

A person has, no doubt, a profound right not to be convicted of an offence which is not established by the evidential standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt. Though this standard is a higher standard, there is, however, no absolute standard. What degree of probability amounts to "proof" is an exercise particular to each case. The concepts of probability, and the degrees of it, cannot obviously be expressed in terms of units to be mathematically enumerated as to how many of such units constitute proof beyond reasonable doubt. There is an unmistakable subjective element in the evaluation of the degrees of probability and the quantum of proof: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 2154: 1989 Cr.L.J. 288.

Standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt required in criminal cases calls for a careful and independent assessment and evaluation of the eye witnesses' account; they should not be adversely pre-judged on the basis of other, including medical evidence treating it as a sole touch-stone of credibility; held, on facts, eye witnesses were credible. [A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 2154, Foll.]: 1994 M.P.L.J. 57 (D.B.).

It is the fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence that when an accused is put up for trial, the burden to prove the offence to the hilt by legal and cogent evidence remains on the prosecution, which never shifts. Only in exceptional cases where a special defence or plea is raised by the accused, the burden is to be discharged by him either by leading evidence or by demonstrating from the record that such special defence is made out: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2763 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.); I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 632: 1972 Raj.L.W. 384: 1972 W.L.N. 375.

In a criminal case it is for the State or the prosecution to show that the accused persons have committed the offence with which they are charged: 1956 Cr.L.J. 917: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 169; A.I.R. 1957 Assam 45 (D.B.); (1919-20) 24 Cal.W.N. 619; A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 166; A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 224: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 1429: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 264; A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 222: I.L.R. (1963) 1 Ker. 458; A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 196: 1965 Ker.L.T. 20: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 215; A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 105; 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 153 (P.&H.).

The onus of proving all the ingredients of an offence is always upon the prosecution; at no stage does it shift to the accused. It is no part of the prosecution duty to somehow hook the crook. Even where the defence does not appear to be credible or is palpably false, the prosecution's burden does not become any the less. It is only after the prosecution's burden is discharged that the accused is to explain or controvert to negative the essential elements of the prosecution case. Even if the onus shifts to the accused and he has to establish his plea, the standard of proof required is not the same as of the prosecution; if the evidence on his behalf probabilises his plea, he is entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 716: 1972 Cr.L.J. 511.

It is for the prosecution to prove its case in a criminal trial and it is only while considering whether the prosecution has proved its case that incidentally and where necessary a criminal Court, would have to consider the case made for the defence. It would not be right for a criminal Court to convict an accused person not so much because the prosecution case is established beyond a reasonable doubt by the prosecution evidence but because the defence theory appears to the Court to be unreasonable or does not appear to the Court to have been established: 1956 Cr.L.J. 725: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 426. See also 1984 Cr.L.J. 1164: 1984 All.Cr.R. 509.

Where the trial Judge before considering the prosecution evidence first considered the truthfulness or otherwise of the defence version and after considering it rejected the same observing that it was for the accused to prove his innocence and thereafter, considered the prosecution evidence and concluded that the charge against the accused was proved, held, the trial Judge betrayed complete ignorance of the elementary and cardinal principle of criminal jurisprudence which requires the prosecution to stand on its own legs. The trial Judge ought to have first discussed if the prosecution had succeeded in proving its case. Only thereafter, he should have looked into the defence version to see if the same was acceptable or not. To examine the defence version before examining the prosecution story is to put the cart before the horse: 1994 Cr.L.J. 904 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Per Anna Chandy, J.—In criminal case the accused had no obligation to prove his innocence nor is an accused under an obligation to positively prove how the victim died. The burden to prove the guilt of the accused is ever on the prosecution and if the prosecution has failed to establish the guilt beyond a shadow of doubt, the accused should be acquitted no matter how far fetched and unconvincing his suggestions might appear to be: 1963 Ker.L.T. 292: 1963 Ker.L.J. 369: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 347: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 493.

The onus on the accused is not as heavy as it is on the prosecution. The prosecution has to establish its case, in a criminal trial, beyond reasonable doubt, while, the onus of the accused is discharged on the theory of balance of probabilities as in a civil suit. If the accused's version may reasonably be true, no conviction can lie: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 199: (1974) 1 Cut.W.R. 180; (1994) 5 S.C.C. 410: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1433.

In a criminal trial the burden always lies on the prosecution to establish the case against the accused and the accused is presumed to be innocent of the offence charged till the contrary is established. The burden lies upon the prosecution, and the presumption of innocence applies with equal, if not greater, force in an appeal to the High Court against an order of acquittal. In applying the presumption of innocence, the High Court is undoubtedly slow to disturb findings based on appreciation of oral evidence, for the Court which has the opportunity of seeing the witnesses is always in a better position to evaluate their evidence than the Court which merely peruses the record: (1963) 3 S.C.R. 386: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 473; (1957) 2 An.W.R. 131: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 402; A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 311: 1960 Cr.L.J. 787.

In a criminal case the burden of proof is on the prosecution and in order to prove a charge against an accused the prosecution must establish its case beyond reasonable doubt by legal evidence adduced in the case. It is also an established principle that the accused must be presumed to be innocent until the prosecution has been able to establish the charge against him beyond reasonable doubt and the presumption of innocence must continue even in an appeal against acquittal. In a criminal case there is no burden on the accused to prove his innocence: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1552 (D.B.). See also I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 25 ; 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 176 (Raj.) (D.B.); 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 89 (All.) (D.B.); 1983 Cr.L.J. 521 (Ori.); (1987) 1 Crimes 748 (Gau.).

The law in India places the burden of proof upon the prosecution to bring the guilt home to the accused and does not admit of any exception. The presumption of innocence has to be dislodged by the prosecution by leading evidence pointing to the guilt of the accused. Under S. 105 of the Evidence Act, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general or special exception is placed on the accused. It is the duty of the accused to introduce such evidence as will displace the presumption of the absence of circumstances bringing his case within any exception, and that will suffice to satisfy the Court that such circumstances may have existed. Despite what is stated in S. 105, Evidence Act, the prosecution is not absolved from the burden laid on it by S. 102: 1959 Cr.L.J. 901: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 332: I.L.R. (1959) Punj. 1473.

S. 106 is an exception to the general rule laid down in S. 101 that burden of proof basically lies on prosecution. S. 106 does not relieve the prosecution of that duty: (1986) 29 Del.L.T. 23.

In a case in which the evidence is of a circumstantial nature, the facts and circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is said to be drawn by the prosecution must be fully established beyond all reasonable doubts and the facts and circumstances so established should not only be consistent with the guilt of the appellant but also they must entirely be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and must exclude every reasonable hypothesis consistent with his innocence: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 917: 1991 Cr.L.J. 330. See also A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1157: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1243: (1982) 2 S.C.C. 351; A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 61: 1983 Cr.L.J. 155: (1982) 3 S.C.C. 462: (1983) 1

Criminal trial—Onus—Duty of prosecution: 1958 Cr.L.J. 190: 1957 M.P.L.J. 137: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 55.

The fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence is that the onus to prove every essential of the offence against the accused lies on the prosecution and that it is only if these essentials are proved that the Court is entitled to examine the defence. The prosecution must stand on its own strength and cannot seek support from the possible weakness of the defence. The evidence in defence is to be examined with a view to see if it rebuts the case of the prosecution only if proved: A.I.R. 1955 Bhopal 9. See also 1989 Cal.Cr.L.R. 122: (1989) 1 Cal.H.N. 352: (1988-89) 93 Cal.W.N. 1035: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 78 [Defence witnesses examined may sometimes prove the case of the prosecution]; (1989) 1 An.L.T. 91.

Evidence given by one accused, which is against the interest of a co-accused, held, does not relieve the prosecution of the burden of proving their case: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 155: (1983) 1 Crimes 1083 (Del.).

It should never be forgotten that in a criminal case the burden lying on the prosecution never shifts. It is the duty of the Court to require the prosecution to prove every part of its case affirmatively by sufficient and legal evidence and it is not possible to convict an accused person on the ground of any weakness in his defence. Where the prosecution evidence falls short of proving the guilt of the accused with reasonable certainty, it is the duty of the Court to acquit the accused straightway. It cannot convict on a finding of mere probability: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1399: A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 634; A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 362.

It is the duty of the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused and this burden on the prosecution cannot be shifted on to the accused when he furnishes an explanation either under S. 342, Cr.P.Code, or when under the newly amended Code he gives evidence on his own behalf. The explanation of the accused may be so convincing as to falsify the prosecution case and in which case the accused would be entitled to an acquittal or the explanation may be held to be so reasonably true that it will pro tanto throw reasonable doubts on the prosecution version with the result that the State would not have discharged the onus of proof imposed on it by satisfying the Court beyond reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt and in which case also the accused would be entitled to an acquittal. But, of course, if the explanation given by the accused is on the face of it improbable, inadequate or unconvincing or contradictory or a manifest after-thought, no Court would come to the conclusion that the explanation may reasonably be true. But even then the failure of the accused's explanation getting no importance attached to it would not render the prosecution any stronger and it must affirmatively and satisfactorily establish the guilt of the accused. In short, it is for the prosecution to establish the guilt of the accused, and not for the accused to establish his innocence: 1958 Cr.L.J. 906: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 368.

If the prosecution evidence as a whole is unreliable and cannot be accepted as correct for specific reasons, the silence of the accused can be of no avail to the prosecution, for such conduct of silence can never be permitted to become a substitute for proof by the prosecution. The substantive prosecution evidence being rejected as unworthy of credit, the alleged conduct must be referable to some innocent reason. Different persons react in different ways in similar circumstances and in the absence of satisfactory evidence the Court ought not to treat the case as positively proved beyond reasonable doubt only by reason of the failure of the accused to put up his defence immediately when he was confronted: 1954 Cr.L.J. 230: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 15 (Per Desai, J.)—If the inference of guilt from the proved incriminating facts is as much a natural or probable hypothesis as any other, the accused may be called upon to explain and if he fails or refuses, the Court may treat it as an additional circumstantial fact and infer his guilt. Or it may take judicial notice of the other hypothesis even without any explanation by the accused and acquit him: 1955 All.L.J. 468: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443.

It is true that the onus of proving guilt rests, throughout the trial, on the prosecution and never shifts on to the shoulders of the accused, but if the accused wants to rely on a particular fact for discrediting a prosecution witness, that fact must be adequately brought out in the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 405: 1970 Mah.L.J. 634: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 438 (D.B.).

Criminal trial—Onus of proof in a criminal case is on the prosecution—Proof need not, however, be a mathematically accurate proof—Standard of proof required is indicated in S. 3 of the Evidence Act, which is applicable to the former Portuguese territory from 1st June, 1964—Being adjective law, Law of Evidence has retrospective effect—Supreme Court Justice—Vol. 60, page 536—Boletin Ministario de Jostica: 1967 Cr.L.J. 473: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 51 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 666.

When it is said that an accused is presumed to be innocent what is meant is that the burden of proving the guilt of the accused is upon the prosecution. The accused has every advantage while the prosecution is held rigidly to the charge. The accused need not disclose the barest outline of his defence. He cannot be convicted when there is the least fair doubt in the minds of the Court. The prosecution cannot be permitted to take advantage of the weakness in the defence version. The prosecution has to prove the guilt of the accused de hors this weakness: 1967 Cr.L.J. 191: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 18.

Suspicion, however grave, is not positive proof of commission of offence: I.L.R. (1952) Patiala 512: A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 82. Per Agarwala J.—One of the well-known maxims of criminal trial is that it is better that ten guilty persons be acquitted rather than one innocent person be convicted. The burden of proving that the accused is guilty is always on the prosecution. If there is an element of reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the benefit of that doubt must go to him. The maxim merely emphasises these principles in a striking fashion. It does not mean that even an imaginary or unreal and improbable doubt is enough for holding the accused not guilty if the evidence, on the whole, points to the only conclusion, on which a prudent man can act, that the accused is guilty: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443: 1955 All.L.J. 468. See also A.I.R. 1954 All. 795: 55 Cr.L.J. 1762.

Criminal trial—Prosecution must dislodge presumption of innocence available to accused by leading evidence to prove guilt—Mere suspicion, however strong, not sufficient for conviction: 1966 Ker.L.J. 868.

Prosecution evidence raising suspicion against accused—Suspicion, howsoever strong, cannot take the place of proof—Benefit of doubt should go to the accused: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 497: A.I.R. 1964 All. 481; (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 566 (S.C.).

It is but fundamental that the onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies on the prosecution and the evidence must be such as to exclude moral certainty to every reasonable doubt about the guilt of the accused. The hypothesis of delinquency shall be consistent with the facts proved: (1968) 1 An.W.R. 178: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 131.

Two views possible—View favourable to accused has to be adopted. See (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 327: A.I.R. 1964 All. 106; (1987) 1 Crimes 748 (Gau.).

Criminal trial—Standard of proof—Prosecution has to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt—Reasonable doubt—Meaning of: A.I.R. 1970 All. 51 (F.B.); (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 733: A.I.R. 1964 Tripura 62.

Defence can take inconsistent pleas and that too from time to time but that does not absolve the prosecution from the duty to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt: 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 44: 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 149. See also 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 150 (Ori.).

It is the fundamental doctrine of criminal law relating to onus of proof that the prosecution must establish all the ingredients of the offence with which the accused was charged, by independent evidence for convicting the accused irrespective of the fact whether the accused is able to adduce evidence bringing his case within any one of the exceptions, or not. The nature and the extent of the onus of proof that lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused is absolute and it stands on a different footing from the kind and nature of proof expected of the accused person to bring his case within any one of the exceptions pleaded by him. The prosecution has to establish the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubts, whereas it is enough for the accused to bring his case within any one of the exceptions, if he succeeds in proving a preponderance of probability: 1970 Cr.L.J. 83 (Andh. Pra.).

Where an accused in a murder case denied his guilt and produced no evidence in defence, held, the prosecution has still to prove its case satisfactorily; silence of the accused would be of no consequence: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 573: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 700.

Whenever intention or knowledge forms one of the ingredients of an offence, held, the prosecution's burden in such a case includes the burden of proving the mental state of the accused: 1982 Cr.L.J. 856 (Bom.).

The burden of proof lies entirely on the prosecution to establish its case, including actus reus and mens rea, beyond reasonable doubt; such burden is neither discharged nor shifted merely because the accused pleads private defence; such plea is to be established by the defence only after the prosecution has discharged its burden. However, the burden on the defence is not so onerous as the initial burden on the prosecution. The defence can discharge its burden either, as in all cases, by direct evidence or by establishing probabilities of the plea founded on defence evidence, prosecution evidence and presumptions; and even if in such endeavour the defence raises a reasonable doubt in the prosecution case, the accused is liable to acquittal: 1982 Cr.L.J. 173 (Ker.).

The accused owes no one a duty to share his confidence with any one and much less with the prosecution and by the very fact that he keeps his own Counsel he really does not merit the criticism that he remains quiet by choice and design because he knows the truth and if he speaks out, he would be doing so at his peril. The Court cannot make any such assumptions. Likewise, the falsity of the defence, can only be used to embellish the conclusion of guilt if established conclusively on the material produced by the prosecution. But, on the contrary, if the prosecution's case at the end of the trial remains still inchoate and indecisive, touching the guilt of the accused, it would not be open to the Court to forge together a syndrome of inconclusive factors nestling in the twilight zone into an unbreakable strand, each link of which proclaims the guilt of the accused: I.L.R. (1990) Karn. 1973 (D.B.).

What is the precise nature of the burden resting on the prosecution where a bail granted to the accused is sought to be cancelled on the ground that the accused having won them over, the witnesses had turned hostile? It is indeed a criminal matter but it does not mean that every incidental matter in a criminal case must be proved beyond reasonable doubt as the accused's guilt; indeed, proof of facts by preponderance of probabilities as in a civil case is not foreign to criminal jurisprudence; the prosecution, thus, is not required to prove by mathematical certainty or beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had tampered with the witnesses; proof by balance of probabilities of such tampering or its apprehension is sufficient to cancel the bail: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 961: 1978 Cr.L.J. 952: (1978) 2 S.C.C. 411: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 534.

Prosecution's failure to throw light on the genesis of occurrence, in case where there was old rivalry between the two groups—Effect on prosecution's case. See A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 2004: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2167.

There is no conflict between the prosecution's general burden—which never shifts—to prove all components of the offence and the special burden of the accused to make out the defence of his insanity; it is not sufficient for the prosecution to establish that the deceased's death was a consequence of the injuries inflicted by the accused but also that those injuries were caused with the intention or knowledge mentioned in S. 300 of the Indian Penal Code; it is only, thereafter, that the Court would consider the accused's plea of insanity. Even if the evidence of insanity is not sufficient to discharge the burden under S. 105 cast on the accused, but if the evidence on record raises a reasonable doubt in the Court's mind about the existence of one or other essential ingredient of the offence, the accused is liable to be acquitted. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 605; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 16: 1971 Cr.L.J. 407.

S. 16 of Orissa Special Courts Act, 1992, placing the burden on the accused during the trial to prove his innocence, held, being against the established principle of criminal law in this country, has to be struck down: A.I.R. 1993 Ori. 259: (1993) 76 Cut.L.T. 720 (D.B.).

Criminal trial—Onus of proof—Presumption of innocence of accused—Replacement by prosecution evidence of guilt—Miscarriage of justice can arise by acquitting a guilty person: 1968 Cr.L.J. 992 (Goa).

Burden of proof—Witnesses not cross-examined by accused—Failure of accused to cross-examine witnesses does not discharge burden of proof on prosecution: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 389: 1966 Mah.L.J. 565: I.L.R. (1966) Bom. 407.

(a) Falsity or weakness of defence—Effect.—The accused persons are under no obligation to substantiate their defence version; they have simply to come forward with a probable and plausible version which fits in with the circumstances of a particular case: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1622 (Del.).

The burden of proving the prosecution case which squarely lies on the prosecution never shifts; defence is not bound to open its mouth so long as prosecution does not discharge its general burden of proving its case beyond reasonable doubt. Defence version may even be false, but the prosecution cannot derive any advantage from the falsity or other infirmities of the defence version, so long as it does not discharge its initial burden of proving its case beyond all reasonable doubts: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3287 (Gau.) (D.B.).

The case of the prosecution has to be tested independently of the defence version and in a case which depends for its proof on direct testimony, falsity of defence will not help the prosecution to establish its own case: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 155: 1974 Cr.L.J. 303: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 589; A.I.R. 1966 Guj. 293: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1429.

Burden of proof in criminal trial—Accused not bound to prove his defence to the hilt, like the prosecution: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1654: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 41; 1982 M.P.W.N. 55.

In a criminal case, the burden of proof is heavy on the prosecution; it cannot take advantage of the weaknesses of the defence or of the inconsistent stand taken by the accused from time to time; the prosecution must stand on its own legs basing on the evidence that has been let in by it: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1622: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 208: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1738: (1984) 4 S.C.C. 116; 1993 Cr.L.J. 558: (1992) 1 An.W.R. 16.

Where all links in the prosecution chain are complete, the Court may seek assurance from any false plea or defence the accused might have raised; but no infirmity or lacuna in the prosecution can be filled up to convict an accused merely because of his false plea or defence; there is a vital difference between an incomplete chain of circumstances and a circumstance, which after the chain is complete, added to it to reinforce the Court's conclusion: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1622: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 208: (1984) 4 S.C.C. 116: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1738.

Criminal trial—Falsity of defence does not relieve prosecution from proving its case beyond reasonable doubt—Burden of proving guilt is always on prosecution except in certain cases: 1967 Cr.L.J. 746: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 60.

Though the evidence both for the prosecution and for the defence has, at some stage of the case, to be weighed in criminal cases, the defence has not to be weighed in golden scales, and there must be great preponderance of weight on the side of the prosecution before the accused can be found guilty: 1953 Cr.L.J. 171: A.I.R. 1953 J.&K. 41.

The mere fact that the defence testimony has proved unhelpful is not sufficient. It is for the prosecution to establish the guilt of the accused and not for the accused to establish their innocence: 55 Cr.L.J. 583: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 433.

In a criminal trial, even where the defence theory is rejected, the burden lies always on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused. Falsity of the defence may be a circumstance, sometimes a strong circumstance to be taken into consideration in establishing the guilt of the accused but conviction cannot be based only on the falsity of defence. It is always for the prosecution to prove its case and this may be by adducing either positive evidence or by establishing such circumstances against the accused that the Court is driven to the conclusion that it was the accused and the accused only who could be guilty of the crime: 1964 Raj.L.W. 279. See also 1989 Cal.Cr.L.R. 122: (1989) 1 Cal.H.N. 352: (1988-89) 93 Cal.W.N. 1035: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 78 (D.B.), cited under Note 3, supra.

(b) Injuries on accused—Explanation for.—Where prosecution successfully established that deceased was stabbed by accused and there was no evidence to show that the accused sustained injuries in the same transaction, held, there was no obligation on the part of the prosecution to explain the injuries sustained by the accused: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1522 (Ker.) (D.B.).

A sweeping statement that the prosecution has no duty to explain the injuries on the accused is erroneous yet in the circumstances of the case, regard must be had to the ultimate. Where a burden is cast on the prosecution to explain the injuries on the accused person or persons, if the defence is that in course of the same transaction, as put up by the prosecution, the accused persons have received the injuries, then a duty is cast on the prosecution to explain the injuries on the accused persons provided they are glaring and manifest: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 1379.

Where the Court believes the testimony of prosecution witnesses as proof of the accused's guilt beyond reasonable doubt, held, the prosecution ceases to be under obligation to explain the injuries sustained by the accused; it is not an invariable rule that the prosecution has to explain injuries suffered by the accused in the same occurrence: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 863; 1994 Cr.L.J. 3623 (All.).

Where the accused established a probable defence that they had sustained serious injuries in that very occurrence, held, it is incumbent on the prosecution to satisfactorily explain those injuries; otherwise, the accused are entitled to acquittal on benefit of doubt: 1988 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 86 (D.B.).

In a criminal case, if the prosecution adduces reliable evidence for proving all the ingredients of the charges against the accused persons, the prosecution is entitled to succeed, unless the accused relies on any general or special exception, in which case the burden is on the accused to prove the exception. In a case where the accused is said to have attacked the complainant or members of the complainant's party, it is sufficient for the prosecution to prove that the accused had attacked the members of the complainant's party with the requisite intention. If the accused had sustained injuries, it is not necessary for the prosecution to "cogently explain how the accused sustained injuries". It is open to the defence to put questions to the prosecution witnesses in cross-examination, and use such answers given in the cross-examination in order to discredit the testimony of the prosecution witnesses. The fact that some of the prosecution witnesses have suppressed or have given a futile explanation as to the injuries on the accused would not necessarily make their answers totally unbelievable: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 54(2): A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 8.

(c) Identification parade.—(See also S. 9). It is the prosecution's duty to prove that the identification parade was held in fool proof manner leaving no doubt about the honesty, integrity and safety of the same: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 615 (D.B.).

Test identification—Accused must not be seen by witness between crime and test identification—Once evidence has been led to show this, the burden shifts on the accused to show otherwise: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 418: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 340: A.I.R. 1961 All. 153.

(d) General exceptions.—(See also Notes under S. 105, infra). The initial onus is upon the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused. However, when an accused pleads general exceptions, the burden of proof will be upon him. However, it is not necessary that in order to discharge the onus, he must adduce evidence from his own side. The accused, thus, is entitled to show that he comes within the purview of the general exceptions provided in Chapter IV of the Indian Penal Code relying on the basis of the evidence itself and/or the circumstances which have been brought on record showing the conduct of the accused prior thereto or after commission of the crime: (1991-1) 39 B.L.J.R. 397 (D.B.).

It is fundamental principle of criminal jurisprudence that an accused is presumed to be innocent and, therefore, the burden lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. The prosecution, therefore, in a case of homicide shall prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused caused death with the requisite intention described in S. 299 of the Penal Code. This general burden never shifts and it always rests on the prosecution. But, under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within exception lies on the accused; and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. Under S. 105 of the Evidence Act, read with the definition of "shall presume" in S. 4 thereof, the Court shall regard the absence of such circumstances as proved unless, after considering the matters before it, it believes that the said circumstances existed or their existence was so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that they did exist. To put it in other words, the accused will have to rebut the presumption that such circumstances did not exist, by placing material before the Court sufficient to make it consider the existence of the said circumstances so probable that a prudent man would act upon them. The accused has to satisfy the standard of a "prudent man". If the material placed before the Court, such as, oral and documentary evidence, presumptions, admissions or even the prosecution evidence, satisfies the test of "prudent man" the accused would have discharged his burden. The doctrine of burden of proof in the context of the plea of insanity may be stated in the following propositions: (1) The prosecution must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had committed the offence with the requisite mens rea; and the burden of proving that always rests on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial. (2) There is a rebuttable presumption that the accused was not insane, when he committed the crime, in the sense laid down by S. 84 of the Penal Code; the accused may rebut it by placing before the Court all the relevant evidence—oral, documentary or circumstantial, but the burden of proof upon him is no higher than that rests upon a party to civil proceedings. (3) Even if the accused was not able to establish conclusively that he was insane at the time he committed the offence, the evidence placed before the Court by the accused or by the prosecution may raise a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court as regards one or more of the ingredients of the offence, including mens rea of the accused and in that case the Court would be entitled to acquit the accused on the ground that the general burden of proof resting on the prosecution was not discharged: (1964) 7 S.C.R. 361: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 773: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563.

The burden of proving the plea that the deceased died in the manner alleged by the accused lies on him, as is clear from the provisions of Ss. 103 and 106. The burden of proving a plea specifically set up by an accused, which may absolve him from criminal liability, certainly lies upon him. It is a different matter that the quantum of evidence by which he may succeed in discharging his burden of creating a reasonable belief, that circumstances absolving him from criminal liability may have existed is lower than the burden resting upon the prosecution to establish the guilt of an accused beyond reasonable doubt. It is only when the prosecution has led evidence which, if believed, will sustain a conviction, or which makes out a prima facie case, that the question arises of considering facts of which the burden of proof may lie upon the accused: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 778: 1974 Cr.L.J. 664: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 193.

Though the "burden of proof " is not defined yet it is an accepted principle of criminal jurisprudence that the burden of proving its case always lies on the prosecution and never shifts to the accused; the cardinal principle is that an accused is presumed to be innocent unless otherwise proved by the prosecution, he is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt. But the burden of proving the circumstances bringing the case within the exceptions set out in S. 105 is upon the accused and the Court shall presume their nonexistence. But that burden, it is well settled, does not absolve the prosecution from its initial burden to prove its case beyond all reasonable doubts; thus, even if accused does not adduce evidence of exceptions under S. 105, he is nevertheless entitled to acquittal if on appraisal of evidence as a whole the Court still entertains a doubt whether or not the accused is entitled to the benefit of exceptions set down in S. 105: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1459: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1510: 1990 All.L.J. 415; (1987) 1 Crimes 181 (Him. Pra.).

An accused who pleads not guilty throws on the prosecution the burden of proving that the facts alleged in the indictment are true, but if he takes a special plea and the prosecution traverses it, the burden is on the accused of proving that the facts alleged in his plea are true. If the prosecution does not give sufficient proof of the alleged facts to establish a prima facie case, a verdict of not guilty has to be directed. [(1909) 25 T.L.R. 612, Rel. on]: I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 632: 1972 Raj.L.W. 384: 1972 W.L.N. 375.

Criminal trial—Proof of exception pleaded by accused—It may be proved by showing preponderance of probability: A.I.R. 1970 All. 51: 1969 All.L.J. 659 (F.B.).

(e) Food adulteration cases.—(See also S. 106, Note 6, infra). Sale of adulterated article of food—Accused can always plead that it was never sold for human consumption—Onus to prove the same lies heavily on the accused: 1968 Cr.L.J. 912: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 342.

Appreciation of evidence—Criminal trial—Material on record justifying finding in favour of accused—Court, held, could act on it though accused had not taken it as a specific ground of defence—"Matar dal"—Analyst testing it only for "pulse"—Court also treating it as "foodgrain"—Absence of additional tests could result in acquittal—Fact that accused had not pleaded it in defence, held, immaterial: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 120.

Notification under R. 44-A, Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, prohibiting sale of kesari dal for human consumption—Held, onus was on the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt that kesari dal kept in shop of accused was for sale for human consumption—Unless onus was discharged, offence was not brought home and accused must be given benefit of doubt: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 830.

In a prosecution for storing pea besan containing khesari grant, the burden to prove that the said pea besan was stored or sold for human consumption was squarely on the prosecution, and on their failure to establish the same, the petitioner cannot be convicted merely on his failure to assert any such fact in his defence: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 396: (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 549.

Sale—Sale of curd—In order to constitute it a sale under S. 2(13), curd must be intended for sale and burden of proving that it was for domestic consumption is on accused—Whether particular article of food is intended for sale or not is question of fact: (1967) 2 An.W.R. 424.

Proviso to S. 2(ia)(m) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954—Burden of proof—It is for the accused to show that fall in standard is solely due to natural causes and beyond control of human agency: 1984 Cr.L.J. 690: 1984 Chand.Cr.C. 86 (H.C.) (P.&H.). See also (1967) 2 An.W.R. 424, cited under Note 6, supra.

(f) Cases under the Customs Act.—Proceedings under the Customs Act, 1962 being penal in nature, the burden of proving its case is always upon the Department except where S. 123 thereof is attracted; if the goods are not covered by its provisions, the adjudicating authority must proceed on the basis that if the Department has not discharged its burden to prove its case, the accused cannot be called upon to disprove the Department's case: (1990) 48 E.L.T. 210 (Bom.).

Before an accused can be called upon to prove that goods recovered from his possession are not smuggled goods, the prosecution has to establish that they were seized under the Customs Act, 1962 in the reasonable belief that they are smuggled goods ; merely because the accused admitted their possession would not shift the burden on him to disprove that the goods were smuggled goods. Thus, if on his own showing the Superintendent of Customs simply suspected but had no reason to believe that they were smuggled goods before seizing them, the accused was not liable to prove otherwise: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 345.

Contravention of order of prohibition—Onus—Department should prove importation of goods contrary to order—Plea of bona fide purchase—Rejection of, not sufficient to discharge burden: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 269: A.I.R. 1962 Assam 39.

Goods not covered by S. 178-A, Sea Customs Act, 1878 [S. 123 of the Customs Act, 1962]—Burden to prove illicit importation before confiscation. See (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 487: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 527.

Once it is shown that the goods were seized in the manner contemplated by the first part of S. 178-A, Sea Customs Act, it would be for the person in possession to prove that the goods were not smuggled goods. If the person found in possession has not discharged the burden placed on him under S. 178-A (Sea Customs Act), the goods are liable to confiscation under S. 167(8) (Sea Customs Act): A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1559: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1360 ; (1964) 66 Punj. L.R. 151 ; A.I.R. 1968 Tripura 39 ; 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 220: (1971) 1 Mys.L.J. 564.

When goods are seized by the Customs Officer on the reasonable belief that they are smuggled goods then under S. 178-A of the Sea Customs Act, the onus of proving that they are not smuggled goods, that is, not of foreign origin on which duty is not paid, is on the person from whose possession the goods are seized. The onus is not on the prosecution to show that the goods are not of Indian origin. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 316, Rel. on]: 1967 Cr.L.J. 651: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 737.

It is true that under S. 178-A of the Sea Customs Act a statutory condition has been imposed upon the accused of establishing his innocence, namely, that the gold was not smuggled ; in other words, the burden of proof on the accused is fixed. It cannot be altered nor does it shift during the course of the enquiry. But when once the accused has placed all the available materials before the Customs Authorities and also when the Customs Authorities are possessed of all the materials as a result of the investigation, after certain stage, the burden of proof imposed on the accused shifts on to the Customs Authorities to prove that it was smuggled gold. In considering the amount of evidence necessary to shift the burden of proof, the Court has regard to the opportunities of knowledge with respect to the fact to be proved which may be possessed by the parties respectively: I.L.R. (1965) 2 Mad. 10: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 39.

Presumption under S. 123 of the Customs Act, 1962 is not conclusive ; it merely shifts burden of establishing that goods seized were not smuggled goods on the person from whom they were seized: 1979 Cr.L.J. 1265 (Goa).

The burden of proving that the goods were smuggled goods is on the Department; it need not do so with mathematical precision to a demonstrable degree ; it has also to establish such a degree of probability that a prudent man may, on its basis, believe in the existence of those facts ; the broad effect of the basic principle underlying S. 106, Evidence Act on cases under S. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act is that the Department would be deemed to have discharged its burden on adducing only so much of evidence, circumstantial or direct, as is sufficient to raise the presumption in regard to the existence of facts to be proved: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 859: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 544.

There is no force in the contention that S. 123 of the Customs Act, 1962 applies only to adjudication proceedings and not to Court proceedings which are exclusively governed by the Evidence Act. [A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 664, Rel. on]: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1161: (1974) 2 Karn.L.J. 249 ; I.L.R. (1970) Guj. 942.

When evidence sufficiently established that the accused were found in possession of the seized goods which the Inspector of Customs reasonably believed to be smuggled, held, the burden of proving that they were not smuggled goods would be on the accused ; though under S. 123 of the Customs Act, 1962 such burden is not heavy and can be discharged by showing preponderance of probability, but when the accused had brought no such material on record, they were rightly convicted : (1991) 51 E.L.T. 43 (Bom.).

Where his trial was full and fair and the accused had not at any stage raised any objection to the search and seizure but, on the other hand, admitted before the Customs Officer not only the seizure but also that the goods seized were of foreign origin, held, the burden was on the accused, if he sought that trust-worthy prosecution evidence be ignored, to show that the goods seized were not of foreign origin: (1984) 16 E.L.T. 202 (Andh. Pra.).

Where gold of high fineness bore no foreign markings, it cannot be contended as a natural corollary that such high fineness belongs to foreign gold and if the person charged had personal knowledge that such fineness could be produced in India, the burden to prove the same would shift on the person under S. 106 of the Evidence Act; the question of shifting of the burden of proof would arise only after the initial burden of proof had been discharged ; such burden could not be deemed to have been discharged when the gold bore no foreign markings: I.L.R. (1979) Bom. 329.

While S. 178-A, Sea Customs Act has the result of placing the burden of proof that the gold was not smuggled on the accused, it is of no assistance to the prosecution to prove that the accused was carrying the gold knowingly to evade the prohibition which was for the time being in force with respect to the import of gold into India. Once, however, it is found, in consequence of the provisions of S. 178-A (the accused not having discharged the burden that lay on him that the gold was not smuggled) that he was carrying smuggled gold, the circumstances under which the gold was discovered, the manner in which he was carrying the gold, the considerable quantity of the gold that was being carried and the form in which gold was being carried, namely, blocks and bars in which the major portion of the gold was found and the fact that the accused was not the person who was expected to carry so much gold (286 tolas), all these circumstances establish beyond a shadow of doubt that the accused was carrying the gold knowingly and with the intention of evading the prohibition that was in force with respect to the import of gold into the country. When all these circumstances are taken together, it is not possible to say that he might be carrying the gold innocently having purchased it from somebody: (1964) 4 S.C.R. 708: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 476.

Where the Customs Officers seized goods on the reasonable belief that they were smuggled goods which were subsequently established to be of foreign origin, held, the burden of proving that they were not smuggled goods was on the accused: (1987) 30 E.L.T. 113 (Ker.) ; 1976 Cr.L.J. 165 (Ker.).

Petitioner failing to produce vouchers relating to goods alleged to be of foreign origin, held, burden shifts on him to prove how he got possession of such goods: 1980 Cen-Cus. 641 (Mad.).

If the goods with foreign markings are seized on the reasonable belief that they were smuggled and the accused fails to show that they are of indigenous origin, the inference that the goods are smuggled would clearly arise in favour of the prosecution ; on evidence clearly showing that the accused had the necessary knowledge of the gold being smuggled and liable to confiscation, held, he was rightly convicted: (1979) 4 E.L.T. 195 (Mad.).

Where at the time of the seizure of the Video Cassette Recorders, they were not notified goods, either under S. 123 or S. 11-B of the Customs Act, 1962, held, the onus of proving whether or not, the Video Cassette Recorders seized were smuggled into the country was squarely lay on the Customs Authorities: (1986) 1 Crimes 111: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 482 (D.B.).

Order by State Import Control Authorities—Prohibition to import watches without licence—Breach of—Onus is on Customs Authorities to prove the breach: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 547: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 248.

Before a person could be held guilty of an offence under S. 167(81) of the Sea Customs Act, the prosecution must prove by dependable evidence that the goods were smuggled ones. The presumption under S. 178-A of the Sea Customs Act will be attracted only in cases where the goods seized fall within the specified class. Merely because a person is in possession of goods, not falling under the category specified in S. 178-A, and is unable to account satisfactorily for its acquisition, it cannot be said that an offence separately punishable under S. 167(81) of the Act is committed, once it is conceded that the identity of the goods is not established: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 368: (1961) 1 M.L.J. 374.

"Smuggled goods" — Meaning — Mere possession not sufficient—Active part in smuggling is necessary—Onus of proof: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 43: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 370.

There are two distinct matters which have to be established before a person can be held guilty of the offence set out in S. 167(81) of the Sea Customs Act: (i) that the goods were smuggled, i.e., imported into the country either without payment of duty or in contravention of any restriction or prohibition imposed as regards the entry of those goods, and (ii) that the accused knowing that the goods were of that character did the acts specified in the latter part of the provision. In the absence of any valid statutory provision in that behalf the onus of establishing the two ingredients necessary to bring home the offence to an accused is on the prosecution: 1962 (Supp.) 1 S.C.R. 364: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 496: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1365.

In order to establish an offence in relation to smuggled gold under S. 167(81) of the Sea Customs Act, it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove by positive evidence that the intention of the accused was to defraud the Government of the duty payable on the gold or to evade the prohibition or restriction on the imports thereon for the time being in force. Once it is proved that the gold is smuggled gold, it follows that it was brought into the country without payment of duty or in violation of the prohibition or restriction in force and whosoever brought it and whosoever dealt with it thereafter knowing it to be smuggled in the manner provided in the section must be held to have the intention of evading the payment of duty or violating the prohibition or restriction: (1965) 3 S.C.R. 854: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 481.

The Department is not required to prove its case with mathematical precision to a demonstrable degree ; in all human affairs, absolute certainty is a myth and all exactness a fake ; the law does not require the prosecution to prove the impossible ; all that is required is the establishment of such a degree of probability that a prudent man may, on its basis, believe in the existence of the fact in issue: (1992) 59 E.L.T. 235 (Guj.) (D.B.).

Intention is not a matter which can be directly proved and has to be inferred on the facts and circumstances of a particular case.

Where, therefore, the prosecution is able to prove that the goods were smuggled and that the accused had them in his conscious possession for use or sale, it would as a rule follow in the absence of any other circumstance that he intended to defraud the Revenue or evade the restrictions imposed on the import of the goods which were recovered from his possession. [(1951) 1 All E.R. 203 and (1952) 1 All E.R. 715, Rel. on]: I.L.R. (1962) 12 Raj. 469: 1962 Raj.L.W. 492: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 584.

When the Court can infer that the goods were seized in the reasonable belief of having been smuggled, the accused is duty bound to repel the presumption by adducing evidence that the goods' origin is not at all foreign and that they are not smuggled; an accused unable to rebut the presumption or to prove that the goods were covered by a permit or licence or were purchased locally without knowledge of their foreign origin can be convicted under S. 135(b) of the Customs Act, 1962: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1161: (1974) 2 Karn.L.J. 249. See also I.L.R. (1973) Cut. 1384.

Where once on the facts of a case S. 178-A of the Sea Customs Act comes rightly into play, then all that is further necessary for the prosecution to establish is that the accused was doing any one of the things mentioned in S. 167(81) of the Sea Customs Act knowingly, that is, consciously, or otherwise than by sheer accident. It is not necessary for the prosecution still to establish in a case of this character by evidence aliunde that the goods which he was in possession of or was otherwise concerned with were smuggled. [(1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 406 (Raj.), Dissent. from]: I.L.R. (1962) 12 Raj. 469: 1962 Raj. L.W. 492: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 584.

Charge of offence under S. 135 of the Customs Act, 1962 for having concerned in carrying smuggled gold—Though burden to prove that gold is not smuggled was on accused, prosecution must prove that accused was carrying gold knowingly to evade prohibition which law imposed: 1967 Mys.L.J. (Cr.) 728: (1967) 2 Mys.L.J. 63: A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 175.

Order of confiscation under S. 167(8), Sea Customs Act, 1878—Offence under Col. 1 must be proved by Revenue Authorities: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1407: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 524.

Imposition of penalty under S. 167(8) of the Sea Customs Act—Burden of proof of offence is on Customs Authorities: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1407: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 524. See also 1992 Cr.L.J. 1190: (1992) 2 Cal.H.N. 119: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 463.

Conditions required by S. 178-A of the Sea Customs Act fulfilled—Accused must be held guilty under S. 167(81) of the Sea Customs Act unless he shows that the goods were not smuggled: (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 937: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 664.

But see contra. The first essential ingredient of the offence under S. 167(81) of the Sea Customs Act is that the person from whom the goods are seized must know that they are smuggled goods. Even in cases in which a presumption can be drawn under S. 178-A of the Sea Customs Act (S. 123 of the Customs Act, 1962) it has further to be established that the person knew that the goods were smuggled ones. For the presumption raised under that section is not that the person from whom the gold is seized under reasonable belief is a smuggler or is in any manner concerned in smuggling of that gold or that he is in possession of it knowing that it is smuggled. The second essential ingredient of the offence is that the accused must have one or both of the intents mentioned in the section, namely, (1) to defraud the Government of any duty, and (2) to evade any prohibition or restriction in force.

A person cannot be convicted for an offence under S. 167(81) merely on the recovery of the gold and his inability to prove that it was not smuggled gold. The burden lies on the prosecution to prove that the gold seized was smuggled one: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 1274: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 406. The prosecution must prove as to what was seized was gold: 1980 Cr.L.J. 533 (Karn.) (D.B.).

In absence of a notification under S. 123(2) of the Customs Act, 1962 applicable to the import of goods seized, no statutory presumption under S. 123 of the Customs Act, 1962 could be invoked by the prosecution ; but if the circumstances established unerringly raised the inference regarding all factual ingredients of the offence under S. 135(b) read with S. 135(ii) of the Customs Act, 1962, held, conviction upheld: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1167: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 302: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 672.

The burden is on the prosecution to establish that they were smuggled goods and the accused, knowing or having reason to believe that the goods were of that character, was in possession or was in any way concerned in dealing with them; the falsity or otherwise of the defence is no ground to convict a person; the prosecution must prove beyond doubt that the accused fell within the purview of S. 135 of the Customs Act, 1962: (1986) 23 E.L.T. 42: (1984) 18 E.L.T. 278 (Ori.); 1970 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 234.

Where the prosecution proved that the goods in his possession were of foreign origin and the accused had no permit to import them, held, the burden to account for his possession under S. 106 of the Evidence Act shifts to the accused: (1987) 29 E.L.T. 853 (Mad.).

(g) Cases under the Indian Penal Code.—Cheating—Claims for work not done—Finding that works to which the claims related were not carried out at all—In view of this finding there was no burden on the prosecution to establish that appellant had personal knowledge of the bogus nature of his claims: 1967 Cr.L.J. 656: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 752.

Where in defence to a charge of cheating, the accused pleaded negligence and irregularity, held, the prosecution is bound to prove that the act was not negligent or irregular but was deliberate and intentional: 1982 Cr.L.J. 856 (Bom.).

Offence of cheating and false evidence—No fraudulent representation—Reasonable explanation given by accused—Onus. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 466. When an accused person pleads S. 197, Cr.P.Code as a bar to his trial, it is for him to show the facts which bring that section into operation: 1957 Cr.L.J. 394: A.I.R. 1957 Tripura 18. Sanction under S. 132, Cr.P.Code—Onus. See (1957) 1 M.L.J. 353: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 206.

Proof of theft—Burden of proof—Accused removing jack-fruits, etc., from all of complainant—Plea of bona fide claim—Proof of dishonest intention of accused: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 810: A.I.R. 1965 Tripura 42.

Charge under S. 409, Penal Code—Accused proved to have received money—Onus to prove that he had accounted for it. See (1971) 39 Cut.L.T. 659.

Lekhpal charged for having committed an offence under S. 218, I.P.Code—Burden to establish that he acted dishonestly when he made the entries lay heavily on the prosecution: 1968 Lab.I.C. 858: 1968 Cr.L.J. 721: A.I.R. 1968 All. 207.

Where the Headmaster of a Primary School charge-sheeted for embezzlement on the report of his superior admitted having received the money which he contended he had paid to the complainant against receipt, verified by the Block Development Officer and was exonerated but was convicted on the complainant's complaint because the first line of the receipt admittedly signed by the complainant was rather squeezed and the complainant deposed that the Block Development Officer's verification was false, held, the defence witnesses of the receipt by, and payment to, the complainant made the defence version more probable; the burden lay very heavy on the prosecution to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt: 1983 Raj.L.W. 720.

Offence under—Accused admitting receiving of money but contending that he handed it over to J, who was in charge of office—Extra-judicial confession of accused of having misappropriated some amount out of money in question—High Court upheld the conviction holding that burden of proof was on him to show what he had done with money and that he failed to discharge that burden—On appeal, it was contended that he could have raised a doubt on prosecution evidence entitling him for benefit of reasonable doubt if documents called for by him had been produced and his application for their production had not been rejected—Held, that in view of his admission and confession there was no question of his raising any reasonable doubt—Held further, that on facts also the case of the accused that reasonable doubt would be created could not have been made out, even if documents in question were produced: 1967 All. Cr. R. 523: 1967 All. W.R. (H.C.) 817: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1590.

Where it was established that a currency note formed part of the money which was to be deposited in the treasury and that it was given to a person for being kept in his custody to be deposited in the treasury later on and the note was recovered from the outer courtyard of the accused, held, that it was for the accused to prove that the note belonged to him and that he retained possession over the note honestly: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1713: A.I.R. 1954 Manipur 13.

Under S. 489-B, I.P.Code the burden is on the prosecution to prove that at the time when the accused was passing the note he knew that it was a forged one. The mere possession of it by him does not shift the burden on the accused to prove his innocent possession of the forged note. Similarly, under S. 489-C, it is to be proved that the accused intended to use the forged or counterfeit currency note as genuine or it might be used as genuine. It is for the prosecution to prove the circumstances which would irresistibly lead to the conclusion that the accused had the intention to introduce surreptitiously the note on the public. This knowledge or reason to believe that the note was forged has to be proved to fix the liability under Ss. 489-B and 489-C: 1990 Cr.L.J. 215 (Cal.) (D.B.).

In a case where special provision of S. 299 Cr.P.Code, is invoked, it is the bounden duty of the prosecution to strictly satisfy the Court that the person who is put up for trial subsequently is not only the absconding accused but is the accused who committed the crime and there is no doubt about his identity and of his being implicated in the crime to prove which evidence had been recorded earlier: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2763 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

In a prosecution for an offence under S. 199, Indian Penal Code, held, the burden of proof is on the prosecution to show that at time of taking the affidavit, accused either knew or believed it to be false or did not believe it to be true: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1527: 54 Cut.L.T. 601.

A promise of marriage is known personally to the parties; it is her word against him. But where the defendant in his examination-in-chief merely stated that he knew her but did not promise to marry her and had no sexual intercourse with her without her consent, and said nothing on oath about a hoard of evidence, oral and documentary, indicating promise of marriage, held, the promise stood established: (1987-1) 7 Guj.L.H. 231 (D.B.).

Criminal trial—Prosecution under Ss. 363 and 366, Penal Code—Onus: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 42: 1957 Cr.L.J. 847.

Where the accused were charged with criminal conspiracy to commit criminal misappropriation on allegation that they had dishonestly and fraudulently misappropriated or converted to their own use some bags of wheat from the bags released from the ship, it is no doubt true that the onus on the prosecution is of a negative character and also that the failure on the part of the accused to give evidence on the question as to when, where and to whom the controversial bags were delivered cannot under our law give rise to any presumption against them. The criminal Courts holding trial under the Cr.P.Code have to bear in mind the provisions of S. 342-A of the Code and to see that their mind is not influenced by such failure on the part of the accused. But that does not mean that such negative onus is not capable of being discharged by appropriate circumstantial evidence. If the circumstantial evidence is trustworthy and establishes facts and circumstances the combination of which does not admit of any safe inference other than that of the guilt of the accused then there can hardly be any escape for him and the Court can confidently record a verdict of guilt beyond reasonable doubt. The Court would, of course, be well advised in case of circumstantial evidence to be watchful and to ensure that conjectures or suspicions do not take the place of legal proof. The chain of evidence to sustain a conviction must be complete and admit of no reasonable conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1514: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1391.

It is well settled that in a criminal conspiracy (to destroy the film Kissa Kursi Ka during the Emergency) there must be direct or circumstantial evidence of the agreement between the accused showing a meeting of minds leading to the ultimate decision to commit the offence; despite difficulties in obtaining direct evidence and possible disappearance of evidence because of one year's delay in starting investigation, held, the prosecution has still to discharge its burden of proving the conspiracy beyond reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1382: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 665: 1980 Cr.L.J. 965.

Extra-judicial confession—Onus: A.I.R. 1957 All. 459.

When a witness gives evidence on oath, the presumption is that he had stated truth; the burden to prove otherwise is on the person challenging its truthness: 1978 All.W.C. 804: 1978 All.Cr.R. 325.

Where the accused sought to impeach the testimony of a witness as that of an accomplice, held, the burden lies on the accused to convince the Court by his own testimony or some other material on record that the witness could aptly be described as an accomplice: A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 26: 1971 Cr.L.J. 786. See also Notes under S. 133.

Appeal against acquittal—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 37: 1957 Cr.L.J. 631(2).

In a case where death is due to the injuries or wounds caused by a lethal weapon, it is always the duty of the prosecution to prove by expert evidence that it was likely or atleast possible for the injuries to have been caused with the weapon with which they are alleged to have been caused: I.L.R. (1954) Hyd. 130: A.I.R. 1954 Hyd. 196.

Prosecution failing to prove that accused started grappling with deceased because he declined to take him to his house for drinks and meals—Defence Counsel suggesting that it may be that deceased under influence of liquor started grappling with accused whom he had invited to his house and accused in order to save himself threw him on ground with fatal result—Held, charge could not be said to have been substantiated against accused beyond doubt: 1968 Cur.L.J. 241.

Motive—Murder-case resting on circumstantial evidence—Motive for murder assumes some importance: 1966 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 82.

Where prosecution failed to discharge the burden that the offence was committed by the accused and it sought to rely on the fact that accused gave false information to witnesses regarding the cause of death, held, the false information given by the accused would have the effect of being simply taken in aid to lend assurance to the prosecution story and could never form basis for drawing of inference that the accused and accused alone were guilty of the offence. It is only when the evidence led by the prosecution, if believed, will sustain a conviction or atleast make out a prima faice case, that the question of accused discharging the burden under S. 106 arises. Therefore, there should be at least a prima facie case made out by the evidence let-in by the prosecution to take the false information given by the accused in-aid to lend assurance to the prosecution story: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1339 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Intention or knowledge to cause death necessary ingredient of offence under S. 307, I.P.Code—Burden of proof of intention or knowledge lies on prosecution: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1588: A.I.R. 1967 All. 580.

Criminal trial—Accused (snakecharmer) administering pills to his disciples alongwith heated liver of goat—Some disciples dying and rest becoming sick—Burden of proof: 30 Cut.L.T. 18: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 42: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 173.

Fight between two rival parties over land dispute—Injuries caused to members of both parties and death of one of members—Conflicting versions of incident given by rival parties—Court should attempt to find out which version is more probable bearing in mind the basic fact that burden is always on prosecution to prove their case beyond doubt: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 101 (Ker.).

Where gold ornaments worn by a lady who was murdered were recovered on the basis of the accused's discovery statement but there was nothing on record to connect the accused with the murder, held, no presumption of his being involved in the murder could be drawn merely because the accused remained silent; it is for the prosecution to prove its case affirmatively against the accused; however, the presumption that the accused was receiver of stolen goods could be drawn under S. 114; he could be convicted under S. 411 of the Indian Penal Code if its ingredients were proved: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1753: 1980 Cr.L.J. 1270.

Murder and robbery forming part of same transaction—Possession of stolen property—Presumption—Burden of proof. See (1954) 2 M.L.J. 673: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 1088. See also Notes under S. 114.

Where, there was no oral or documentary evidence even remotely suggesting the involvement of the accused in the offence except the mere presence of the accused near the scene of occurrence, held, the same was not sufficient to discharge the burden of the prosecution and shift the burden of proof to the accused: 1990 Cr.L.J. 100 (Ker.).

When shortly before the death of the deceased both the accused had entered the house of the deceased and it was bolted from inside and they did not open the door despite tapping several times and the door had to be broken by the neighbours and the relations and both the accused were found hiding under the cot in the bedroom and the deceased was lying dead with injuries on his person, held, the accused had an obligation to explain their presence and the circumstances under which the deceased died: (1994) 2 S.C.C. 677: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 601.

Criminal trial—Poisoning—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 All. 1: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1.

(h) Others.—In view of Ss. 20 and 54 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, it is for the person who is found in possession of any illegal drugs to prove that he holds a licence therefor or that he was in its lawful possession. If the presumption is not rebutted by such person, then the presumption will stand and there is no reason whatsoever for the prosecution to prove the unlawful and illegal possession by such person of the said substance: (1988) 1 Bom.C.R. 332: 1988 Cr.L.J. 17 (D.B.).

To get benefit of S. 27 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985, in respect of punishment, the burden is on the accused to prove that the small quantity of narcotic drug or psychotropic substance found in his possession was intended for his personal consumption and not for sale: (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 574 (D.B.).

In a prosecution under the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940, the burden of proving that the Drugs Inspector changed the sample is on the accused: 1976 All.W.C. 743. See also 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 271, cited under Note 81, infra.

Statements before committing Court alleged to be made under Police pressure—Onus is on accused to prove: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 289.

The prime burden of proof rests on the prosecution to establish the basic facts and ingredients for bringing home to the accused the offence under S. 3 or S. 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961 and the prosecution will have to establish its case in this connection beyond reasonable doubt. Once that happens, then only the burden will shift on the accused under S. 8-A of the Act, to show that he has not given or taken or abetted any giving or taking of any property or valuable security in connection with the marriage of parties or that he has not demanded directly or indirectly from the parents or the relatives of the bride or bridegroom, as the case may be, any dowry, meaning thereby such demand if any is not in connection with the marriage of the said parties. The said burden of proof on the accused as contemplated in S. 8-A of the Act can be discharged on preponderance of probabilities: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 672 (Karn.) (F.B.).

Where an unverified and unstamped measure at the time of inspection was found along with the other measures in the accused's shop at the time of inspection and the accused failed to prove that said measure was not in use, held, the accused was guilty under S. 25 of the Tamil Nadu Weights and Measures (Enforcement) Act, 1958: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1161 (Mad.).

16. Accident.—(See also Notes 36 and 57 and S. 106, Note 8, infra). Rash and negligent driving resulting in accident—Cause of accident—Proof—Burden of: A.I.R. 1968 Madh. Pra. 47.

Person driving a motor vehicle—Causing accident resulting in death of a person—Onus of proof that accused drove rashly and negligently is on the prosecution: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1338: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 290.

From the decided cases two lines of approach in regard to the application and effect of the maxim res ipsa loquitur are discernible. According to the first, where the maxim applies, it operates as an exception to the general rule that the burden of proof of the alleged negligence is, in the first instance, on the plaintiff. In this view, if the nature of an accident is such that the mere happening of it is evidence of negligence, such as, where a motor vehicle without apparent cause leaves the highway or overturns or in fair visibility runs into an obstacle, or brushes the branches of an overhanging tree, resulting in injury, or where there is a duty on the defendant to exercise care, and the circumstances in which the injury complained of happened are such that with the exercise of the requisite care no risk would in the ordinary course ensue, the burden shifts or is in the first instance, on the defendant to disprove his liability. According to the other line of approach res ipsa loquitur is not a special rule of substantive law, that functionally, it is only an aid in the evaluation of evidence, "an application of general method of inferring one or more facts in issue from circumstances proved in evidence." In this view, the maxim res ipsa loquitur does not require the raising of any presumption of law which must shift the onus on the defendant. It only, when applied appropriately, allows the drawing of a permissive inference of fact, as distinguished from a mandatory presumption properly so-called, having regard to the totality of the circumstances and probabilities of the case. Res ipsa is only a mean of estimating logical probability from the circumstances of the accident. The first line of approach which tends to give the maxim a larger effect than that of a merely permissive inference, by laying down that the application of the maxim shifts or casts, even in the first instance, the burden on the defendant who in order to exculpate himself must rebut the presumption of negligence against him, cannot as such be invoked in the trial of criminal cases where the accused stands charged for causing injury or death by negligent or rash act. Where negligence is an essential ingredient of the offence, the negligence to be established by the prosecution must be culpable or gross and not the negligence merely based upon an error of judgment: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1848: (1979) 2 Karn.L.J. (S.N.) 73.

As the true cause of the accident is not known to the plaintiff but is solely within the knowledge of the defendant who caused it, the plaintiff can prove the accident but cannot prove how it happened to establish negligence on the part of the defendant. This hardship is sought to be avoided by applying the principle of res ipsa loquitur, i.e., the accident speaks for itself so that it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove the accident and nothing more. It will then be for the defendant to establish that the accident happened due to some other cause than his own negligence: (1985) 5 Guj.L.H. 963: (1985) 26 Guj.L.R. 1242.

Maxim res ipsa loquitur—Applicability to an accident—Depends upon facts of each case—Question is one relating to onus of proof—Onus is on defendant to prove want of negligence: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 252.

In a case to which doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is attracted, the initial onus is on the defendant-driver to prove that he was not negligent. If he fails to discharge that onus, then the issue of negligence has to be concluded against him: A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 177: (1977) 79 Punj.L.R. 628. See however 1982 All.W.C. 34: 1982 All.L.J. 43.

Normally, the burden of proof that the vehicle was being driven rashly and negligently at the time of accident is on the claimant. However, the circumstances of a particular case may speak for themselves and show negligence on the part of the driver of the vehicle and in such a case, it will be the duty of the driver and owner of the vehicle to disprove negligence: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 189. Thus, where the evidence is that the vehicle did not go in the usual manner and went off the road and dashed a tree, the doctrine "res ipsa loquitur" (i.e., thing speaks for itself) is attracted and the burden shifts on the other party: A.I.R. 1994 Gau. 59.

Death due to rash driving—Suit for damages—Burden of proving negligence: 1961 M.P.L.J. 526: A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 23.

In a motor accident claim, held, the burden lies on the claimant to prove the identity of the vehicle involved in the accident and if such burden is not discharged by the claimant by adduction of positive evidence, the opposite party need not prove that the vehicle was not involved in the accident: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 255 (Del.). Claimants have to prove as to what was the income of the deceased and what pecuniary loss they have suffered due to his death and it is thereafter that the opposite party has to adduce evidence to show what pecuniary advantages the claimants received by reason of the death: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 183 (D.B.).

Motor Vehicles Act—Negligence of motor driver—Want of reasonable care and speed in driving ought to be established—Onus lies on claimant to prove that there was negligence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1023: A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 11.

Where the defence plea was that the motor accident was occasioned by a mechanical defect, held, the burden lay on the owner of the vehicle to prove that he had taken all necessary precautions, that the defect was latent and not discoverable by use of reasonable care: A.I.R. 1990 Him. Pra. 53.

Where in a motor accident claim case, a plea of inevitable accident due to a latent manufacturing defect in tyre is taken, held, when the said tyre was used for more than five months after it was installed and the truck had run for more than 152 days, what was required to be proved was that there was direct nexus between the accident and the latent or patent mechanical or manufacturing defect and the plea of inevitable accident was required to be established by the person who propounds it: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 412.

If a person claims that someone other than himself was driving the truck at the time of the accident, the onus would shift to him to prove it when the owner of the truck has made a reliable statement that the said person was the driver of the truck at the time of the occurrence: 1979 All.Cr.R. 114: 1979 Cr.L.J. 517 (D.B.).

In a motor accident claim case, burden lies on the insurance company to establish breach of the policy conditions; it is for the company to prove that the vehicle was being driven by a driver holding no valid licence: A.I.R. 1979 Karn. 114 (D.B.).

In an appeal against the order of the Motor Accident Claims Tribunal awarding interim compensation under S. 140 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1988, held, the burden is on the appellant insurer to satisfy the appellate Court that the injuries suffered by the claimant prima facie do not fall within the definition of permanent disablement as contemplated under S. 142 of the said Act: 1995 D.N.J. 497 (Raj.).

Where a pick-up van belonging to a firm met with an accident and the insurance company pleaded that as the driver did not have any valid driving licence it was not liable under the terms of insurance contract, held, the burden to prove that there was breach of contract of insurance was on the insurance company: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1281: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 574. But where the owner of the vehicle had suppressed the name of the person who was driving the vehicle at the time of accident, held, an adverse inference could be drawn that the vehicle was driven by an unlicensed person and the burden of the insurance company stood discharged: (1978) 1 An.W.R. 277 (D.B.).

Where in a motor accident claim case, the driver of the vehicle had been produced as its witness by the insurance company itself and he categorically stated that he had a driving licence when accident occurred but could not produce it as he had destroyed it after its expiry and no evidence was produced to show that his explanation was wrong, held, there was no other alternative but to accept his statement that he had a licence at the relevant time, and the insurance company could not contend otherwise: (1991-2) 11 Guj.L.H. 322 (S.C.); (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 39. See also Note 57, infra.

Where a truck collided with the goods train as the gate on the level railway crossing was not closed and no issue in regard to the claimant's contributory negligence was raised in the suit for damages and the claimant's Counsel was, he alleged, taken by surprise, held, no specific issue of contributory negligence need to have been raised; the claimant's contributory negligence is capable of being raised under the general issue of negligence; the two issues are inseparable, and in most cases, inextricably "bound up together". Since the burden of proving contributory negligence lies on the defendant, it need not, however, discharge the same by adducing evidence; contributory negligence can be deduced from the plaintiff's evidence or primary facts on a balance of probabilities: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 92: (1980) 82 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 37.

Where, under a contract, a vehicle is hired out with its driver to another person, and an accident occurs by reason of the negligent driving, to make the hirer liable, the plaintiff has to establish that the hirer had a right not only to give direction as to what work the driver of the vehicle had to perform, but also had the right to control how he should drive the vehicle: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 13.

Where the widow of the deceased claimed compensation from the Railway Authorities on the ground that her husband was travelling on the ill-fated train which met with an accident but the Railway Authorities contended that the deceased was not a bona fide passenger and that the name of the deceased was not borne out in the official list of the dead persons, held, it was for the wife of the deceased to prove beyond doubt that her husband was actually travelling by the ill-fated train and he died as a result of the accident and that he was a bona fide passenger. [A.I.R. 1984 All. 277 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 All. 52: 1985 All.L.J. 66 (D.B.). See also Note 36, infra.

17. Accounts.—Suit for accounts—Accounts genuine—Entries made in regular course of business showing debt due to third party—Defendant claiming credit for discharging the debt—Burden to prove that credit was not fictitious does not lie on defendant: A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 205: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 103; A.I.R. 1955 N.U.C. 3160 (Mad.).

Money suit on basis of account books containing entries countersigned by the defendant—Presumption—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 323: 1963 M.P.L.J. 325, cited under Note 7, supra.

There is no presumption that in a suit for accounts the accounts produced by the legal representative, as being that of the deceased accounting party, are either genuine or correct. But since the original accounting party is not available, they must be treated as 'prima facie' the accounts of the deceased, and it would be for the plaintiff to prove that they are not genuine or correct: A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 244.

Account books—Manager of joint Hindu family is accountable for cash—Manager producing account books—Person challenging accuracy has to surcharge and falsify them and lead prima facie evidence to throw burden upon manager to prove accuracy of these books: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 70: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 30; A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 394.

Where in a suit for money lent, the plaintiff admitted that he kept a day book but the same was not produced, held, that the plaintiff on whom lay the onus of proof should produce the best evidence available and in case such evidence was not produced he must suffer the consequences: 41 P.L.R. J.&K. 21.

Suit for recovery of amount due on the basis of adjustment of accounts signed by defendant—Defendant denying correctness of amount found due—Defendant who is in possession of account books kept by him and from which the balance could be ascertained should produce them before Court—He cannot be heard to say, relying upon the abstract doctrine of onus of proof, that it was no part of his duty to produce them unless he was called upon to do so: 1953 S.C.R. 758: A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 225; A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 166.

Person liable to account not alive—Suit against representative—Onus: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 100.

18. Admission.—True, evidentiary admissions are not conclusive proof of the facts admitted or may be explained or shown to be wrong but they do raise an estoppel and shift the burden of proof on to their maker or his representative-in-interest; they are, if not explained away or shown to be wrong are an efficacious proof of the facts admitted: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 861.

Admissions made by the plaintiff—Burden is on him to show that they are erroneous: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 683: 1963 Mah.L.J. 60: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 158: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 110; A.I.R. 1957 All. 1 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 450 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 35 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 368 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 662 (D.B.).

Where the defendant though admitted receipt of goods, his plea was that some of them were not proper, held, burden was on him to so prove: (1987) 2 Raj.L.R. 944.

Onus of proof on a party ceases when opposite party admits: A.I.R. 1932 All. 199 (D.B.). See A.I.R. 1971 Assam 168, cited under Note 2, supra.

Admission of gift. See A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 178 (D.B.), cited under Note 49, infra.

Admission regarding passing of consideration. See A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 823, cited under Note 31, infra.

When in a sale deed there is an admission of a party admitting the receipt of consideration, held, it is for him to prove by cogent evidence that the statement contained in the document was false: A.I.R. 1971 All. 151.

Admission of mortgage—Onus is on mortgagee to show that mortgage extinguished by subsequent sale. See A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 91, cited under Note 76, infra.

A mere admission of a party having thumb-marked on a blank paper at the asking of his creditor on obtaining a loan since repaid and the plaintiff might have obtained the same to turn it to be a hand-note, held, it does not amount to be an admission of the hand-note itself; the burden lies on the plaintiff to prove it: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 92.

19. Adoption.—Fraud or no fraud, mere recital in a document cannot establish adoption in law. It has to be established as a fact whether adoption has been made or not. The person who asserts adoption has got to prove the same, whether he figures as plaintiff or as defendant to an action: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 131. See also A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 261.

The burden of establishing that there was a valid adoption which deflected the ordinary course of succession undoubtedly is on the party pleading adoption: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2446; A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 114: 1982 Hindu L.R. 665: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 335 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1978 Ori. 48: (1977) 2 Cut.W.R. 358: 45 Cut.L.T. 111; A.I.R. 1973 J.&K. 89: 1973 Kash.L.J. 91 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 299: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 297; A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 190.

It is well settled that the party seeking to displace natural succession to property has to establish the factum as well as the validity of adoption; such proof should be free from all suspicion of fraud leaving no doubt about its truth; physical act of giving and taking is an essential requisite and imperative in all adoptions whatever be the caste; a mere expression of consent or execution of the adoption deed is not enough. However, adoption is to be proved in the same way as any other fact: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 114: 1983 Hindu L.R. 475: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 35: 1983 U.J. (S.C.) 25: (1983) 1 S.C.R. 851; A.I.R. 1995 Ori. 32; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136; A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 207; A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 242.

Since adoption displaces the normal order of successions, Courts must insist upon strict and even severe standards of proof, and the evidence by which the adoption is sought to be proved must be beyond suspicion and of unimpeachable character. [A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 79; A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 84; A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 18, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1976 Bom. 264: 1977 Mah.L.J. 68 (D.B.).

As adoption results in changing the course of succession, very grave and serious onus rests upon such person who seeks to displace the natural successor by alleging adoption: A.I.R. 1995 Ori. 32.

A person, who sets up an adoption, must prove by clear evidence the factum of the adoption, particularly when the adoption was a recent event. Deeper scrutiny of evidence is called for in a case where the adoption set up is that of an illegitimate son which, to say the least, is got ordinarily done: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 308: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 611.

Burden of proving fact of adoption lies on plaintiff who claims to be adopted: 1963 M.P.L.J. 46.

The onus of proof, especially in the absence of contemporaneous deed of adoption rests heavily on the party asserting adoption; if the giving and taking ceremony is not satisfactorily established and there are rival and competing deeds of adoption, held, the requisite heavy burden is not discharged and adoption is not proved: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 344: I.L.R. (1977) Cut. 608 (D.B.).

Ordinarily, it is for the person who had been adopted to prove that he had been validly adopted satisfying all the statutory requirements. But where there is a deed of adoption recording the giving and taking of the child with all the ceremonies and that deed had been proved to have been executed and registered in accordance with law, the Court shall presume under S. 16 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 that the adoption has been made in compliance with the provisions, unless and until it is disproved. It would be then for the party challenging the adoption to prove that the adoption had either not taken place in fact or though it did take place, it was not in compliance with the provisions of the said Act and was invalid: 1982 Hindu L.R. 248: (1982) 1 Karn.L.J. 210 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 205 (D.B.).

Once the execution of the adoption deed was duly proved in accordance with law, and the law does not require the production of more than one attesting witness to prove a deed, the burden to disprove that it was executed by him shifted on to the defendant who denied its due execution. It was for him to establish by expert evidence, if he could, that the adoption deed did not bear his thumb-impression and signature: 1978 All.W.C. 52.

Even though there are no special rules of evidence to establish an adoption, the burden of proving an adoption is a very grave and serious one, as an adoption displaces the natural succession. It is true that if the adoption is questioned after the lapse of a long period, allowance will have to be made for the absence and disappearance of direct evidence of witnesses who had attended and participated in the function and too much importance ought not to be attached to discrepancies in the evidence which would be inevitable if witnesses speak about events and incidents which took place, decades back. A contemporaneous deed of adoption coming into existence at the same time as the adoption took place, would no doubt, be strong cogent evidence. Again transactions and dealings and documents in which reference is made to the adoption in question wherein third parties or relatives referred to the status of the person as an adopted son and persons who have knowledge of the family history of the party concerned have referred to that status would also be useful evidence. If there is no contemporaneous deed of adoption and if there is no satisfactory proof of the giving and taking and if the inference of adoption is to be drawn from the recitals in the documents and the assertion of rights in documents dealing with the estate as the adopted son, etc., the documentary evidence must manifest one consistent pattern of conduct and if there were rival competing sets of documents, it cannot be said that the grave, and serious burden had been discharged: (1970) 1 M.L.J. 105: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Mad. 459: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 329.

Adoption—Registered document—Good faith—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 129.

The evidence of adoption after lapse of long years may not be available which may make it difficult to find an eye-witness who had actually seen the actual giving and taking in adoption; if in such cases the party propounding adoption adduces some evidence of the factum of adoption, held, it may be accepted as sufficient to shift the burden on the opposite party to prove that there was no adoption; a presumption of validity of adoption may be drawn from the status and recognition of the adopted son by members of the adoptive family. [A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 65; A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 304; A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 201; A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 18; (1870) 14 Moo. Ind. App. 67 (P.C.), Foll.]: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 40: 1975 Raj.L.W. 14: 1975 W.L.N. 931.

Custom—Plaintiff setting up custom of adoption derogatory to Hindu law—Burden of proof is on him to prove it—Place of custom must be specific, i.e., whether family custom or local custom: A.I.R. 1964 Manipur 14.

Where the defendants claimed adoption of a remarried widow's son from her deceased husband by her second husband based on a special custom, held, the burden lay on them to plead and prove it; their contention that they could not adduce evidence for want of an issue has no merit precisely because the special custom was not pleaded by them and no issue could be framed on the point: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 204: 1981 B.L.J. 273: 1981 B.L.J.R. 501 (D.B.).

Where it is proved by evidence that amongst the khateeks of a certain area married males having children were adopted over the past 20 to 30 years, held, an ancient, certain and reasonable custom of such adoptions is proved; it was for the other party to rebut the custom: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 187: 1981 Raj.L.W. 61 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 60.

Adoption—Onus—Party pleading special custom—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 J.&K. 53.

Vaishnava Agarwals in Berar—Power of widow to adopt without proof of husband's authority—Reliance on custom in Punjab—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 79. See also Note 35, infra.

Burden of proof—Long lapse between time of adoption and date of suit: (1963) 2 An.W.R. 169: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 109.

The evidence in support of adoption must be sufficient to satisfy the very grave and serious onus that rests upon any person who seeks to displace the natural succession by alleging adoption. When there is a long lapse of years between the adoption and its being questioned, every allowance for the absence of such evidence to prove such fact must be favourably entertained, the reason being that after very long term of years it is difficult to procure evidence. Where there is a long variety of transactions upon the footing that the adoption was a valid act, the burden rests very heavily upon the party who challenges its validity: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 422: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 45.

There is a very heavy and serious onus resting on a person who relies upon an adoption. This burden has to be discharged with even greater strictness where an unusual adoption such as an adoption of a girl is set up: 1961 Jab.L.J. 857: 1961 M.P.L.J. 208: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 173.

Adoption—Oral evidence—Reliability of witnesses has to be tested only by surrounding circumstances: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 309: 13 Law Rep. 681.

Allegation of fact and onus of proof—Plaintiff alleging adoption of defendant—Onus lies on him to prove it—Admission by defendant—Effect of—Shifting of onus: (1968) 34 Cut.L.T. 890.

Ancient adoption—Proof—Onus: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1286. See also(1968) 34 Cut.L.T. 778; (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 535.

A person who claims title on the basis of adoption must prove the adoption and it has to be established that the essential ceremony of giving and taking did take place. That burden, however, shifts to the person who challenges the adoption to disprove the adoption when on account of long lapse of years, direct evidence of giving and taking has disappeared: A.I.R. 1985 Ori. 171 (D.B.).

Burden of proof—Old adoption—Shifting of burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1955 Raj. 65: I.L.R. (1954) Raj. 822.

While the normal rule is that the party seeking to deflect the natural line of succession to property must prove the adoption yet where an ancient adoption had been acted upon over 36 years, held, the initial burden would shift on to the party who wants to disprove the adoption: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 43.

Presumption and onus—Adoption recognised by all members of family for over fifty years—Strong presumption in favour of its validity arises—Heavy burden lies on reversioner challenging it to prove his allegation that it is invalid on the ground of the adoptive mother lacking competence to adopt: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1359.

Where an alleged adoption was questioned after an interval of more than fifty-five years, the onus lies on the plaintiff to disprove adoption and although the defendant was bound to prove his title as adopted son, every allowance for an absence of evidence to prove such fact must be favourably entertained: I.L.R. 55 Mad. 40: A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 198: 62 M.L.J. 116.

When a person has for nearly half a century enjoyed the status of an adopted son and it is not possible to get witnesses who were actually present at the time and could depose to the performance of the ceremony, it must be presumed that all the necessary ceremonies were duly and regularly performed: 1960 Jab.L.J. 122: 1960 M.P.C. 45: 1960 M.P.L.J. 424.

Normally, in case of an adoption where the adopter has admitted in the deed that he has adopted the plaintiff, presumption would enure in favour of the plaintiff and the onus to prove that there was no valid adoption would shift to the other party. Where, however, the deed of adoption containing the admission has been alleged to be fraudulent and the plaintiff has by his own conduct by filing a suit after the death of adopter made it impossible to have any explanation for the admission by the adopter such admission cannot be treated as conclusive. The question of burden becomes immaterial in appellate Court where the whole evidence has been led before the trial Court. The appellate Court would decide the validity of adoption on the materials placed before it: 13 Law Rep. 681: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 309.

Adoption by male Hindu—Soundness of mind—Nature of evidence—Burden of proof—See 1979 All.L.J. 1333.

Under S. 7 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956, it is a major Hindu of sound mind who is competent to adopt; if an adoption is challenged on the ground of the adoptive father being of unsound mind, the heavy onus of proving it lies on the objector; the mental capacity for the purpose, however, does not need a high degree of intelligence; it is enough if the adoptive comprehends what he was doing; there is a strong presumption of sanity unless he is shown to be a lunatic. Thus, where the adoptive father was found to be dumb and hard of hearing but was able to express by signs and physical gestures that he had filed the written statement and had adopted the child, even if his expressions were not clear, held, he was prima facie not an idiot: 1981 Hindu L.R. 781 (All.).

20. Adultery.—In a petition for divorce based on adultery it is not necessary and it is indeed rarely possible to prove the issue by any direct evidence for in very few cases such proof can be obtainable; the Court may be satisfied of the fact of adultery by purely circumstantial evidence: A.I.R. 1974 Madh. Pra. 88: 1974 M.P.L.J. 188 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1979 Madh. Pra. 70 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 295 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1980 Cal. 374 (D.B.), holding A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38 and A.I.R. 1974 Cal. 61 no longer good law in view of A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1534.

It is extremely difficult to prove actual fact of adultery; seclusion and secrecy are its most vital aspects; what is to be seen is the cumulative effect of the evidence found satisfactory to the Court's conscience; as laid down by English Courts and the Supreme Court of India, proof cannot in such cases be on mere preponderance of evidence; it has to be established beyond reasonable doubt. Between "may be true" and "must be true" is a gap which must be bridged by evidence to decree divorce on the ground of adultery: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 243: (1974-75) 79 Cal.W.N. 157.

In a proceeding for divorce under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 on the ground of adultery, the burden is on the petitioner to prove the charge: 1982 Hindu L.R. 304 (Raj.). No party can be asked to prove a negative fact that he or she is not living in adultery: 1981 Hindu L.R. 344 (P.&H.).

Divorce—Adultery—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38: (1969-70) 74 Cal.W.N. 168 (D.B.).

Allegations of adultery—Burden of proof—Nature and standard of evidence required—Mere possibility of misconduct not sufficient: I.L.R. (1960) 1 Punj. 579: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 181.

Principles regarding proof of adultery are: (1) direct proof is very rare; (2) adultery can be established by circumstantial evidence; and (3) circumstances must be such as would lead the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man to the conclusion of adultery: A.I.R. 1979 Raj. 156: 1980 Hindu L.R. 141 (S.B.).

The standard of proof for matrimonial offences, like adultery in divorce cases, is not as strict as in a criminal case where it has to be beyond reasonable doubt. [A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 243, Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1974 Madh. Pra. 88; A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 112 (S.B.) and (1966) 1 All E.R. 524, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 213: 1982 B.L.J.R. 372: 1982 B.L.J. 416: 1982 Pat.L.J.R. 314: 1982 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 486: (1982) 2 D.M.C. 128 (S.B.). But at the same time any vague allegation of adultery cannot be accepted. The party making allegation has to lead either direct evidence or to prove the circumstances, on the basis of which the Court can come to a conclusion that such charge is established: (1991-1) 39 B.L.J.R. 356 (F.B.).

If the factum of adultery is sought to be proved by circumstantial evidence, the evidence should be such as would be incompatible with the innocence of the party charged. In any case it should lead a just and reasonable man to the conclusion that adultery has been committed. The fact that the respondent to a petition for dissolution of marriage introduced a woman to certain other person as his wife at a party where a number of people had assembled does not constitute an admission by the respondent of the fact that he had committed adultery with her: (1952) 54 Punj.L.R. 56: A.I.R. 1952 Punj. 39 (F.B.).

It is established that adultery is not likely to be proved by direct evidence; it is proved mainly by circumstantial evidence and on the Court being satisfied about want of collusion and availability of opportunity to have guilty intercourse; it is, however, necessary to remember that the petitioner's evidence must be such as would lead the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man to reach the conclusion of adultery: A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 102 (S.B.).

It is a fundamental rule that it is not necessary to prove the direct fact of the adultery. In every case almost the fact is inferred from circumstances that lead to it by fair inference as a necessary conclusion, and unless this were so, held, no protection whatever could be given to marital rights. But the circumstances must be such as would lead the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man to the conclusion: I.L.R. 55 All. 597: 1933 All.L.J. 1108: A.I.R. 1933 All. 427; 8 O.W.N. 168: A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 259. See also A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 49 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 103 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 792; A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 302; A.I.R. 1956 Assam 66; 62 I.C. 782.

The onus to prove adultery is upon the person alleging it and impossibility of procuring evidence is no excuse: A.I.R. 1992 Madh. Pra. 260: 1992 M.P.L.J. 466. As circumstantial and presumptive evidence assumes importance because direct evidence of adultery is normally not probable, uncorroborated evidence of the petitioner supported by such circumstantial evidence may be enough. But falsity of defence may be no substitute. Adultery assumes criminal character and demands of rather strict proof; yet the standard of proof required is not the same as in criminal trial; a proof beyond reasonable doubt is no longer necessary; preponderance of probabilities decides the issue. Thus, where there was evidence of the wife having earlier eloped with another person but was forgiven on her repentance, there was also quite satisfactory evidence of the co-respondent's presence at the petitioner's residence when he was supposed to be at his work place, and the milkman also testified that he had seen the wife and the co-respondent in bed, held, there was sufficient evidence to prove the wife having committed adultery: A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 112: 1981 Jab.L.J. 178 (S.B.).

It is extremely difficult to prove the fact of adultery, seclusion and secrecy being its most likely attributes, circumstances being infinitely diversified by the parties' situation and character, it is futile to compare evidence in a given case to that of an earlier reported case. Thus, where the petitioner-husband stated that he had one day found a co-worker of his wife lying in the bed in his wife's bed room when his wife was also there, held, having regard to the standard of society to which the parties belonged, it could not be said that the wife, a working lady, was not expected to have male acquaintances; and as the wife was a working lady, visits by a co-worker were also not unusual; besides, despite the petitioner's plea of his friends and neighbours having confirmed the co-respondent staying at night in the wife's house, he examined no witness in support thereof. The petitioner's case not made out: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 213: 1982 B.L.J.R. 372: 1982 B.L.J. 416: 1982 Pat.L.J.R. 314: 1982 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 486: (1982) 2 D.M.C. 128 (S.B.).

It is not necessary that there should be direct evidence of adultery before a marriage can be dissolved for direct evidence of such a crime is rarely available. Association coupled with opportunity and evidence of illicit affection or familiarity creates an inference upon which the Court can act. Adultery may legitimately be inferred from evidence of opportunity, where the circumstances are such as would lead a reasonable and just person to the conclusion that adultery had been committed: I.L.R. (1947) Lah. 867: A.I.R. 1949 Lah. 34 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 102 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 133.

The charge of adultery or illicit connection made against the spouse is a serious matter and it must rest on evidence of unimpeachable character. For it not only results in the break up of the marriage but also exposes the party charged with adultery to perpetual blemish, with the result that apart from the social censure the party also cannot hope to settle down in matrimony again because of the stigma. Where apart from the interested testimony of the appellant and her father who accused respondent of adultery there was no one on whose testimony the Court could sustain that plea, held, respondent could not be accused of adultery as such a plea should have been supported by at least one independent witness or some reliable documentary evidence: A.I.R. 1988 All. 239: (1988) 2 D.M.C. 117: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 497.

Where one spouse alleged adultery against the other in its defence in the written statement, held, it was a negative burden which could easily be discharged by merely averring that the allegation of adultery was false. It would then be for the spouse alleging the adultery to substantiate the same: 1982 Hindu L.R. 50 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Adultery—Proof—Mere fact that some male relation writes improper letters to a married woman, does not necessarily prove that there was illicit relationship between writer of the letters and the married woman who received them: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 581.

Where the petitioner's evidence clearly showed that the respondent and co-respondent had guilty intention as well as opportunity to have sexual intercourse, held, the Court may presume adultery: A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 102 (S.B.).

Husband and wife—Desertion—Adultery committed before and that committed after desertion—Principal—Burden of proof: (1957) 1 All E.R. 848.

Where the petitioner-husband testified that he had seen one boy through the window chink having sexual intercourse with his wife and she did not open the door, closed from inside, till after the husband's repeated efforts to forcibly open it, and the husband, seeing the boy running away from the back-door, even chased him for some distance but without catching him, the fact of chasing being corroborated by a witness who, however, could not recognise the boy, held, adultery stood proved, coupled with the fact that the wife could not gather courage to deny the allegations by entering the witness box: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 245: (1986) 2 D.M.C. 17: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 83 (F.B.).

Where the wife had left her matrimonial home next day after her marriage and her whereabouts for next 13 days were not known and the Medical Board's report indicated that she was habitual to sexual intercourse, held, it is possible that she may have committed adultery but this is no evidence of adultery; such a finding must necessarily be based on some sort of positive evidence superior to suspicion; the Board did not say—and was not asked—whether its opinion pertained to the pre or post marriage period. [A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 375 and A.I.R. 1916 Sind 46, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 Del. 208: (1971) 73 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 169 (D.B.).

The wife's refusal to live with her husband and her living together with another person and her giving birth to two children while living with said person are circumstances which are quantitatively and qualitatively sufficient to prove adultery: A.I.R. 1974 Madh. Pra. 88: 1974 M.P.L.J. 188 (S.B.).

21. Advancement.—There is no reason why the rule of advancement as in vogue in England should not be applied to Indian conditions particularly in the changed and changing circumstances of the Indian Society: (1955-56) 60 Cal.W.N. 886.

Advancement—Onus—Deposit in joint names of father and daughter—Presumption not extended to Mahomedans in India: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 359.

There is no presumption of advancement in Indian laws. A deposit made by a person of his money in the joint names of himself and his wife on condition that it is payable to either or survivor or a deposit in the name of his wife alone does not constitute a gift by him to his wife. In such a case without any declaration of trust, under the Trust Act there is a resulting trust in favour of that person who had the beneficial ownership of the amount, in the absence of any contrary intention or unless it can be proved that actual gift of the amount was intended. The onus of proof to establish the intention to benefit the transferee is on the transferee himself: A.I.R. 1985 Ker. 14: 1985 Ker.L.J. 34: I.L.R. (1985) 1 Ker. 281 (D.B.).

22. Adverse possession.—(See also Notes 85 and 101, infra). Adverse possession—Burden of proof—Suit for declaration and possession of vacant land not subjected to any kind of cultivation—Plaintiff proving title to the hilt but conceding that he had been dispossessed by defendant—Presumption held would be in favour of plaintiff and defendant's possession being that of a trespasser, burden was on him to prove adverse possession: 1969 Ker.L.R. 60.

As possession follows title, therefore the burden lies on the person who claims to have acquired title by adverse possession to prove his case. [(1900) I.L.R. 27 Cal. 943 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 314; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 77, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 All. 555.

Person claiming adverse possession has to prove that adverse possession was hostile and open: (1990-1) 97 Punj.L.R. 206.

The onus of establishing ingredients necessary to prove adverse possession is upon the adverse possessor: A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 181; (1900) I.L.R. 27 Cal. 943 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1919 All. 403 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 77.

Onus of proof—Onus to prove adverse possession lies on the party who claims to have acquired title thereby: A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 45; 1983 M.P.W.N. 183; 1990 Punj.L.J. 1.

Where in a suit for possession, the plaintiff establishes his title, held, the burden to prove adverse possession pleaded by the defendant would lie upon the defendant. [A.I.R. 1970 All. 289 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1165, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 265 (All.).

The onus is on the defendants to plead and prove that they have acquired title by adverse possession: (1977) 44 Cut.L.T. 552.

The onus of proof of adverse possession is always on the party who alleges the same. Before declaring title on the footing of adverse possession, the Court must, first of all, carefully determine the point of time when adverse possession is said to have commenced and whether such adverse possession was continuous in duration for twelve years or more in the aggregate: (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 222: (1976) 43 Cut.L.T. 358.

Adverse possession—Date of commencement—Burden of proof—Sales by A to B—Period of B's possession: A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 14; A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 314; A.I.R. 1954 Assam 94.

Adverse possession—Mere possession of vacant piece of land does not constitute adverse possession—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1964 All. 383.

Where adverse possession was pleaded by a purchaser on the ground of having come into possession of the land pursuant to an unregistered sale deed and after about 6 years a registered sale deed was executed between the same parties but without prior permission of the competent authority under S. 22 of the Orissa Land Reforms Act, 1960, held, as adverse possession is essentially a question of fact or in any case a mixed question of law and fact, no acquisition of title by adverse possession in such a case is possible when no evidence of the same is at all led by the claimant; besides, the later execution and registration of the deed amounts to acknowledgment of the transferor's superior title; on quashing of the deed for want of statutory permission, the purchaser is liable to be evicted from the land: A.I.R. 1995 Ori. 239 (F.B.).

Where in a suit for permanent injunction defendants pleaded adverse possession, held, the burden was on the defendant to prove that the suit had been filed beyond the period of 12 years from the date of dispossession of the plaintiff and the plaintiff cannot be burdened with the onus to prove as to on what date he was dispossessed: A.I.R. 1992 Karn. 254: (1991) 2 Karn.L.J. 567.

The burden of proof lies on the plaintiff, suing for declaration of title and recovery of possession, to show that he was in possession of the suit property within 12 years of the presentation of the plaint: A.I.R. 1982 Cal.

294: (1982) 1 Cal.L.J. 256: (1982) 1 Cal.H.N. 206 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 170, cited under note 60, infra.

Where though the defendant contended that he had acquired title to the entire suit property by adverse possession but no fact indicative of ouster of the plaintiff was proved to have taken place at any time within 12 years before the date of the suit, held, plea of ouster was of no avail as the burden in this behalf was heavily and squarely upon the defendant which he failed to discharge: A.I.R. 1988 Bom. 348: (1987) 3 Bom.C.R. 252. See also A.I.R. 1970 All. 289 (F.B.).

Where there was no plea of adverse possession in the written statement which indicated that the defendant's possession was amicable and not adverse to other co-heirs, held, it was for the defendant to plead and prove that he was in adverse possession openly and to the knowledge of the real owner; a mere secret hostile animus on his part in derogation of other co-heirs' title is not enough: 1981 Hindu L.R. 462 (Cal.).

Where in a suit for specific performance of a contract and ouster of a trespasser from the suit-land against the Improvement Trust, the Trust admitted ownership and possession but the trespasser claimed adverse possession, held, the burden to prove that the Trust was not the owner lay on the party claiming adverse possession and not on the plaintiff to prove the Trust's ownership: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 219: 1982 B.L.J.R. 403.

Where a land, having a few graves over it, was claimed to have been purchased by a Roman Catholic Church in 1869 but was described as poramboke in documents and records and its Revenue was remitted in 1900, held, prima facie it was Government property though subject to the rights of its use for burial; since the Church asserted to be its owner, the burden lay upon it to prove its adverse possession; burden not discharged by it: A.I.R. 1976 Kam. 75: (1975) 2 Kam.L.J. 468.

As between co-heirs there must be evidence of open assertion of hostile title, coupled with exclusive possession and enjoyment by one of them to the knowledge of the other so as to constitute ouster. The burden of making out ouster is on the person claiming to displace the lawful title of a co-heir by his adverse possession: A.I.R. 1975 Him. Pra. 60.

The burden of proving that the tenancy was determined more than 12 years before the filing of the suit lies on the defendant though that burden may be discharged by certain presumptions arising in favour of the tenant in the facts and circumstances of a given case. Where even after the efflux of time, limited by the lease deed, the defendant continued to pay rent to the plaintiff within 12 years of the filing of the suit, held, there was no escape from the conclusion that the tenancy did not stand determined: A.I.R. 1972 Raj. 284.

Where on purchase of demised property in an execution Court-sale, the tenants' title therein stood extinguished and the auction-purchaser sued the tenant's successors for confirmation of his title on the basis of possession obtained at the Court-sale with no allegation that the successors had dispossessed him, held, the burden lay on the tenant's successors-in-interest to plead and prove that they had obtained independent title to the property by adverse possession after the Court-sale to the purchaser's knowledge: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 79.

Where the permissive occupation was in respect of the entire family and the son was also living in the family along with the father during father's lifetime, held, merely because the father died and the son came into possession, the son's possession cannot be said to have become adverse: A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 195.

Where in khasra girdwari, the defendants were not shown to be either in possession of land or in cultivation for long 8 years, held, their plea of title by adverse possession could not be accepted: 1982 Punj.L.J. 9.

Claimant of property must in addition to title show his possession of property within 12 years of suit—Onus to prove such possession is on claimant: 32 Cut.L.T. 1058: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 44.

23. Age—Proof of.—See A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 42: 1957 Cr.L.J. 847. Though entries in a birth register, being a public document, are admissible per se but mere production of their copy does not, as a matter of law, connect them with the person concerned. Where plaintiffs challenged a sale deed on the ground that they were minors at the time of its execution and they produced their birth entries as proof of their age, held, in absence of any material on record that the said birth entries related to the plaintiffs, and the fact that they failed to come in the witness box, an adverse inference could be drawn that they were not minors at the time of the sale: A.I.R. 1983 P.&H. 366.

Where the allegation as to the age of the plaintiffs made in a plaint is denied by the defendants, it is for the plaintiffs to establish the correctness of the facts alleged as to age in the plaint, and they must discharge the burden by adducing necessary proof: A.I.R. 1951 Mys. 38 (F.B.).

24. Alibi.—(See also Note 3 under S. 105). There is nothing in the Evidence Act to suggest that where the law places the burden of proving something on the accused, the burden is to be discharged in any other way than the burden which is on the prosecution. The definitions of "proved", "disproved" and "not proved" in S. 3 of the Indian Evidence Act apply in either case. When it is the question of an alibi it is not a case of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions or special exceptions of the I.P.Code, and therefore, S. 105 of the Indian Evidence Act, does not apply. The section applicable is S. 103, illustration of which specially mentions the case of a plea of alibi and provides that it is for the accused who pleads alibi to prove it: (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 279: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 258.

The onus to establish alibi is on the accused: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 109: 1972 Cr.L.J. 22; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1021: 1981 Cr.L.J. 714: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 300.

The burden of proving alibi undoubtedly lies on the accused setting up the defence. But even so, the burden of proving the case against the accused is on the prosecution irrespective of whether or not the accused have made out a plausible defence: 1956 Cr.L.J. 827: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 460.

In the plea of alibi the absence at the exact time must be clearly made out. When the Court is concerned with the question of an alibi, it is not a case of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any one of the general exceptions or special exceptions of the Indian Penal Code and S. 105 of the Evidence Act does not apply. It is incumbent upon the accused to establish that he was at a particular place at the relevant time: 28 Cut.L.T. 523: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 67: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 550.

It is well settled that the burden to substantiate the plea of alibi and making it reasonably probable lies on the accused; held, on facts, the burden not discharged: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 191: 1978 Cr.L.J. 141: (1978) 1 S.C.C. 178: 1978 All.L.J. 466.

Plea of alibi—Proof of—Duty of Court: A.I.R. 1958 All. 746: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1266.

Though, it is true that in criminal cases the burden is on the prosecution to prove the commission of offence by an accused but the moment an accused takes up the plea of alibi, it is for him to prove the said plea by cogent and convincing evidence: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2475 (Del.) (D.B.); 1985 All.W.C. 834: 1985 All.L.J. 870.

25. Assessment and recovery of tax—(a) Income-tax.—Sale of property of company to another company—Payment of consideration in shares—Burden of proving that consideration for sale was less than what it purported to be was on the transferor company: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 788.

The onus to prove that a particular lot of shares purchased by the assessee is stock-in-trade lies on him: (1962) 44 I.T.R. 746 (Cal.); (1970) 77 I.T.R. 220 (Cal.).

Joint Hindu family carrying on business—Partition—Effect—Allotment of family property towards share of member is gain of capital asset by him—Contention that asset was converted into stock-in-trade of going business—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 328.

Attachment of property for recovery of arrears of income-tax assessed on joint Hindu family—Sons claiming property as their separate property—Burden prima facie lies on taxing authorities to establish that the sale deed was taken for and on behalf of the joint family or with aid of joint family funds: (1963) 2 I.T.J. 123: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 880.

Where an undivided Hindu family did not include agricultural income derived from lands left behind in Pakistan in its return on the ground that it belonged to the individual members of the family in severalty, which contention was rejected by the Income-tax Officer as well as the Appellate Assistant Commissioner but allowed by the Tribunal on further appeal, held, as there was nothing in the orders passed by the Income-tax Authorities that the lands in Pakistan were acquired with the joint funds of the family, the burden lay on the Department to prove that the lands belonged to the joint family; no presumption could be raised in favour of the Department: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 772: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 23: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 776.

Claim for income-tax deduction—Burden of proving claim lies on the assessee: 1965 M.P.L.J. 357.

The burden to prove that the expenditure claimed by him satisfies all the ingredients of

S. 37(1) of the Income-tax Act lies on the assessee: (1972) 84 I.T.R. 544 (Punj.); (1974) 93 I.T.R. 385 (Cal.); (1979) 119 I.T.R. 817 (Bom.); (1981) 129 I.T.R. 507 (Guj.); (1979) 118 I.T.R. 261 (S.C.); (1979) 117 I.T.R. 945 (Bom.); (1979) 117 I.T.R. 549 (Cal.); (1980) 122 I.T.R. 977 (Del.); (1982) 137 I.T.R. 58 (Bom.); (1983) 141 I.T.R. 664 (All.); (1984) 149 I.T.R. 256 (Madh. Pra.); (1989) 176 I.T.R. 229 (Ker.).

Cash credit standing in the name of third party—Such item whether undisclosed profits of assessee—Onus of proof: (1966) 1 I.T.J. 677 (Cal.).

Cash credit entry—Nature and source of—Burden of proof—Amount credited in accounts of assessee firm in names of children by their mother—Letter of children's mother showing that amount had been gifted by her father to her children—Interest paid by firm to children—Sum representating credits, held, was not income of assessee from undisclosed sources: 12 Law Rep. 32 (Mys.).

The burden of proving the source of a cash credit appearing in the account books of assessee in the relevant year lies on the assessee: (1963) 49 I.T.R. 112 (S.C.).

The burden lies on the assessee to prove that cash received in the accounting year is not in the nature of "income"; once the assessee's explanation is rejected as unsatisfactory, the cash receipts may be taken to be income in that accounting year itself: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 184 (D.B.).

Where at the time of transfer of land agricultural operations are carried on and if the entries in the Revenue records shows that the land is agricultural then a presumption as to land being agricultural in character arises and unless Revenue rebuts that presumption by cogent evidence, it must be held that the land was agricultural at the time of transfer: (1981) 127 I.T.R. 671 (Guj.).

Where the Department wants to controvert the contention of the assessee that the concerned land was agricultural land, it has to lead convincing evidence on its point: (1976) 105 I.T.R. 133 (S.C.); (1976) 105 I.T.R. 593 (S.C.); (1978) 112 I.T.R. 9 (Ker.).

(b) Sales tax.—In all cases of tax, the burden of proving the necessary ingredients laid down by law to justify taxation is upon the taxing authority: (1967) 20 S.T.C. 520 (S.C.); (1966) 17 S.T.C. 624 (S.C.); (1974) 34 S.T.C. 84 : 1974 Tax. L.R. 1700 (Ori.); (1975) 35 S.T.C. 104 (Karn.).

In all cases of taxation the burden to prove that something is liable to be taxed is on the Department: (1983) 52 S.T.C. 206 (Karn.). The burden is not lessened if the assessee is absent. They have to bring material on record to show that the assessee's turnover was taxable: 1979 U.P.T.C. 1088; 1980 U.P.T.C. 1010: 1980 A.T.J. (S.) 223: 1980 S.T.J. 366.

Burden to prove a negative fact cannot be imposed on the assessee: 1980 Tax.L.R. 1616: 1979 U.P.T.C. 1457 (All.).

The onus to prove that the assessee is liable to tax is initially on the Revenue. Thus, where under Voluntary Disclosure of Income and Wealth Act of 1976, the assessee had disclosed certain income from stock, the said disclosure could not be utilised by Sales Tax Authorities for making an assessment under the Act on the assumption that the income arose out of sale of goods: (1984) 57 S.T.C. 274 (Andh. Pra.).

The initial burden is on the Revenue that the seized books of account relate to a particular period, as until such correlation is established, the accounts cannot be utilised as the basis of a finding even prima facie for holding that there has been a suppression or escapement.

The assessee can rebut the prima facie view of the Department.

But if the account books were seized in the very first year of business, that position would not arise: (1974) 33 S.T.C. 573 (Ori.).

Recovery of account books from assessee's residence—Assessee has to explain them: (1974) 34 S.T.C. 197 (Mad.).

Assessee carried on business as broker—Documents were seized which showed transactions of sale—Dealer has to show that they were transactions as a broker and not of sale: (1980) 46 S.T.C. 492 (Andh. Pra.).

By non production of a document by a dealer when required to do so, an adverse inference can certainly be drawn against the dealer, but the ultimate burden of proving the taxability is upon the Department and adverse finding that taxable event had taken place, cannot be arrived at merely on the basis of failure or refusal of the dealer to produce the relevant material when called upon to do so: (1983) 54 S.T.C. 1 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

The provisions of S. 12-A of the U.P. Sales Tax Act, 1948 lay the burden of proof on the assessee to furnish explanation to the adverse material: 1991 U.P.T.C. 751.

Sales tax—Liability—Exemption from tax—Onus of proof: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 30: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 176.

To show an item is exempted from sales tax, the burden is on one who claims exemption: (1973) 31 S.T.C 559: 1973 Tax. L.R. 2413 (Ker.).

If the assessee claims any exemption, the burden to prove that goods in which he dealt were exempt, is on the assessee: 1984 U.P.T.C. 25.

Where the assessee furnishes all the necessary particulars to substantiate his claim for exemption, the assessing authority should verify the facts or else the burden will stand discharged: (1978) 42 S.T.C. 142 (Andh. Pra.).

In the case of tax on last purchase, where purchase is admitted, the dealer has to prove that he was not the last purchaser: (1980) 46 S.T.C. 492 (Andh. Pra.).

Where tax is at single point on import or manufacture, in such cases even while fixing turnover by best judgment, there has to be material on record that the assessee was either a manufacturer or importer: (1983) 52 S.T.C. 238 : 1982 U.P.T.C. 408: 1982 A.T.J. 221: 1982 S.T.J. 247 (All.); (1983) 52 S.T.C. 239: 1982 U.P.T.C. 432: 1982 S.T.J. 342 (All.).

Where tax is on the last sale within the State and the assessee claims non-taxability, the burden is on the Department to prove that the goods sold by the assessee were either consumed in the State or consigned or were exported. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 194, Expl.]: (1983) 53 S.T.C. 397: 1984 Tax. L.R. 2856 (Andh. Pra.).

Initial burden to prove that the goods in which he dealt were locally purchased and were not imported is on the assessee, but once the assessee produces details of the transactions showing that purchases were made by him from people who used to sell the old utensils to him, it is for the Department to rebut the transaction by some evidence that the assessee had imported the goods, namely, brass scrap: 1984 U.P.T.C. 1006.

Where the assessee had discharged his initial burden and produced the purchase vouchers showing that he had made the purchase locally, if the Department's contention be that the goods were imported, some material will have to be brought on record to show that the assessee had imported the goods: 1984 U.P.T.C. 1007: 1984 A.T.J. 539.

Where assessee denied liability to tax on the ground that he did not import any timber and what he sold was timber purchased by him within the State, held, the burden did not lie on assessee to establish that commodity sold by him was not imported: 1982 U.P.T.C. 432: 1982 S.T.I. 164 (All.).

Where the assessee-dealer filed an affidavit stating on oath that he made the purchases only from pheriwalas within the State of U.P. and there was no evidence to the contrary, held, it could not be said that the dealer did not discharge the burden under S. 12-A of the U.P. Sales Tax Act, 1948: (1994) 28 S.T.I. 95 (All.).

Assessee claiming that he dealt in locally purchased goods only, he has to prove the fact that they were locally purchased failing which assessment order would be valid: 1984 U.P.T.C. 64 (All.).

To prove a fact within the exclusive knowledge of the dealer is on him. Thus, where part of the goods were admittedly purchased from outside and were imported in the State, the claim that rest were not imported should be proved by the assessee: 1980 U.P.T.C. 76: 1980 A.T.J. 197.

The onus of proving special facts which are exclusively within the knowledge of the assessee, in order to claim benefit for himself is undoubtedly on the assessee in view of the principles contained in S. 106 of the Evidence Act: (1975) 35 S.T.C. 104 (Karn.).

Where the assessee was dealing in purchase and sale of foreign liquor imported in the State, the fact that the goods sold by him were smuggled in the State being within his

26. Bailment.—(See also Notes 32 and 36, infra). In bailment, the burden of proof is on the bailee to disprove negligence when damages or loss is established: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 48 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 173.

The burden of proof lies on the bailee to show that care as a man of ordinary prudence would have exercised, was duly exercised by him in respect of goods entrusted to him: A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 74 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1952 Kutch 50. Plaintiff proving prima facie case of damage in respect of goods entrusted by him, need not prove how such damage was caused: A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 356.

Bailor has to prove negligence or lack of sufficient care on the part of bailee from materials produced by bailee to prove absence of negligence on his part—He may show that bailee has failed to place before Court all the materials available to him as required of him by S. 106, Contract Act, and ask the Court to presume that if produced, it would have gone against the bailee—He may also show on the materials produced that he has not taken as much care as is required of him under S. 151, Contract Act—In case of damage by fire, the burden on bailor ends once he establishes that bailee has failed to take such reasonable precautionary measures as a prudent man would have taken to avert the fire: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 554: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 374 (D.B.).

Loss of subject matter of bailment, is in itself a prima facie evidence of negligence of bailee. In order to escape liability, onus of proof will be on bailee to show that he had taken the necessary standard of care as imposed upon him by the statute: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 244 (D.B.).

Where in a suit for compensation against the Union of India for non-delivery of goods, the goods booked had to pass over 4 Railways including a foreign Railway and the accepted position by both the parties was that the loss occurred in the foreign Railways after the goods were consigned to it and it had not delivered the goods to the State Railways for transit of the same to the place of delivery, although the transfer of goods to the foreign Railways was in the special knowledge of the State Railway and it was their duty to prove the transfer of goods as a fact, the burden no longer rested on the State Railway to prove the same in view of the accepted position.

Nor could the Union of India be made liable as a bailee, as the articles were lost in the foreign Railway. The liability as a bailee would have surely accrued if it were established that the articles were lost when under the control of any of the Union Railways, which is not found to be fact: A.I.R. 1956 Assam 188.

27. Benami.—The onus of proving by parol evidence—Even when permissible in law—That the document is not what it purports to be is heavily on the person who makes that allegation and not on the other side and that onus becomes still heavier when the challenge is advanced after a long time: 1954 B.L.J.R. 486: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 562.

It is well settled that the burden of showing that a particular transaction is benami and the appellant-owner is not the real owner always rests on the person asserting it to be so and this burden has to be strictly discharged by adducing legal evidence of a definite character which would either directly prove the fact of benami or establish circumstances unerringly and reasonably raising an inference of that fact. The essence of benami is the intention of the parties and not unoften, such intention is shrouded in a thick veil which cannot be easily pierced through. But such difficulties do not relieve the person asserting the transaction to be benami of the serious onus that rests on him, nor justify the acceptance of mere conjectures or surmises as a substitute for proof. It is not enough merely to show circumstances which might create suspicion, because the Court cannot decide on the basis of suspicion. It has to act on legal grounds established by evidence. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 171, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 796: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 816: 1977 Cr.L.J. 566.

It has been repeatedly held that the burden to prove that a transaction is benami lies heavily on the party which asserts that the ostensible vendee was a mere name-lender and the property was in fact purchased only for that party's benefit; such burden has to be discharged on satisfying the well-known criteria: (1) the source of purchase money; (2) the possession of the property; (3) the parties' mutual relationship; (4) the pecuniary and other circumstances of the transaction; (5) the motive for the transaction; (6) the custody of the title deeds; and (7) the parties' previous and subsequent conduct. Each of them taken separately may not prove the real title, but a combination of some of them might; the real test is the parties' intention. The true test to determine whether the transaction is benami or not is to look to the intention of the parties, viz., whether it was intended to operate as such or whether it was only meant to be colourable; if colourable, the transaction is benami, otherwise the transaction is not benami: A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 19: (1976) 1 M.L.J. 1 (D.B.). The above indicia are not exhaustive and there efficacy varies according to the facts of each case. Nevertheless No. 1, viz., the source whence the purchase money came, is by far the most important test for determining whether the sale standing in the name of one person, is in reality for the benefit of another: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 171: (1974) 1 S.C.C. 3.

One who pleads benami must establish it; the source or consideration is a strong piece of evidence showing the nature of the transaction; the relationship of the parties is another circumstance to be considered; the existence or the absence of any motive for a benami purchase has also a bearing; the possession and enjoyment of the property is another strong circumstance; and the possession of the title deeds yet another relevant consideration. In short, the question of benami has to be decided from all the circumstances and facts of each case. Further benami is a question of intention to be gathered from all the facts and circumstances whether the beneficial interest was intended to be retained in one against the apparent tenor of the document: 1967 Ker.L.J. 588: 1967 Ker.L.T. 1156: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 154.

The principles to ascertain whether a transfer is a benami or not are: (1) the burden of proving a transfer to be benami lies on the person asserting it to be so; (2) if the purchase money is proved to have come from a person other than the transferee named, the property is prima facie assumed to be for the benefit of the person paying the purchase money, unless contrary is shown; (3) the true character of such a transaction is governed by the intention of the person paying purchase money; and (4) his intention is to be determined on the basis of the surrounding circumstances, the parties' relationship, the motive for bringing about the transaction and their subsequent conduct, etc.: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 2.

In order to determine whether a transaction is benami, the factors to be taken into account may include: (a) source from which consideration was paid; (b) possession; (c) motive; (d) previous and subsequent conduct; and (e) custody of the document. Where a plea of benami transaction is raised, the ostensible title cannot be displaced except on cogent and clear proof of the benami character of the impugned transaction: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 818.

In is well settled that the burden to prove benami rests on the party claiming it to be so; the apparent state of affairs is presumed to be real unless the contrary is proved; however, when evidence does not conclusively establish or rebut the plea, the decision has to be made on reasonable probabilities and legal inferences from proved or admitted facts; thus, where a property was purchased by his own money by a father in the name of his son, having no money of his own, held, the father was the real owner: A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 36.

The Court will presume an ostensible title to be the real title unless the plaintiff who seeks to assert the contrary, pleads and prove that ostensible owner is not the real owner and also the essence of benami is the intention of the parties. Such intention may be shrouded in a thick veil which cannot be easily pierced through. Nevertheless the person alleging so has to prove either by legal evidence or unerring circumstances the fact of benami: A.I.R. 1985 Madh. Pra. 73: 1984 Jab.L.J. 745: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 2 (D.B.); (1979) 20 Guj.L.R. 148 (D.B.).

The onus to prove a transaction as benami lies on him who alleges it; mere suspicion is not enough, there should be direct evidence: A.I.R. 1985 Pat. 110; 1983 Tax.L.R. 811 (All.).

Benami cannot be a matter of mere presumption. It should be averred in the pleadings and proved. The proof of benami rests not only on the relevant circumstances but also on direct proof. In the absence of convincing direct proof, the circumstantial evidence may clinch the issue. In the absence of all other relevant circumstances, the criterion in the cases of benami in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase money is paid: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 733: A.I.R. 1957 Hyd. 37.

The onus to prove a transaction to be a benami one is on the person who alleges the same to be benami. The apparent state of affairs must be taken to be the real state of affairs unless the contrary is proved. If the purchase is made in the name of wife or sons, the presumption of Hindu law is in favour of its being a benami purchase and the burden of proof lies on the party in whose name it was purchased to prove that he was solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in such purchased estate. The burden of proof is to begin with on the party pleading that the transaction is benami. The burden, however, does not rest in one place, but shifts to the other side and it increases if the original parties to the transaction are dead. Suspicious circumstances are not sufficient to prove the benami character of a transaction but if the evidence on the other side does not exist, even slight but forceful evidence on the part of the person alleging the benami nature of the transaction may be sufficient. A variety of circumstances are relevant in examining the benami character of a transaction like the source of consideration for acquisition of the property, the possession of the property, the conduct of the parties or their predecessors in relation to it, the custody of the title deeds and so on. The most important fact, however, is the source of money, but the other facts also play varying parts. The tests to be applied to find out a benami transaction are (i) motive for the benami transaction, (ii) relationship between the parties, (iii) possession of the property in question, (iv) custody of the title deeds, and (v) the payment of the consideration money. Benami transactions are entered into in India without any motive or reason. Therefore, absence of motive cannot be taken to be a circumstance against the benami character of a transaction: 1965 B.L.J.R. 800: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 110 (D.B.).

In deciding the question of benami the source of funds for the acquisition is an important test. In case where there is no scope for applying some of the other tests such as possession of the property, possession of the title deeds, etc., the burden of proof is heavy on the plaintiff who sets up the case of benami and he has to give the best evidence possible under the circumstances: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 121.

The burden of proving benami character of the transaction lies on him who sets up the plea, and in the absence of clear and cogent proof to that effect, the apparent title must prevail. Before, therefore, the ostensible owner may be called upon to prove that he is the real owner, the person who sets up the plea of benami character of the transaction, must prove by clear and cogent evidence that it was he who had supplied the consideration for the transaction. What he has to prove is the fact that it was actually his money that was paid to the transferor, and not merely the fact that the money passed from his hand to that of the transferor: A.I.R. 1983 J.&K. 44: 1982 Srinagar L.J. 546 (D.B.).

The onus of establishing a transaction as benami is on the person who asserts benami nature of the transaction and it must be strictly made out. In the absence of evidence the apparent title prevails: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 144. See also 1961 Jab.L.J. 1263.

The person impugning the apparent character of the deed has to show something or other to establish that it is a benami or a sham transaction: 1954 B.L.J.R. 82: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 280; A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 407.

It is well settled that the burden of proving that a transaction was benami lies upon the party which asserts it to be so. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1364; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 171; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 727, Foll.; A.I.R. 1947 All. 399; A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 404, Not good law]: A.I.R. 1983 All. 296 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1989 N.O.C. 65 (Pat.); A.I.R. 1981 Bom. 406; A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 179: (1970) 1 An.W.R. 20 (D.B.) [It requires clear and unambiguous evidence, not mere surmises or suspicion; the real test is the source whence the consideration came].

A sale deed executed before the Sub-Registrar carries a presumption of genuineness and the burden to prove that it was benami is on the person who alleges it: A.I.R. 1979 All. 47.

Burden of proving benami is on the person who alleges it—But where all relevant facts are before Court all that remains is what inference should be drawn from them and question of onus becomes academical: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38: (1969-70) 74 Cal.W.N. 168 (D.B.).

The principle that the burden to prove benami transaction lies on the person alleging it is not a rule of law; nature of transaction may also be presumed or inferred from proved or admitted facts: 1983 M.P.W.N. 120.

System of putting property benami being extremely common, even slight quantity of evidence to show that transaction was sham transaction will suffice for the purpose: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 38: (1969-70) 74 Cal.W.N. 168 (D.B.).

The onus in a benami case is important only in the earlier stages; it may assume importance in the absence of evidence; but once evidence has been led, an abstract consideration of onus is out of place; the case has to be decided on the evidence adduced by the parties about the source of the consideration paid. [A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 59 and A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 526, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 251.

Burden of proof—Suit for pre-emption—Plea that pre-emptor is benami—Plea must be established by strictest evidence: A.I.R. 1966 Punj. 36 (F.B.).

Plea of benami referring to sham transaction—Onus—Want of consideration for transaction must be established by party pleading: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 75.

Motive, the source of consideration, possession of the property and its enjoyment, custody of title deeds, are various features, which may severally or cumulatively weigh and tilt the scale one way or other in the matter of determining the benami transaction. But these features are not exhaustive of the circumstances on which the final conclusion of the Court has to be based. Nor can it be said that in all cases the presence or absence of one or the other of these circumstances will be helpful in deciding the real position. At times other consideration than motive, possession and source of consideration may play a vital part in the determination. In certain circumstances only one or the other of the above specified elements may alone be of assistance. Motive for benami is not always conclusive. But when the purchase in the names of one or other or some of the members of the family is consistent with an intention to make the acquisition, for the family and there is nothing unusual in such acquisition, certainly, the Court may give some weight to the absence of motive and absence of an acceptable explanation for taking the sale deeds by the father in the names of his sons. Even as the absence of a motive need not necessarily exclude the theory of benami, the fact that some motive is shown will equally not bar the rejection of the plea of benami.

As regards consideration it is not whose hand that physically passed the consideration that is material; it is the source of the money that is important. The source of consideration is only one of the tests and it cannot conclude the matter.

The onus initially lies on the person who pleads that the transaction is benami: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 561: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 252.

Possession-title—Benami: 1965 B.L.J.R. 119.

Onus to prove that person in whose name property stands in settlement and other records is not real owner but is benamidar lies on party who contends so: 34 Cut.L.T. 758: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 183.

Transaction in name of wife—No presumption in Hindu law that it is husband's transaction—Onus of proving benami is on person asserting it: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 543.

Onus of proving that transaction is benami is on party that sets up such a case—Benami transactions between husband and wife—Slight proof is sufficient to discharge onus: A.I.R. 1961 J.&K. 66.

In order to prove the benami nature of the transaction in favour of the wife, following evidence can be given, (i) that the husband paid the consideration, (ii) that he had the custody of the sale deed, (iii) that he was in possession of the property, and (iv) the motive for the transaction: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1040. See also A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 13.

There is no presumption that when a property stands in the name of a female, the Court will immediately jump to the conclusion without any proof that it really belongs to the husband of the female. Before such a presumption is raised or attracted it is necessary for the person who wants to make out that the property is not the property of the female, in whose name the document stands, to establish the fact that the consideration money for the purchase had come from the husband. The ordinary rule that the onus is on the person to prove that the property belonged to somebody other than the person in whose name the title deed stands is not shifted if the property stands in the name of a married woman: (1955-56) 60 Cal.W.N. 886; A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 349 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 829.

Where the property was purchased in the name of the wife when the wife, an incometax assessee, had her own funds in her individual bank account as well as in the bank account held jointly with her husband, but the consideration money was found to flow from the husband's account, held, the purchase was clearly benami and for the benefit of the husband; their conduct, the other factor, also indicated that the transaction was indeed benami: 1984 Raj.L.W. 321.

Where a person makes a purchase in the name of his wife or unmarried daughter, a statutory presumption arises under S. 3(2) of the Benami Transactions (Prohibition) Act, 1988 that such a transaction has been entered into for their benefit. However, the presumption is only a rebuttable one: (1990-1) 38 B.L.J.R. 601.

Apparent things should be taken as real until the contrary is proved. Thus, though doubtless, as the plaintiff in the suit brought to recover the commission by an insurance agent, the primary duty of proving his case rests on him, yet where the admitted position is that the plaintiff was shown as the agent in respect of the business, the burden shifts on defendant, the chief agent, who claims that very business as his own, to show that the plaintiff was merely a name-lender: I.L.R. (1953) Cut. 630: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 44.

Where the findings about the transaction being benami is arrived at due to wrong placing of onus, held, it is a mixed question of law and facts; a second appeal against a judgment based on wrong placement of burden is competent: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 211: (1974-75) 79 Cal.W.N. 282 (D.B.).

In all cases where the real owner comes before Court alleging that the property stands in the name of the ostensible owner and thereby projects the theory of benami, it is fundamental that it is for that person to establish beyond doubt that he had requisite money with him for purchase of specified property. It is only in a case where there is prima facie evidence let in by the person challenging the title to the property in another, who claimed title to the property in himself and proving his capacity to purchase such property, at or about the time when the purchase was made, the onus would shift to the other side. Until then, the title, as it stands, would survive and has to be upheld: A.I.R. 1975 Mad. 95: (1975) 1 M.L.J. 47: (1974) 87 Mad.L.W. 111 (D.B.).

Where a transfer of property is asserted to be benami and not for the benefit of the ostensible purchaser, the initial burden to prove it would rest on the party who would fail if no evidence was led on the point; after evidence is recorded to give proof of benami, the burden would shift to the other party to rebut that evidence. The burden of proof is not static; it does shift during the course of evidence. [(1968) 70 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 71, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 409: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 60: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 967: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 111.

Registered partnership whether benami or sham—Onus: (1957) 1 M.L.J. 365: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 488. Sale deed—Plea that document was intended to be mortgage—Onus. See A.I.R. 1960 Manipur 11.

The onus of proof that the transaction in suit was a benami transaction was on the defendant when it was his case that the sale deed was taken benami in the name of the plaintiff by him with a view to prevent any trouble from the Income-tax Department: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 103: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 680.

Burden of proving that a particular sale is benami and the apparent purchaser is not the real owner, always rests on the person asserting it to be so. The reason is that a deed is a solemn document prepared and executed after considerable deliberation, and the person expressly shown as the purchaser of transferee in the deed, starts with the initial presumption in his favour that the apparent state of affairs is the real state of affairs: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 171: (1974) 1 S.C.C. 3; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 796: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 816: 1977 Cr.L.J. 566.

Burden of proof in the matter of assignment of copyright—Burden of proving that transaction is benami is on person alleging it: A.I.R. 1970 Madh. Pra. 261: 1970 M.P.L.J. 475 (D.B.).

Where a property was purchased in certificate proceedings by the brother-in-law of the certificate debtor and there was no evidence to show that the consideration passed was provided by the certificate debtor, held, merely because the certificate purchaser did not belong to the area and had no other property in the vicinity is no reason to shift the burden on the certificate purchaser to prove that the purchase was not benami; the burden to prove the benami nature would continue to lie on the party asserting it to be benami; merely because evidence had been led by both the parties, the question of the burden would not lose its importance: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 131 (D.B.).

Where in a suit brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that a certain quantity of mustard seeds pledged by the defendants to a bank are the properties of a firm of which the plaintiffs are the partners and that in the surplus sale proceeds of the said mustard seeds they have a right of property as such partners, if it is found as a fact that the railway receipts in respect of the disputed seeds stood in the name of the firm as the consignee, then the plaintiffs start with an initial presumption in favour of their case that the said seeds belonged to the firm. In law the railway receipts are documents of title. It may be that the named consignee was the benamidar for some other person but then the onus would be on the said other person to prove the benami and, in that connection, the source of the purchase money would certainly be very relevant and may even be a settlor, but in any case, the onus would be not on the named consignee to prove that he paid the purchase-money but on the other side to show the contrary: 1959 Cal.L.J. 1.

Where certain property was purchased in the name of female member of a joint Hindu family but it was alleged by the other members of the joint family that the property was joint family property as it was purchased benami by the manager of the joint family in the name of the female with the funds of the joint family and the female member had proved that she had taken the sale from the vendor and the question was about the burden of proof of the benami transaction, held, that the initial burden of proving title as emanating from the sale deed which lay on the female member had been discharged and it was then for the persons challenging the sale as benami to prove that the sale was benami: 1961 Nag.L.J. (Notes) 5; A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 244: 1985 Pat.L.J.R. 480.

Where shortly after the preliminary mortgage decree was drawn, the judgment-debtor sold the house worth Rs. 15,000 for Rs. 1,000 to his brother, not a man of affluence but having only meagre income not sufficient even to repair the house, held, the transfer was apparently for the purpose of defeating or delaying satisfaction of the final decree that might be passed against the vendor; as found by the Court below, it was highly suspicious; solemnity of the transaction lost much of its importance; a slight evidence challenging the genuineness of the transaction shifts the onus on to the vendee that the transaction was not benami; it is, thereafter, no longer necessary for the party challenging its genuineness to prove that it was benami: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 211: (1974-75) 79 Cal.W.N. 282 (D.B.).

From the mere fact that settlement khatian stands in the name of married woman, it cannot be presumed that the property has been purchased from out of the joint family funds, especially so in the absence of any evidence that the property belonged to her husband or to the joint family: 32 Cut.L.T. 782.

Benami auction-purchase in contravention of Rule—Burden of proof—Person making allegation of benami must prove it—No allegation or proof that some persons other than auction-purchaser has been managing shops and selling liquor in contravention of S. 15—Confirmation of highest bid of purchase without any objection—Purchase held not benami or illegal merely because he obtained necessary funds from some financiers: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 655.

Where in a suit to recover business dues, the plaintiff claims that the accounts in his books in the name of defendant 2 were only as nominee of defendant 1, the burden of proving such claim is on the plaintiff. But if he is unable to prove it by direct evidence, it does not follow that he is to be non-suited. Even if the plaintiff's claim is taken as benami, such a result does not ensue. Though the source of money is a very important test in deciding a question of benami, it does not follow that unless the source is established there can never be a finding of benami however good and numerous the other facts and circumstances there may be indicating such a finding. A benami transaction may be innocent or fraudulent and in the case of benami transaction with an object, it is not possible to expect direct evidence of benami. The whole object of such a transaction is to suppress the evidence of real facts which can be proved by circumstantial evidence. Thus, the plaintiff cannot be non-suited merely because of his such inability: 1967 Ker.L.J. 237.

Money decree against A personally and against assets of A in hands of A's wife, B—Attachment in execution—Objection by B that attached property was her stridhan—Allegation of benami by decree-holder—Objection falls under S. 47 and not under O. 21, R. 58—Burden of proving benami lies on decree-holder: I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 617: A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 69.

Where in a suit for partition and rendition of accounts, the defendant alleged that the plaintiff was only a benamidar of one-half share in the disputed property and defendant was the real owner, held, onus heavily lies on the defendant to prove such allegation: A.I.R. 1978 Del. 276.

Where the plaintiff sued her resident paramour, living as husband and wife without marriage, for a declaration that the sale deed was obtained from her by fraud or in the alternative he was a mere benamidar, held, the plaintiff having taken the plea (alternative) of benami had first to discharge her burden by proving her case to a certain extent and it was only thereafter, that it would shift on her "husband" to prove that the sale was not benami but he was the real beneficial owner: A.I.R. 1990 Mad. 46: (1989-2) 104 Mad.L.W. 294 (D.B.).

28. Carrier.—(See Note 36, infra). Loss or damage of goods is not prima facie proof of negligence in a case governed by Ss. 74-A and 74-C of the Railways Act; the plaintiff has to produce necessary evidence to prove negligence or misconduct on the part of the Railways or its servants: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 473; (1961) 3 Ori. J.D. 264; A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 147; A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 173.

29. Citizenship/domicile.—(See also S. 106, Note 19, infra). Citizenship at commencement of the Constitution—Arts. 5, 7, and 9 are to be read together—Person claiming to be a citizen of India at commencement of the Constitution—Burden lies still on him to show that requirements of Arts. 7 and 9 are fulfilled: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 1073: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 265: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 226.

Citizenship—Loss of—Presumption and onus: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 724: A.I.R. 1963 All. 260.

Domicile—Change of—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 160; A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 260; A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 501; A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 11. Facts to be proved for establishing change of domicile. See A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 193.

30. Company matters.—Rival allegations impeaching authority of director—Person who alleges that he is director should give satisfactory proof: (1967-68) 72 Cal.W.N. 805: (1968) 1 Comp.L.J. 311: 39 Comp. Cas. 223.

Companies Act, 1913, S. 153-B—Scheme involving transfer of shares—Application by dissenting shareholder—Power of Court—Offer when to be considered fair and proper—Misrepresentation — Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 225.

Genuineness—Resolution of company signed by its Chairman—Held, it was for the company to disprove that something properly recorded in resolution did not represent correct position: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 68.

Burden to show existence of sufficient cause lies on applicant. See Companies Act (1956), S. 155(1)(a): A.I.R. 1965 All. 135.

Onus of proving that certain amount was not available for deduction towards rehabilitation cost is on the company: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 538.

Once the liquidator shows that there was a declaration of dividend amounting to misapplication of capital of company resulting in loss, the burden shifts on the director to show that the dividend thus declared had not actually been paid. This is so by reason of S. 45-H, Banking Companies Act according to which, on the liquidator making out a prima facie case, the burden shifts to the directors (in this case) to disprove liability: A.I.R. 1970 Ker. 131: 1969 Ker.L.J. 129 (D.B.).

Claim for depreciation by company—Dispute as to—Company must prove by legal evidence—Mere production of auditor's certificate not conclusive. See A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 612. See also A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 375.

Burden of proof that list of shareholders was forwarded to the Registrar in time, is on the company. See A.I.R. 1954 Hyd. 49.

31. Consideration.—(See also Notes 47 and 77, infra). Once the execution of a document by a debtor is proved by the creditor-plaintiff, the burden of proving want of consideration shifts on the debtor. The burden continues even on the legal representatives of the deceased debtor and it does not shift back on the creditor simply because the original debtor is no more alive: 1960 Raj.L.W. 461: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 394. See also 1971 M.P.L.J. 219.

Though as between parties the admission of proof of execution of a document would shift the onus on the party denying consideration, yet a person who is not a party to the document in question cannot be held liable on alleged receipts of payments unless there is evidence to prove that the money was actually paid: A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 14. But see infra. It is for the persons who plead want of consideration to prove it notwithstanding the fact that they are not parties to the original document and that the persons claiming it do not claim under executant: A.I.R. 1954 Andhra 17: 1955 An.W.R. 28.

Where it has been admitted or proved that an admission of passing of consideration has been made in the document, the burden of proving want of consideration rests on the person asserting the same: 104 I.C. 173: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 823; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 653. See also I.L.R. 12 Lah. 546: A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 419; A.I.R. 1963 Assam 41: I.L.R. (1963) 15 Assam 104 (D.B.).

But where the person alleging want of consideration was found to be a man of weak intellect and hard of hearing who played in the hands of the opposite party, held, the onus is mitigated and the Court might for its own satisfaction demand proof of consideration from opposite party: A.I.R. 1915 Oudh 151 (D.B.).

Execution of document either admitted or proved—Question of consideration—Onus is on executant to prove that consideration did not pass—Executant himself challenging payment of consideration—Onus is on executant to establish that he executed the document: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 839: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 86: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 89. See also A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 15: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 143: 1963 Jab.L.J. 113, cited under Note 5, supra.

Mere execution of a document does not prove that it was for consideration. If the document is a promissory note there is a statutory presumption that the amount mentioned in it is given for consideration; but when the document is a bond and its execution is proved the onus no doubt lies on the defendants to show that it was without consideration. Still, if they succeed in establishing a probability that the debt was not due or that consideration did not pass, the onus shifts to the plaintiff and he has to prove fully that consideration did pass: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 707: A.I.R. 1957 Hyd. 18. Held, that the burden lay on the defendant to substantiate his denial of the receipt of consideration in the face of the document itself, which in clear terms admitted his indebtedness to the plaintiff to the tune of Rs. 8,700: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 151: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 170; A.I.R. 1946 All. 493.

Where in a suit for recovery of a sum due on the promissory note, the party admits the execution, held, when once the execution of the instrument is admitted, the burden of proof of passing the consideration lies entirely on the shoulders of the promisors: A.I.R. 1987 Mad. 156: (1986) 2 M.L.J. 329. See also A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 123; A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 264.

Once the defendant shows either by direct or by circumstantial evidence or by use of other presumptions of law or fact that the promissory note is not supported by consideration in the manner stated in the promissory note or in the manner stated in the suit notice or in the pleading, the evidential burden shifts to the plaintiff and the legal burden of the plaintiff is revived, i.e., to prove that the promissory note is supported by consideration and at that stage, the presumption of law covered by S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, "disappears" and no longer subsists. [A.I.R. 1949 Bom. 253; A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 210; A.I.R. 1935 All. 509; A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 130; A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 498 and (1911) 21 M.L.J. 1013, Dissent. from; A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 103, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1987 Andh. Pra. 139: (1987) 1 An.L.T. 1: (1987) 1 A.P.L.J. (H.C.) 241 (F.B.).

Debtors-major—Literate—Business men—Creditor—Not professional moneylender—Execution admitted—Onus to prove word of consideration lies on debtors: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 65.

When in a sale deed there is an admission of a party admitting the receipt of consideration, held, it is for him to prove by cogent evidence that the statement contained in the document was false: A.I.R. 1971 All. 151. See also A.I.R. 1954 Pepsu 39: I.L.R. (1953) Patiala 351, cited under Note 6, supra.

Sale of house—Receipt of full consideration admitted by owner in sale deed—Plea of non-receipt of consideration—Burden is on the owner to explain the admission in the sale deed and prove non-receipt of consideration: 1969 M.P.W.R. 994: 1970 M.P.L.J. 50: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1176.

Where the scribe appearing as a witness had clearly deposed that consideration for the sale deed was paid by the vendee in his presence and in his house, and the vendee too had, though not in her examination-in-chief but in her cross-examination stated that she had paid the consideration, and there was nothing on record to disbelieve them, held, the onus clearly lay upon the defendant to show non-payment of consideration; his statement that no consideration passed but without disclosing the source of his knowledge could not rebut the plaintiff's evidence: A.I.R. 1986 Cal. 27.

Sale of land—Agreement containing fact of consideration having been received—Seller admitting execution of agreement but alleging partial failure of consideration—Onus: A.I.R. 1956 Him. Pra. 28.

Where a sale deed was sought to be cancelled by an illiterate, old rustic woman with weak eye-sight and entitled to special protection accorded to pardanashin ladies and there was no mention of any consideration having been passed to her before the Sub-Registrar and she was not cross-examined about having received moneys allegedly paid to her otherwise than before the Sub-Registrar, held, the finding about non-passing of consideration could not be assailed on the ground of wrong placement of burden; the burden of proof was rendered of no importance: A.I.R. 1981 All. 222.

Plaintiff basing title on sale deed—Defendant admitting sale deed but alleging absence of consideration—Onus: A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 19.

Burden of proof—Advances made by purchaser to vendor—Contract falling through on purchaser's default—Vendor has to prove damage suffered by him: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 391.

Good faith and consideration—Onus. See A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 35.

Suit on bond—Consideration shown different than that stated in bond—Burden of proof: 1959 Raj.L.W. 295.

Where it is established that the consideration for the bond is different from that recited in the bond, the onus shifts on the plaintiff to prove affirmatively that the bond was executed by the defendant for the full consideration: 1939 M.L.R. 12(c); 1959 Raj.L.W. 295; (1900) 4 Cal.W.N. 82 (P.C.).

Where a mortgage deed contains an admission of receipt of consideration before the Sub-Registrar, the onus is upon the mortgagor to disprove this admission: 109 I.C. 149. See also 1939 M.L.R. 118; 1939 M.L.R. 86; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 449 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 114.

Where execution of a mortgage deed has been proved as required by law, an acknowledgment contained therein of receipt of consideration is evidence not only as against the mortgagor but also as against a purchaser from the mortgagor or an auction-purchaser at a sale held in execution of a money decree. And if such a purchaser pleads want of consideration then the burden lies on him to prove it: 1957 All.L.J. 475: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 814.

Mortgagor admitting execution but pleading want of consideration—Burden of proof: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 866: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 72. See also Note 76, infra.

Holder in due course—Endorsement of cheque—Presumption—Onus to prove contrary is on drawer: 1967 Ker.L.J. 237.

Even where the sale of property was to finance a litigation, no plea was specifically raised that the transaction was unfair or unconscionable but it was merely described as champertous, held, the burden of proving it, to be fair, would nevertheless lie on the party which relies upon the transaction; whether the transaction was fair or not is to be ascertained from the entirety of circumstance and not merely from the disparity in fair consideration and the consideration actually passed: A.I.R. 1955 All. 393 (D.B.).

32. Contracts.—(See also Note 89, infra). The principle that the onus of proving that reasonably sufficient steps have been taken to bring home the conditions on the ticket to the passenger is on the authority issuing the ticket, applies only where the contract is unsigned, e.g., a passenger ticket. Where a person signs a contract he is bound by the conditions contained in it whether he reads them or not: I.L.R. (1951) 1 Cal. 420. See also A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 481 (D.B.).

Vendor and purchaser—Agreement to sell property—Party to agreement claiming specific performance of agreement—Party must prove that he was always ready with funds and willing to take sale deed: 1953 Ker.L.T. 397: I.L.R. (1953) Trav.-Co. 1011: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 377 (F.B.).

Burden of proof—Suit for specific performance of contract for sale. See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 233.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract, held, the fact of his being ready and willing to perform his part of the contract, being within the special knowledge of the plaintiff, he must plead and prove them, and though the non-denial of the plea by the defendant may be taken into consideration in appraising the evidence but that does not absolve the plaintiff from adducing evidence of his being so ready and willing: (1993-1) 111 Mad.L.W. 219 (D.B.).

Suit for specific performance of contract—Want of notice—Burden initially lies on subsequent purchaser—Burden is light and mere denial is sufficient to discharge burden—Both parties giving evidence—Question is one of appreciation of evidence—Husband of subsequent purchaser deposing about wife's want of knowledge about agreement—This portion not challenged in cross-examination—Initial burden, held, discharged—Importance to her avoidance of witness box not attached: 1968 B.L.J.R. 28.

Contract—Impossibility of performance —Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 53.

Specific performance of agreement—Suit for—Defendant alleging abandonment of contract by plaintiff—Burden of proving abandonment is on defendant: (1965) 1 Mys.L.J. 442: A.I.R. 1966 Mys. 154.

Agreement to sell immovable property—Subsequent registered sale—Right of first vendee to specific performance—Onus: 61 I.A. 115: I.L.R. 13 Pat. 242: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 393: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 68: 66 M.L.J. 255 (P.C.).

Mention of partition of property in document of sale—Vendor under document is estopped to deny partition: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 657.

Recitals in the sale deed about existence of the necessity are admissible in evidence; but they are not evidence by themselves of its existence; there must be some evidence aliunde. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1028, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 107 (D.B.).

Where the fact that the goods had been sent to the defendant-firm by the plaintiff and had been received by the former was admitted, held, it was sufficient to raise a presumption, till the contrary was proved, that an order had been placed for the supply of the goods with the plaintiff by the defendant. Thus, the plaintiff could bank upon the said fact for the purpose of discharging the initial onus which lay on him to prove privity of contract between the parties: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 977: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 1.

Where in a suit for recovery on an agreement of sale, the Court found several discrepancies in the evidence and account books and several erasures and over-writings in the purchase register produced by the defendant but not connected with suit transaction, held, the suit could not be decreed on such suspicious circumstances; the plaintiff must discharge the primary burden of proving his case: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 280 (Cal.).

The burden to prove that the suit contract is wagering contract lies heavily on the party who raises the plea: A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 27: I.L.R. (1958) 8 Raj. 1162.

Wagering contract: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 1304: A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 52.

Wagering contract—Gali and Nazrana transactions—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 194.

The burden to prove the condition in a conditional contract, held, lies on the party which relies upon the contract: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 309: 45 Cut.L.T. 597: (1978) 1 Cut.W.R. 264.

Terms and conditions printed on the reverse of a receipt issued by the owner of the laundry or any other bailee do not necessarily form part of the contract of bailment in absence of the signature of the bailor on the document relied upon. In absence of signature of the bailor on the document relied upon, the onus is on the bailee to prove that the attention of the bailor was drawn by the bailee to the alleged special conditions before the contract was concluded and the bailor had consented thereto expressly or by necessary implication as a contractual term: A.I.R. 1995 Bom. 68.

Party alleging that a contract is conditional must prove the condition—Debtor paying debt to a person other than creditor—Onus is on debtor to prove that the person was authorised by creditor to receive payment: I.L.R. 49 Mad. 436: 53 I.A. 84: 51 M.L.J. 570 (P.C.).

Person introduced as partner—Liability for obligations incurred before introduction—Determination of agreement between partners—Proof of novation by creditor: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 8.

Lost grant—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 571.

Burden of proving that a contract is outcome of undue influence. See (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 256. See also Note 105, infra.

Burden of proving substituted contract. See A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 214.

Contract—Suit on—Burden of proving that suit contract was illegal as being prohibited by law lies heavily on defendant who takes that defence—But it is certainly for plaintiff to plead and prove an exemption which would take out contract from the operation of Control Orders: 1963 Jab.L.J. 218: 1963 M.P.L.J. 325: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 323.

Where the defendant pleaded that the contract under which the claim was made by the plaintiff was hit by S. 23 of the Contract Act as a contract forbidden by law, in so far as no licence had been taken for the business carried on under the agreement, held, the burden was on the defendant to prove very satisfactorily that the said agreement was forbidden by law, and the business carried on under the agreement required a licence under a valid law. [A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 413; A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 444 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 536; A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 186 and A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 240 (F.B.), Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1985 Ker. 199: 1985 Ker.L.T. 207.

Agreement challenged as being a restraint on trade—Onus of showing that restrictions were reasonably necessary to his interest is on the party supporting the contract: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1098; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 101.

Agreement putting an unreasonable restraint on trade is illegal and void, as being contrary to public policy but it must be shown that it is manifestly injurious to public welfare—Covenants of contract have to be studied with a view to determine whether primary object of parties is in sale or in restrictive covenant or whether case is one of restrictive covenant in sale, and whether restriction is reasonable—If Court is satisfied that restraint is reasonably necessary to protect interest of merchant and was not inimical to interests of public, then it will treat that contract as valid—To apply principle of public policy to each and every contract is dangerous—Condition at auction among members of Senayar community to sell their betel leaves only to highest bidder at auction and to none else, held, valid: (1966) 79 Mad.L.W. 676.

Burden of proof—Part-performance—Claim of by tenant in possession—Purchaser claiming advantage of S. 53-A, proviso, T.P. Act, 1882—Burden of proving that he had no notice of "contract to transfer" lies on him and not on tenant: 1965 B.L.J.R. 213: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 467.

"Mistake" under S. 72 of the Contract Act enfolds mistakes of law and fact and confers right to refund even a tax mistakenly paid; however, if the plaintiff pleads discovery of mistake on a particular date, the initial burden would lie on him to lead evidence, prima facie at any rate, to establish the date of such mistake; it is only in extraordinary cases where the plaintiff's plea is emphatic and the defendant's denial is evasive that the Court in its discretion might dispense with further proof of such knowledge or date of discovery: A.I.R. 1976 Mad. 323: (1976) 89 Mad.L.W. 426: (1976) 2 M.L.J. 214 (D.B.).

Assignment of option under contract—Contract of sale of property containing option to repurchase reserved to vendor—Option is assignable in absence of contract to contrary—Burden of proving contrary is on him who pleads it: A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 506.

Stipulation as to time of shipment—Onus of proof: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 57.

When in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell a share in managing agency, it is alleged that the agreement was void on the ground of its being against public policy because the share was offered as a bribe, the burden is on them who allege, to establish the plea: 1959 M.P.C. 143: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 151 (F.B.).

33. Corruption.—If the prosecution proves the acceptance of the amount by the accused and the amount does not represent legal remuneration in any form or of any kind, the accused must establish that the amount was not accepted by him as a motive or reward such as is mentioned in S. 161, Penal Code. Further, the accused can establish his case by preponderance of probabilities, that is to say, he need not prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1974 S.C.

773: 1974 Cr.L.J. 509. See also A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1762; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 97.

Though in corruption cases, the burden of accounting for the assets disproportionate to his income does shift to the accused and he is required to lead evidence and produce material to satisfy the Court but even in such cases the presumption of innocence does not disappear nor does the basic principle of criminal law that if a plausible explanation is put forward by the accused which fits in with the facts and circumstances of the cases that the Court is duty bound to accept that explanation: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2051 (Bom.).

The degree and character of proof which the accused is required to adduce for rebutting the presumption under S. 4(1) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, cannot be equated with the burden resting on the prosecution to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt; a mere plausibility of his explanation under S. 342 of the (old) Code of Criminal Procedure may not be enough but the presumption may be discharged if the material on record renders the fact presumed to be improbable; the accused may do so by mere preponderance of probability in his favour and not by evidence beyond reasonable doubt; besides if the story set up by the prosecution is inconsistent with the fact presumed, the presumption would be rendered sterile ab initio if not rejected, out of judicial courtesy, as still-born: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 666: 1977 Cr.L.J. 254: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 761; (1987) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 385 (Del.).

Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 4—Nature of presumption under section—Benefit of presumption when arises: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 138.

When there was sufficient evidence to indicate acceptance of bribe by the accused, held, statutory presumption under S. 4(1), Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, was attracted and burden that he did not receive amount as bribe shifted to him: (1984) 25 Del.L.T. 134: I.L.R. (1984) 1 Del. 640. See also 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 93 (Raj.); (1982) 23 Guj.L.R. 689: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1883: (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 472.

Prevention of Corruption Act, S. 4—General burden to prove ingredients of offence under S. 161, Penal Code does not lie on prosecution—Creating reasonable doubt in mind of Court not sufficient—It is enough for accused to prove preponderance of probability: 1968 Cr.L.J. 150: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 17. See also A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 575 [It must be shown that the explanation offered by the accused is true].

Accused shown to have accepted money as gratification other than legal remuneration—Presumption under S. 4(1) that amount was received as motive or reward such as is maintained in S. 161 of Penal Code must arise and burden will be on accused to rebut that presumption—Rebuttal must be by explanation supported by proof within meaning of S. 3 and not merely by putting forth reasonable and probable story: 1967 Cr.L.J. 21: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 1.

Enquiry into integrity of public servant—Defence that assets were increased on account of gifts from father or mother—Onus to prove: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 415.

The burden to prove requisite to raise a presumption under S. 5(3) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, lies on the prosecution, that the money standing in the name of his wife in a Bank is a benami asset of the accused: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 796: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 816: 1977 Cr.L.J. 566.

Once the requisite proof to convict a public servant for having committed criminal misconduct under S. 5(2) read with S. 5(1)(e) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 has been placed on the record, held, the burden to account for the disproportionate assets possessed by him shifts on to the accused; however, he need not prove it beyond reasonable doubt; he has only to establish his defence by preponderance of probabilities: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1186: 1981 Cr.L.J. 884: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 199. See also A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1514.

In a criminal trial under the Prevention of Corruption Act, held, the burden lies on the prosecution to examine all material witnesses and original documents and not conclusions of witnesses to questionnaires relating to documents seen by them but not produced in the Court: 1983 Raj.L.W. 226.

Criminal trial—Bribery case—Burden of proof—Benefit of doubt—Factors inconsistent with theory set up by defence do not necessarily exclude probability of defence version being true—If the circumstances show a reasonable probability of the version of the accused being true there is no option but to acquit the accused: 1961 Jab.L.J. 160: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 670.

Accused Sarpanch of Gram Panchayat receiving money—Onus of accused having paid money to Ward Member is on accused: (1965) 31 Cut.L.T. 523.

34. Cruelty.—In proceedings under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, the burden to prove the charge of cruelty lies on the petitioner, and not on the party denying it: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1534: (1975) 2 S.C.C. 326; (1986) 2 D.M.C. 301; (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 69 (P.&H.); A.I.R. 1989 Del. 121: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 682 (D.B.).

The burden to prove cruelty lies on the person alleging it; no rule of law says that the husband's uncorroborated testimony as a solitary witness is not to be accepted and cannot discharge the burden if his testimony otherwise inspires confidence; though his evidence regarding non-access is to be considered with certain amount of caution but all the same it is admissible and can well be acted upon. Thus, where the husband had pledged his oath to say that the wife had completely denied to him access and would become violent when asked to share the bed with him, held, his testimony even if uncorroborated was sufficient to hold the wife guilty of cruelty; husband was granted decree for judicial separation: A.I.R. 1989 Madh. Pra. 326: 1989 Jab.L.J. 573: 1989 M.P.L.J. 571 (S.B.).

Where plaintiff wife pleaded that she was ill-treated and driven out of the house by the defendant husband and the defendant contended that the plaintiff left the house with valuables of his house but he did not produce any evidence supporting said contention, held, it was futile to expect the plaintiff to prove her story by independent evidence that she was severely assaulted and was driven out of the house to which the only witness would be the members of the family of the defendants and further it could not be believed that she took away valuables with her while leaving the house: A.I.R. 1987 Ori. 134 (D.B.).

One must prove ill-treatment complained of and secondly result and danger or apprehension thereof: (1966) 1 An.W.R. 346: A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 289.

Petition for judicial separation on ground of cruelty—Onus lies heavily upon suing spouse to prove his or her case—Proof required in such case is one required in criminal prosecution: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 143.

35. Custom.—(See also S. 106, Note 7, infra). The onus to prove the existence of custom is on the person who alleges such a custom: A.I.R. 1959 J. & K. 28; A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 129; A.I.R. 1954 Pepsu 28; A.I.R. 1957 J.&K. 3; A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 25; A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 70; (1957) 59 Punj.L.R. 609; A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 199; A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 160; A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 46.

Custom—Onus of proof—Community custom: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 494.

When it is established that the parties of non-Hindu origin have been Hinduised, prima facie they are governed by the rules of Hindu law and the burden of proving that the old custom of that community still exists is upon the party who sets it up: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 185: 1970 Pat.L.J.R. 573 (D.B.).

Party asserting to be governed by a custom in derogation of personal or statutory law has to prove it: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 449; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 548; A.I.R. 1951 S.C. 210; A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 111; A.I.R. 1919 Lah. 145 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 181.

It must be established that the practice which developed into a customary usage in derogation of the personal law of the parties, must be proved to have been exercised not merely by virtue of an agreement between the parties but as of right. The evidence must show that a claim was made by any of the heirs but such was the force of the usage and the custom that the claim was denied and the custom prevailed: A.I.R. 1973 J.&K. 28 (D.B.).

It is well established that a custom must be specifically pleaded and proved, and a custom not pleaded cannot be proved. Thus, where the plea was that the Kanikkara tribe was governed by Marumakkathayam law and no family custom was set up when there was no uniform customary law of inheritance governing that tribe, held, the family custom could not be proved; the property will thus devolve, under the general law, upon the deceased's son. [1965 Ker.L.T. 1214, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1398: 1971 Ker.L.T. 458.

The party claiming office of a Mahant on the strength of any usage must establish it affirmatively: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1506.

The burden to prove the custom that succession to Mahantship devolves from Guru to Chela on the basis of seniority lies on the party which propounds it: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 814.

Where allegations about a custom governing succession to the mahantship of a dharmashala made in two paras of the plaint were denied in the corresponding paras of the written statement, held, it constituted a sufficient denial. The Department was neither required to plead a different custom nor to adduce or prove a different custom. It was for the plaintiff to prove the custom pleaded by cogent and reliable evidence. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 538; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1361, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2002: 1977 U.J. (S.C.) 555: (1977) 4 S.C.C. 65.

Customary right—Right of way—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 164.

Custom—Entry in mutation papers does not conclusively prove the nature of a holding—Customary right claimed must be proved as having become part of the law of the locality—Custom should also be reasonable: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 1077.

Custom—Succession—Malayala Kammalans in Travancore area—Married daughter's right to share—Burden of proof: 1957 Ker.L.T. 1020.

Religious endowment—Worship—Ritual of—Since A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 53, Rituals in Govindaraja-swamy's temple are being conducted in Tengalai form while in Vedanta Desikar's temple, in Vadagalai form—Claim for use of Vadagalai ritual at time of Mangalasanam of Vedanta Desikar in Govindaraja-swamy's temple to the exclusion of Tengalai ritual—Held, onus of proving that claim was supported by custom was on claimant and that same must be proved by clear and cogent evidence—Claimant had failed to establish his claim: (1967) 1 An. L.T. 406.

Where plea of plaintiff regarding acquisition of a customary right is refuted, held, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish acquisition of such a customary right, as pleaded: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 488: (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 503.

Rajputs in Bilaspur district—Near collaterals exclude daughters in succession—Burden of proving custom is on collaterals—Instances in other caste—Admissibility: A.I.R. 1966 Him. Pra. 22.

Non-ancestral property—Succession to, among the Sidhu Jats of Muktsar Tehsil, Ferozepore District—Exclusion of—General custom—Onus of proof: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 806.

Custom regarding adoption. See Note 19, supra.

36. Damages.—(See also S. 106, Note 9, infra). In a suit for damages it is for the plaintiff to adduce reliable evidence to show what damage he has suffered: I.L.R. 35 Pat. 967: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 350.

Pecuniary loss to defendant—Calculation—Factors to be considered: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1: (1962) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 105.

Loss—Proof—Loss of a thing can never be proved absolutely: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786: 1963 Cal.L.J. 75.

It is well settled that where in a contract of sale, an advance payment was not made by way of earnest money but merely as part payment of consideration and the transaction fell through even if the breach of contract was made by the purchaser, held, the seller has to refund it to the purchaser; if the purchaser contends loss or claims damages for breach, the burden lies on him to plead and prove it: A.I.R. 1980 All. 253 (D.B.).

Sale of goods—Breach of contract—Damages—Contract for purchase of car at fixed retail price—Breach—Damages—Burden of proof: (1957) 1 All E.R. 809.

Burden of proof—Conversion of goods—Essentials necessary to be established by plaintiff: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 357.

There was imposed an obligation upon the treasury staff to honour the District Board's cheques. To that end they were bound to know the signature of the Chairman of the Board. If in any way a member of the treasury staff was deceived without any fault on the part of the District Board, the Board could not be made to suffer the loss caused by an amount having been paid without authority. In circumstances of this nature where the issue was confined to negligence—though good faith was not challenged—the onus of proving absence of negligence was cast upon the treasury. In the absence of such proof the various amounts must be held to have been paid upon the forged cheques by reason of negligence on

Responsibility of carrier as bailee—Negligence—Onus of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 573.

Under Ss. 8 and 9 of the Carriers Act, 1865 which deal with the liability of the common carrier for the loss, damage or non-delivery of goods entrusted to him for carriage, the burden of proof that there was no criminal act or negligence on the part of the carrier or its agents or servants is upon the carrier: A.I.R. 1989 Pat. 303.

When a plaintiff discharges the initial burden of proving the "wilful misconduct", the burden shifts on the defendant-Air India, in view of Rr. 22(2) and 25 of Schedule I to the Carriage by Air Act: (1987) 1 Kam.L.J. (S.N.) 141: I.L.R. (1985) Kam. 3983.

The owner of a country craft sued the hirer for compensation for the loss of the craft alleging the same was caused by the negligence of the hirer C. The suit was dismissed by the trial and appellate Courts. On revision, held, the burden of proof lies on the bailee to show that such care as a man of ordinary prudence would have exercised was duly exercised by him when negligence is alleged against him. The standard of care required of the bailee in the case of bailment of goods left with the bailee to be used by him on hire ('locatio rei') is that of an average prudent man in respect of his own goods of the same kind and value. Though the onus of proving negligence on the part of the defendant is on the plaintiff, where a thing is solely under the management and control of the defendant or and his servants and the accident is such, that in the ordinary course of events it does not happen to those in management using proper care, the accident itself is prima facie evidence of negligence: A.I.R. 1962 Kutch 50.

The burden of proof in an action for damages for collision of vessels in back-waters and canals, usually rests first on the plaintiff even if the defendant has committed a breach of the regulation or even if he alleges inevitable accident or admits that he is partly in fault. Where the evidence on both sides is nicely balanced and conflicting, the Court will be guided by the probabilities of the cases set up, and the reasonable way is to analyse the facts so to ascertain what the principal subject of inquiry on which the case hinges and endeavour to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion as to the testimony upon that. The plaintiff cannot, however, succeed, if the case is left in doubt; it is for him to give preponderating evidence. The plaintiff may by proving certain circumstance, shift the burden on to the defendant. The defendant is generally bound to prove such facts as are peculiarly or exclusively within his knowledge: A.I.R. 1952 Trav.-Co. 143.

Tort—Negligence—Collision—Damage to launch waiting for repairs in dock—Suit for damages—Pre-collision value of launch—Onus to prove—Factors to be considered—Opinion of the expert—When accepted: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 191.

In an action against the ship owners for short delivery, the burden rests squarely on the plaintiff-shippers to place acceptable and convincing evidence of the actual weight of the goods shipped: A.I.R. 1987 Mad. 12: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 366: (1986) 2 M.L.J. 45. See also Note 16, supra.

Board taking charge of goods under Ss. 39 and 40, Madras Port Trust Act (II of 1905)—Its responsibility is that of a bailee under Ss. 151, 152 and 161, Contract Act—Damage to goods, prima facie evidence of bailee's negligence—Bailee to disprove it: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 48: (1968) 2 M.L.J. 497: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 594 (D.B.).

Carrier—Carriage by railway—Suit for damages—Onus of proof: A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 386.

S. 73 of the Railways Act, 1890 provides statutory immunity to the Railways from damages arising out of causes stated therein subject to its proviso which makes it incumbent on the Railways to plead and prove that the damage was caused despite use of reasonable foresight and care; the burden therefor clearly lies on the Railways: A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 165 (D.B.).

Defective packing—Liability of Railways—In absence of proof that Railways had no notice of defective packing, Railways is liable for damage: I.L.R. (1957) 45 Pat. 607.

In case of pilferage—stealing in small quantities—even if the goods are proved to have been defectively packed, the Railway Administration is not relieved of its liability of the loss unless it further proves that it had used reasonable foresight and care in their carriage. [A.I.R. 1959 Mys. 90 and A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 679, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1972 Mys. 164: (1972) 1 Mys.L.J. 96.

Negligence—Burden of proof—Responsibility of Railways—Goods sent at owner's risk—Damage—Onus of proof of negligence or misconduct: (1959) 2 M.L.J. 365: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 149.

Goods carried at owner's risk—Negligence or misconduct—Onus is on consignor: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 153.

Loss of goods in transmission—Liability of Railway Administration—Measure and extent of—Onus to disprove negligence—Railway Authorities taking all reasonable care—Consignments looted by unruly mob under circumstances beyond control—Held that, in the circumstances, Railway Administration had exonerated itself from liability—R. 237 of the Rules framed under S. 47(1)(f), Railways Act, had no application: (1964) 2 An.W.R. 171: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Suit for damages and cost for non-delivery of consignment—Non-delivery due to fire—No election in writing by plaintiff to pay Railways risk rate—No certificate under S. 74(2) taken or produced—Held, goods should be deemed to be carried at owner's risk and sub-S. (3) of S. 74 applied—Hence, burden of proof shifted to plaintiff to prove that loss was due to negligence or misconduct on part of Railway Administration or its servants: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 327.

In order to claim protection under S. 77(2) of the Railways Act, 1890, the onus is on the Railways to show that no loss, destruction, deterioration or damage had taken place not only during the period of transit, but also during the subsequent period of transit—seven days after the termination of transit: A.I.R. 1985 Mad. 37: (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. 320: 1984 T.N.L.J. 307.

In a suit against a Railway Company for non-delivery of goods, the Railways must first prove loss of goods and on such proof the onus will shift to the plaintiff to prove wilful neglect on the part of the Railways or its servants, etc., according to the terms of the risk-note: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 774. Wrong view as to burden of proof—Interference in second appeal: 152 I.C. 441: A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 253.

Liability of Railway Administration—Suit for damages for deterioration of goods due to unusual delay in transhipment—Goods carried at owner's risk—Negligence or misconduct on part of Railway Administration—Burden is on plaintiff—Station Master's certificate obtained when taking delivery is not conclusive on point of period of transit: (1961) 3 Ori. Negligence—Burden of proof: (1956) 2 All E.R. 555; (1959) 2 W.L.R. 241; A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 351; A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 479.

Under S. 80 of the Railways Act, 1890, it is for the consignor claiming compensation from a Railways other than the one on which the goods were booked that the damage had occurred on its system; but if the goods were delivered in damaged condition, the burden would lie on that Railways that the damage did not occur on its system but the goods were already damaged before it received them from the preceding Railway Administration; thus, where Railways other than the booking Railways were not impleaded and the latter did not adduce any evidence that the goods were already damaged when received by it, no presumption would arise in its favour: the booking Railways would be liable for the loss. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1879, Expl.]: A.I.R. 1982 Raj. 253: 1982 Raj.L.W. 213: 1982 W.L.N. 88: 1982 Raj.L.R. 533. See also A.I.R. 1968 Madh. Pra. 185.

Where a consignment of goods despatched by rail is damaged by fire and a suit is brought against the Railways for damages, the onus of proving the value of the goods booked and the extent of damage caused to the goods is on the plaintiff. The short certificate issued by the Railway Company showing that some of the goods had been damaged does not prove the exact amount of damage suffered: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 190: 98 Cal.L.J. 106. See also A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 59.

Suit for damages against Railways—Burden of proving damage is on plaintiff: (1963) 29 Cut.L.T. 193; A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 473.

Where plaintiff asserted that there was short delivery of 112 maunds and odd of ground nut oil due to the fact that Railway tank wagon was leaking badly, held, the burden of proof of negligence on the part of the Railway Administration was on the plaintiff: [A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 843, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Pat. 244 (D.B.).

Consignment of groundnut oil by Railways—Deviation from agreed route—Loss—Negligence and misconduct by Railway Administration—Mere proof of loss not sufficient—Burden to prove negligence and misconduct lies on plaintiff: I.L.R. (1965) 2 All. 127: A.I.R. 1966 All. 333.

In a suit for recovery of damages from the Railways for the consignment damaged during transit, held, the onus of proving the value of the consigned goods and the actual loss and extent of damages lies on the plaintiff; the damage certificate issued by the Railways "without prejudice to the Railways' right to repudiate the claim under law" is no acknowledgment of the damage having been occasioned by the Railways' negligence or misconduct; but once the Railways' liability is proved, the certificate can be used to assess the measure of the loss. [(1963) 29 Cut.L.T. 193 (D.B.) and (1966) 32 Cut.L.T. 855, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Ori. 9: (1980) 50 Cut.L.T. 29 (D.B.).

Where in a suit by plaintiff for damages for wrongful search of the plaintiffs premises and seizure of his property, the defendants contend that the action taken by them was justified under Cr.P.Code, burden is on the defendants to show the law by which their action was warranted: 1957 Jab.L.J. 869: 1957 M.P.C. 429.

It is no doubt true that in a suit for damages for wrongful attachment of property or goods of one person as being the property or goods of another, the onus of proving that the property or goods attached belong to the plaintiff lies on the latter who claims damages for such wrongful attachment. But the quantum of evidence which a Court would consider sufficient to discharge that burden would obviously depend upon and vary according to the circumstances of each case. Where the defendant lets in absolutely no evidence to prove that the property belongs to the person whom he alleges to be the owner thereof and as whose property he attaches the same and the alleged owner comes to Court and deposes that the property does not belong to him but to the plaintiff, it must be held that the plaintiff has discharged the burden that lay on him and that the plaintiff has proved his case and is entitled to succeed: A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 90: I.L.R. (1952) Mys. 176.

Damages—Suit for, by bus-passenger for an injury on account of a collision between bus and lorry—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 464; A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 261.

Suit for compensation for extracting coal from underground plaintiff's land—Onus—What plaintiff has to prove. See 1960 B.L.J.R. 94: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 266.

Loss of subject-matter of bailment—Presumption—Loss by private stealth by person other than bailee—Bailee cannot escape liability: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 244.

Burden of proving damages due to unauthorised construction by the tenant, is on the landlord: A.I.R. 1993 Cal. 144: (1993) 1 Cal.H.N. 307: (1992-93) 97 Cal.W.N. 227.

Collapse of wall due to rain, killing son and daughter of plaintiff, who were looking after thela of plaintiff on adjoining road—Wall in dilapidated condition and not under repairs for thirty years: 1957 M.P.L.J. 532.

Appeal—Burden of proof—Personal injury—Award of damages—Interference by appellate Court—Burden of proof: (1957) 3 All E.R. 525.

37. Death.—(See also Notes under Ss. 107-108, infra). S. 108 does not warrant that the exact date of death not being proved, the earliest date of which the death could be presumed is the date of institution of the suit; the time of death is a matter for evidence, not presumption. The onus of proof is cast not under S. 108 but under the general principle of the burden of proof: (1993) 2 M.L.J. 283 (D.B.).

Presumption of death—Time of death—Onus: 1956 All E.R. 603.

Survival—Onus—Party asserting survival has to prove it like any other fact—There is no presumption of it founded on age, sex or any other factor—There is also no presumption of death at the same time: 1959 Ker.L.T. 1302: I.L.R. (1960) Ker. 106: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 195.

38. Debt Relief Acts.—As S. 7 of the Karnataka Debt Relief Act, 1976 lays down that the burden of proving that the debtor is not entitled to protection of that Act shall lie on the creditor, held, the burden of proving that the judgment-debtor is a "debtor" under that Act lies on him; it is only after that burden is discharged that the creditor is required to show that the judgment-debtor is nevertheless not entitled to protection under that Act: A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 73: (1981) 2 Karn.L.J. 409: I.L.R. (1981) 2 Karn. 1363: (1982) 2 D.M.C. 73.

The burden of establishing that a person is a "debtor" is initially on the claimant under S. 7 of the Karnataka Debt Relief Act, 1976: A.I.R. 1985 Karn. 265.

Once the initial burden of being "debtor" within the meaning of the Kerala Debt Relief Act, 1977, is discharged by the judgment-debtor, the burden shifts on to the creditor to prove under S. 9 of that Act that the debtor is not entitled to the benefits of that Act: 1984 Ker.L.J. 516: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 192: 1984 Ker.L.T. 702: I.L.R. (1984) 2 Ker. 600 (D.B.).

A debtor seeking protection under S. 9 of the Kerala Debt Relief Act, 1977 must first discharge his initial burden by either examining himself on oath or filing his own affidavit; the burden to show that the debtor was not entitled to the protection would shift on to the creditor after the debtor has discharged the initial burden. [1978 Ker.L.T. 587, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 34: 1983 Ker.L.T. 867: 1983 Ker.L.J. 561: I.L.R. (1984) 1 Ker. 339 (D.B.).

Under S. 9 of the Kerala Debt Relief Act, 1977 it is for the creditor to prove that the debtor has not established prima facie his entitlement for the benefits of the Act. [There was no conflict between decisions in A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 34 (Ker.) and A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 192 (Ker.)]: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 170: (1987) 1 Ker.L.T. 184: 1987 Ker.L.J. 280: I.L.R. (1987) 2 Ker. 228 (D.B.).

39. Decree.—Execution of decree under S. 51, C.P.Code—Onus to bring case within one or more classes of proviso to S. 51 is on decree-holder: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 218.

Court-sale in execution of decree against debtor subsequently adjudged insolvent—Not a judicial proceeding suffered by debtor—Burden is heavy on Official receiver who seeks to impeach it to prove that it was suffered by the debtor with a view to give preference to a creditor: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 182.

Objection as to step-in-aid of execution—Requisites of O. 21, R. 11(2)(f) satisfied—Onus to establish that execution was within limitation, held, was discharged: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 556: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 170.

Where a compromise was recorded by the Court in the manner provided in O. 23, R. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, carrying the Court's endorsement that it was read and recorded and the parties, having accepted it, put their signatures; the compromise stands on the same footing as a contract; if impugned by any party thereto, heavy burden would lie on that party to prove that the compromise was not explained to her and its admission in the compromise was procured by fraud; the Court's endorsement is a judicial record made in discharge of judicial duties and is to be taken as authentic and in itself is a true evidence; the presumption under S. 114 would also arise in its favour: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 81.

Burden of proving consent to compromise is on the person setting it up: A.I.R. 1923 P.C. 13.

In case of a consent-decree against a minor, onus is on the person relying upon such a decree to show that the person consenting had authority to bind the minor by such consent: I.L.R. 23 Cal. 934 (P.C.).

The onus of proving that the compromise is illegal or void is on the party asserting it: A.I.R. 1919 Mad. 1110 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 345.

Where the decree-holder seeks execution by attachment of movable property, he should specify in the application or indicate in any other manner before attachment whether or not, the property sought to be attached is in possession of the judgment-debtor. If the goods are not attached from the possession of the judgment-debtor, the presumption is that the judgment-debtor was not the owner of the attached goods and onus to prove that the goods belonged to the judgment-debtor is upon the decree-holder. If the goods are attached from the possession of the judgment-debtor, prima facie it can be held that the attached property belonged to him: A.I.R. 1984 Del. 90: (1984) 25 Del.L.T. 259.

Reopening of decree on ground of contravention of Statute—Onus of proof: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 67.

40. Defamation.—(See also S. 105, Note 6, infra). Publication of defamatory matter—Privilege—Onus: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 162: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1143.

The aggrieved party must lead evidence to prove that the incriminating article is per se defamatory: A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 34. In a suit for damages for defamation of character in respect of evidence given by witnesses in a judicial proceeding can be viewed as a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. In such a suit, the plaintiff has to prove that (i) the defendant prosecuted the plaintiff, (ii) the prosecution was actuated by malice, and (iii) the proceedings were without any reasonable and probable cause: (1873) 11 Beng.L.R. 321 (P.C.).

Defamation—Defamatory words are presumed to be false—Rebuttal of such presumption—Onus is on defendant: 1969 M.P.L.J. 510: 1969 Jab.L.J. 544; A.I.R. 1953 All. 302 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1923 All. 167.

41. Desertion.—It is well settled that the burden of proving desertion, both the factum and the animus deserendi, lies on the spouse asserting it; such spouse has to establish beyond reasonable doubt to the Court's satisfaction the desertion throughout the period of two years before the petition as also the absence of the just cause; that is, even if the deserting wife fails to prove the just cause, the other spouse has still to "satisfy" the Court that it was without just cause; and the Court's satisfaction has to be on "preponderance of probabilities". [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 40; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1534, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1984 Del. 389: (1984) 2 D.M.C. 20; A.I.R. 1986 Pat. 308: (1986) 34 B.L.J.R. 599.

It is settled law that burden is on the plaintiff to prove desertion without cause for the statutory period. He must prove the factum as well as the animus deserendi. Hence, even if the other party fails to prove just cause for her living apart, the plaintiff-husband has still to satisfy the Court that desertion was without just cause: 1984 Hindu L.R. 185 (Del.) (D.B.); 1980 Hindu L.R. 61 (P.&H.).

Petition for judicial separation on ground of desertion—Onus of proving that desertion was without reasonable cause is on petitioner: (1965) 1 M.L.J. 149.

Under S. 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, the burden is on the petitioner to show that the respondent had deserted him without reasonable cause and without his consent or against his wishes; that burden is discharged by showing (1) the factum of separation, (2) the intention to bring cohabitation to an end, (3) absence of the husband's consent and (4) the absence of the husband's conduct which may provide the reasonable cause to quit the matrimonial home. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 176; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 40, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1980 Raj. 48: 1979 Raj.L.W. 339: 1979 W.L.N. 331.

The matrimonial offence of desertion commences when the factum of separation and the animus deserendi co-exist though they need not commence at the same time. Where, however, the intention to desert is formed subsequent to the factum of separation, that would be specially within the knowledge of the deserting spouse upon whom would the burden to prove the commencement of such intention would lie: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 131 (Mad.).

Desertion—Essentials of—Inference from facts and circumstances—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 176.

Refusal to live with husband—Absence of sufficient cause—Burden of proof is on husband—Case of divorce—Divorce found not valid—There was refusal and neglect to maintain wife: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 387 (1) (Guj.).

Where husband claims divorce under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, on the basis of desertion by the wife for a period of more than two years, held, burden is on him to prove the attempts made by him to request the wife to return to the matrimonial home. However, the burden shifts to the wife if she pleads reasonable cause or justification for withdrawing from the company of the husband: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 306 (P.&H.); A.I.R. 1985 Del. 491. See also (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 682 (Del.) (D.B.).

42. Easement.—It is for the plaintiff who comes to the Court to establish that the portion of the house occupied by him had any right of easement over the open space of the defendant. In law the owner of every open space is entitled to build over it unless his action in building interferes with an easementary right already acquired: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 292.

Customary easements—User of—Presumption and burden of proof: (1964) 2 An.W.R. 39.

In a suit to restrain the defendants from burdening the plaintiff's land with passage to the defendant's fields, held, the trial Court erred in placing the burden on the plaintiff to prove that the defendant's had no right of easement on the plaintiff's land; the trial Court was directed to reframe the issue so as to throw the burden on the defendants to show that they had the right of easement on the plaintiff's lands: A.I.R. 1981 Guj. 141: (1981) 22 Guj.L.R. 74.

Easements — Customary supply of water — Diminution — Proof: A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 329.

Easement—Ejectment suit—Onus. See 105 I.C. 560: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 885.

Suit for injunction restraining adjoining owner from using open space in front of his (defendant's) house—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 287.

43. Ejectment.—(See also S. 106, Note 12, infra). In a suit for ejectment, even though the defendant has no title, he can still put the plaintiff to the proof of his title and the plaintiff has still to show that the title deed on which he relies as having given him a title superior to that of the defendant is a valid one: A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 840: 56 M.L.J. 52.

It is well settled that the plaintiff in an eviction case must establish his own title to the demised property by adduction of sufficient evidence to discharge his onus; it is of no importance whether or not the tenant proves his defence or not; even if the title set up by the tenant is not proved, the plaintiff has to prove his title but for which he has to be non-suited: A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 149 : (1972) 2 An.W.R. 346 (D.B.).

If a suit is one for ejectment it is for the plaintiff to prove his title and the Court is not concerned with the weakness of the title of the defendant. The defendant may be a trespasser, but as a defendant in possession, he is entitled to ask the plaintiff to prove strictly his title: (1957) 59 Bom.L.R. 633: A.I.R. 1957 Bom. 280.

The plaintiff in ejectment suit must succeed on the strength of his own title. This can be done by adducing sufficient evidence to discharge the onus that is on him irrespective of whether the defendant has proved his case or not. A mere destruction of the defendant's title, in the absence of establishment of his own title carries the plaintiff no where: I.L.R. (1954) Trav.-Co. 867: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 526: (1955) 1 S.C.R. 520.

Where in a case for ejectment of trespasser from suit premises, the defendant claimed to be a tenant and there was no dispute in regard to the plaintiff's title to the said land, held, the burden was on the defendant to displace plaintiff's prime right to possession and establish his right to continue in possession of the said land as a tenant. [(1873) 20

In a suit for ejectment the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed unless he shows, in addition to title, that he has been in possession of the property within 12 years of the suit. The burden lies upon the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit; the onus is not upon the defendant to prove adverse possession for a period of 12 years. The position doubtless would have differed if the evidence on the question of possession led by both parties, though not unworthy of credit, was evenly balanced and the Court finds it difficult to prefer one and reject the other. In such instances the presumption that possession follows title may be applied as a presumption of fact: I.L.R. (1958) Cut. 186.

In a suit for ejectment on the ground that the defendant who had taken on rent the premises in question from the plaintiff has sublet the premises, if the sub-tenancy alleged rests on the allegation that a portion of the premises which the defendant had tenanted is now in possession of the sub-tenant and that sub-tenant has opened the stores therein, this allegation has to be proved by the plaintiff; and when proved it would be presumptive evidence of the sub-tenancy and the burden would then shift on the defendant to establish the capacity in which the sub-tenant was occupying the premises in question: A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 121: Madh.B.L.J. 1955 H.C.R. 2100.

Ordinarily, the exact terms on which a tenant inducts a sub-tenant in the premises would not be within the knowledge of the landlord. Once it is proved that in relation to a business premises, the tenant has walked out of the premises leaving the premises to another person (may be, that another person may be his brother) and that another person is in exclusive possession of the business premises, it would not be out of place to raise an inference that parting of possession by the tenant in favour of that another person must be for valid consideration and the burden would be upon the tenant or the sub-tenant as the case may be, to prove that parting of possession—both legal and physical—by the tenant in favour of that other person was without any valid consideration: A.I.R. 1995 Guj. 68.

Initial onus is always on the landlord to prove that the tenant had sub-let, assigned or otherwise transferred his leasehold rights to the sub-tenant; considering nature of the onus, the Courts must remember that it is by no means easy since direct evidence of subletting is seldom available; the landlord for obvious reasons would be a complete stranger to the subtenancy agreement as it is in the common interest of the tenant and the sub-tenant to keep the transaction as a closely guarded secret; placed in such a situation the landlord can only prove the attending circumstances indicating sub-letting or assignment; the landlord's initial burden would stand discharged by showing that the tenant had parted with, and handed over, exclusive possession and control of the premises to the sub-tenant; it is then for the tenant to prove and explain the circumstances of such transfer of possession, which are within the tenant's special knowledge; if the tenant fails to satisfy the Court, the landlord must be deemed to have established his plea: A.I.R. 1987 Him. Pra. 9.

Though the initial onus is on the landlord to prove the sub-letting, once the Court finds that there has been a transfer of possession by the tenant, the burden shifts on the tenant to show that the alleged sub-tenant is in occupation not as a sub-tenant but as a licencee or as a person in permissive occupation; in absence of any evidence to show this, an adverse inference can be drawn against the tenant: A.I.R. 1993 All. 90: 1993 All.L.J. 181: (1992) 20 All.L.R. 1138.

It is well established that for seeking eviction of a tenant on the ground of sub-letting, the onus to prove the ground lies on the landlord; if the landlord prima facie shows that a third person was in exclusive possession on payment of consideration, the onus would shift to the tenant to rebut the landlord's evidence; the real test is whether the tenant has walked out of the demised premises after handing over its exclusive possession and control to the third person; the tenant can use the premises for any business he likes; if he takes a partner therein, the partner get no right of tenancy or sub-tenancy. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 280, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 P.&H. 205: (1982) 1 Ren.C.R. 726: (1982) 2 Ren.L.R. 486.

Suit for arrears of rent and recovery of possession of house on basis of alleged oral lease. Defendant setting up an independent arrangement with the lessor of the plaintiff under which he had constructed the houses on the vacant site with an undertaking to pay rent to the lessor of the plaintiff and denying lease from plaintiff. Possession admitted with defendant—Plaintiff to be entitled to relief must succeed in establishing that he put up building—To hold that onus is on defendant to prove his case and that if he failed to succeed plaintiff would be entitled to the relief is a wrong approach to the question: 1953 Ker.L.T. 587: A.I.R. 1954 Trav.-Co. 152.

In cases where the tenant and alleged sub-tenant happens to be close relation or brother inter se, it is very difficult for the landlord to prove the secretive arrangement between the brothers regarding the valuable consideration. Thus, once the landlord establishes the parting of exclusive possession of the premises by the tenant, the onus shifts upon the tenant to prove the arrangement between the tenant and alleged sub-tenant as to in which capacity the sub-tenants were occupying the premises, i.e., whether they were occupying as licensees under the tenant or in the capacity of a member of the partnership concern formed by them with the tenants or simply helping their relation, i.e., the tenant in running the business etc.: A.I.R. 1990 P.&H. 160: (1989) 2 Ren.L.R. 613.

Initially the onus of proving that the tenant has assigned, sub-let or otherwise parted with possession of the lease-hold lies on the landlord and not on the tenant. Once it is established that there has been transfer of possession of the lease-hold property without the permission of the landlord, the onus shifts upon the tenant to make out that transfer of possession cannot be attributed to subletting or assigning, as the tenant even after transfer of possession, retained the right to claim the possession. In such a case, it is for the tenant to prove under what arrangement, he transferred the possession to another person: A.I.R. 1977 Raj. 38: 1976 W.L.N. 416: 1976 Raj.L.W. 437.

Where a recorded tenant files a suit to eject a recorded sub-tenant, the onus of proof lies on the latter to prove that the relationship of landholder and tenant did not exist between the parties: I.L.R. 2 All. 39 (Rev.).

Where certain rent receipts nearly 30 years old and their carbon copies issued by the tenant were proved by the sub-tenant's defence witnesses in a case for eviction under S. 14(1) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 but they were not cross-examined on the point of being fabricated, held, they could not be left out of consideration by the trial Court as proof of the sub-tenancy sought to be established thereby: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 738.

The exact date of sub-tenancy is a fact which can be within the exclusive knowledge of the sub-tenant only. Thus, the onus of proving the date of the sub-tenancy must be upon sub-tenant only: A.I.R. 1981 Bom. 446.

Where eviction was sought on the ground of sub-letting by the tenant to his son living with the father as a member of the family from the inception of tenancy and it was alleged that the son was running a watch company and contributing rent as lease money, held, merely because the tenant had adduced evidence contrary to his defence plea about the watch company is no ground to absolve the landlord of his burden to prove the ground of eviction; eviction order set aside: A.I.R. 1984 Del. 14: (1983) 24 Del.L.T. 316: (1984) 86 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 39.

Where the plaintiff-landlord succeeded in proving transfer of possession and the defendant tenant failed to discharge the burden to prove the manner in which the transfer took place, held, an inference of sub-letting could be drawn: A.I.R. 1977 Raj. 38: 1976 W.L.N. 416: 1976 Raj.L.W. 437.

Where in a suit by the tenant for recovery of rent from the sub-lessee, sub-lessee relied on the fact that the premises had been sub-let to her without obtaining the consent in writing of the landlord but plaintiff pleaded that the sub-letting in favour of the defendant took place with the consent of the landlord, held, it was duty of the defendant to have led evidence either by summoning the rent note from the owner or by producing him in the witness box to prove the non-existence of written consent of the landlord: A.I.R. 1989 Del. 184: 1989 Rajdhani L.R. 83 (D.B.).

Where in a case for eviction of a tenant and sub-tenant, the tenant pleaded that the sub-tenant was inducted as a licensee with the consent of the landlord's father but the sub-tenant set up an independent tenancy directly under the landlord, held, the burden of establishing the agreement of tenancy was on the sub-tenant to be discharged by cogent and convincing evidence; merely because his name appeared in the electorals of the years preceding, his induction as "licensee" was no such evidence: A.I.R. 1973 All. 229.

Creation of new tenancy subsequent to decree for ejectment obtained by landlord—Onus. See (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 602: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 229.

Where the plaintiff, an under-raiyat, claims permanent tenancy under the defendant, it is not for the defendant to support the correctness of the cadastral survey records recording lands as his "khas dakhi" lands, but for the plaintiff to rebut the same and prove his case of permanent tenancy: I.L.R. 32 Pat. 124: A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 190.

When a tenant of lands in India in a suit by his landlord to eject him from them sets up a defence that he has right of permanent tenancy in the lands, the onus of proving that he has such a right is upon the tenant, and proof of long occupation at a fixed rent does not satisfy that onus: A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 65: 46 M.L.J. 546: 51 I.C. 83: I.L.R. 47 Mad. 317 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1957 All. 346; 1955 B.L.J.R. 506: A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 499. See also 1930 Mad.W.N. 874: A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 577; 146 I.C. 1002: A.I.R. 1933 All. 825.

In a case where admittedly the plaintiffs are landlord of the lands in dispute, and, the lands in suit are their bakasht and the dispute only is whether the lands are still bakasht of the plaintiffs, or now the raiyati lands of the defendants, it is for the defendants to establish affirmatively their tenancy right, and, if they fail to prove their settlement, or, their possession, the plaintiff's suit must be decreed on the failure of the defendants to prove their tenancy right and right of occupancy to hold the lands and to continue in possession thereof: 1959 B.L.J.R. 107.

Burden of proof—Landlord and tenant: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 263.

Tenant holding over after expiration of lease—Suit for eviction—Allegation by tenant that there was verbal extension of lease—Burden of proof is on tenant to prove extension—Particulars as to time and place of agreement not given by tenant in his written statement—Witnesses said to be present at the time of agreement not examined—In their place other witnesses examined but their evidence found to be unsatisfactory, unreliable and unworthy of any credit—Defendant himself not appearing as witness—Burden of proof held not discharged: 1964 M.P.L.J. 502: 1964 Jab.L.J. 736: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 288.

Landlord and tenant—Expiry of tenancy—Tenant claiming holding over with landlord's consent must prove such agreement—Acceptance of rent after notice to quit—Effect, in absence of evidence of such agreement, is not to amount to waiver of notice to quit or a renewal of tenancy by landlord. See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 206.

Mere acceptance of amounts equivalent to rent by a landlord from a tenant in possession after a lease had been determined by a notice to quit and who enjoys statutory immunity from eviction because of the Rent Act cannot be regarded as evidence of a new agreement of tenancy. If the tenant asserts that the landlord accepted the rent not as statutory tenant but only as legal rent indicating his assent to the tenant's continuing in possession, it is for the tenant to establish it: A.I.R. 1978 Del. 92: 1978 Rajdhani L.R. 300: (1977) 2 Ren.L.R. 885: (1977) 2 Ren.C.R. 697. See also A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 819.

Where in a suit for eviction, the tenant contended that the increase in the rate of rent amounted to surrender and that it created a new relationship, held, it was for the defendant to prove the positive fact of creation of a new tenancy (particularly when the registered lease was subsisting) and not for the plaintiff to prove the negative: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 221: (1986) 2 Cal.H.N. 195 (D.B.).

Ejectment suit—Eviction for violating purpose of letting—Onus is on landlord to prove purpose of letting and its violation: (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 973.

The burden of proof as to whether the lease was for manufacturing purpose is on the tenant: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 127: (1982) 2 Bom.C.R. 270: (1982) 1 S.C.C. 27: 1982 U.J. (S.C.) 23: (1982) 1 S.C.R. 1197.

Suit for ejectment on ground of dispossession—Onus of proof: 29 Cut.L.T. 90.

Bona fide need—Onus of proving bona fide need is on landlord and not on claimant for tenancy: I.L.R. (1965) 1 All. 247: A.I.R. 1965 All. 366.

Eviction of tenant on ground of bona fide requirement for his own occupation or of members of his family—Onus of proof as to bona fide requirement is on the landlord: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 113.

The presumption under S. 23-D(3) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961 is only partial and is confined to the bona fide nature of requirement and does not extend to the other ingredients involved in the ground for grant of relief of eviction. The law does not by the said presumption seek to relieve the landlords of the special category of the burden of proving by adducing evidence the ingredients except that of bona fide nature of the requirement. There is no question of shifting of onus in respect thereof merely on the pleadings as distinct from proof: A.I.R. 1990 Madh. Pra. 106.

Since eviction from a non-residential accommodation under S. 12(1)(f) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961 depends upon non-availability of non-residential alternative accommodation to the landlord, held, the burden lies on the landlord to prove such non-availability: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 53.

Where a clause of lease deed prevented the defendant-tenant from making any additions or alterations to the demised property without previous consent in writing of the lessor and the lessor determined the tenancy on the ground of breach of said clause, held, the onus was upon the plaintiff-lessor to prove that the defendant constructed the said structures on the demised land without the consent in writing of the plaintiffs: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 182 (D.B.).

It is not every construction or alteration which would result in material impairment to the value or the utility of the building so as to violate Cls. (m), (o) and (p) of S. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. The impairment must be of material nature as to substantially diminish the value of the building either from commercial or monetary point of view or from the utilitarian aspect of the building and the burden of proof of such material impairment is on the landlord: A.I.R. 1993 Cal. 144: (1993) 1 Cal.H.N. 307: (1993) 1 Cal.L.J. 193: (1992-93) 97 Cal.W.N. 227 (F.B.).

Where eviction is sought on the ground of non-payment of rent, held, the onus to show payment lies on the tenant but mere oral testimony is not sufficient for discharging this heavy onus; a tenant alleging that the rent was paid but no receipt was issued by the landlord, in the absence of any explanation whatsoever for not sending the rent by postal money order, cannot be deemed to have discharged the heavy burden cast upon him: A.I.R. 1993 All. 326: (1993) 22 All.L.R. 281.

Protection against eviction under the Rent Act—Burden of proving annual income of tenant lies on the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1968 J.&K. 59.

Where the title of the plaintiff-landlord was not in dispute at all and the defendant-tenant averred that she had been paying rent to the plaintiff-landlord, held, the burden of proving said positive fact was upon the defendant-tenant and if she failed to prove it, it was she who had to lose: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 423.

The initial burden of proof on the landlord when he makes a petition for permission to file a proceeding against the tenant for eviction, is to aver and to prove that the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the parties and that the tenant is in occupation of the premises of the landlord, and also that the tenant is in possession of means to find alternative accommodation. He may make such averment according to such knowledge and belief as he may have entertained in this respect. But there may be honest cases in which landlords would not really know anything about the means of the tenant. In such cases, the landlords may truthfully say that they do not know if the tenant is in possession of the means to find alternative accommodation. The income of the tenant is a fact which is especially within his knowledge. The burden of proving the same is, therefore, on him. If, therefore, neither the landlord nor the tenant adduced any evidence as to the income of the tenant, it is the tenant whose defence will fail and the landlord would obtain a permission for filing an eviction petition against him in view of S. 102 of the Evidence Act. [A.I.R. 1974 Del. 219, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Del. 221: 1974 Ren.C.R. 288.

Notice to quit—Onus to plead and prove it is on the landlord: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 113; 1979 Jab.L.J. (Notes) 50.

Where a notice to quit was sent by registered post and which was duly received by treasurer and secretary of tenant-company but the tenant-company denied having received any notice, held, though the onus of proof of producing its register of letters received and issued did not lie on the tenant-company, an adverse inference could be drawn against the tenant-company for not producing the same. [A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 6; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 127: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 456 (D.B.).

Where the tenant admitted the receipt of notice to quit but challenged its validity on the ground that the landlord had only filed a copy prepared not from the original but from another copy of the notice, held, it was for the tenant to file the original notice received by him to substantiate his plea: A.I.R. 1978 All. 144.

Where it was stated in the plaint that a registered notice for vacation of the shop had been given to the tenant and that the period of notice had elapsed and relationship of the defendant as tenant came to an end and nothing was stated about contents of the notice either in the plaint or in the witness box by the plaintiff, held, the defendant, in discharging the onus that the notice given was not a notice terminating the tenancy but was only a notice for vacation of the shop and thus, not fulfilling the requirements of S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, could certainly rely upon the contents of the plaint which indicated that the notice given was one for vacation of the shop. [A.I.R. 1968 All. 321, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1972 All. 155: 1972 All.L.J. 799.

Where the landlord in an eviction case denied on oath that he had not refused to accept the money order, held, the postal endorsement of "refusal" could not by itself and without the postman's evidence lead to a presumption that the money was tendered to the landlord and he refused to accept it: A.I.R. 1984 Sikkim 1.

Where a tenant of a large property had purchased half of that property, held, the presumption is that he intended to keep his tenancy rights in the unpurchased property as alive and distinct from his ownership of the purchased property; a person is presumed to intend that which is to his benefit; the burden to prove that the tenant intended to merge the two rights would, therefore, lie on the party which asserts it: A.I.R. 1973 P.&H. 204: 1972 Punj.L.J. 703.

Where appellant sought a declaration that he was a tenant of the impugned land and in its support he produced a certified copy of the statement of the landlord given in an earlier suit wherein he had admitted that the appellant was a cultivating tenant, held, the appellant having filed certified copy of the statement, it was for the landlord to explain it and no adverse inference could be drawn against the appellant on account of his failure of filing any application for summoning the deponent, i.e., landlord; it was for the landlord to explain the deposition either by examining himself or producing any material to nullify the effect of said statement: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1303.

Onus of proof—Landlord's application for eviction of Mundcar after demolition of house of Mundcar under Art. 7 of Legislative Diploma of 26th November, 1959—Burden of proving that existence of Mundcar's house is incompatible with new construction proposed by landlord as contemplated by Art. 7(b) is on landlord and not on Mundcar: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 41.

Fixation of fair rent—Application by tenants—Burden is on them to show what fair rent is and that it is lesser than contract rent—There is no presumption that contract rent is not fair rent: (1966) 79 Mad.L.W. 411: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 306.

Contractual tenancy evidenced by registered deed—Proceedings for fixation of standard rent—Tenant contending that proceedings are not suit with reference to deed to apply S. 92 and, hence, subsequent oral agreement can be admitted in evidence to prove variation which would make Madras Act (XVIII of 1960) inapplicable to tenancy—Held, to make Madras Act inapplicable contractual or agreed rent had to be found and it was for tenant to prove that same was different from the one stipulated in lease—This he could not do except by proof of another registered instrument: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 8: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 476.

Where though the claim of the landlord was that the monthly rent of the premises was Rs. 125, the tenant stated that monthly rent was Rs. 75 and Rs. 50 were charged for additional amenities, held, the burden was on the tenant to so prove: A.I.R. 1976 All. 362.

Where in a case for eviction under S. 14 of the Rajasthan Premises (Control of Rent and Eviction) Act, 1950 both parties had adduced evidence on the point of comparative hardness to the parties by granting or refusing eviction, held, the question of onus of proof becomes irrelevant and immaterial: A.I.R. 1979 N.O.C. 97 (Raj.).

Where the landlord's submission that the premises was lying vacant when it was given to the tenant after taking permission of the Rent Controller under S. 21 of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958, was corroborated by the statement of the tenant himself made before the Rent Controller, held, the onus was upon the tenant to prove that much before the filing of said application he was occupying the premises and never vacated it and, thus, it was not lying vacant when said application was filed: A.I.R. 1994 Del. 189.

Where the landlord's assertion that the shop was constructed in 1976 was admitted by the tenant in the rent deed and supported by the landlord's deposition, held, the landlord's initial burden to prove that the eviction suit was exempted from the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Act, 1972 stood discharged; the burden had shifted on to the tenant to prove that the suit was incompetent; the tenant having adduced no evidence to rebut, the Courts below had correctly found the issue against him: (1993) 21 All.L.R. 354.

Where a tenant challenged execution of the eviction order under S. 22(1)(b) of the Maharashtra Slum Area (Improvement, Clearance and Redevelopment) Act, 1971, held, it was incumbent upon him to prove that the premises wherefrom he was sought to be evicted had been declared as a slum area; no burden lies on the landlord to prove otherwise: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 637.

Suit for eviction—Application for stay of suit under S. 8 of Kerala Prevention of Eviction Act—Prima facie case—Onus of proof—Burden is on tenant to make out prima facie case of tenancy: 1969 Ker.L.T. 664.

Suit for ejectment—Permission—Order granting permission attacked on the ground that Officer granting permission had no authority from District Magistrate—Burden of proof: 1963 All.W.R. (H.C.) 421.

Ejectment of tenant without permission of District Magistrate—Onus to prove that land was "accommodation": A.I.R. 1966 All. 39.

Village forming part of Tanjore Palace Estate—Lands in, treated by Raja as separate property—Effect of seizure by Government and subsequent regrant—Eviction of tenants in long possession by alienee from purchaser in execution—Burden of proof. See (1957) 1 M.L.J. 72.

44. Election.—In an election petition, the general onus of proof is always on the election petitioner: A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 184.

Election petition—Quantum of proof for setting aside election—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 200.

Election petition—Onus—Tribunal bound to scrutinise even if evidence in election petition is ex parte—Onus is entirely on the petitioner: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 308.

Burden of proof—Burden of proof on grounds for setting aside election lies upon petitioner and specially in a case of corrupt practice burden lies heavier and has to be strictly discharged: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 1540: A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 122.

As the charge of a corrupt practice in an election petition is in the nature of a criminal charge, it is for the party who sets up the plea of undue influence to prove it to the hilt beyond reasonable doubt and the manner of proof should be the same as for an offence in a criminal case: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 24: (1984) 4 S.C.C. 649: (1985) 1 S.C.R. 1089.

Election—Corrupt practice—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 183. See also A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 45; A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 92: 1964 M.P.L.J. 160; A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 18; A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 99.

Allegation of corrupt practice—Nature of proof required—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 8.

Representation of the People Act, 1951 (as amended in 1956), Ss. 123(4), 83(1), 100(1)(b)—Charge under S. 123(4)—Charge is quasi criminal in character—Allegations in petition must constitute corrupt practice—Evidence cannot be accepted where there is want of necessary pleadings: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 102; A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 184; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 808: 1967 Cr.L.J. 823.

The onus of proving the essential ingredients of a corrupt practice set out in S. 123(4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, lies on the election petitioner that the impugned false statement was published by the candidate or his agent, and with their consent if it was published by some one else, either believing it to be false or not believing it to be true, and in relation with the personal character or conduct or candidature of the election petitioner. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 808, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1973 Gau. 145.

Election petitions on the ground of corrupt practices are quasi criminal proceedings; the onus lies on the petitioner to prove his allegations beyond reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 813: 1976 U.J. (S.C.) 1005: (1977) 3 S.C.C. 566; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2025.

Burden of proof—Charges of corrupt practices in election—Charges are quasi criminal and require strict proof: A.I.R. 1966 Madh. Pra. 255.

Corrupt practice—Corrupt practice of bribery—Standard of proof is same as in criminal cases—Accomplice evidence—

Value of: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 835: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 83.

Deliberate impersonation of dead or absent voters alleged—Corrupt practice not averred against returned candidate or his agent—Evidence and proof: I.L.R. (1966) 1 Mad. 580.

Corrupt practice—Burden of proof—Interference by High Court—Principles: 1963 M.P.L.J. 570: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 306.

Allegation of corrupt practice of making appeal on the ground of caste—Election petitioner's witness stating that he received a letter written by one 'S' appealing for casting vote in favour of returned candidate as he belongs to their caste—Held, burden of proving that such letter was either not written by 'S' or there was collusion between election petitioner's witness and 'S', was on the returned candidate: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1949: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 726.

Allegation as to personal character of election petitioner—Initial burden—Nature of—Discharge of onus: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 322.

Though an election petition may not be akin in all respects to a criminal trial, but the burden of proof nevertheless lies on the election petitioner to prove each and every ingredient of the electoral misconduct; even if such an ingredient is permanently within the knowledge of the returned candidate, it will not relieve the election petitioner of his primary burden though the quantum of proof may be affected; the petitioner has to adduce at least prima facie evidence: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 667; A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 44 (Del.).

Burden of proof—Election challenged by some voters as they were not allowed to vote—Respondents contending that they had participated in election—Petitioners stating in affidavit that they had not participated in any way in election—Counter-affidavit by respondents alleging that petitioners had exercised their franchise—Held, evidence was not sufficient to prove that petitioners had participated in election: 1964 B.L.J.R. 855.

Proportion of wasted votes to margin of votes secured by returned candidate at election—Its effect on election—Burden of proof of result having been materially affected. See A.I.R. 1957 Assam 118.

Where objection as to the candidate being under-age and unqualified to contest the State Assembly election was overruled by the Returning Officer and his election was impugned in an election petition, held, the burden lay on the petitioner to prove the age of the returned candidate on the relevant date; the burden to prove his age would shift to the member only if prima facie evidence of his being under-age is placed on the record by the petitioner: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 221: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 265.

Election challenged on ground that the elected candidate was below 25 years of age on date of filing nomination paper and, thus, disqualified under Art. 137 of the Constitution—Burden to prove that age was below 25 years on relevant date is on election petitioner: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 282.

Where in an election petition, the issue involved was regarding the age of the elected candidate on the date of the scrutiny of his nomination and there were a number of clear admissions in prior declaration precisely and deliberately made in solemn documents by him which admissions were made ante litem motam during the decade preceding the election in question, held, these admissions were entitled to great weight and had shifted the burden on to the candidate to show that they were incorrect: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1724: (1977) 3 S.C.C. 540: (1977) 3 S.C.R. 538.

In an election petition seeking scrutiny and recount on the ground of miscount, held, the petitioner has to offer prima facie evidence of counting errors; if the proof offered by him is in respect of some ballot papers, the scrutiny or recount would not be confined only to those ballots; that would be contrary to the requirements of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 and the Rules framed thereunder; and might play havoc with Parliamentary election: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1569.

Two candidates obtaining equal number of votes—Casting of lots is not the result of election—Casting of improper vote in favour of successful candidate—Onus lies on person who challenges the election—Held, that there was no proof that election result had been materially affected by reception of improper vote: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 358.

Election for reserved seat for Scheduled Tribe—Question of caste of a candidate is one of fact — Both sides not leading evidence—Matter has to be decided on the basis of original onus which lies on the election petitioner—High Court has no power to contradict Presidential order: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 929.

Improper rejection of nomination paper—It is for the petitioner to prove that it was improper: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 84.

Objection as to validity of nomination paper—Onus to prove disqualification or defect is on party who raises the objection: A.I.R. 1969 J.&K. 12.

Gujarat Municipalities—Election Rules, 1964, Rr. 12 and 14—Exclusion of candidate from election on account of improper rejection of his nomination paper or wrong decision that he had withdrawn his candidature —Presumption—Pleading: I.L.R. (1967) Guj. 76.

"Result has been materially affected"—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 75.

45. Essential supplies.—(See also S. 106, Note 5, infra). Where in a prosecution under the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 for alleged contravention of a Control Order by the Managing Director and President of a company, the holding of those posts was not categorically denied by the accused, held, still the prosecution was required to prove that the accused were, in fact, holding those posts at the relevant time: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1268: (1983) 24 Guj.L.R. 594. See also Notes under S. 10 of the Essential Commodities Act.

Prosecution for offence under Cl. 11, Assam Food Stuff (Foodgrains) Control Order—Mens rea—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1955 Assam 54: 56 Cr.L.J. 444.

Orissa Foodgrains Dealers Licensing Order, 1964, Cls. 3(2) and 2(a)—Storage of foodgrains without licence of more than prescribed quantity on single occasion—Burden to prove that storage is not for sale lies on person who stores foodgrains—"Business"—Requirement of—Single transaction of storage for sale does not constitute business—Person storing foodgrains on single occasion is not dealer: 1967 Cr.L.J. 235: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 29.

Where the accused charged with the offence of storing more than the permissible quantity of rice and/or paddy under the Orissa Rice and Paddy Control Order contended that at no time did he store the requisite quantity in excess of the permissible limit and produced way bills, receipts and vouchers long after the raid which not only made their genuineness suspect but they were also not prepared contemporaneously with the alleged disposals, held, the accused had not been able to establish his innocence; the presumption of his being a dealer under the Order was not rebutted for he had to prove his defence beyond reasonable doubt, and not merely by balance of probabilities: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1193 (Ori.).

Where under the Orissa Rice and Paddy Control Order, any person storing rice and/or paddy exceeding the prescribed limit is deemed to be a "dealer", the burden lies on the accused to prove, after his storing the excess quantity is established, to rebut the presumption. Though ordinarily, the burden to rebut the presumption in criminal cases is not so heavy on the accused and he may be let off if his explanation is reasonable or creates doubt in the prosecution case, but under S. 10-C of the Essential Commodities Act, the accused is required to prove the absence of culpable mental state qua the offence charged beyond "reasonable doubt" and not by preponderance of probability. There is, thus, a clear departure from the ordinary rules of criminal jurisprudence: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1193 (Ori.).

When a person is prosecuted for contravention of Cl. 4 of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956, S. 14 of Essential Commodities Act, casts a burden on the accused of proving possession of a lawful authority, permit or licence to acquire, and the burden of proving the doing of the prohibited act of acquiring and acquiring from any of the three sources specified in Cl. 4, remains on the prosecution. Unless these two ingredients are established by the prosecution, burden under S. 14 would not shift on the accused.

Difficulty on the part of the prosecution to obtain evidence to establish the necessary ingredients of an offence can be no criteria to determine the question of burden of proof. Under Cl. 28, the Controller is empowered to get into possession of knowledge of the source from which the iron and steel was acquired before taking any steps for breach of Cl. 4. If the authorities do not utilize provisions of law enabling them to get information, they cannot urge that the burden of proof does not lie on the prosecution.

S. 106, Evidence Act, cannot have any application to such a case. It cannot come into play where the fact concerned is such as is capable of being known not only by the accused but also by others: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1065: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 163.

Where prosecution case was that the petitioner acquired a quantity of iron joist, etc. for the purpose of repairing his factory but instead of doing so, he otherwise dealt with it which constituted a contravention of Cl. 7 of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order, 1956, but it failed to produce any evidence to show that the goods were used for a purpose other than for repairing the impugned factory, held, the petitioner could not be convicted under the said Order merely because he disposed of the impugned factory even before acquiring the goods and, thus, there was probability that the goods might have been used otherwise: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1238 (Cal.) (D.B.).

46. Estate.—Plaintiff asking for declaration that area covered by inam title deed is not estate—Plaintiff must prove that it is not estate: 30 Cut.L.T. 336.

Explanation to S. 3(2)(d) of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908 (as amended in 1956) raises a presumption that where a grant is expressed to be of a named village, it should be deemed to be an estate; the burden to prove that it was not an estate would lie on the party contending so to show the minor inams comprised in the grant were created contemporaneously with or subsequent to the grant of village by the original grantor. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 681, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 608: (1983) 3 S.C.C. 21: 1983 U.J. (S.C.) 425.

Suit for declaration that certain lands do not form "estate" within the meaning of Madras Estates Land Act—Onus of proof is on the plaintiff: (1967) 2 An.L.T. 116.

47. Execution of documents.—(See also Ss. 67, 68, 70 and 71 and Note 31, supra and Note 77, infra). Proof of execution of a document is no proof of the truth of its contents; the truth of the facts stated in the document, if denied, has to be proved by admissible evidence; under S. 61, the contents of documents are to be proved either by primary or secondary evidence and under S. 62 "primary evidence" means the document itself produced for the inspection of the Court". Even on such proof the Court is not bound to accept the contents, unless it is satisfied about their truth. [A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2085; A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 370, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 Ker. 81 (D.B.).

A mere acknowledgment of execution of a document need not necessarily mean an acknowledgment of liability thereunder. The burden is undoubtedly on the party who relies on such document to establish that statement of the defendant in document constitutes an acknowledgment of liability: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 425: (1971) 84 Mad.L.W. 167.

Where the defendant denies that he ever executed the document in question, the plaintiff has only to prove the execution of the document and once the execution is proved, the contents follow: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 653.

Mere proof of the signature does not operate to discharge the onus to prove execution of the document: (1976) 2 Cut.W.R. 780.

Deed—Execution—Appending signature to blank paper—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 64.

When a signature or thumb-impression in a document is admitted by a person to be his and it purports to be in token of the execution of the document by him then a presumption arises that he must have executed it. It is for him to prove that the signature or thumb-impression was affixed for some other purpose as in token of attestation or that it was affixed on a blank piece of paper. If he fails to do so the presumption is against him. But at the same time before such a presumption is raised he must have unequivocally admitted that the signature on the document is his. It is not sufficient if he simply stated that he signed a blank paper and the document in question might have been got up with the help of that document. It may not be necessary for him to say specifically that his signature had been taken to the document in question. The admission must certainly amount to his saying so: A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 114.

Presumption under—To raise such presumption due execution of pronote must be established—Initial burden lies on plaintiff—Mere admission of signature and thumb-marks on blank sheet is not admission of execution: 1968 All.L.J. 480.

Execution of pronote when needs be established despite admission of signatures by executor. See 1981 Jab.L.J. (Note) 58.

Negotiable Instruments Act (1881), Ss. 4, 118(a)—Promissory note by illiterate person—Defendant admitting his thumb-impression on note as well as receipt—Burden of proving consideration for the same does not shift on the defendant: 1979 All.L.J. 231: 1979 All.L.R. 245: 1979 All.W.C. 162.

Denial of execution of document by the defendant—Plea that blank paper signed by him was handed over to plaintiff—Onus is on plaintiff to prove execution of document and payment of consideration: (1965) 35 Cut.L.T. 794.

Where in a suit for possession of property belonging to a Hindu, the defence is that the defendant was in possession of the property under a sale deed purported to be executed by the widow, and the execution of the sale deed was denied by the plaintiffs, the burden is upon the defendant to show that the widow had executed the agreement for sale. Where the widow could sign and the document bears her thumb-impression and it is alleged by the defendant that she was conscious at the time the widow gave her thumb-impression, the burden does not shift on to the plaintiffs until it is explained by the defence why her thumb-impression was taken to the document. Where the document purports to show itself that the executant's thumb-impression was taken to the document because she was not then in a position to sign, if subsequently the executant was in a position to sign, then failure to take her signature later to the same document makes the defence case still worse: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 566.

Execution of document admitted—Onus on executant to prove that he did not understand its terms even if he is illiterate: (1925) 27 Punj.L.R. 641: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 692. See also 147 I.C. 591: A.I.R. 1934 All. 226.

Where a person not knowing English has affixed his mark to a document written in English language, the onus to prove that the document was properly explained and interpreted to the perosn affixing his mark so as to make him understand its true import is on the party relying on the document: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 274.

Where there was no endorsement on the document to the effect that it was read over and explained to the executant or that she appended her signature after understanding the contents of the same, held, it could not be said that the claimant had discharged the burden that lay on him: (1977) 2 Cut.W.R. 800.

The execution of a document implies intelligent and conscious appreciation of the contents thereof and the facts connected therewith; and where the defendant admitted only that he had put his signature in a blank piece of paper, which, he alleged, had possibly been utilised for fabricating the document in question, it cannot be regarded as his having admitted the execution of the document. The onus of proving that a particular paper, which is the basis of a suit was duly executed by the defendant, must, therefore, have been thrown upon the shoulders of the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1975 Mad. 333: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 265: (1975) 1 M.L.J. 5 (D.B.).

When once the execution of a document is proved if a party alleges circumstances that would make the document not binding on him, it is for him to prove such circumstances: 116 I.C. 143; 39 P.L.R. 42.

Where the defendants admitted receiving of the sums mentioned in a voucher and signature thereon, held, when that voucher mentioned that the amount was advanced by way of loan, it was for the defendants to prove that the voucher was signed in blank and/or that amount was towards profits: A.I.R. 1992 Bom. 434.

When the plaintiff admits execution of receipt, the burden is on him to prove that such receipt does not pertain to the suit amount: (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 121.

Though, normally the law will not be favourably inclined towards and protect "literate persons of full capacity", if they raise the plea of non est factum, the law would protect even such persons if they prove that they are "persons who have been tricked into signing the document". Further, it is for the defendant to prove that the document which he purported to execute by signing blank papers was of fundamentally different nature from the document which he believed he was signing: A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 60: I.L.R. (1987) Bom. 370.

Execution of handnote—Proof of—Contention that document was not genuine—Decree on weighing oral evidence in absence of expert evidence, held, was valid: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 295.

Where execution of a handnote was admitted, held, the burden of proving that it was obtained from the defendant under threat and coercion; if the defendant failed to establish that plea, the plaintiff was not required to prove passing of consideration; in view of S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1872, the Court was bound to draw the initial presumption that the note was for consideration; it was for the defendant to prove want of consideration: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 264: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 537.

Where the defendant admits only that he had put a thumb-mark or signature on a document which was not handnote sued upon, the admission does not amount to admission of the execution of the handnote and, consequently, the burden of proving that the particular handnote sued upon was duly executed by the defendants is upon the person suing upon the same: 1968 B.L.J.R. 409. See also A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 92; A.I.R. 1975 Mad. 333.

The burden of proof is heavy on a plaintiff who sues for a declaration of a document solemnly executed and registered, as a fictitious transaction. The burden becomes doubly heavy when the plaintiff seeks to set aside the order of the civil Court passed in execution proceedings upholding the claim of a third party to a property sought to be proceeded against in execution. The plaintiff who seeks to get rid of the effect of the adverse order against him, has to show affirmatively that the order passed on due inquiry by the executing Court, was erroneous: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1204.

Where a document is registered by a registering authority, the certificate granted to that effect, held, is admissible to prove due registration of the document in statutory prescribed manner and the facts set out in the endorsements made by the authority; the provision is rebuttable but all the same, it places the burden of proof squarely and unmistakably on the party denying the document's registration or its validity: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 421. See also 1984 All.W.C. (Rev.) 52.

The Registrar's endorsement that the document was signed by the executant after fully understanding it, held, cannot be a conclusive proof of its execution if circumstances of its execution are suspicious, i.e., when the executant was an illiterate widow and was ignorant, inexperienced and had to depend on others: A.I.R. 1985 All. 160: 1985 All.C.J. 345.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale said to have been executed by an old, illiterate tribal woman, held, the burden lies on the plaintiff to establish that the contract was duly executed by her: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 17: (1980) 50 Cut.L.T. 77 (D.B.).

In a suit for specific performance on the basis of an agreement to sell, executant of which was an illiterate lady, held, the onus of proving intelligent and conscious execution of the document by her in favour of the plaintiff, was on the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1977 All. 36.

When an illiterate person raises the plea that he/she signed the document under a mistaken impression of its character, the burden is on the person who procured the document to show that the executant had the knowledge of the contents of the deed. Such burden can be discharged by proving that the document was read over and explained to the executant before the execution. If the evidence discloses that the execution took place after the document was read over and explained, the executant must prove that he is not guilty of negligence or carelessness.

The plea of non-est factum is independent of other vitiating grounds such as fraud or misrepresentation in procuring the document which make the deed voidable. In order to invoke this doctrine, it must be shown that the document was radically different in character from that which signer thought it was. The mistake must not be as to the legal effect of the document but only its character. The Court may not extend the applicability of the doctrine where the interests of the parties are involved or in the case of negotiable instruments.

While examining the evidence the plea of fraud, misrepresentation and coercion are not relevant and must be excluded. The plea regarding non-understanding of the nature of the document must be judged independently apart from those vitiating grounds: (1988) 2 An.L.T. 9 (N.R.C.).

Where plea of a person, who had allegedly executed a document, was that he was illiterate and apart from putting his signature he did not know how to read or write and that he was not informed of the contents of the document as the document was not read over or explained to him, held, the burden is on the opposite party who was relying upon the said document to prove that the document was properly explained and interpreted to the person executing it. [A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 274, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 336: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 164.

Since an illiterate person is unable to read the contents of a document, held, the burden lies on the party relying upon it to establish that the executant had known the contents and purport of the deed before he thumb-marked it; due execution must always mean that the executant's mind did concur with the contents of the deed and its signing or thumb-marking was a consequent act; it must be shown to have been thumb-marked after its contents have been read over to, and understood by, him. [(1968) 34 Cut.L.T. 874; (1975) 1 Cut.W.R. 512; (1974) 1 Cut.W.R. 630; A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 274, Rel. on]: (1977) 44 Cut.L.T. 26: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 304: (1977) 1 Cut.W.R. 234.

Where the illiterate mother-in-law had challenged the sale deed on the ground that it was got executed from her by her son-in-law, who was living with her and managing her property for about twenty years, on the pretext that it was a power-of-attorney, held, the mother-in-law being his ward and the relationship being that of trust, the burden to prove that she had executed the deed after fully understanding its contents and receiving the consideration lay on the son-in-law; illiterate ladies are equated with pardanashin ladies. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1203, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 174.

If from the facts and circumstances appearing from the evidence on record it becomes evident that the illiterate executant of the deed understood the nature and the consequence of her said act and knew what she was doing, then, in the absence of other facts to invalidate that execution one can safely hold that the said deed was validly executed: (1977) 2 Cut.W.R. 730.

It is for the appellants to show that the reading and interpretation of the mortgage deed by the Courts below is not correct. But when the terms of the mortgage deed are more than clear enough to support the position that has been urged on behalf of the appellant, then onus can only be discharged by the force of argument and in no other way: (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 213: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 249: I.L.R. (1959) Punj. 254.

The appellant had brought a suit on the strength of a sale deed. The written statement of defendant showed that he did not dispute the fact that there was such a document of sale in the name of appellant. His contention was that though in form the document was a sale deed, in actual fact it was intended, by the parties to the document, only to be a mortgage. Held, that on the above pleadings, the Munsiff ought to have framed an issue and thrown the burden on the defendant to lead evidence in support of his contention that the deed was only a mortgage: A.I.R. 1960 Manipur 11. See also (1980) 2 M.P.W.N. 191.

The argument that while proof of the execution of a Khata by the debtor may throw the burden of proof about the incorrectness of the recitals on the debtor, the same should not be said when the suit was against an heir of the executant cannot be accepted as correct. An heir of the deceased executant is in no better position than the executant himself: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 10: 1958 Raj.L.W. 169.

Comparison of signatures by Court itself—Permissibility—Execution of document—Denial—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 All. 119.

Where a deed is executed by a person who alleges himself to be a major at the time of execution, a heavy burden rests upon him or his representatives when they set up the defence of minority: A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 152: 55 M.L.J. 88 (P.C.).

In a money suit based on vouchers or coupons for petrol singed by the defendant's driver the defence set up is that the driver was not the defendant's employee at the relevant time, held, the burden lies on the plaintiff to prove that the driver was indeed the defendant's employee at the relevant time which can be discharged only by the driver's deposition; in the absence of such evidence, the defendant could not be held liable: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 85 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where there is no reason forthcoming why a different ink has been used for the purpose of the signatures of the attesting witnesses from the ink used for the body of the document and the thumb-impression on the deed, the execution of the document is suspicious: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 566.

Where the due execution and due attestation of the waqf deed has been established and not challenged, the onus lies upon the party to prove by cogent and convincing evidence that the deed was a colourable or a fictitious transaction: I.L.R. (1954) 2 All. 556: A.I.R. 1957 All. 94.

A lunatic is not a person who is continuously in a state of unsoundness of mind and once it had been established that a person is a lunatic, the burden of proof is on the party who alleges that a document he relies on as having been executed by the alleged lunatic was executed by him during a lucid interval: nor does the fact that it was registered, shift the burden of proof in regard to the factum of execution in a sound state of mind. Under the Registration Act, the registering officer is only concerned to see whether the executant appears to be a lunatic and if he does not, he is bound to register it: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 22.

Misrepresentation—A alleging that deed executed by him was vitiated by misrepresentation—Onus is upon A to establish plea of misrepresentation—Held, on facts, that A had failed to establish misrepresentation: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 275: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1395.

When execution of a bond was admitted, the burden to prove plea of coercion and threat is on the defendant who raises such plea: 1983 M.P.W.N. 156.

Where the plaintiff an illiterate and unaware of the contents of the document affixed her thumb-impression on it and later on alleged misrepresentation and fraud, held, the burden of proof was on the defendant to disprove the allegation of misrepresentation and fraud: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 259: (1992-2) 110 Mad.L.W. 209 (D.B.).

Where an illiterate woman sued that the sale deed had been got fraudulently executed from her and its contents were not read over to her, held, the burden to prove that the deed was read over to, and its contents were fully understood by her, would lie on the vendee: A.I.R. 1990 All. 75: 1989 All.C.J. 698.

When signing of bills is admitted by the defendant, it is for him to explain the circumstances under which he signed them: 1982 M.P.W.N. 126.

Where a letter purporting to be a licence written in Urdu and signed by an illiterate person in Mundi, held, the admission of his signature by the alleged licensee does not amount to his admission of the document's execution; it would not shift legal or evidentiary burden initially cast on the plaintiff to the defendant-licensee even before the trial starts. The proper issue in such a case would be—Whether the land is in possession of the defendant as a licensee under the plaintiff? : A.I.R. 1976 Del. 70 (See also Note 80, infra).

48. Fraud.—Suit challenging sale deed executed by plaintiff—Plaint assertions about fraud and plaintiff being pardanashin illiterate lady—Denial by defendant—Plaintiff must begin and not defendant: 30 Cut.L.T. 463.

Fraud in civil proceeding must be established beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal proceeding: A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 93; (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 325: (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 513 (D.B.).

Transfer in good faith—Burden of proof—Fraud on part of transferor proved—Burden to show that transferee was transferee in good faith is on transferee: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150.

Registered document—Plea of non est factum—Executant of deed misled by fraud or misrepresentation—Burden of proof—Illiterate executants other than pardanashin women—Burden is on executant—Rule of prosecution applicable to pardanashin women does not apply: (1961-62) 66 Cal.W.N. 254.

Fraud or misrepresentation by injured—Burden of proof—Revival of lapsed policy: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Punj. 553: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 253.

Avoidance of marriage on the ground of fraud regarding concealment of wife's age at the time of marriage—Held, burden is on the wife to dispel the suspicion of any such concealment or misrepresentation: A.I.R. 1986 P. & H. 191: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 424: (1986-1) 89 Punj.L.R. 12.

Avoidance of policy on ground of fraud—Proof—High degree of probability required—Burden of proof lies on insurer alleging fraud: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Punj. 553: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 253.

Avoidance of transfers as fraudulent—Burden of proof—Reliance on circumstantial evidence—Duty of Court—Inference of fraudulent nature—When made: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 156.

Onus is on party who advances plea of fraud to prove it by cogent evidence: 33 Cut.L.T. 621.

Onus is on the person alleging fraud or mala fides: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 90; A.I.R. 1917 Pat. 417 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 501; A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 88 (D.B.).

It is the Courts' duty to compel the party alleging fraud to produce details of it: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 146.

Fraud between petitioning creditor and insolvent resulting in adjudication later as insolvent—Adjudication liable to be annulled—Burden of proof: (1965) 78 Mad.L.W. 715: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 240.

Where students submitted revised marksheets purportedly issued as a result of re-evaluation and the affidavits and result of the enquiry instituted by the University established that the students had not even applied for re-evaluation of their answer books, held, it was a strong circumstance weighing against the students; though the general rule is that he who pleads fraud has to establish it but it is equally settled that inferences may be drawn from circumstances if direct evidence of fraud is not possible: A.I.R. 1981 All. 377 (D.B.); 1992 Mah.L.J. 1505 (D.B.).

Fraud—Burden of proof: I.L.R. 12 Pat. 359: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 306. Fraudulent transfer, see I.L.R. (1953) Nag. 937: A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 129. As to burden of proving knowledge of party defrauded, see 143 I.C. 84: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 339.

49. Gift.—Where the gift of property is admitted, the burden of proving fictitious nature of transaction is on the party alleging it and it is not discharged by proving that the donor continued in possession of the property: A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 178 (D.B.).

Where in respect of a gift deed, the plaintiff alleges that same was got executed from her by playing fraud, then she must establish the same, but if the plaintiff is an illiterate or paradanashin lady and alleges fraud and fails to establish fraud, yet the defendant must establish the fact that the plaintiff executed the document after the document was read over and explained to her and after she understood the contents thereof and in the absence of any thing to prove the same, the defendant could not succeed in his contention that the plaintiff could not revoke the gift-deed after having failed in proving fraud: A.I.R. 1994 Ori. 113.

Though an endowment can be created by the donor by executing a deed of dedication, yet its mere execution without the donor intending to act upon its terms does not create a valid endowment unless it is established that the donor intended to divest himself of his ownership of the property dedicated. In order to determine whether an endowment is real or nominal, a question of fact, the relevant and material factors to consider are: (1) whether or not the endowment was in fact created, and (2) the parties' conduct and surrounding circumstances; if the creation of the endowment is established as a fact, the second factor ceases to be very much material. However, the onus to prove that the endowment is nominal, and not real, lies on the party which asserts it to be nominal: A.I.R. 1974 Andh. Pra. 316 (D.B.).

Mohamedan Law—Gift—Delivery of possession—Onus—Recital in deed that possession was delivered—Effect of: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 14: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 527; A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 268. See also I.L.R. 28 All. 439 (P.C.).

The initial burden to prove the requirements of marz-ul-maut is on the person who sets up such a plea as affecting the disposition of a dead person; that can be discharged by the proof of the facts and circumstances in which such person met his death and the attendant events preceding and succeeding the disposition itself. Once the possibility of a subjective apprehension of death in the mind of suffering person who made the gift is raised, clearly the burden shifts to that party who takes under the disposition or set up the title on its basis. Such party may prove the facts and circumstances which would enable the Court to hold that the disposition itself was not made while the suffering person was under the apprehension of death for there may be several answers to the problem and mere accident of death of the person making the disposition would not be enough. An old man meeting a natural death may be well disposed to see that the matters are settled in his lifetime and such dispositions would be perfectly valid and would not answer marz-ul-maut. It is, therefore, necessary for the party setting up the disposition to rebut the proof that may be indicative that the disposition is within the mischief of marz-ul-maut. That cannot be done by merely relying on the abstract doctrine of onus of proof of insisting upon the evidence of medical experts not tendered by the opposite party. In a given case such evidence may not be at all available: A.I.R. 1975 Bom. 165: 1975 Mah.L.J. 122.

Property accepted under gift deed—Onus of proving that property does not belong to donor rests upon donee: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 239.

Where the gift deed was executed 75 days before her death by an illiterate woman stated to be 85 years old in the deed, while the propounder and the attesting witness in their testimony gave her age at that time to be 50 and 72 years, respectively; though they also deposed that she had good and normal health but admitted in cross-examination that she was suffering from arthritis; and no independent witness was examined; held, apparently, due to her extreme old age, she could not have understood the nature and contents of the deed; there was also no mention in the deed of her having exercised her independent judgment without coercion or undue influence; the propounder had failed to discharge his burden to prove the deed which lay upon him: A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 172: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 241.

Where the donor had practically gifted all her landed property with an apple orchard, worth about two lakh rupees, to her lawyer, the donee, who was, due to fiduciary relationship, in a position to dominate her will, had no relation and belonged to a different caste, and his village was about 20 Kms. from her village, held, the transaction appears to be unconscionable; the burden, thus, shifts to the donee to prove that the gift deed in his favour was not executed under undue influence. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 163, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1984 Him. Pra. 11: I.L.R. (1983) Him. Pra. 277.

Where the plaintiff being an old man, with feeble health and weak eyesight alleged that the father of the defendants who was neither related to the plaintiff nor was he rendering any services to him taking advantage of his weaknesses fraudulently got executed the gift deeds in the name of his sons, held, it was for the defendants to prove that the plaintiff executed the gift deeds voluntarily after understanding the nature of the documents. [A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 90 and A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 712, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 315.

Where an old lady of 70 years, struck by paralysis, executed a gift deed, remained for four months as an inpatient under treatment and two months thereafter died, held, in the absence of any evidence showing that she had executed the deed with the knowledge of its contents and their implication except that of the donee who had, however, no direct knowledge, and evidence indicating that she had been complaining a few days after the deed that she had been coerced in executing a document unknown to her, the burden to prove that the deed was not procured by any improper means and was executed by her voluntarily shifted to the donee: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 101: I.L.R. (1985) 1 Ker. 478.

Where a son impeaching the gift of a small portion of the joint family property made by his father, the karta, to the karta's helpless sister on the ground that it had not been acted upon, held, the burden lay upon the son to prove that the gift was not acted upon; it is not for the donee to prove otherwise; since the donor was the best person to prove or disprove the allegation and was not examined by the son, he clearly failed to discharge his burden. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 510 and A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 307, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 Mad. 239: (1980) 93 Mad.L.W. 120: (1980) 2 M.L.J. 35.

The burden of proving that gift deeds of immovable property executed by an old illiterate pardanashin lady were not tainted with fraud, undue influence or misrepresentation lies on the party propounding the gift deeds; where no evidence was adduced by the propounder, held, the deeds were null and void: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 33: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 622: 1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 822.

Gift of property by father to son-in-law—Burden of proof is on donee to show that property was self acquired property of former—Otherwise gift fails. See A.I.R. 1954 Manipur 22.

Gift by insolvent to his wife challenged as sham—Onus of proof is on receiver or assignee: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 274.

A deposit made by a person of his money in the joint names of himself and his wife on condition that it is payable to either or survivor or in the name of his wife alone, does not constitute a gift to his wife: A.I.R. 1985 Ker. 14: 1985 Ker.L.J. 34: I.L.R. (1985) 1 Ker. 281 (D.B.).

50. Government employees.—Classification of employees for appointment and promotion—Unless classification is prima facie unjust, onus lies on party attacking classification to show that it is unreasonable and violative of Art. 16: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 839.

Public servant—Suspension of, whether by subordinate officer—Onus of proof: (1963) 6 Fac.L.R. 225.

Premature retirement from Government service—Writ petition—Burden of proof is on petitioner to establish premature retirement: 1968 Lab.I.C. 1024 (Assam).

Government servant on leave preparatory to retirement—Leave revoked by Government, Government servant suspended and departmental enquiry ordered, against him—Held, no breach of service rules—Petition under Art. 226 by such Government servant alleging mala fides on part of Minister in charge—No counter-affidavit by Minister concerned but affidavit filed by Secretary in the Department having no personal knowledge regarding allegations against Minister—Mala fides held proved—Orders set aside: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 72.

Where a compulsorily retired peon, consequent upon a departmental enquiry, having lost in his departmental appeal, impugned the decision in a writ petition on the grounds of bias, wrong placement of the burden of proof upon him, and prejudice caused to him by refusal to allow the assistance of a lawyer, held, bias could not be assumed merely from the language used in the chargesheet; the entire facts and circumstances are to be considered in the context of the relevant disciplinary rules and the facts and circumstances of each particular case; when the department adduced its evidence in support of the charge-sheet, there could be no wrong placement of burden; and mere denial of the lawyer's assistance caused no prejudice. [A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 109 and A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 454, Disting.]: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 5.

Liberalised Pension Rules, 1950, R. 2 (2)—Grievance of P that R. 2(2) had no application to his case as he had not completed 30 years of service—When Accountant-General has given his certificate after scrutiny of service register that P has put in 30 years of service, it is for P to show that calculation arrived at by Accountant-General is wrong: (1967) 2 An.W.R. 276: 1968 Lab.I.C. 116: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 50.

51. Guardianship.—Where the contest with regard to the custody of a child of tender age lies between its father and mother, held, the welfare of the minor in remaining in custody of the mother is so patent that the onus would really lie upon the father who wishes to take it away from the custody of the mother, especially where the father has married a second time: A.I.R. 1953 Him. Pra. 50.

Claim to custody of minor child of another—Person claiming custody must show by positive evidence that mother of minor is guilty of such conduct as to render it unsafe to give minor child to her: 1969 Cur.L.J. 872 (Punj.).

Where the guardian, a de facto guardian at that time, alienated the minor's property, the burden lies upon him to prove that it was a pressing necessity; thus, in the absence of any negotiations for contracting the minor's marriage, the alienation claimed to be necessitated for his marriage expenses, even if the recitals in the deed say so, is not for legal necessity; it is well settled that recitals in the deed by themselves constitute no proof of legal necessity; on facts, the burden not discharged. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1028, Rel. on.]: A.I.R. 1972 Ori. 28: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 178.

Where the purchaser of a minor's property relied on a recital in the deed that the sale was necessitated to repay litigation expenses incurred in the partition suit with the co-sharers and the medical expenses incurred on the minor but adduced no independent evidence of necessity or his having enquired about the genuineness of the legal necessity for the sale, held, the purchaser did not discharge his burden; the sale was voidable at the minor's attainment of majority. [A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 110, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 Cal. 76: (1982) 1 Cal.H.N. 445 (D.B.).

Transfer by guardian—Right of subsequent transferee from ward to resist suit—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 96.

52. Illegal imprisonment.—Order of detention can only be challenged on the ground of malice—Detenu must establish mala fides on part of the Government to secure his release: 1967 Cr.L.J. 845: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 202.

Order of detention challenged on the ground that it was actuated by malice—Burden of establishing malice is on detenu: 1967 Cr.L.J. 427: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 96.

Detention whether mala fide—Burden is on petitioner to prove mala fides—Affidavit by detaining authority about his satisfaction regarding necessity of detention—Burden held not discharged: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1338: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 247.

The defendant in an action for false imprisonment is entitled to succeed, if he pleads and proves that imprisonment was legally justifiable. The burden of proving that the arrest of plaintiff was legal is on the defendants: 1957 Jab.L.J. 869: 1957 M.P.C. 429.

53. Illiterate person.—See Note 47, supra and Note 80, infra.

54. Impotency.—Burden of proof of impotency lies on the petitioner: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 79.

The onus of proving the impotency of the defendant is on the petitioner who so alleges: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 243 (J.&K.).

Incapacity of husband to consummate the marriage—Burden is on wife to prove: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 129.

Impotency must be proved beyond reasonable doubt and, thus, its strict and positive proof is necessary: A.I.R. 1973 Del. 200: (1973) 75 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 123 (D.B.).

Impotency of husband—Proof—Husband unable to consummate marriage and wife continuing to be virgin at the date of petition under S. 12(1)(a) of the Hindu Marriage Act—Burden shifts on husband to prove that he regained potency before filing of petition: A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 68.

Where in a petition for divorce on the ground of the wife's impotency, the husband had adduced evidence that the marriage could not be consummated because of the wife's malformed uterus and under-developed vagina which prevented penetration and the medical witness in cross-examination deposed that intercourse might be possible after surgery, held, the husband had discharged his primary burden to prove the wife's impotency by sufficient evidence to shift the burden to the wife to show that she could be cured by operation; having chosen not to be operated upon, she failed to discharge the burden: 1984 Hindu L.R. 525 (P.&H.).

Where in the wife's petition for divorce on the ground of her husband's impotency, medical evidence showed the husband to have well developed external genitalia but no test was performed to find out if the erection was possible, held, it was then for the husband to prove, by rebuttal evidence, that he was able to penetrate his wife: (1981) 2 D.M.C. 43; A.I.R. 1986 Punj. 308.

55. Injunction.—Where the defendants make construction in violation of the Municipal Rules, held, the plaintiff has to establish the material injury by such violation, so as to enable him to be entitled to the relief of injunction. [(1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 1 (F.B.), Foll.]: (1981) 51 Cut.L.T. 126.

Where in a suit for mandatory injunction, possession was claimed after removing building standing on the suit land, held, burden lay on the plaintiff to prove his title over the suit land: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 60.

56. Insanity, mental disorder, etc.—(See also S. 105, Note 5, infra). Whenever the accused takes up the plea of insanity, it is for the accused to discharge the burden and prove, either by leading evidence or from the evidence led by the prosecution itself that on account of unsoundness of mind he was not knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. This burden on the accused is certainly not as heavy as the burden on the prosecution to prove the guilt. But before this question arises, the prosecution is never relieved of its burden to prove the case against the accused: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 510 (D.B.).

The Court presumes absence of insanity in a criminal trial; this presumption, however, is rebuttable. The burden of proof of legal insanity is on the accused, though it is not as heavy as on the prosecution. The prosecution in discharging its burden in the face of the plea of legal insanity, has merely to prove the basic fact and rely upon the normal presumption of law that every one knows the law and the natural consequences of his act. To establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or if he did not know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1897 (Raj.) (D.B.). See also (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 33; 1985 Cr.L.J. 452: (1984) 86 Bom.L.R. 462 (D.B.) [Where the accused did not adduce any evidence to prove his insanity, he can take advantage of the evidence adduced by prosecution and may raise a reasonable doubt in the mind of Court.]

Burden of proof—Presumption is in favour of sanity—Person pleading insanity must prove it: 1967 Kash. L.J. 44: A.I.R. 1967 J.&K. 85. (See also Notes under S. 105, infra).

It is well established that the burden of proving a sufficient degree of unsoundness of mind at the time of marriage is in all cases on the party impugning its validity; if permanent unsoundness of mind is proved, the burden to prove that the marriage took place during a lucid interval lies on the party upholding the marriage; subsequent recovery of the person of unsound mind does not affect the question of validity: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 545 (D.B.).

The burden of proving the requisite degree of mental disorder sufficient under S. 13(1)(iii) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, held, lies on the spouse seeking divorce on that ground; all mental abnormalities by themselves do not constitute such ground: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 633: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 557 (S.C.).

Where respondent an inmate of the mental hospital who was discharged on parole but there was no order of discharge under Lunacy Act, executed a power-of-attorney during that period in favour of the appellants, held, the burden was on the appellants to establish by sufficient evidence that executant was capable of understanding the meaning of power-of-attorney and of forming a rational judgment as to its effect upon his interest: A.I.R. 1985 Bom. 372 (D.B.).

There is ample authority that mere proof of idiocy at a point of time does not establish, congenital idiocy; it is a fact required to be proved like any other fact and cannot be presumed; rather it is the sanity which is to be presumed unless congenital idiocy is established; thus, a person born in 1941 cannot be presumed to be a congenital idiot on proof that he was an idiot 23 years thereafter or from some years after his birth. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364 and A.I.R. 1974 Mys. 61, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1982 Andh. Pra. 163 (D.B.).

Where annulment of marriage is sought on the ground that the respondent was an idiot and lunatic at the time of marriage, held, it is for the petitioner to prove that his case was squarely covered by S. 5(ii)(b) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955: 1980 Hindu L.R. 134.

Petition for annulment of marriage with lunatic—Burden to prove lunacy is on the petitioner: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 304; A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 545: (1971-72) 78 Cal.W.N. 36; A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 109 (D.B.).

57. Insurance.—(See also Note 16, supra). The general principle that burden lies on the insurer to prove the breach of conditions of insurance of postal parcel is not displaced by the provisions of S. 33 of the Post Office Act, 1898 and the Rules framed thereunder: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 432.

The burden of proving the special defences available to the insurance company under S. 96(2) of the Motor Vehicle Act, 1939 is on the insurance company: 1980 Raj.L.W. 38: 1980 W.L.N. (U.C.) 244; (1975) 77 Bom.L.R. 38.

Where sea water had not entered the engine room and the failure of the vessel and boiler were possibly occasioned by non-repair, held, it did not amount to loss by perils of the sea under a marine insurance policy under the Marine Insurance Act, 1963; the burden of proof not discharged by the assured: (1993-1) 41 B.L.J.R. 773 (S.C.).

Where an insurance company undertook to pay the insurance money of the assured proving total loss of the ship carrying the goods and the company admitted the loss of ship but contended that it was due to risk of war and claimed exemption on that ground, held, that when the loss of ship was admitted by the company the onus on the assured was discharged and it was for the company to prove that though the loss was due to an event insured against, the event was caused under circumstances which brought the case within the exception contained in the policy: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 81.

Where insurer pleads general exception to avoid its liability under the policy, burden is on it to prove such exception: (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 3. See also A.I.R. 1991 Ker. 380 [The burden of proving the fact which excludes the liability of the insurer, lies on the insurer alone.]

58. Intention.—It is not the duty of the prosecution to establish the intention for any act, if the act itself is proved: (1978) 45 Cut.L.T. 71.

Intention—Proof of—No presumption—Burden to prove intention—Extent of: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 60: 1969 Raj.L.W. 612 (D.B.).

Intention—Proof—Onus: (1957) 23 Cut. L.T. 157.

59. Joint debt.—Burden of proof—Proof that plaintiffs and defendants had jointly come to an agreement of business—Defendants are to make out a case of non-participation in business to evade liability to joint debt: I.L.R. (1963) Andh. Pra. 931: A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 98.

The burden of proving that a particular property belongs to the joint family, lies on the person who alleges it. But once the possession of an adequate nucleus is shown, the onus shifts on to the person who claims the property as self acquired to establish that the property was acquired without any aid from the family estate. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 379, Rel. on]: (1973) 89 I.T.R. 129 (Mad.).

Joint family property or self-acquired property—Burden of proof: (1963) 1 An.L.T. 312: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 476.

Property held by member—Presumption—Burden of proof—Shifting of onus. See A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 28: I.L.R. (1955) Madh. Bh. 1.

Hindu law—Joint family—No presumption of joint property—Possession of nucleus essential—Burden of proof that any particular property is joint family property is, in the first instance, upon the person who claims it as coparcenery property. But if the possession of a nucleus of the joint family property is either admitted or proved, any acquisition made by a member is presumed to be joint family property. This is, however, subject to limitations that joint family property must be such as with its aid the property in question could have been acquired. It is only after possession of adequate nucleus is shown that the onus shifts on to person who claims property as self-acquired without any aid from the family estate: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1076.

Joint family—Joint property—Nucleus—Adequacy and existence of—Onus: A.I.R. 1959 Mys. 173. See also (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 176.

There is no presumption that a Hindu joint family is possessed of joint funds and the onus lay on the one who claims that the business was started with the joint family funds, to prove so: A.I.R. 1989 All. 202: 1989 All.L.J. 823.

There is a presumption of a Hindu family being joint but not that property held by a member of a joint Hindu family is joint family property; the burden lies on the person to prove if he asserts that such property is joint family property; and that burden is discharged and shifts on proving that there was sufficient nucleus of joint family funds to acquire that property with, merely because it was purchased in his name would not render it to be the member's individual property. As held in A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 419 where a member of a joint Hindu family blends his separate property with the joint family property or the joint family property with his separate property, in either case the blend becomes joint family property belonging to the joint Hindu family. [A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 335 and A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1076; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 419, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 520 (D.B.).

Member of joint Hindu family setting up a case that a purchase of property by another member in his own name alone was made by him as karta with family funds. Onus of establishing that there was nucleus with the income of which the property could have been acquired is on him—Existence of joint family does not lead to presumption that the property held by any member is joint family: A.I.R. 1957 Assam 115.

It is not the law that the whole of the money required for purchasing the property in dispute must be proved to have actually come out from such nucleus, or that the nucleus was sufficient to have yielded all the necessary funds for acquiring the property in dispute. It is sufficient in law to find that there was a nucleus which could have been the source of the acquisition. It is not necessary to prove that the nucleus was in fact the source of the acquisition. Once the existence of such a nucleus is proved, it is for the person contending that the property is his self-acquired property to prove affirmatively that he acquired it from his own self-acquired funds. It is not sufficient for him to show or to suggest that it could have been acquired from his self acquisition. He must prove it positively as a fact that the source of the acquisition of the property in dispute was his self-acquired income or fund: A.I.R. 1983 All. 348.

Joint family property—Blending of separate property with joint family property—Person alleging that such property is joint property must show that owner has voluntarily thrown it into hotchpot abandoning his separate interest in it: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 229.

Burden of proving item of property to be joint—Onus when shifts. See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 398.

When in a suit for partition, a party claims that any particular item of property is joint family property, or when in a suit on a mortgage, a party contends that the property mortgaged is joint family property, the burden of proving that it is so rests on the party asserting it: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 79 (Karn.) (D.B.).

There is no onus in law on a Hindu family to show that certain items of deposits standing in the names of different members of the family do not belong to it: I.L.R. (1953) 5 Assam 173: A.I.R. 1954 Assam 49.

Hindu joint family—Acquisition of property by member of joint family—Burden of proof, as to when it becomes joint family property. See A.I.R. 1956 Andh. Pra. 255; A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 93.

Where the defendant's pleading was that Rs. 300 to purchase land and build the house in 1917 were obtained from the joint family business, but at the time of evidence they shifted their stand by asserting that it arose out of the income from the joint family land inherited from their father and the existence of the joint family land stood proved, held, the onus shifted on to the plaintiffs to prove that their father had separate income to purchase the land and build the house; on facts, onus not discharged: A.I.R. 1994 Him. Pra. 144.

Where properties standing in individual names were sought to be shown as belonging to the joint family and it was not shown as to what was the extent of the joint family's properties, what was the family's income, expenditure and the surplus available to acquire those properties, held, the burden of proving that the properties were purchased out of joint family funds was not discharged: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 173 (D.B.).

Mortgage by manager to satisfy decrees obtained against him—Liability of other coparceners—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 285.

Where evidence in a suit for partition showed that the Hindu joint family was not in affluent circumstances and did not possess adequate nucleus yielding requisite surplus to purchase the property even if in the name of one of its members who is shown to have obtained sufficient money from his brother-in-law to purchase it, held, there could be no presumption that the property belonged to the joint family: 1981 Hindu L.R. 384 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where a plaintiff avers that an impartible estate has ceased to be a joint family property for succession purposes, held, the burden lies on the plaintiff to prove that the junior member of the family intended, expressly or impliedly, to give up their chance of succeeding to the estate; he has to adduce satisfactory evidence to the effect that the junior branch had given up its claim and the estate had become separate property of the last holder's branch; the test is to determine on facts proved whether there was a clear intention to renounce or surrender or relinquish the right of succession by the junior branch so as to render the estate a separate property: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1937.

The burden of proof lies heavily upon the member of the family, who sets up title by adverse possession in himself to the joint family property to the exclusion of another member. He should affirmatively prove that, to the knowledge of the other member, he was asserting title in himself exclusively, that the other member was completely excluded from enjoying the property and that it continued for 12 years: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 170: (1972) 2 M.L.J. 481: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 714 (D.B.).

When the plaintiff asserts that the primogeniture rule was inapplicable, that the family was joint and that there was absence of partition or family arrangement, the onus is on him to prove those contentions: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 278.

(a). Burden to prove self-acquisition.— Once it is found that the family property which may be sufficient to form a nucleus for acquisition of fresh property, the burden to prove that the property was acquisitioned separately, would shift on the person who alleges separate acquisition: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 20; A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 315: I.L.R. (1953) Cut. 343; A.I.R. 1958 All. 42; 1983 M.P.W.N. 70.

Where in a suit for partition, a property was purchased in the joint names of two brothers living jointly and the family had property yielding some income even if it was not shown that the property was in fact purchased by joint family funds, held, the burden lay on the brother claiming it to be his self-acquired individual property and alleging that the other brother joined as a co-purchaser was a mere benamidar to prove the same. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 379, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1983 All. 348.

Once it is admitted or proved that a family is joint and possesses some joint property called nucleus, the presumption of law is that all property held by or in the hands of any individual member or members is joint family property. This being the presumption, if any member of the family claims any portion of the property as his separate property, the burden lies upon him to show that it was his separate property: A.I.R. 1985 Madh. Pra. 73 (D.B.).

Hindu law—Joint family—Self-acquisition—Shifting of onus. See A.I.R. 1954 All. 143: 1953 All.L.J. 611.

Where certain property was recorded as joint for a considerable length of time, held, burden of proof will lie on the party pleading self-acquisition to establish the same: 1976 All.W.C. (Rev.) 66.

Existence of family nucleus proved—Subsequent acquisition—Presumption—Proof—Self-acquired property of member impressed with character of joint family property cannot be disposed of by will. See (1967) 2 I.T.J. 315 (Andh. Pra.).

Joint family—Self-acquisitions—Acquisition in name of coparceners—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 246.

Where the land on which the house in dispute was constructed is coparcernary property of the two brothers, held, the burden is on the defendant, the brother asserting that the house was constructed from his self acquired funds to show that the house was his self acquired property: A.I.R. 1983 All. 348.

Hindu joint family—Self-acquisition—Blending—Intention—Onus: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 147.

Hindu law—Joint family—Acquisition of separate property to member—Onus is on member claiming such acquisition as his separate property to prove that it is so: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 13 (D.B.).

If any member of joint family claims any portion of the properties as his separate property, the burden would lie upon him to show that it was acquired by him in circumstances which would constitute it his separate property. Further, there is essential distinction as to the scope of the presumption in the case of acquisitions in the names of male members of a joint family and the female members of a joint family. In the case of male members of a joint family there is a presumption that if the joint family had sufficient ancestral nucleus, the properties standing or acquired in the name of individual members are joint family properties unless contrary is proved. In the case of female members there is no such presumption and it is for the party who claims properties as joint family properties to establish the same by adducing necessary evidence. If such party adduces no evidence or the evidence adduced by him is not satisfactory, the female member in whose name the property stands must be held to be the owner of the property in question: A.I.R. 1973 Ori. 85.

Where a property stood in the name of a female for well over 40 years, held, there is no presumption that the source of its acquisition was the Hindu joint family's funds or income; if a plaintiff contends so, he must necessarily adduce evidence to show that his contention was plausible and maintainable; it is only if the ostensible title of the female is likely to be tilted thereby that the onus to prove her title would shift to her: 1981 Hindu L.R. 789 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where land was purchased in the name of a married woman from her stridhan and no evidence was adduced to show that it was joint family property, held, the members not having discharged the burden of proof lying on them, the usual presumption would prevail that the ostensible is the real; the property does not belong to the joint family: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 244: 1985 Pat.L.J.R. (H.C.) 430.

Suit for declaration of title—Plaintiffs title depending on suit property being self-acquired property of her husband—Defendant alleging it to be ancestral property of Hindu joint family—Burden is mainly on plaintiff to prove her case: A.I.R. 1962 Guj. 9: (1961) 2 Guj.L.R. 283.

Incorporation of self-acquired property with impartible estate. See A.I.R. 1955 Mad. 219: (1954) 67 Mad.L.W. 388.

(b). Partition.—There is no presumption that a joint family owns joint properties as well. In a suit for partition of alleged joint family properties, the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the properties in question are joint family properties: A.I.R. 1990 Pat. 198. This onus may, however, be held to have been readily discharged, if there are appropriate circumstances appearing in the evidence in the case: (1972) 38 Cut.L.T. 827 (D.B.).

There is no presumption that a Hindu joint family is also possessed of joint property; thus, it is for the party which claims partition to plead and prove that the property sought to be partitioned belongs to the family; that can be shown by establishing an adequate nucleus of joint family property and funds wherefrom members had purchased the disputed properties in their individual names: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 60 (Ori.) (D.B.).

The burden to prove that a property sought to be partitioned belonged to the joint family lies on the person who claims its partition as such: 1984 M.P.L.J. (N.O.C.) 54.

The burden of proving partition of the joint family property lies on the party which asserts partition; merely because a person is in exclusive possession of some joint family property is not determinative of partition because such exclusive possession may as well flow from an amicable settlement between members of the family; in the absence of satisfactory evidence of previous partition, the property held to be joint: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 83 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Partition admitted or proved—Person alleging family property to be joint—Burden of proving allegation: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 179.

Partition suit—Question whether certain property belongs to joint family—Burden of proof—Discharge of: I.L.R. (1960) Bom. 67.

Partition—Suit for—Onus of proving the particular item of property is joint family property rests on party asserting it: (1968) 34 Cut.L.T. 778.

It is elementary that the normal state of every Hindu family is joint; the presumption is that unless proved to the contrary such a family continues to be joint; even the burden to prove an old partition still lies on the party which asserts partition; but where the partition asserted is ancient (more than century old as in the instant case,) such burden may not be discharged by evidence, obliterated or lost by lapse of time; but the partition may be gathered from subsequent acts and conduct of the family members like record of rights showing the family lands to be joint in successive settlements and their joint purchases of lands about three decades earlier; the family continued to be joint: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 60 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Partition is severance of joint status and occurs on communication by a member of the family of his intent to separate; it is not to be confused with de facto division and allotment of shares to the members, by mere communication of the intent, the joint family stands disrupted; no separation of the estate by metes and bounds is necessary. The burden to prove the continuance of the joint family would lie on the party that asserts it; that is so in respect of the joint family partitioning part of the joint family property while remaining joint qua the unpartitioned property; if such partial separation is admitted or proved, the burden would still lie on the party pleading continuance of jointness in respect of the remaining property to prove it: A.I.R. 1991 Bom. 10: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 224: (1990) 3 Bom.C.R. 328.

Partition—Plaintiff alleging severance of status in particular year—Defendant admitting severance but contending that it was in different year—Burden of proving that it was in different year is on defendant: I.L.R. (1966) 32 Cut. 226.

Hindu law—Partition—Allegation of separation—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 398. Partition list proved—Onus to prove jointness is heavy on party alleging it: A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 865. Partition—Re-union—Onus. See A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 744: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 31; A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 269.

The burden of proof of partition is upon the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1971 Mys. 145: (1971) 1 Mys.L.J. 50 (D.B.).

Plea that all properties except suit houses were partitioned, held, has to be proved by the party who pleads it: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 75.

Suit for partition—Defendants denying jointness of family—Onus of. See A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 39.

Where in a suit for partition it was proved that there was sufficient nucleus of funds from the joint family lands and there was no other source from which the disputed property could have been purchased, held, the onus would shift to the other party which claims the property to be self-acquired to prove that it was so: (1990) 2 Hindu L.R. 1 (Mad.) (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1983 All. 348.

In the matter of onus, a partition suit does not stand out as a category apart; it is for the plaintiff to first prima facie establish his case of the property being joint family property; if he shows that the joint family had certain properties which could form a nucleus of sufficient value for acquisition of the suit property, the burden would shift to the other party to show that it was self-acquired, unaided by the joint family property. However, there is no such presumption in case of business even if it is carried on and managed by the karta unless it is shown that the business in the hands of a coparcener was developed with the assistance or funds of the joint family: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 590.

Where in a suit for partition the defendant sets up a prior partition by agreement between the parties, the burden of proving the alleged partition lies upon the defendant and, therefore, it is for him to begin and lead evidence to prove the agreement before the plaintiff can be called upon to prove its invalidity. It is also his duty to produce the agreement with his written statement or at least produce at the first hearing a list of documents on which he relied and include the agreement in the list: A.I.R. 1956 Sau. 89.

Where each and every plea of the plaintiff in a suit for partition was disputed by the defendants though they set up their title by way of ouster to some of the suit properties, held, the entire burden of proof cannot be placed on the defendants to prove their case; it is for the plaintiff to discharge his burden of proof by leading evidence first though he may exercise his option to adduce his evidence of rebuttal after the defendants had adduced their evidence: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 280.

In a suit for partition even if the plaintiff admits the memo of partition, still it would not absolve the defendants from proving the fact of actual oral partition. This is an independent fact disassociated from the fact of the execution of the document: A.I.R. 1980 J.&K. 54: 1980 Kash.L.J. 84 (D.B.).

Where in a partition suit it was proved that it was the plaintiff who acted as karta upto the final decree in the previous partition suit and that he was collecting the income of the joint properties, held, the onus was upon the plaintiff karta to prove how much money he realised out of the joint property and how much money he spent to meet the joint liabilities: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 99: (1975-76) 80 Cal.W.N. 753 (D.B.).

Where a joint family property sought to be partitioned was earlier sold in execution and the suit for possession by the auction-purchaser was compromised on payment of certain amount by two of the joint family members, and thus, in the partition suit those two members contended that it being their self-acquired property was not liable to partition, held, the property continued through out to be in possession and enjoyment of the joint family and the auction-purchaser had merely relinquished his right, and the nucleus of the joint family had sufficient potentiality to purchase the property, therefore, the burden was on the defendants to prove hat it was their self acquired property: (1990) 1 Bom.C.R. 661: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 97.

In a case of partition the plaintiffs claimed unity of title and possession in respect of certain lands. The Courts below having accepted that there was a normal presumption of jointness, tested the normal presumption by the conduct of parties and thereafter came to a finding that there was absence of unity of title and possession. Held, it could not be said that the finding of lower Courts was vitiated on account of onus having been wrongly placed upon the plaintiffs. [A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 128; A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 398; A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 548, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 191: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 407.

Where in a suit for partition defendants resist by setting up acquiescence in the permanent right of occupancy in a part of the land, the burden of proving existence of those rights is on them: 56 I.A. 248: I.L.R. 52 Mad. 549: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 156: 57 M.L.J. 1 (P.C.).

Manager of Hindu family admitting that family possessed certain unaccounted cash—Burden of proving that division of that amount was in fact made, lies on him: (1961) 3 S.C.R. 792: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1077.

Partition—Some of the co-parceners separating—Presumption as to others: 1961 Jab.L.J. 616.

Where the coparcener comes forward with a case of partial partition, held, the presumption will be that the partition was complete and burden will be upon the coparcencer to show that it was not so: A.I.R. 1985 All. 133: 1984 All.C.J. 647.

The burden of proving a reunion after partition is on the person who asserts it: A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 301.

Marumakathayam law undoubtedly lays down that the partition of tarwad properties requires consent of all its adult members; the burden of proving that the tarwad had been divided by conduct lies on the party which sets up such a plea: A.I.R. 1976 Ker. 105.

Marumakathayam law—Tarwad—Partition—Suit for—Burden of proof—Acquisitions by Karnavan—Presumption. See (1955) 2 M.L.J. 36.

Suit for partition of tarward property—Burden lies on plaintiff to prove that property was partible—Burden not affected by frame of issue in negative form—Once plaintiff had not proved that, it was quite immaterial whether property belonged to defendant as the last surviving member of the tavazhi or was his self-acquisition: I.L.R. (1963) 2 Ker. 227: (1963) 2 Comp.L.J. 106: A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 1 (F.B.).

Where the defendants stated in their written statement that the tarwad of plaintiff and defendants originally belonged to one common tarwad, but became separate with no one community of interest between each other, some time prior to the year 1000, M.E., it was for them to make out by satisfactory evidence as to when and how exactly the division took place and what were the properties allotted to each of the tarwards at the time of the alleged division: I.L.R. (1958) Ker. 389: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 178 (F.B.).

(c). Alienation.—It is well settled that the burden of proving that the alienation of property was for "legal necessity" lies on the alienee; it is for him to prove that he had made due and proper enquiry that such necessity indeed existed; the recitals in the sale deed proximate in point of time like providing education is not of much import unless it is supported by independent evidence; on facts, burden not discharged: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 691 (Karn.) (D.B.); (1992) 1 Hindu L.R. 648 (Mad.).

Two things are well settled that the authority of the karta to borrow on the security of family property is a limited one, and that in the case of a loan to them the burden of proof in the first instance rests upon the lender to show that both the borrowings and the terms were within the authority which karta can exercise: A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 64.

Where the manager of a joint Hindu family alienates joint family property, the alienee is bound to inquire into the necessity for the alienation, and the burden lies on the alienee to prove either that there was legal necessity in fact, or that he made proper and bona fide enquiries as to the existence of such necessity and did all that was reasonable to satisfy himself as to the existence of such necessity: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 218: (1974) 1 Cut.W.R. 350. But where the existence of family necessity is established, the manner in which it should be met and the manner of the application of the money for the purpose of meeting the necessity, is a matter entirely for the manager to decide. The purchaser is not bound to see that the money advanced by him was actually applied to meet the necessity: 1984 Hindu L.R. 401 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where the challenge to the alienation made by the karta or father of the joint Hindu family is on the ground that the antecedent debts incurred by father of the joint Hindu family were tainted by immorality, it is for the sons to prove that the antecedent debts were immoral and also that the purchasers had notice that they were so tainted: 1984 Hindu L.R. 401 (Mad.) (D.B.).

It is well settled that it is for the party that wants the Court to uphold alienation of a debuttar property to prove that it was made for legal necessity. [A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 33; A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 356 and A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1011, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 389 (D.B.).

Legal necessity for alienation—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 491.

Joint family property—Alienation—Necessity—Onus—Duty of alienee. See A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 744: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 31; A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 112.

Hindu law—Alienation—Necessity or benefit—Onus—Held, that the alienee has to prove that the alienation was for necessity or benefit of the family including minor member—Value of recitals in the deed of alienation as proof. See 1977 Kash.L.J. 337.

Alienation by karta of joint Hindu family—Alienee is under no obligation to give proof of legal necessity when there is no plea raised as to want of necessity: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2228: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 311.

Actual proof of necessity which justifies an alienation under Hindu law is not essential to establsh its validity. It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed and that he should have acted honestly and made proper enquiry to satisfy himself of its truth: A.I.R. 1918 Pat. 469 (S.B.).

The rule as to the burden resting on an alienee (under a sale or mortgage executed by a Hindu father, family manager or limited owner) who seeks to affect the rights of persons not parties to the transaction in his favour, is derived directly from the substantive law whereunder the powers of alienors are limited to the existence of necessity, benefit or antecedent debt. Another rule that alienee is protected if he can satisfy the Court that in entering into the transaction he acted bona fide on the representation of the alienor as to the existence of necessity, benefit, etc. If a mere recital as to the existence of necessity, were decisive against the assailant, these rules could easily be circumvented. But the recital as such is not proof, though it is evidence, of the existence of necessity, etc., that is to say, the onus resting on the alienee is not discharged merely by producing the deed and relying on the recitals therein. The weight, which may be attached to a recital of such nature will depend upon other circumstances in the case. There is no special rule of onus in cases relative to the passing of the consideration, apart from what is necessarily involved in the general rule by which the burden of satisfying the Court that a transaction is good under the substantive law devolves on him who seeks to support it. The initial burden which he carries cannot be enhanced by any plea on the part of the consideration. The proposition that where a transaction is sought to be enforced against persons who do not claim through the executant, the admission in the documents as to the receipt of consideration is not enough concerning the sufficiency of proof and not the onus. The real question in such cases is whether the executant as an individual received the consideration recited and there is no reason why his new admission in a solemn deed as to its receipt should be regarded as of little value. Such an admission is not to be ruled out as 'res inter alios acta', because the mere fact that he received the consideration mentioned is, by itself, of no legal effect against others. Unless such a recital is necessarily to be viewed with suspicion (for which there is no warrant in substantive law) it may well be taken as prima facie proof of such receipt. It cannot be argued that in all cases such a recital should be considered inadequate in law. Nor is there any presumption of law that such recitals are not correct and that they are fraudulently made: 1956 An.W.R. 65.

The burden to prove legal necessity is on the defendant-vendee but at the same time, it is necessary for the plaintiffs who want to challenge such sale to atleast allege in the plaint that such sale was without legal necessity: 1982 Hindu L.R. 646 (Raj.).

Before the question of burden of proof arises, there must be a question for proof. Where an alienation is by itself not void ab initio, before it can be set aside, it must be impeached, and where a case of impeachment has not been properly raised by a plaintiff, he cannot, by merely relying on the abstract doctrine of burden of a proof, be heard to say that because the alienee has not proved legal necessity or a case of antecedent debt, he is entitled to question the alienation and get back the alienated property: 1957 Raj.L.W. 173: I.L.R. (1957) 7 Raj. 101.

Alienation by father of family property when valid—Impeachment of alienation by sons—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 305; A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 329. Onus of proving that debt of father was immoral or illegal lies on sons: A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 143 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 205; I.L.R. (1954) 4 Raj. 328 (D.B.).

Debt—Hindu law—Liability of son—Avyavaharik debt—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 534.

Where a Hindu son assails the sale of a joint family property by his father, the burden lies upon him to establish that the debt for payment whereof the sale was effected was of such a nature that he, as a son of the Hindu father, was under no pious obligation to discharge; it is, thus, for the son to establish that the debt was incurred for an immoral purpose; adduction of evidence tending to show his father's general immorality is not sufficient; it is not necessary to prove by direct evidence that the money borrowed was expended on vices but the sons must establish the connection between the debt and his father's immoral habits, either by direct evidence, if available, or by circumstances, which are more telling and can never tell lies. Thus, where the son established that his father, when he contracted the debt, was indulging in a life of vice which, but for the borrowings, he could not, and that there was no other necessity or purpose for such borrowing connected with the family, held, it would be reasonable to infer that the debts borrowed were for immoral purpose; it is not necessary for the son to further establish by direct evidence that the debts borrowed were indeed utilised to feed the vice: 1984 Hindu L.R. 53 (Andh. Pra.). See also 1979 Hindu L.R. 307 (Punj.).

Where defendants in a suit for partition pleaded that certain mortgages were effected by the karta of a branch of the Hindu joint family, held, the burden lay upon them to prove that he was in fact the karta; on facts, burden not discharged: A.I.R. 1972 Mys. 81: (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 462.

In a suit for the declaration that the mortgage effected by the plaintiff's father in respect of the coparcenery property, being without any valid necessity, was not binding upon them, held, the onus was on the mortgagee to prove legal necessity for the mortgage; the plaintiffs were not required to prove that the mortgage-debt in dispute was tainted with illegality or immorality before a decree could be passed in their favour. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 727, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 P.&H. 7 (D.B.).

In execution of money decree against the father alone, the whole family property may be brought to sale and when such property is sold, the son cannot get the sale set aside unless he proves that the debt for which the decree was passed, has been contracted by the father for immoral purpose: I.L.R. 15 Cal. 717 (P.C.).

Mortgage by manager to satisfy decrees obtained against him—Liability of other coparceners—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 285.

Where it was found on facts that the mortgagee was not acting as karta of the joint family but only in his individual capacity when the property was mortgaged to him by his brother, held, the starting point of limitation for a suit for redemption would be the acquisition of knowledge by the plaintiff of the alienation, and the burden would lie on the defendant to prove that the plaintiff had acquired that knowledge on a specific date: A.I.R. 1972 Mys. 81: (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 462.

Alienation—Legal necessity—Pleading and burden of proof—Sale by coparcener only—Existence of widow having interest in property—Nature of interest acquired by alienee—Suit by alienee for declaration of title and confirmation of possession: 1963 B.L.J.R. 536: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 277.

Where joint ancestral estate has passed out of joint family, either under a conveyance executed by father in consideration of an antecedent debt or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay father's debt, cannot recover that the property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted: I.L.R. 5 Cal. 148 (P.C.). This rule is limited to antecedent debts, and it does not cover cases in which a sum of ready money has been paid over to the father by the vendee or mortgagee: I.L.R. 15 All. 75 (F.B.).

Alienation by a limited owner—Onus of proof—Transferee has to prove that alienation was for legal necessity or that he made bona fide enquiry about such legal necessity: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 172.

Onus lies on him who wants to take benefits under a transaction by a limited owner to prove justifying necessity; it is incumbent upon alienee to prove that he acted honestly and had made due inquiry as to existence of necessity: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 900 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 39; A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 110; A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 90.

The onus of supporting a sale from a Hindu widow is on the purchaser who should adduce evidence to prove such legal necessity as would bind the husband's estate and not rely simply on recitals in the schedule attached to the sale deed: A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 38.

Burden of proof—Alienation beyond life time by limited owner—Burden to prove that alienation was for legal necessity is on transferee: 1966 B.L.J.R. 406.

Suit to set aside alienation—Allegation that property is ancestral—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 269.

A wahivatdar or a manager has not got an unqualified power of alienation in respect of debuttar properties. His powers in that regard are restricted. He can alienate debuttar properties only for legal necessity or for the benefit of the deity. The burden of establishing the circumstance justifying an alienation of debuttar property is on the alienee: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 207 (D.B.).

Alienation of tarwad property—Burden of proof of legal necessity: 1962 Ker.L.T. 804.

Malabar law—Tarwad—Alienation by Karnavan—Validity—Necessary—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 18 (F.B.).

Hindu joint family business—Plea of change into partnership—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 380.

There is no presumption that business carried on by member of joint family is joint family business—Nor is there any presumption that business carried on by such member in partnership with stranger is joint family business: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 100 (D.B.).

Where the business of explosives stood in the name of a member of the Hindu joint family, be he its karta, held, there is no presumption that it belonged to the family; the onus lies heavy on the plaintiff who sues for its partition to prove that it belonged to the joint family; he may discharge the burden by direct proof that it was run and grow up with the joint family's assistance or indirectly that the joint family had sufficient surplus nucleus to set it up: 1981 Hindu L.R. 686 (Mad.) (D.B.). See also I.L.R. (1964) 1 Mad. 872 (D.B.).

61. Jurisdiction.—Bar of jurisdiction—Party seeking to oust jurisdiction of civil Courts must establish its right to do so: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 781; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1718; A.I.R. 1968 Del. 162. See also A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 121 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 385 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 144 (D.B.).

A suit, amongst other things, for damages for wrongful arrest and for illegal search and seizure of goods is prima facie competent in a civil Court and, if for any reason the defendants want to contend that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit, they have got to make good this contention: 1957 Jab.L.J. 869: 1957 M.P.C. 429.

Where the matrimonial Court's jurisdiction was invoked by the husband on the ground that the parties had last resided together for 10 days within its local limits which was hotly contested by the wife on the ground that it was a temporary stay as a guest in a relation's house on their visit to attend a marriage, held, the burden to prove that they had last resided together at that place lay on the husband; he did not chose to enter the witness box to elucidate and sustain his contention; his wife's testimony of living as a guest did not, and could not, amount to residing together; the matrimonial Court had no territorial jurisdiction to try the case: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 233 (J.&K.).

Prosecution has to prove that Court taking cognizance has territorial jurisdiction: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 775: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 295.

62. Labour cases.—Though the Evidence Act as such does not apply to industrial adjudications, but the principle of law enunciated on the burden of proof and onus of proof being a basic principle of law, the Industrial Tribunals are also required to follow it: (1973-74) 78 Cal.W.N. 787.

Suit claiming exemption under S. 16(1), Provident Funds Act—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 418 (D.B.). See also (1926-27) 31 Cal.W.N. 286.

Where a firm employed more than twenty workers in a previous year, the burden of proving that number of workers was curtailed below twenty in subsequent years is on the firm for going out of reach of the Employees' State Insurance Act, 1948: 1982 Lab.I.C. 148 (Ori.). See also (1965) 29 F.J.R. 239 (Mad.) [Managing partner cannot be included in twenty—Has to be proved by the company.]

Burden to prove that an employee is not "workman" lies on employer: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 108.

Normally, it is for the person putting forward the claim to establish the facts and circumstances supporting the claim. Where in an industrial dispute it was claimed that the employee was retrenched, the onus to establish that fact is on the employee. Held, on facts, that the employer justified in letting in evidence to rebut the claim of the employee and the decision of the Labour Court which was arrived at after appreciation of the evidence could not be interfered with in a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 303: (1948) 8 Fac.L.R. 343: (1964) 2 Lab.L.J. 86: A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 255.

Reference of dispute by State Government—Question whether dispute referred is industrial dispute or not—Burden of proof—It is for the party who challenges opinion of State Government and contends that industrial dispute exists or is apprehended to establish its case: (1966) 13 Fac.L.R. 63 (All.).

Where in a reference under Industrial Disputes Act, a rebuttable presumption of existence of industrial dispute arises, the duty lies upon the employer to adduce evidence in rebuttal: (1980) 1 Cal.H.N. 22.

Where in an order purported to have been made by the Government under S. 3, U.P. Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, there is no expression of the opinion formed by the State Government in regard to matters mentioned in that section, the burden of proving that it was necessary to make the Government order for one of the purposes mentioned in S. 3 would be on the State Government: A.I.R. 1956 All. 689.

Burden to prove that the lock-out was justified is on the management: (1988) 2 L.L.N. 48 (Bom.).

Termination held to be illegal and unjustified—Normal rule of reinstatement with full back wages—Employer claiming benefit of deduction from wages—Onus is on him to plead and prove circumstances justifying such deduction: 1979 M.P.L.J. 773 (D.B.).

Where the act of dismissal of his services was challenged as unfair labour practice under the Maharashtra Recognition of Trade Unions and Prevention of Unfair Labour Practices Act, 1971, held, the burden of proving the same was upon the employee: (1985) 1 Bom.C.R. 94.

Burden of proof on plaintiff to prove negligence on part of defendant in a claim under the Fatal Accidents Act—Both parties, however, producing evidence about cause of accident causing death of deceased—Question of burden of proof loses much of its importance: I.L.R. (1960) 2 All. 586: 1960 All.L.J. 770: 1960 All.W.R. (H.C.) 584: A.I.R. 1961 All. 14.

Loss of pecuniary benefit due to death of deceased—To sustain action under the Fatal Accidents Act, plaintiff has to prove reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage—Expectation of pecuniary advantage is mixed question of fact and law: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 13: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 247 (D.B.).

Accident in course of employment—Burden of proof: 1966 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 160; A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 175 (Burden is on workman).When a workman proves that the injury by accident was in the course of employment, his claim for compensation is established. And then it is for the employer to prove the existence of circumstances which negative payment of compensation: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 601.

Claim for compensation by relatives of deceased employee—Burden of proof—Nature of proof: 1968 Lab.I.C. 786: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 113.

Bonus—Claim for—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 500.

Bonus—Available surplus—Replacement of machinery at future date—Cost of—Employer has to discharge the burden by adducing proper evidence: 1968 Lab.I.C. 531: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 538.

Burden of proof and evidence—Court on consideration of entire evidence recording clear finding that transaction was by way of wages—Question of burden of proof is no longer material: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 25.

Breach of contract of employment by employer—Liability for payment of salary—Existence of mitigating circumstances—Burden of proof: 1969 Lab.I.C. 1324: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 373.

Non-maintenance by an employer of any of the documents and records as required by S. 18 of the Minimum Wages Act and Rr. 25 and 26 framed under it may give rise to an adverse inference against the employer. But this does not mean that the burden of proving that a particular employee has not worked overtime is on the employer. An employee claiming relief under the Act must support his claim by evidence which may get strengthened by the employer's failure to maintain the required documents and records. It is for the person who makes claims to establish the same. The Act and the Rules framed thereunder do in no manner depart from that basic rule: (1965) 1 Mys.L.J. 461: (1965-66) 27 F.J.R. 314: (1965) 2 Lab.L.J. 26: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 317.

Fixation of minimum wage—Allegation of discriminatory tenant—Burden is on party alleging to prove: 1968 Lab.I.C. 27: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 18.

63. Land acquisition.—(See also S. 106, Note 11, infra). Suit to set aside a claim order—Onus is on plaintiff to prove that he is the real owner: 1961 M.L.J. 268.

Where the fact of plaintiff being a lessee of the land acquired under the Land Acquisition Act was controverted by the defendants specifically, held, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that he was a lessee of the land by leading unimpeachable and reliable evidence: A.I.R. 1972 Guj. 131 (D.B.).

Award under Land Acquisition Act and offer under R. 4 of U.P. Defence of India (Compensation and Arbitration) Rules, 1943 compared—Burden of proof to find out market value of property: A.I.R. 1964 All. 488.

Market-value of land acquired—Determination of—Prices paid for adjacent lands in bona fide transactions may be considered—Claim for enhanced price—Onus is on claimant to produce evidence: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 186: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 230.

Land acquisition—Higher rate claimed—Onus of proof on claimant: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 270. Burden of proving that valuation made by the Special Acquisition Officer is insufficient and unfair lies on the claimant: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 225; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 364 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 28.

Party claiming enhanced compensation under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 must prove inadequacy of award—If he prima facie proves it, Land Acquisition Officer must support his award: (1969) 18 Law Rep. 467 (Mys.).

In a reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, the burden of proving that the amount of compensation awarded by Collector is inadequate lies upon the claimant but the weight of burden depends upon the thoroughness of the enquiry held by the Collectors: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 52 (D.B.).

Where in a reference by the claimants to the Court under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for enhancement of compensation, the Special Land Acquisition Officer contended that the claim for such enhancement was barred by virtue of S. 25(2) of the said Act, held, the burden was on the Land Acquisition Officer to show that the prerequisite conditions which barred the claim under said section, had been satisfied: A.I.R. 1974 Mys. 5 (D.B.).

Land acquisition proceedings—Affidavits—Proposed acquisition impugned as in colourable exercise of power—Respondent is required to disclose relevant material: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 499.

Grounds of appeal—New point—Claim for compensation in respect of granite within patta land—Land Acquisition Officer proceeding on basis that there was grant of minerals—Same stand taken before District Judge—Plea that minerals did not pass with grant and that regarding onus of proof of that fact—Land Acquisition Officer not permitted to raise those pleas for first time in appeal: (1967) 1 Mys.L.J. 159.

A person must prove that he did everything that the law required him to do, but a party to a civil proceeding cannot be asked to prove what some other persons had to do under a law. Where the State Government acquired certain land by invoking the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, held, the burden of proving the validity of acquisition was not on the plaintiff but the State Government or its agents alone were competent to answer any charge of violation of any provision of the said Act: A.I.R. 1985 Pat. 221.

64. Landlord and tenant.—(See Note 43, supra).

65. Lease/licence.—S. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 does not stipulate service of prior notice, unless the agreement itself so provides, before terminating a licence; a licence creates no interest in the property in favour of the licensee; the burden to prove that termination was bad for want of notice, thus, would lie on the party impugning the termination of licence to prove that such notice was a condition precedent: A.I.R. 1991 N.O.C. 107 (Gau.).

In a suit by a lessee for a declaration of his title to the property leased, the foundation of the suit being surrender by the recorded tenant in favour of the landlord, it is for the plaintiff to prove the factum of surrender: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 38.

Where a lessee sought an injunction to restrain the Municipal Council from interfering in his possession of a tank within the Municipal area on the ground that it did not belong to the Council and was Government property vested in the Council for mere management and pisciulture, held, the burden lay on the lessee to prove his assertion; the original lease not having been produced, the lessee could not be said to have discharged his burden: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 41: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 356.

Surrender of lease by lessee by endorsement on lease deed itself—Suit by lessor for recovery of possession of land—Suit based on surrender—Surrender denied by lessee—Held, that burden to explain why lessee subscribed to endorsement, if he really did not surrender the property was on lessee: (1963) 76 Mad.L.W. 431: I.L.R. (1964) 1 Mad. 443: (1964) 2 M.L.J. 242.

In the absence of contract, lessor not bound to effect repairs to the property leased: A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 198.

66. Legislation—Challenge to.—Validity of enactments, see I.L.R. (1955) Mad. 887: (1954) 2 M.L.J. 475: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 993; I.L.R. 32 Pat. 1148: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 266.

The fundamental right of a citizen to carry on trade or business is not absolute but subject to reasonable restrictions in the interest of the general public; there is undoubtedly a presumption of constitutionality of legislations unless it is ex facie violative of a fundamental right and must be pronounced invalid unless shown by the State to be otherwise by bringing on record the relevant materials: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 412: 1972 B.L.J.R. 329 (D.B.).

When a citizen challenges a restriction/prohibition on the exercise of a fundamental right under Art. 19(1)(g) of the Constitution, the onus of proving its reasonability to the satisfaction of the Court lies upon the State or the authority concerned: A.I.R. 1995 Del. 17.

He who assails the reservation under Art. 16(4) of the Constitution must satisfactorily establish that there has been a violation of Art. 16(1): A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1777.

Whereas presumption of constitutionality will remain attached to a statute which has been challenged on the ground that it violates Art. 14 of the Constitution, and the burden to prove the contrary by pleading the necessary facts would be on the petitioner, the onus to prove that the restriction imposed on a fundamental right guaranteed to a citizen under Art. 19(1) is reasonable, will be on the State, once it is shown that the right has been taken away, or even abridged by the impugned legislation: A.I.R. 1983 J.&K. 100

The allegations regarding the violation of constitutional provision should be specific, clear and unambiguous and should give relevant particulars, and the burden is on the person who impeaches the law as violative of constitutional guarantee to show that the particular provision is infirm for all or any of the reasons stated by him. [A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 55, Foll.; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2138; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 583; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1781, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1340.

There is a presumption of constitutional validity of a statutory provision. Whoever assails the validity of any provision on the ground that it is violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution takes the burden of pleading by necessary averments and establishing that the classification is violative of Art. 14: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 362 (D.B.).

Defence of India (Part XII-A, Gold Control) Rules, 1962, are within rule making power conferred by S. 3(1)—Burden of proving invalidity of Rules—Lies on person who challenges their validity: A.I.R. 1970 Andh. Pra. 47 (D.B.).

Where the State of Uttar Pradesh demanded tax from sugar mills on their purchases of sugarcane at a rate regulated not by value but by weight and they impugned its validity, held, such litigants must produce the socio-economic bio-data of the impugned legislation, explaining the "how", "why" and "why not" of each clause lest lay minds legally attuned should miss the meaningful sound and social sense which the socio-economic experts might make audible and perceptible: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 286: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 223: (1980) 1 S.C.R. 769.

Legislation whether discriminatory—Burden of proof—Burden is on person challenging legislation as discriminatory: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 404: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1733.

67. Limitation.—The burden to prove that a suit is filed within the period of limitation is on the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1917 Mad. 930 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1993 J.&K. 14.

Where exclusion of time for reckoning limitation was sought on the ground that the plaintiff had been prosecuting in good faith another bona fide proceeding which plea was denied in the written statement and exclusion of time was opposed, held, the initial burden lay on the plaintiff to adduce sufficient evidence to establish his good faith—that is, his prosecuting those proceedings with "due care and attention"—the burden did not shift on the defendant to disprove the plaintiff's assertion. [A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 767, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 185.

Time requisite—Burden to show is on party who wants such time to be excluded: 1961 Raj.L.W. 521.

The burden of proving that a suit is barred under O. 2, R. 2, C.P.Code, is upon the defendant: 102 I.C. 31: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 840.

The onus lies on the creditor to prove that the acknowledgement to pay a money debt was made within time; and it would be contrary to the provisions of Ss. 101 to 104 to require that the burden lies on the defendant who acknowledged the liability: A.I.R. 1932 All. 199: I.L.R. 53 All. 963. Defendant thinking that suit is barred by limitation—It is for defendant to establish facts that support his plea: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 44. Burden of proof as to bar of limitation. See A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 126: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 321.

Where the plaint specifically alleged that the plaintiff was in prior possession but was dispossessed, held, the case is covered under Art. 142 of Limitation Act, 1908; the burden would lie on the plaintiff to prove his dispossession by the defendant within 12 years next before the suit's institution. [A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2537 A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1123, Foll.]: A.I.R 1984 Madh. Pra. 147.

Suit for damages for loss of goods—Burden is on defendant, who seeks to non-suit the plaintiff on the ground of limitation, to establish that the loss occurred beyond one year from the date of suit: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 526: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 168.

If a Mahomedan wife sues her husband for dower payable on demand within three years from the date of the demand, and the husband pleads divorce and communication of the divorce to the wife at a time more than three years before the suit, the onus is on him to prove what he alleges in order to defeat the claim on the ground of limitation: (1943) 45 Punj.L.R. 231: A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 215.

Allegation of fraud to save limitation—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 62.

Onus of proof in cases falling under Art. 142 of Limitation Act: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 60.

Exemption from limitation—Burden of proof that cause of action for suit was within twelve years of suit is on plaintiff: A.I.R. 1970 All. 289.

Burden of proving that his case comes within S. 14, Limitation Act is on the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 767; A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 319 (F.B.).

Under the Limitation Act, 1963 the burden lies on the defendant pleading adverse possession to prove the date when his possession became adverse to the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 482: (1971) 73 Punj.L.R. 224 (D.B.). See also Note 22, supra.

68. Maintenance.—In proceedings under S. 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 the presumption is that the wife is living with her husband to discharge her marital obligations; if the husband asserts that the wife is not doing that, the burden would lie upon him, if the wife disputes, to prove the same; but if the wife admits or it is proved that she is not living with him and claims maintenance, the burden lies on her to prove "just grounds" for not living with the husband: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 62 (Ker.).

Undue importance cannot be attached to the technicalities of the rules of pleadings and of burden of proof, in an application for maintenance under S. 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. No doubt, the wife is required to plead and prove that she was unable to maintain herself, but the rules of pleadings cannot be applied as strictly as in a civil suit and the evidence, if otherwise, available on the record, can very well be looked into to arrive at a just conclusion, without attaching undue importance to the question of burden of proof: 1984 Hindu L.R. 166 (Madh. Pra.).

Under Ss. 101 to 104, the plaintiff has to prove her case, but the proof which is demanded from the party is a proof which can be obtained by the plaintiff with reasonable care and diligence. In a suit for maintenance, the plaintiff is not supposed under S. 104 to prove a thing which, under the circumstances, is impossible for the plaintiff to prove, especially when the facts regarding the income are within the special knowledge of the defendant-husband. When the question regarding the proof of the income is to be determined, in such circumstances the plaintiff can only give the figure on guesswork and not the exact figure: A.I.R. 1985 Guj. 187: (1985-1) 26 Guj.L.R. 374: (1985) 2 Hindu L.R. 29.

Burden of proving "just ground" under S. 125(3), Cr.P.Code lies on wife: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1898 (Ker.).

Failure of able-bodied husband to maintain wife and children—It is for him to show that he is incapable of doing so: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1153: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 174.

In a petition for maintenance, it is not necessary for the wife to aver that she is unable to maintain herself; burden to prove contrary is on the husband: 1981 Raj.L.W. 477.

In a proceeding for maintenance under S. 125, Cr.P.Code, when the husband seeks to negative the claim of the neglected wife depicting her as a kept-mistress on the plea that he was already married, held, the burden is on the husband to satisfactorily prove the subsistence of a legal and valid marriage: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 380 (S.C.).

Hindu law—Wife's claim for separate maintenance—Unchastity—Plea of—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 766.

Though S. 20 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act purportedly preserves the child's right to maintenance, but casts an absolute duty on the parent to provide maintenance to the child, held, the burden would, thus, lie on the parent to prove that he was not amiss in performance and discharge, of his duty to maintain the child: A.I.R. 1986 Andh. Pra. 126: (1985) 1 An.L.T. 468 (D.B.).

69. Mala fide.—The burden of establishing mala fides is very heavy on the party alleging it; allegations of mala fides are more easily made than proved; the very seriousness of such allegations demands proof of a very high order of credibility. A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 555: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 3. Circumstances creating a suspicion are not enough. Merely flunging of series of charges of oblique conduct would not be sufficient to establish mala fides. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 555, Foll.]: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 111. Top administrators are often required to take steps in execution of their duties which are necessary but might affect others adversely; in the absence of the knowledge of full facts and surrounding circumstances, such acts might easily lend themselves to misconstruction and suspicion to the bona fides of their author. The Courts would be rather slow to draw dubious inferences from incomplete facts placed before them by a party, particularly when the allegations are grave and made against the holder of an office of high responsibility: (1991) 43 Del.L.T. 179 (D.B.).

Bad faith is a matter to be established by a party propounding bad faith and such a party has not only to allege the same but also to prove it: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 564. But such a burden does not require proof to the hilt but to render the same as reasonably probable being only for the purposes of finding whether or not there has been a valid exercise of the statutory power: A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 121 (D.B.).

The allegations of mala fides are very often made than proved and the burden of e stablishing mala fides is very heavy on the person who alleges it. The seriousness of such allegations demands proof of a high order of credibility. Where in the writ petition the petitioner alleged that the taking over of Industry by the Corporation by way of sale was the result of collusion between tne two, held, on facts, the petitioner was not able to prove the so called collusion between Corporation and opposite party and accordingly said assertion of the petitioner was negatived: A.I.R. 1985 Ori. 153 (D.B.).

Writ petition against State Government—Petitioner alleging mala fides against Minister—Return filed by Under Secretary, not on basis of personal knowledge but on basis of official records—Court will be justified in drawing inference in favour of petitioner's allegations in absence of Minister's affidavit controverting allegations: I.L.R. (1965) 2 Punj. 32: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 921: A.I.R. 1966 Punj. 16.

Where allegations of mala fides were made against the Excise Minister upon whom no notice under S. 80 of the C.P.Code had been served and no suit against him therefore, lay, held, mere allegation in the plaint was not enough to establish his mala fides; heavy onus lay on the plaintiff to establish; a mere assertion that he was not acting in his official capacity would be of no avail: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 128.

Mala fide—Onus—Transfer of shares—Directors power to refuse registration—Mala fides—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 709.

Plea of bias—Proof—Burden is on party setting up case of bias to prove same by cogent evidence: (1963) 3 S.C.R. 22: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1.

Burden of proof—Allegation of bias—Denial of charge of Authority: A.I.R. 1967 All. 378.

Burden to prove that the order of detention is mala fide is on the detenu and it is certainly a heavy burden to be discharged by him: A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 451.

Where a Deputy Superintendent of Police on probation not confirmed in due time moved the High Court by way of a writ petition as his further promotion was thereby adversely affected but during its pendency he was charge-sheeted and suspended and he impugned the same as mala fide actuated by his filing of the writ petition, held, that is too slender a basis to establish mala fides; the burden to prove it lies very heavy on the party alleging it; on facts found the proceedings were initiated long ago but the decision to charge-sheet and suspend was delayed due to proverbial slow pace of official machinery: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 158 (D.B.).

Requisition order under West Bengal Premises Requisition and Control (Temporary Provisions) Act whether mala fides. See A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 171: (1952-53) 57 Cal.W.N. 719.

An order of any executive authority, even within its jurisdiction will be quashed by the High Court if it is satisfied that the authority has not been exercised honestly, bona fidely, and reasonably. It will be an abuse of power indeed if the authority exercising such a power takes into account extraneous matters not pertaining to the object sought to be achieved by the exercise of the authority. The test in all such cases is as to what is the dominant purpose which can be said to have implied the action. If it is based on personal vendetta then the garb it is given is immaterial. The High Court has to go behind the order and ascertain if really the order sought to be challenged is the result of reasons not connected with the purpose desired to be attained. The burden of proof is on the petitioner who alleges mala fides and suspicion however strong, cannot take the place of proof. It is no doubt true that some time it is difficult to find out the motive of the authority passing an order but there must be sufficient objective data produced by the petitioner on which one can come to a reasonable

70. Malicious prosecution.—It is well settled that in an action for malicious prosecution the plaintiff has, inter alia, to prove that his prosecution resulted from the defendant's malicious intention and there was no reasonable and probable cause for the defendant to prosecute him; thus, absence of reasonable cause for the prosecution allows every aggrieved person to sue for damages with risk of no other liability except to pay costs if unsuccessful. It is also well settled that the burden to prove the absence of a reasonable and probable cause, though negative, lies on the plaintiff and even slight evidence thereof would discharge the onus; but malice by itself is not enough unless the want of reasonable and probable cause is also shown to exist though in rare cases the later may be inferred from the former. [A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 56 and A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 320, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 121: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 424: I.L.R. (1975) Cut. 594.

To succeed in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove that (i) he was prosecuted by the defendant; (ii) the proceedings complained of terminated in the plaintiff's favour; (iii) the prosecution was instituted without any reasonable and probable cause; (iv) it was due to a malicious intention of the defendant and not with a mere intention of carrying the law into effect; and (v) the plaintiff has suffered damages: 5 I.C. 50 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 329 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 347 (D.B.); 1970 Raj.L.W. 201; 1971 M.P.L.J. 266 (D.B.).

Malice in law—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 All. 671.

Malicious prosecution—Plaintiff has to prove malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause—Onus: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 131.

In a suit for malicious prosecution burden to prove want of reasonable and probable cause and malice is always on the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 32: A.I.R. 1954 Kutch 39; A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 242.

In case of a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, held, the burden lies on the plaintiff to prove that the defendant had no probable or reasonable cause for lodging the criminal complaint and that he was actuated by malice: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 369: 1977 Kash.L.J. 350; I.L.R. 25 Bom. 332 (P.C.).

Malicious prosecution—Ingredients of—Absence of reasonable and probable cause—Burden of proof: I.L.R. (1962) 14 Assam 470: A.I.R. 1962 Assam 129; 1965 All.L.J. 317.

Malicious prosecution—Suit for—Essentials to be proved—Burden to prove that prosecution was instituted without reasonable and probable cause with malicious intention lies upon plaintiff—Onus not shifted even where defendant purports to be an eyewitness to the offence alleged: I.L.R. 41 Pat. 369: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 478.

In a case for malicious prosecution, the absence of reasonable and probable cause, even though a negative assertion, has nevertheless to be proved as also the malice by the plaintiff; where the accusation was the commission of the offence in the presence of the defendant, the plaintiff can, and has to discharge the burden by examining himself on oath and denying the occurrence supported by other corroborative evidence; irrespective of the worth of his evidence, the evidence of his mere denial of the occurrence would not shift the burden on the defendant to prove the occurrence as alleged by him; if the plaintiff proves the negative and the defendant fails to prove the positive, malice and want of reasonable and probable cause would stand established. When evidence about the occurrence is adduced by both sides, the question of burden would become irrelevant: A.I.R. 1971 All. 109: 1970 All.L.J. 1260.

71. Marriage.—(See also Note 56, supra). It is well settled that where a marriage was in fact performed, necessary ceremonies therefor would be presumed to have been duly performed; it is for the party challenging its validity to rebut the presumption by evidence that the form of marriage in some respect or the other is invalid; the witnesses to the marriage are not required to prove all the details which taken together constitute a valid Hindu marriage. [(1911) I.L.R. 38 Cal. 700 (P.C.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 107: (1973) 2 Cut.W.R. 1108. See also A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 51.

Normally, when a person sets up a marriage between him and another, it would necessarily connote that he is pleading the existence of a valid marriage. Therefore, every circumstance which would render it other than valid will have to be shown not to exist. This may appear to be a right rule though it is often a fairly workable rule. Even if one does not go to this extent it is safe to hold that only in a case where evidence goes to show that a marriage has in fact taken place but a party challenges that marriage on the ground of some alleged infirmity attaching to it that he can be called upon to establish his imputation of infirmity. But this rule cannot apply to a case where even the first step, namely, the proof of the factum of marriage is not satisfied. Where the parties are Indian Christians governed by the Christian Marriage Act, the party setting up marriage has to prove factum of marriage in conformity with the provisions of the Act: (1964) 2 An.W.R. 136.

Normally, a marriage should be presumed to be legitimate rather than illegitimate. That is the normal approach. However, it must be admitted that the Hindu Marriage Act has introduced a special provision making second marriages in the presence of the first married spouse after the commencement of the Act to be void. In other words, bigamy has been prohibited amongst the Hindus after the enforcement of the said Act. It should also be admitted that the date of marriage is within the special knowledge of the parties concerned. Therefore, the burden to prove such date should be upon the party concerned.

The Court is not entitled to assume that the second wife must have been married after the enforcement of the said Act. The burden is upon the petitioner to establish that the second marriage took place before the enforcement of Hindu Marriage Act, 1955: 1980 All.W.C. 369.

Marriage is both a sacrament as well as civil contract; it is a simple contract requiring no high degree of intelligence to comprehend; the simple test is whether a party to the marriage was capable of understanding the nature of the contract or whether his mental condition had rendered him incapable of doing so; the spouses must be able to comprehend the significance of marital promises and vows; there being a strong presumption that such consent was given, a heavier burden lies on the spouses to prove want of consent in the marriage than in a mere commercial contract; it has to be established that due to mental disorder, the other spouse was unable to know the nature and consequence of the marriage; a mere weakness of intellect, mild mental retardation or phychic inability is wholly inadequate a ground to annul a marriage for want of consent: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 96: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 12: (1987) 2 Ker.L.T. 582 (D.B.).

Marriage—Presumption as to formalities and ceremonies—Burden of proof in rebuttal: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 508.

Marriage—Onus. See A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 17. In spite of presumption of marriage arising from long co-habitation the burden of proof of marriage actually lies with the person who desires to prove it: 1945 Nag.L.J. 489.

The burden would lie on any party who asserts, that any rules, rites, ceremonies and customs were not observed, to prove not only the omission but also that such rules, rites, ceremonies or customs were absolutely essential and indispensable in the sense that on account of their not being duly performed, the marriage itself was void: I.L.R. 56 All. 428: A.I.R. 1934 All. 273.

Law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage and on him who challenges the legitimacy must be thrown the burden of proving it. Thus, where a party admits the paternity of the other party but pleads that he is of illegitimate descent, the legal presumption being in favour of legitimacy, the onus lies on the party alleging illegitimacy to prove it: 1957 M.P.L.J. 481: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 174; A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 135.

The burden to prove both the marriages as ingredients of the offence under S. 495 of the Indian Penal Code certainly lies on the prosecution: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 1145.

When a man and a woman live together as husband and wife for sufficiently long time and were treated as husband and wife for sufficiently long time by friends, relatives and neighbours, there is always a presumption in favour of their marriage. If children are born to such a couple, there is a further presumption in favour of their legitimacy. The presumption in favour of marriage does not get mitigated or weakened merely because there may not be positive evidence of any marriage having taken place. Though marriage ceremony said to have taken place may not be valid, the marriage can be held to be valid by force of habit and repute and the onus of rebutting such a marriage would be on the person who denies the marriage and the presumption of law in favour of marriage and legitimacy is not to be repelled lightly by mere balance of probability. The evidence for that should be strong, satisfactory and conclusive. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 231; A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1557; A.I.R. 1984 Bom. 229; A.I.R. 1972 Ori. 143, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 27: 1986 Mah.L.J. 186: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 29: 1986 Mah.L.R. 864: (1986) 2 Bom.C.R. 146: I.L.R. (1986) Bom. 1281; A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 40 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 341.

Where a presumption of a legal and valid marriage arises in view of cohabitation between the parties for a long time, held, the party who wants to rebut that presumption has the burden to prove that contention and not the other party in whose favour such presumption arises: A.I.R. 1994 Karn. 247 (D.B.).

Where a Christian male sought a declaration that a Christian female and her son were not his wife and son, respectively as the marriage was never solemnised nor did they ever cohabitate and no marriage was admittedly solemnised in a Church, held, the woman's plea that the agreement of marriage was registered before the Sub-Registrar and marriage was solemnised by exchange of rings and garlands in his presence did not amount to a valid marriage between them as it did not satisfy the requirement of S. 5(4) of the Indian Christian Marriage Act, 1872 unless it was shown that the Sub-Registrar was a Christian and was appointed as a Marriage Officer under S. 7 of that Act; the burden of proof not discharged by the woman: (1988-1) 101 Mad.L.W. 76.

Where on the question as to whether there was in existence a valid and legal marriage, both the parties had adduced evidence, held the Court would have to decide the question on the basis of the evidence placed before it and not merely on the question of burden of proof as the burden of proof became an academic question in view of the fact that both sides had led in evidence. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 31, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1994 Karn. 247 (D.B.).

Where the parties have been examined by the Court and issues have been framed, the onus probandi, sometimes called the right to begin, would vest in the party which would fail if no evidence was adduced; when evidence of both sides has been recorded, the second stage arises where the Court has to decide where the burden of proof lay. Thus, where the evidence showed that the husband did not disclaim the wife, children had been born to them and they had cohabited and accepted as spouses by the society, for well over 30 years with the knowledge of her divorce, held, there is a strong presumption of marriage in her favour; the husband's plea of invalidity of marriage on the ground that her earlier divorce was illegal was raised for the first time in his written statement; she could not be expected or called upon to prove the validity of her more than 30 years old divorce, the burden lay on him to prove the invalidity which he failed to discharge: 1981 Hindu L.R. 211: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 887 (D.B.).

A husband seeking annulment of his marriage on the ground that his wife's marriage with another person was subsisting and continued to subsist till his marriage sought to be annulled, held, must prove the same by adducing clear and cogent evidence; evidence creating mere suspicion is no proof: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 223 (P.&H.).

Where the first wife seeks a declaration of the nullity of her husband's second marriage with another woman, held, though the burden to prove the second marriage would rest on the first wife, the standard of proof was not required to be beyond all reasonable doubt; and the decision had to be taken on preponderance of probabilities: A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 51.

Where a wife suing for divorce on the ground of her husband having contracted a second marriage who emphatically denied it but the wife nevertheless adduced no evidence of the performance of the ceremonies of the second marriage, held, even a marriage with the second wife has to be proved as a fact like any other marriage; the burden of proof lay on the wife; the trial Court erred in decreeing divorce: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 36 (Pat.).

A married woman started living with another married man and her husband was said to have observed her funeral and proclaimed her dead. Claiming to have been married to her paramour at a temple, she sought a succession certificate in respect of the debts left behind by her paramour upon his death. In support of her marriage she did not examine any body to prove her second marriage nor the register of marriage at the temple. The only evidence she adduced was their application before the Mukti Mandep Sabha, the receipt granted by the Sabha and the entry in the marriage register, but none of them was proved. Held, her marriage with her paramour was not proved; besides, in the absence of any proof of her first husband having divorced her or having died, the second marriage, even if solemnised, was invalid: 1981 Hindu L.R. 636: (1981) 51 Cut.L.T. 513.

72. Mesne profits.—(See also S. 106, Note 10, infra). The burden of proof, as a matter of law, in an application for ascertainment of mesne profits as in any other case, lies on the plaintiff who substantially asserts that he is entitled to mesne profits. The burden of proof as a matter of adducing evidence (onus of proof) shifts from one party to other depending upon the weight of evidence adduced. If so, the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff who seeks to claim mesne profits. The onus of proving the amount actually received lies on the defendant as that matter is within his knowledge. But even in case of profits that the defendant might have received, though initially the onus might lie on the plaintiff, it may shift to the defendant if the former, has adduced some evidence direct or circumstantial, raising a presumption in his favour. But the question of burden of proof becomes immaterial if both parties have adduced evidence and the Court is called upon to ascertain profits on the basis of the evidence so adduced. Under O. 26, Rr. 9 and 10, Cr.P.Code, Commissioner can be appointed by a Court directing him to make a local investigation for purposes of ascertaining the amount of mesne profits. The report of the Commissioner and the evidence taken by him are evidence in the suit. Any party to the suit may examine the Commissioner in Court upon any of the matters referred to by him. But the information gathered by him behind the back of the parties is not evidence in the case: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 427: 1958 An.L.T. 19: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 64.

The burden of proving the profits actually received is on the person who received them (S. 106) but the burden of proving the profits that the person in occupation might have received is on the person who claims them: A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 145; A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 387; A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 69.

In a suit for partition and mesne profits the burden of proof in regard to the rate of mesne profits is upon the plaintiffs: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 301.

73. Minority.—(See also Note 47, supra). It is for the party pleading minority to make out his case before the adverse party can be required to rebut it: A.I.R. 1917 Mad. 535; A.I.R. 1920 Nag. 245.

Where the alienation is challenged on the ground of alienee's minority, the party asserting minority must prove it: A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 35; A.I.R. 1919 Oudh 261 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 75; A.I.R. 1934 All. 406 (F.B.).

Where the executant, who is a minor, represented himself to be a major at the execution, and subsequently, sets up a plea of minority, held, the burden of proof is very heavy on him: A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 152.

The burden of proving that a Mahommedan girl attained majority either by completing her fifteenth year or by reaching state of puberty at an earlier period, rests upon the person who so alleges: A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 250.

74. Misrepresentation.—See Notes 47 and 48, supra.

75. Money-lending.—"Money-lender in regular course of business"—Proof—Onus on defendant—Discharge of onus—Party can rely upon opponent's evidence in support of his defence—Positive evidence on his side not always necessary: 29 Cut.L.T. 495.

Where the plaintiff suing on a mortgage bond did not plead that he was not a professional money lender and the loans on the bond were only casually advanced to the defendant, held, it could not be said that the plaintiff had discharged the "burden of proof" as a matter of law and pleading; the evidence adduced by him that loans were only casually advanced could not be looked into; the burden of adducing evidence to the contrary did not shift on to the defendants; the suit was barred under S. 4 of the Bihar Money Lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1474; A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 294 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 103 (D.B.).

76. Mortgage.—(See also Note 36, supra). In a suit for declaration of title based on an irredeemable mortgage amounting to sale (chora othi) the burden lies on the plaintiff to plead and prove execution of the mortgage and its date and also, if an acknowledgment is pleaded for extension of limitation, that such acknowledgment pertained to the suit deed and was made within the prescribed period of limitation. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 935, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Mad. 142: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 683 (D.B.).

Where a mortgagor sues for possession of the property mortgaged but afterwards sold by the mortgagee for valuable consideration, the period of limitation under S. 61(b) of the Limitation Act is 12 years reckoned from the date the mortgagor acquired the knowledge of such transfer; the burden lies on the mortgagor to prove the date on which he acquired the knowledge. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1474; A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 322 and (1970) 1 M.L.J. 132 and A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 185, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 34: (1976) 89 Mad.L.W. 462: (1976) 2 M.L.J. 161.

Where the defendants prove that the property purported to be mortgaged did not exist, it is for the plaintiffs to prove that the entry in the deed was not fictitious and that it was a mistake: A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 67.

In a case where there is a simple mortgage-deed, when a party claims that the mortgaged properties were handed over as per an oral agreement with the direction that the income was to be adjusted towards interest, the burden is heavily on him to prove the same: I.L.R. (1956) Trav.-Co. 1130.

Where a deed contained all the terms contained in a sale deed besides the condition that on the executant paying Rs. 1,000, the consideration for the transaction within two years, the vendee would reconvey the property to the executant, held, the transaction is covered by S. 58(c) of the Transfer of Property Act, it will be a mortgage by sale only; the burden would lie on the party asserting it to be otherwise to prove, either from its language or attendant circumstances, that it was intended to be an outright sale; the party may do so by two means: (1) by express words employed in the deed which indicate that it meant to be of outright sale; and (2) by establishing attendant circumstances necessarily leading to the inference that it was only an outright sale. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 345, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1978 Mad. 75: (1976) 89 Mad.L.W. 364.

Where the contention was that the mortgagee had created the sub-mortgage with notice to the mortgagor, held, the onus to prove the contention lies on the party which asserts the positive: A.I.R. 1989 Ker. 163: (1989) 1 Ker.L.T. 63: (1988) 2 Ker.L.J. 805.

Presumption as to consideration of negotiable instrument — Rebuttal of — Onus: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 500.

As soon as the execution is proved, S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act imposes a duty on the Court to raise a presumption in his favour that the said instrument was made for consideration. This presumption shifts the burden of proof in the second sense, that is, the burden of establishing a case shifts to the defendant. The defendant may adduce direct evidence to prove that the promissory note was not supported by consideration, and if, he adduced acceptable evidence, the burden again shifts to the plaintiff and so on. The defendant may also rely upon circumstantial evidence and if the circumstances so relied upon are compelling, the burden may likewise shift again to the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1316.

Promissory note executed by A—Burden of proving that no consideration passed under it is on A who denies it—Admission by A in another deed that he had received the amount of the promissory note—Burden is on A to prove that the admission was made under a mistake and is not true: (1954) 1 M.L.J. 622: 1954 S.C.R. 919: I.L.R. 33 Pat. 313: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 316.

Since there is a presumption under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 that a negotiable instrument drawn and delivered was for consideration, held, the burden to prove that there was no consideration lies on the party denying consideration: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 39 (Cal.).

In case where dishonour of cheques takes place, the onus to prove that they were issued under mistake of fact and misrepresentation and by an incompetent person is on the defendant: A.I.R. 1981 J.&K. 64: 1981 Kash.L.J. 301.

Suit on promissory note—Denial of consideration and execution by defendant—Allegation that he had entrusted to plaintiff blank paper bearing his thumb-impression and signature—Presumption and burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 63.

Where the date on the pronote was apparently written by an ink other than that used in its body, which was found to be a subsequent introduction in the note, held, the burden to prove that the date was not so subsequently added to the note, would lie on the person in whose custody the note remained after it had been executed. [A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 267, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1986 Andh. Pra. 120.

A suit was filed under O. 21, R. 63, C.P.Code, to set aside the order rejecting a claim for the raising of an attachment on the ground that the attached property belonged to the claimant-plaintiff by virtue of a sale deed by the judgment-debtor and was in his possession. The debts which were the consideration for the sale deed, as stated on the face of it, were a promissory note for a certain sum, certain costs and certain interest amounting to about Rs. 10,000 and the promissory note was produced. The only ground on which the defendant sought to justify the dismissal of the suit was that some weeks before the conveyance of the property, to the plaintiff, the judgment-debtor had received a sum of Rs. 30,000 in cash and that in those circumstances it must be presumed that the debts which the judgment-debtor owed to the plaintiff and for which the sale deed was executed were discharged by the judgment-debtor out of this amount. Held, that the promissory note having been produced, there was prima facie evidence on the part of the plaintiff that the consideration had really passed, as stated in the deed. In those circumstances, the burden was on the defendant to prove that the suggested discharge had taken place and not on the plaintiff to prove that it had not taken place: (1946-47) 51 Cal.W.N. 850: A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 98: (1947) 2 M.L.J. 54 (P.C.).

Pronote reciting consideration as Rs. 600 in figures and Rs. 300 in words—Defendant alleging receipt of only Rs. 300—Onus. See 1960 Nag.L.J. (Notes) 35.

Mere execution of a document does not prove that it was for consideration. If the document is a promissory note there is a statutory presumption that the amount mentioned in it is given for consideration; but, when the document is a bond and its execution is proved, the onus no doubt lies on the defendants to show that it was without consideration. Still, if they succeed in establishing a probability that the debt was not due or that consideration did not pass, the onus shifts to the plaintiff and he has to prove fully that consideration did pass: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 707: A.I.R. 1957 Hyd. 18.

Negotiable instrument—Suit based on handnote—Endorsement portion of handnote below the stamp and upto the date written in the pen of defendants—It is a negotiable instrument—Circumstance that body portion is not in the pen of defendants does not make any difference—Presumption will arise that it was made or drawn for consideration—Burden lies on defendants to rebut that presumption: I.L.R. 47 Pat. 846: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 26: A.I.R. 1969 Pat. 215.

78. Notice.—(See also Note 43, supra). Once the defendant admits to have received the notice under S. 80, C.P. Code, 1908, the onus which lay on the plaintiff to prove that he has given requisite notice, shifts to the defendant and if he alleges that the notice is not in accordance with S. 80, it is for him to produce the notice and show to the Court that it does not fulfil the requirements of law. It is for the defendant to produce notice received by him, before the Court. The contents of the notice cannot be proved by oral evidence in view of S. 92. The onus being on the defendant to produce the notice, the notice cannot be rendered invalid only because the plaintiff fails to produce a copy of it or on the basis of oral statement made by him: A.I.R. 1968 All. 321.

In a suit to cancel a sale for arrears of revenue, onus of showing that there has been an irregularity and illegality in the preparation and service of notice rests on the person who seeks to have the sale set aside: (1901-2) 6 Cal.W.N. 688. See also (1905-6) 10 Cal.W.N. 137. Co-operative Societies Act having been served on the Registrar of Co-operative Societies and the preliminary objection to the maintainability of the suit for want of notice was taken, held, it was for the plaintiff to prove that the notice as required under the Act was served: A.I.R. 1992 Him. Pra. 34.

Notices sent by registered post to lessee on the addresses as mentioned in lease-deed—Presumption of effective service—Onus shifts on lessee to prove non-service: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 63.

79. Official acts.—(See also Notes under S. 114). Where a party challenged the grant of land by the Tehsildar, an official act, held, there is a presumption that he did so in accordance with proper procedure; obviously, the burden is on the party to call for necessary records, implead the Tehsildar in the suit and show that the procedure followed by the Tehsildar was vitiated by want of notice or violation of the principles of natural justice: A.I.R. 1984 Karn. 45: (1983) 2 Karn.L.J. 409.

80. Pardanashin ladies.—(See also Notes 31 and 48, supra). The expression "pardanashin" has not to be confused with a lady observing parda. A lady observing parda may not be a pardanashin lady in the legal sense of the term. The term "pardanashin lady" is not a term of art. It has special significance as one who is unable to understand the transaction by virtue of the manner in which she has been brought up: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 325: 1972 B.L.J.R. 842 (D.B.).

The pardah system as understood by Indian Courts is not the practice of keeping women under veil indoors in the zenana but in seclusion away from the knowledge of the world; they are not ordinarily allowed to interact with males and have no social intercourse and communion with the outside world; they may not be illiterate but may still be ignorant because of their imperfect knowledge of the world. Therefore, the rules regarding transactions by the pardanashins apply equally to illiterate women though not pardanashin in the strict sense; the illiterate women who under social compulsion move out to work for livelihood in the fields or elsewhere and are not thus disabled and deprived yet they will not know the contents, character and effect of the deed and have to be presumed to be ignorant thereof by sheer ignorance; the burden of proof in respect of deeds allegedly executed by them would rest not on those who attach it but on those who base their claim on the deed to establish affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was executed after it had been explained and really understood by the executrix who signed it not under duress but of her own free volition. [A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 309, Rel. on]: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 535: (1993-1) 111 Mad.L.W. 466 (D.B.).

Law gives special protection to pardanshin ladies due to social conditions of the time; they are presumed to have imperfect knowledge; if a document has been taken from them, the Court has to ascertain whether the executrix was a free agent and duly informed about the nature of the document; the normal presumption that a person affixing his name to a document knows about its contents does not apply to pardanshin ladies. It is well settled that the burden of proof always rests upon the person who seeks to sustain a transaction with a pardanashin lady to establish that she had executed the deed after having carefully understood its nature and it was not only her physical but also mental act; this special burden can be discharged by proving that the deed was explained to, and understood by, her but also by other direct and circumstantial evidence. This special rule for protection of pardanashin ladies should not be confused with the other doctrine of fraud, duress and undue influence applicable to all persons, whether pardanashin ladies or others: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 257: 1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 605.

In the case of document executed by a pardanashin woman it is not enough to prove mere execution by her but it is further necessary to prove that she understood what she was doing. It is, therefore, for the person who desires to rely on and take advantage of such document to establish that the document in question was not only duly executed by the pardanashin woman but it was her mental act, that is, she executed it with a full understanding as to its contents and legal effect. And once the due execution of the document as being the intelligent act of the said woman is established, the onus then will be on the other person to establish all those circumstances which would destroy its binding nature on him before he can ask the Court to ignore it: A.I.R. 1964 All. 53.

In case of documents taken from pardanashin woman, the Court has to ascertain that the party executing them has been a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. The reason for the rule is that the ordinary presumption that the person understands the document to which he has affixed his name does not apply in the case of a pardanashin woman: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 469.

Though ordinarily the burden is on the person impeaching the document, but in case of a pardanashin, illiterate old lady, the burden would lie on the beneficiary under the document to prove that she had executed the document after understanding its import with independent advice and after it was read over and explained to her; the execution by her should not only be a physical but also a mental act: A.I.R. 1990 Ori. 64; A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 53 (D.B.); (1975) 41 Cut.l.T. 506: (1975) 1 Cut.W.R. 292; (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 762. But this is not an absolute and invariable rule like when she is shown to have business capacity and strength of will and the deed in the circumstances is not an unnatural disposition of her property; the burden will then be on the lady if she attacks the document to prove her plea by evidence. Thus, where a pardanashin lady continued to stay with her husband in the house but the entire landed properties and the homestead was conveyed under a gift deed purportedly executed by her, held, indication being that she was not aware of the deed's contents, she was being deprived of her entire properties, the burden lay on the beneficiary to prove due execution of a valid gift deed: A.I.R. 1991 Ori. 125: (1990) 70 Cut.L.T. 579.

The burden of proof shall always rest upon the person who seeks to sustain a transaction entered into with a pardanashin lady to establish that the said document was entered into by her after clearly understanding the nature of transaction. But this rule cannot be extended to an ignorant and illiterate woman also. Further, aforesaid rule should not be confused with other doctrine, such as, fraud, duress and actual undue influence which apply to all persons whether they be pardanashin ladies or not; in such cases, the burden of proof will lie on the person who says that he/she was subjected to fraud, duress or actual undue influence. [A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 306; A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1203, Rel. on]: (1986) 34 B.L.J.R. 319 (D.B.).

Where the plaintiff alleges that the document was executed by a paradanashin lady but the defendant is able to prove that notwithstanding such an allegation in the plaint, the lady could not be deemed to be a pardanashin lady, the legal protection to the lady in such a case would vanish. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1203, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 325: 1972 B.L.J.R. 842 (D.B.).

Women in India being pardanashin in some parts and some communities and illiterate in most parts have to transact their business generally through men and live a life dominated by men even though law recognises their independent rights; the curse of male dominance has always invariably stood in the way of women exercising their legal rights; the Courts in India accept that onus lies upon the other party to show that a transaction entered into by such woman was not tainted by fraud, undue influence or coercions and that they were fully and faithfully informed about the contents of the deed before it was executed: (1992-2) 110 Mad.L.W. 209: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 259 (D.B.).

In India pardanashin ladies have been given a special protection. As regards documents taken from pardanashin woman the Court has to ascertain that the party executing them has been a free agent and duly informed of what she was about. The burden of proof shall always rest upon the person who seeks to sustain a transaction entered into with a pardanashin lady to establish that the said document was entered into by her after clearly understanding the nature of the transaction. The burden can be discharged not only by proving that the document was explained to her and that she understood it but also by other evidence, direct and circumstantial. The rule evolved for the protection of pardanashin ladies should not be confused with other doctrine such as fraud, duress and actual undue influence, which apply to all persons whether they be pardanashin ladies or not: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 134: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 456: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1203; (1966) 8 Ori.J.D. 94; I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 554: (1963) 5 Ori.J.D. 274.

Those who want to take advantage of a document executed by a pardanashin lady must prove that she knew its contents and executed it with full knowledge of its effects and consequences and that she had independent advice in the matter. In such a case the burden is always, in the first instance, on the person founding on that document to show that the grantor intelligently understood the deed, and if they fail to establish that point, then the document is not binding on the executant or anyone else and is void ab initio: 1965 B.L.J.R. 800: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 110. See also A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 207.

The burden of proof is always on the person who seeks to sustain a transaction entered into with a pardanashin lady or an illiterate person to establish that the said document was executed by them after clearly understanding the nature of the transaction, and unless that burden is discharged the physical act of signing the document cannot be treated as the mental act of its author. The onus is heavy on the propounder to prove that the will was executed by the testator voluntarily with his free will and mind. [A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 178; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 354; A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 567; A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 443, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 161: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 644. See also (1900-1) 5 Cal.W.N. 505 (S.B.).

In order to show that execution is the mental act of the executant of a document, it has to be established that she was aware of the consequences of the transaction. In a case where the executant was being deprived of her entire property, this requirement is all the more necessary, and the burden of leading evidence to sustain the transaction becomes heavier: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 282.

In case of dispute as to whether a particular document executed by pardanashin or illiterate woman disposing her property was executed by her knowing the contents thereof and whether such document was read over and explained to her, held, onus to prove that it was so read over and explained to the executant lies on the person who supports such disposition of property. [A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 303; A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1203, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 Cal. 316 (D.B.).

The protection under S. 104 in respect of a document alleged to have been executed by a pardanashin lady is also extended to an old and illiterate woman. In view of this protection onus to prove due execution of a document would lie on the person who seeks to rely on it for his claim and he must prove that

(1) she knew of its contents, and (2) she executed it with full knowledge of its effect and consequences: 1984 Raj.L.W. 343; 1984 All.W.C. (Supp.) 305.

Where it was found that the woman executing the sale deed and suing for its cancellation was not only of advanced age but also an illiterate rustic village woman with a very weak eye-sight, held, she is entitled to the protection law accorded to pardanashin ladies; such protection necessarily arises from old age, infirmity, ignorance, illiteracy, mental deficiency, inexperience and dependence on others. [1965 All.L.J. 1080, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 All. 222; 1981 All.L.J. (N.O.C.) 153.

Pardanashin lady—Mortgage by—Suit to enforce—Burden of proof—Proof of independent advise: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 62. See also A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 38. (The general rule is that in some exceptional cases the Courts will demand affirmative proof on the subject of the lady's intelligent understanding and execution of a deed and will not readily hold this onus to have been discharged where it is not shown that the lady had any independent advise).

Mortgage-deed—Mortgage executed by pardanashin lady—Burden lies on mortgagee to prove that deed was explained to her before she put her signature and that she became a willing partner of the document after understanding the nature and character of the document: A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 178.

Pardanashin lady—Person in position of her guru acting as her manager—When can claim adverse possession against her—Documents signed by her accepting maintenance and receipts—Evidence value—Burden of proof: 32 Cut.L.T. 343.

Where the defendant in unequivocal terms denied in the written statement the plaintiff's claim of being a pardanashin lady as false but there was no specific denial in reply to the para in the plaint where such claim was raised, held, it clearly amounted to an implied refutation of the plaintiff's claim of being pardanashin; the burden remained on the plaintiff to prove her claim: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 161: 1981 Pat.L.J.R. 244: 1981 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 208: 1981 B.L.J.R. 599 (D.B.).

Where executant of a sale deed is an illiterate pardanashin woman, it must be proved that she executed the same after clearly understanding the contents and the nature of the transaction effected by the document. In the absence of certificate to the effect that the plaintiff (pardanashin) executed the said deed after understanding the contents of the same, when it is merely stated therein that the said deed was read over and explained to her, but it is not stated by the scribe of the deed, that the contents of the deed were understood by the executant and after understanding the same she executed the said deed, that is not sufficient: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 978; (1977) 44 Cut.L.T. 26.

81. Partnership.—Partnership prima facie legal—Suit by partner for dissolution and accounts—Illegality of partnership alleged by defendant—It is for defendant to establish illegality. See A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 1074; A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 98 (D.B.). See also I.L.R. (1970) 2 Del. 384 (It is the managing partner who has authority to borrow money for firm's business—To prove otherwise is on the other partners); A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 235 (D.B.).

Whether or not the new firm, reconstituted on admission of a new partner, becomes liable to existing creditor, has to be determined in the light of the question whether new firm has assumed liability to pay the debt and whether the creditor agreed to accept the new firm as his debtor and to discharge the old firm from its liability: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 8 (D.B.).

The admission of a minor to the benefit of partnership must be proved and cannot be implied: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 138.

Question whether creditor of a firm had notice of dissolution of firm by retirement of one of partners from it is one of fact and onus of proving it, is on partner who alleges that he has retired: A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 14.

Mere cessation of business does not bring about a dissolution of a firm. It has to be specifically pleaded and proved: I.L.R. (1978) 2 Cut. 391 (D.B.).

Since the plaintiff has come forward with a definite case that the partnership was dissolved on the date mentioned by him, the burden is upon him to establish that fact. This is so not by virtue of S. 109 of the Evidence Act but of the rule that the plaintiff must establish every fact on which he relies and which is relevant in order to entitle him to the relief claimed, unless such fact is admitted by the defendants. Therefore, it is not necessary for the defendants to establish that the partnership was dissolved much earlier unless and until the plaintiff discharged the burden which lay upon him by adducing prima facie evidence and that evidence is accepted by the Court: (1958) 60 Bom.L.R. 203: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 29: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 528.

The onus to prove that the restrictions imposed in an agreement in restraint of trade are reasonable, is on the party which pleads them to be reasonable; thus, on the defendant challenging a clause in the dissolution deed as being in restraint of trade, held, the onus would lie upon the plaintiff to prove that the restraint was reasonably necessary to protect his interests. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1098, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1980 Raj. 155: 1980 Raj.L.W. 306: 1980 W.L.N. 200 (D.B.).

In a prosecution against partnership firm for offences under the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940, it is the complainant (Drug Inspector), who has to discharge the initial burden of proving that the accused partners were in overall control of the business: 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 271.

82. Paternity.—(See also Notes under S. 112, infra). If a child is in possession of filiation acknowledged by the parents and has repute in the society, legitimacy should be presumed and if anybody challenges such legitimacy of the child, the onus is upon him to prove that the child is illegitimate. [A.I.R. 1918 Oudh 103; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 733 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 135; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 520, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 3 (D.B.).

In view of S. 112, there is a presumption regarding legitimacy of a child born during the continuance of a valid marriage, the burden for proving non-access is on the husband who so alleges: 1982 Hindu L.R. 304 (Raj.).

Pre-nuptial pregnancy of wife—Evidence of paternity—Nature of onus on husband: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 105.

Illegitimate children—Proof of their paternity—Extract from birth register—Probative value of—Information for record in birth register supplied by mother—Not binding on presumed father—Presumption of law as to paternity—Burden of proof as to paternity in such case: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 107: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 437 (2): A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 141.

If a person claimed to be a preferential heir to the estate of the deceased, over another person, on the ground that the latter was illegitimate, the former must adduce "sufficient general evidence" of illegitimacy so as to throw the onus on the latter of proving his legitimacy: I.L.R. (1960) Cut. 230.

Where the lower authority dismissed a claim on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to discharge his duty of proving that the person concerned was not born to his purported mother who in her turn was not born to her own purported parents, held, the authority had certainly misplaced the burden of proof because negative aspects cannot be proved conclusively; rather both the parties should have been asked to prove as to who were the parents of the persons concerned and to base its conclusion after appraising the weight and credibility of their respective proofs; the misplaced burden of proof has resulted in biased findings which are perverse and vitiated. Case remanded: 1981 R.D. 45: 1981 All.W.C. 19 (Rev.).

Where a daughter claimed as a sole surviving heir of her father who had died intestate but the opposite party pleaded her to be an illegitimate child as her parents had not been married together, held, the burden conclusively lay on the opposite party to prove that there was no valid marriage between her parents and she was illegitimate; presumption under S. 114 also supports such view. [A.I.R. 1918 Oudh 103; A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 174, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Bom. 229: 1984 Mah.L.J. 345: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 356.

Though the defendants had not succeeded in establishing their case that the plaintiff was the daughter of one J, the onus that lay on the plaintiff to prove that she was the daughter of K could not, for that reason, be held to have been discharged: 19 Cut.L.T. 316: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 40.

Suit for declaration that plaintiff being mother of deceased, is entitled to his share—Denial of relationship by defendant—Allocation of onus on defendant by trial Court—Amounts to error of procedure—Revision maintainable: 1968 Cur.L.J. 554 (Punj.).

Where in a suit for possession, the plaintiff bases her claim on the fact that she was the daughter of the last male holder, she has to prove that fact by cogent evidence and in doing so, she cannot take advantage of the failure of the defendant to prove his case: 1958 B.L.J.R. 475: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 600.

83. Payment.—Though it is true that the burden of proving payment is upon the person alleging the payment, in a case in which the claimant himself realises the rents due to his co-debtors, it is for the claimant to prove what he has realised and thus to show that the amount claimed by him as being due to him from the debtors is still due and has not been realised. The burden of proof in such a case is upon the claimant and not upon the debtors and if the burden is not discharged the law will presume that the amount claimed has been paid off: A.I.R. 1952 All. 353.

Where in a suit for recovery of a deposit, the defendant pleads payment, held, the burden would lie on the defendant to prove the payment: A.I.R. 1972 Cal. 393: I.L.R. (1972) 2 Cal. 104 (D.B.). But see (1931) 32 Punj.L.R. 407 (D.B.), cited under Note 5, supra.

Suit for recovery of amount borrowed—Burden of proving repayment is on loanee: 1969 M.P.W.R. 480: 1969 M.P.L.J. 323; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 48.

Appropriation—Normally payment is towards interest—Debtor must show agreement that payment would be appropriated towards principal: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 161: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 523.

84. Personal law.—A Hindu is governed in India by his personal law; he carries it with him wherever he goes. However, prima facie, it is the personal law of the region which governs him. The burden is, therefore, on him to prove that he had come from a different region where he was governed by a different law and/or special custom prior to his migration. It is then for the other party to prove that the immigrant had renounced the law prevailing in the place of his origin and had adopted the law of the region to which he had migrated; the onus, therefore, would lie on the person so alleging: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 306 (S.C.); A.I.R. 1973 Pat. 160. See also A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 101; A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 79 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1957 J.&K. 3; (1868) 1 Beng.L.R. 26 (P.C.).

85. Possession.—(See also Notes 22, 43 and 101). "Possession"—Meaning of—Connotes conscious and voluntary act—Incriminating article recovered from Kotha of house—House in occupation of more than one member of family—Possession of individual member is question of fact and not of presumption—Burden of proof is on prosecution: 1964 All.L.J. 562.

Objector obstructing auction-purchaser's possession claiming to be in possession of disputed house or portion thereof on his own account—Burden of proof is on objector: A.I.R. 1964 All. 302.

Where in a suit, the plaintiffs admit that the defendant is in possession of the suit properties but they assert that he is there as mutawalli and that his possession is on behalf of the Sunni Muhammadan community and for that reason the plaintiffs say that a declaratory suit will lie and that they need not sue for possession, then the burden lies on the plaintiffs to prove their claim. As the defendant is admittedly in possession and except for the fact that the plaintiff's claim that he is in possession on their behalf (a fact which the defendant denies) the plaintiffs are out of possession, they must prove that the defendant is in possession on their behalf. The only way in which the plaintiffs can do that is by showing that the properties in suit, are wakf property: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 713.

Presumption in law is that possession goes with ownership. To rebut that presumption, material must be placed before the Court to the contrary: (1990) 3 Karn.L.J. 283.

In a suit for possession and injunction, the burden lies on the plaintiff to establish his title to and possession over the disputed property as also the cause of action leading to the institution of the suit; however, where both sides have led evidence on the facts in issue, the burden to prove loses its importance; the case has to be decided on appraisal of the evidence on record: (1993) 22 All.L.R. 315; (1949) 7 J.&K. L.R. 144 (D.B.); I.L.R. (1967) Mys. 276; 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 155; A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 379.

In a suit for possession of land and mandatory injunction seeking demolition of construction made by defendant on ground that plaintiff had acquired title to the land by purchase from ex-zamindars under U.P.Z.A. and L.R. Act, held, burden of proving that plaintiff had acquired valid title by alleged purchase lay on plaintiff. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 526; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1506, Foll.]: 1983 All.L.J. 509.

particular kind: 33 Cut.L.T. 672: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 532: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 187.

86. Pre-emption.—Right of pre-emption under—Conditions to be fulfilled—Burden of proof: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 290.

Rights of pre-emption when they exist, are valuable rights and when they depend upon a custom or upon a contract, the custom or the contract, as the case may be, must, if disputed, be proved: A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 11.

Right of pre-emption—Requisites of—Pre-emptor must be co-sharer—Right must subsist up to date of decree—Burden of proof is on plaintiff—Each and every landowner in estate is not co-sharer: (1964) 66 Punj.L.R. 1063.

The burden of proving that the pre-emptor had expressed his inability to buy the house in question is on the vendor: 1955 Madh. Bh. L.J. (H.C.R.) 1639 (D.B.).

The right of pre-emption under the Muslim law is a very weak right; the burden, thus, lies on the claimants to plead and prove that he indeed is the owner of the property on the basis whereof he is basing his claim: A.I.R. 1980 Raj. 116: 1980 Raj.L.W. 176.

Where the plaintiff claimed right of pre-emption under S. 15(2)(b) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913, held, the burden is on him to prove by positive evidence that the suit land had been inherited by the lady from the deceased son and it was not for the vendees to prove that she acquired the land by purchase: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 329.

Pre-emption—Price stated in sale deed exceeding market-value—Burden of proof—Price paid in good faith—Pre-emptor must pay same to get himself substituted: 1957 Nag.L.J. 348.

Pre-emption—Suit for, brought by minor son of one of vendors—Defence that suit was collusive at the instance of vendors—Onus on vendees to prove that suit was for vendor's benefits—Finding that vendees failed to establish it is finding of fact: 1964 Cur.L.J. 427 (Punj.).

87. Private land.—Lands situate in inam village—Private or ryoti lands—Presumption and onus of proof—Test to determine whether particular land is private land of land holder: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1005.

Private land—Burden of proof: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 332: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 495.

88. Processes of Court.—Presumption under S. 27, General Clauses Act—Rebuttal of—Burden lies on addressee of notice—Quantum of evidence depends on facts and circumstances of each case: 1969 All.L.J. 849: 1969 Ren.C.R. 849: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 477.

It is the established law that, where a sale or a decree is impeached on the ground of non-service or fraudulent suppression of notice and summons and where the plaintiff denies such notices, the initial onus is on the person who alleges service, that is to say, on the defendant to the action who tries to maintain the impugned sale: 1955 B.L.J.R. 583: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 161.

When there is an affidavit of the peon serving the notice, of proper service thereof, the party who impugns the fact ought to prove that there was no service: A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 722.

Suit to set aside ex parte decree on ground of non-service of summons—Burden is on plaintiff to prove non-service: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 88.

Presumption as to notice and other processes of Court: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 487.

Presumption under S. 27, General Clauses Act as to proper service of notice sent by registered post—Addressee alleging that he was not served with notice—Failure of postman to identify addressee—Presumption is not rebutted: 1969 All.L.J. 849: 1969 Ren.C.R. 849: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 477.

89. Purchaser.—It is well settled that the onus to prove the exception carved out in S. 19(b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1963 is on the subsequent purchaser; the section clearly provides that a contract may be specifically enforced against either party or a third person claiming under it by a title arising subsequently to the contract, except a transferee for value in good faith and without notice of the original contract; such notice may be actual or constructive, that is when except for wilful abstention from enquiry or search or gross negligence, he would have known it: A.I.R. 1994 Bom. 358; 1982 M.P.W.N. 294.

It is well settled that in a case for specific performance of contract the initial burden of proving that the subsequent transferee was a purchaser in good faith and without notice lies upon the transferee and not upon the transferor to establish the circumstances which will entitle him to the benefit of S. 19(b) of the Specific Relief Act. [A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 228; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 68; A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 97; A.I.R. 1977 All. 328, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 All. 5.

It is well settled that if in a suit for specific performance of a contract the plaintiff proves his prior contract, the burden to prove the subsequent bona fide purchase for value without notice would lie on the subsequent purchaser; but it is also well settled that very little evidence, and in certain circumstances a mere denial or want of knowledge of the suit contract by the subsequent purchaser is sufficient to discharge such burden, shifting the onus upon the party seeking specific performance. [A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 300, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 277: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 827.

Where a suit by a purchaser is contested by the person in possession on the ground that plaintiff's vendor had no title to the property, the onus is on plaintiff to prove that his vendor owned the suit property: 146 I.C. 445: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 174.

Where a suit was filed by purchasers of the suit property for possession and it was contested by the appellants who were admittedly in possession, held, the onus was on the respondents/plaintiffs to prove that their vendor had the necessary title. [A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 558; A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 35 and A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 31, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1991 Madh. Pra. 15.

Where specific performance of a contract is sought against the subsequent purchasers, held, the burden lies on the subsequent purchaser to show that he was a bona fide purchaser in good faith without notice of the previous sale; ordinarily, such burden is discharged by the subsequent purchaser's own testimony in the witness box; however, if other circumstances do reflect upon his bona fides, his own testimony of mere denial may not by itself be enough to discharge the burden: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 18: 1981 Ker.L.T. 463 (D.B.).

Prior agreement to sell—Subsequent transferee must inquire into character of possession of persons in possession: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 383.

Good faith of a subsequent transferee without notice in a case for specific performance of a contract is a question of fact, depending upon the facts and circumstances of each case; there can be no hard and fast rule as to the quantum of evidence required to prove good faith; it is the cumulative effect of evidence placed on the record which is to be seen; thus, where the subsequent transferee and her husband had made enquiries from the transferor and her husband, supplemented by investigations at the Registration Office to find out any earlier transaction relating to the property, held, the transferee's good faith as well as want of notice was established. [A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 228; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 68; A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 97; A.I.R. 1977 All. 328, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 All. 5.

Where the decree-holders sued under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act for avoidance of certain sales made by the judgment-debtor on the ground that they were meant to defeat or delay the creditors, held, the onus of proving want of good faith in the transferee would lie on the decree-holders; but if the fraud on the part of the transferor was established, the burden to prove that the transferee fell into the exception contemplated under S. 53 would lie on the transferor. He must establish that he was not a party to the fraud and honestly believed that the sales were in the ordinary and normal course of business. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1150, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 Karn. 225: (1985) 2 Karn.L.J. 389: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 175 (D.B.).

Party seeking to impugn what is ex facie a valid disposition has to prove bad faith. [A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 152, Rel. on]: 1971 M.P.L.J. 808 (D.B.).

Defendant purchasing property after contract of sale in favour of plaintiff—Burden is on defendant to prove that he is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of earlier contract: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 304 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 224; 1987 All. L.J. 634.

Purchaser of a property belonging to a lady from her husband has the onus to prove that the husband had implied agency on behalf of his wife to sell the property; the subsequent purchaser of said property from the wife could not be burdened with the onus of proving that husband has no such agency: A.I.R. 1971 All. 494.

Suit to set aside transfer by insolvent challenged—Burden of proof: 1961 M.P.L.J. 708: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 15.

90. Raiyati rights.—Where in a suit for declaring the plaintiff's raiyati rights, his ownership of the land was admitted and he was proved to be in possession of, and cultivating, the land, held, the onus was on the defendant to establish himself to be the bataidar: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 472.

Under-raiyati right claimed to be heritable and transferable—Onus to prove it is on a claimant. (Tenancy Laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II of 1913), S. 237): (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 725: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 86.

Applicability—Person setting up invalidity of transfer by way of exchange under S. 27(1), Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation—Burden of proving that subject-matter of exchange was raiyati land situate in Sonthal Parganas lies on him—Discharge of onus—Onus shifts to other side to show that transfer comes within exception to rule laid down in S. 27(1) and he must show that record of rights contained an entry authorising transferor to transfer raiyati land (Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation (III of 1872), S. 27(1): (1968) 2 Um.N.P. 1135: 1969 B.L.J.R. 270: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 204.

91. Record of rights.—Where a purchaser in a revenue sale wants to bring a suit for a declaration that the land in question forms part of the mal assets of a particular touzi, the initial onus is upon him to show that it is part of the mal assets of the said touzi.

This onus cannot be discharged by relying on A and C Registers prepared under Land Registration Act. It is now well-settled that A and C Registers kept under the Land Registration Act, 1876, cannot determine the question as to whether or not a particular land forms part of the mal assets of a particular touzi. [I.L.R. 45 Cal. 574, Rel. on].

But this initial onus which is upon the plaintiff can be discharged if the plaintiff can show that the rent was paid at any time in respect of the land to the superior landlords, or if there is an entry in the settlement record which supports the plaintiff's contention. And if there is an entry in a settlement record which indicates that the land in question is part of the mal assets of a particular touzi, then by production of the settlement record the plaintiff would discharge the initial onus which is cast upon him: (1956-57) 60 Cal.W.N. 6. See also A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 121, cited under Note 7, supra.

Entries in wajib-ul-arz: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 286.

Record of rights showing land in plaintiff's name—Onus lies on defendant to prove his independent title to half land: A.I.R. 1968 Tripura 5. See also 76 I.C. 347.

Where land sold by a widow was sought to be pre-empted by her husband's brother's sons under S. 15(2)(b) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1960 and the pedigree table and the jamabandi adduced by him in evidence merely proved the widow to be so related to him and in occupation of the land sold as its owner, held, no presumption could be drawn that she must have inherited it from her deceased-husband or son; the burden lay on the plaintiff to establish the factum of inheritance by positive and independent evidence: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 329: 1970 Punj.L.J. 776.

Record of rights—Entries in—Correctness—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 223: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 457; 82 I.C. 879 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 530; 61 I.C. 420.

According to the decision of the Judicial Committee in A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 157, there is a distinction between the grant of an office to be remunerated by the use of land and the grant of land burdened with service. When the entries in the settlement record are capable of supporting either side and are equivocal then it is for the plaintiffs in a suit for resumption of lands to establish their own case and to show that the lands in question come within the first category mentioned in the Privy Council case: (1955-56) 60 Cal.W.N. 385: A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 79.

92. Recovery of arrears of rent.—East Punjab Urban Rent Restriction Act (III of 1949), S. 13—Non-payment of rent—Burden of proof: 1964 Cur.L.J. 356 (Punj.).

Suit for recovery of arrears of rent—Burden is upon tenant to allege and prove delivery of possession of property back to landlord: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Mad. 586: A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 417.

Partition of property of A and B—Liability of tenant to pay rent—Tenant taking plea that he had paid it to A—Onus is on him to prove it: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 276.

Registered letter containing notice sent to tenant in arrears—Letter refused—Presumption of receipt of notice by tenant will be raised: A.I.R. 1963 All. 250: 1963 All.L.J. 25.

Suit for rent from agricultural land filed on 31st March, 1960—Cause of action shown as 31st March, 1957, i.e., last day of period of tenancy—No proof of terms of tenancy—Defendant alleging that rent is payable earlier at time of harvest—Neither custom nor legislation requiring payment of rent at time of harvest—Normal rule that rent is payable at close of period of lease, is attracted—Defendant pleading special period must establish his case—Suit is not barred by limitation: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 438.

Suit for rent—Part of sum claimed relating to dues in respect of electric charges—Defendant denying existence of liability—It is for plaintiff to prove by tangible evidence how sum was made up: A.I.R. 1953 Madh. Bh. 247: I.L.R. (1954) Madh. Bh. 62.

93. Redemption.—In a suit for redemption, the plaintiff must prove mortgage: (1921) 8 Oudh L.J. 401. If he fails to do so, he cannot succeed in the suit even if it is found that the defendant is in possession of the property as a motgagee: 1954 Ker.L.T. 695 (D.B.).

Although in a suit for redemption the initial burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff-mortgagor to prove the mortgage by some prima facie evidence, this burden of proof is comparatively not heavy when the question of the quantum of the evidence required from either party has to be considered; it is the defendant who would naturally have the mortgage deed, and it would be more in his or her power to give evidence of its contents than in that of the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 110: 1958 Raj.L.W. 275.

In a suit for redemption, burden lies on the plaintiff to prove his entitlement to redeem and that his suit is within time: (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 179.

Suit for redemption of unspecified date—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 377.

94. Restitution of conjugal rights.—When the petitioner, husband or wife as the case may be, adduces proof regarding the withdrawal from the society of another without reasonable excuse, then the burden lies on the other side of proving reasonable excuse, if any, for withdrawal from the society. Explanation to S. 9, as added by the Amendment Act, 1976, would not make any difference in this position. [A.I.R. 1972 Bom. 182, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1987 Karn. 24: (1986) 1 Karn.L.J. 422: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 216; (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 152 (Madh. Pra.).

In case of restitution of conjugal rights, the party who has withdrawn from the society of the other spouse has to prove by positive evidence the justification for his failure to discharge the marital obligations: A.I.R. 1971 P.&H. 35.

Matrimonial case—Petition for restitution of conjugal rights—Burden of proving the conditions in S. 9(1) of the Hindu Marriage Act is on the petitioner: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 139.

In a proceeding for restitution of conjugal rights under the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, held, burden of proving reasonable excuse for withdrawing from the society, is on the person who has withdrawn from the society: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 148 (Ker.) (D.B.); (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 582 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.); (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 569 (P.&H.); (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 722 (P.&H.); (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 1 (Ker.) (D.B.); (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 530 (Madh. Pra.); (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 622 (Madh. Pra.); 1984 Hindu L.R. 492 (P.&H.); 1981 Hindu L.R. 452 (P.&H.); 1980 Hindu L.R. 194 (Raj.); 1980 Hindu L.R. 744 (P.&H.).

Where the husband sought restitution of conjugal rights under S. 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act on the ground that his wife, from whom he had begotten a son, had been removed from her matrimonial home at the instance of her parents under a warrant by the sub-Divisional Magistrate and they planned to marry her off to another person and the validity of the marriage was denied, held, having admitted the performance of marriage ceremony including saptpadi, the burden shifted on the wife to prove that the marriage was not valid. [A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 160, Disting.]: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 402 (Madh. Pra.).

95. Reversioners.—Widows—Accretions—Acquisition—Burden lies on claiming reversioner to show that it formed part of deceased's estate. See A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 601.

Alienation by Hindu widow—Suit by reversioner for declaration that it was not binding—Hindu Succession Act coming into force—Burden lies on defendants to prove that suit was not maintainable as widow had become full owner: (1953) 4 Guj.L.R. 509: A.I.R. 1955 Guj. 84.

Suit for possession on ground of plaintiff being nearer reversioner than defendants—Genealogies produced by defendants not proved—Still plaintiff must establish his title to property, to claim possession from defendants who were in possession at the time of suit, by proving that he was the nearer reversioner: 1964 B.L.J.R. 152: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 187.

96. Route permit.—Scheme under S. 68-C, Motor Vehicles Act, 1939—Proceedings under S. 68-D—Objection that scheme does not satisfy S. 68-C—Burden of proof is on objector: A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 319.

The onus to prove that a scheme formulated and approved under S. 68-C of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 is not in public interest lies on the persons who raise objection thereto under S. 68-D of that Act; such onus is discharged not merely by preferring objections but by substantiating and establishing them: A.I.R. 1980 Ori. 122: I.L.R. (1979) 2 Cut. 26(D.B.).

97. Sanction for prosecution.—Where the plaintiff averred that a khorposh deed was void ab initio for want of the Commissioner's previous sanction as required under S. 12-A of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1876, held, the burden lay on the plaintiff to prove that the necessary conditions for attracting S. 12-A were satisfied; upon his failure to prove their existence, the deed was not void: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1937.

Validity of sanction—Burden of proof—Prosecution to prove that sanctioning authority was competent to sanction prosecution and had applied its mind to the facts of the case—Facts constituting offence not appearing on facts of order sanctioning prosecution—Prosecution must prove same by other evidence: I.L.R. (1962) 12 Raj. 327: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 786: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 250.

Affirmation of fact and onus—Public servant charged with having committed offence has to satisfy Court, at any stage of trial, that he cannot be prosecuted for want of sanction under S. 197 (1), Cr.P.Code: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1304: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 121.

Allegation by defence that the person authorising prosecution lacked competence—Defence must establish it by prima facie evidence: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 862.

98. Self-defence.—(See also under S. 105, Note 7, infra). It is well settled that the burden on the accused to establish the plea of self-defence under S. 105 is not so onerous as is cast on the prosecution by S. 101 to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt; the accused is required to establish his plea of self-defence by a mere preponderance of probability. Thus, where it was shown by the accused by such evidence that the deceased, within striking distance, was poised for imminent attack with a spear when the accused fired the fatal gunshot on the deceased, held, the plea of self-defence stood established: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 966: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 798: (1976) 1 S.C.R. 757.

Right of self-defence—Burden of proof: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 57: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 11.

Ordinarily the burden to establish the right of private defence is on the defence. It is true and the law is settled that the benefit of the right of private defence can be extended to the accused, if the materials on record justify it even though the defence as stated by the accused is one of denial: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 1040.

Where serious injuries are found on the person of the accused, as a principle of appreciation of evidence, it becomes obligatory on the prosecution to explain the injuries so as to satisfy the Court as to the circumstances under which the occurrence originated. But before this obligation is placed on the prosecution, two conditions must be satisfied: (a) that the injuries on the person of the accused must be very serious and severe and not superficial and (b) it must be shown that the injuries must have been caused at the time of the concurrence in question: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1585 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where the accused had set up the defence that the deceased had assaulted one of them by a bhala blow on his chest and they had, therefore, acted in self-defence and the injury report showed one grievous injury on his chest and 6 other injuries on his person, all caused by sharp pointed weapons, which was not sought to be explained by the prosecution till 5 years thereafter and that too unsuccessfully, held, the prosecution did not discharge its burden of proof; the defence version was more probable; conviction set aside: 1992 Cr.L.J. 942 (Pat.) (D.B.).

A defence of killing se defendando is a defence of justification, or, to put it in terms of pleading, a confession and avoidance. In civil cases this plea is always to be proved by the party setting it up; and it is perhaps, not altogether easy to see why it should not be so in a criminal case, more especially as when self-defence is set up, the facts must often be known only to the defendant who relies on it. But, in murder or manslaughter, the rule that the onus is on the prosecution permits of no exception except as to proof of insanity. The rule that the onus always remains on the prosecution does not mean that the Crown must give evidence in chief to rebut a suggestion of self-defence before that issue is raised, or, indeed, need give any evidence on the subject at all. If, on a consideration of all the evidence, the jury are left in doubt whether the killing or wounding may not have been in self-defence, the proper verdict would be not guilty. A convenient way of directing the jury is to tell them that the burden of establishing guilt is on the prosecution, but that they must also consider the evidence for the defence which may have one of three results: It may convince them of the innocence of the accused, or it may cause them to doubt, in which case the defendant is entitled to an acquittal, or it may, and sometimes does, strengthen the case for the prosecution. It is, perhaps, a fine distinction to say that before a jury can find a particular issue in favour of an accused, he must give some evidence on which it can be found but, nonetheless, the onus remains on the prosecution. What it really amounts to is that if, in the result, the jury are left in doubt where the truth lies the verdict should be not guilty, and this is as true of an issue as to self-defence as it is to one of provocation, though of course the latter plea goes only to a mitigation of the offence: (1957) 1 All E.R. 734.

Where the plea of self-defence was held to have been proved by the accused. See (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 673 (D.B.).

99. Specific performance.—See Notes 36 and 89, supra.

100. State's act.—The power to transfer a Judge from one High Court to another under Art. 222(1) of the Constitution, inasmuch as it can be exercised without consent of the Judge, is extraordinary and can constitute a threat to his sense of independence and impartiality; it must be used most sparingly and only for very strong reason; the onus to justify the transfer lies heavily on the State. [As per Pathak, J.] A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 149.

Where a contract is ex facie executed on behalf of the Governor by a Deputy Secretary to the State Government ostensibly in the course of official business and in discharge of executive functions, held, it is to be taken to conform to the requirements of Art. 299 of the Constitution; the burden would, thus, lie on the State to establish to the Court's satisfaction that the Deputy Secretary was not authorised to execute the contract which for that reason was void: A.I.R. 1977 Pat. 258 (D.B.).

101. Title suits.—(See also Notes 22, 43 and 85, supra). In a suit on the basis of plaintiff's title, the onus to prove title lies upon him: 1983 M.P.W.N. 60.

In a suit for declaration of title the plaintiffcan succeed only on the strength of his own case and not on the defendant's weakness. [A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 59; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 526, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 50; 1982 M.P.W.N. 360.

The general rule of evidence is that if, in order to make out a title, it is necessary to prove a negative, the party who avers a title cannot be absolved from proving it: 13 R.D. 480: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 204; I.L.R. 60 Cal. 1253: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 68.

Wherever a person claims title to the estate of another by inheritance or succession, it is imperative for him to prove not only that he was related in some way or other with the last male holder of the estate but also that under the law of succession governing the parties he was the only heir entitled to succeed to the estate at the material time. In other words, he must prove not only that he was related in a particular manner but also that no nearer heir was in existence. This will imply no doubt a proof of a negative assertion. There is, however, no invariable rule that all :llegations must be proved by the party who affirmatively asserts them. Unless such evidence is adduced, it cannot be said that the plaintiff has discharged the onus that initially lay upon him to prove prima facie case. When the plaintiff adduces evidence in prima facie proof of the case that no nearer heir existed, the onus will shift to the defendants to prove affirmatively that there was in existence an heir nearer than the plaintiff. There will be no shifting of this onus unless the initial burden of proof that law casts on the plaintiffs was discharged: 1957 B.L.J.R. 658: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 249.

Suit under O. 21, R. 103, C.P.Code—Title to possession must be proved by plaintiff—Onus of proof. See A.I.R. 1955 Tripura 11. In a suit for possession of land the plaintiff has to prove that the land lay within his holding and it is not for the defendants to prove that it lay outside: I.L.R. 56 Cal. 805: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 325. See also (1940) 42 Punj.L.R. 294: A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 311.

Obiter:—When a plaintiff comes to Court with a prayer for a declaration of title and for possession, the burden obviously is on him to establish that on the date of the suit he had a subsisting title to the property. Such a subsisting title could only be established apart from other proof by satisfying the Court not only that the plaintiff in fact had a title but also that title was in fact subsisting. This he could succeed in doing only if he established that he had possession within 12 years before suit: I.L.R. (1963) 15 Assam 509: A.I.R. 1964 Assam 106.

Where the plaintiff unsuccessful in proving his possession as contemplated in S. 145 of the Cr.P.Code had discharged his onus to prove his title to the lands in the suit instituted by him, held, the burden shifted on the defendants to prove that they had acquired title by prescription or by reason of subsequent events the plaintiff had lost his title. [A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 136, Rel. on]: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1171.

Where the defendant in answer to the plaintiff's claim of being owner in possession of the land pleaded that the plaintiff had only a life estate, held, the burden lay on the defendant to affirmatively prove his plea; on his failure to adduce sufficient legal proof, the defendant is bound to fail: 1991 Punj.L.J. 430.

Where a minor sued the State and his father for a declaration that he was the owner in possession of the suit land having purchased the same and that it was wrongly entered in the revenue record as having vested in the State on the ground that his father was a big raiyat which claim was admitted by his father but contested by the State, held, it was for the plaintiff to prove his title because the principle of law is that the plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own case and not the weakness of the contesting defendant's version; it could not be lost sight of that the other defendant was the minor's father. [A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 59; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 526, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 251.

Will conferring property on daughter subject to life interest of wife—Donee from wife ceases to have any interest in or title to property after her death—His suit for declaration of title and possession of property against subsequent transferee from wife cannot succeed on the ground that latter had no better title to property than himself. Plaintiff, if he wishes to succeed on ground that wife was the heir of predeceased daughter and hence gift conferred title on him after death of wife, must allege and prove that there were no nearer heirs to property which was the stridhan of daughter. In absence of such plea and proof Court should dismiss suit and cannot of its own accord proceed on that ground and decree it: I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 169: A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 72.

Where the title of a deceased person to certain properties is disputed and it is shown that those properties belonged to the partnership firm, the onus lies on persons claiming through the deceased persons to prove that those properties belonged to him at the time of his death: A.I.R. 1929 Sind 182.

When a person claims to succeed another on ground of relationship with the latter, he should establish not only his own relationship with the last male holder, but also prima facie that no nearer heirs are alive: 151 I.C. 338: A.I.R. 1934 All. 117.

Where in a suit for injunction by the Managing Committee of a mosque for ouster of trespassers from the mosque land, held, the plaintiff's title thereto may be established, in the absence of documents, by long possession which itself is also evidence of title; if the defendants set up a title better than that of the plaintiff, the burden lies on them to prove the same, on the plaintiff's long possession having otherwise been established: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 322: 1973 Raj.L.W. 456: 1973 W.L.N. 448.

In an auction for eviction based on title, the plaintiff cannot succeed merely by proving his possession of the lands in question, even assuming that he obtained possession by virtue of a Patta. In order to succeed, he had to prove both title and possession, and if he is not able to establish his title to the disputed land, the Court cannot grant him any relief: 1960 Raj.L.W. 596: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 1197.

Suit for title and possession of land—Defendants pleading that two other persons were in occupation of part of such land—Proof of such persons being necessary parties to suit—Onus is on defendants: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 302.

Plaintiff's assertion that she derived title to property under award-decree—Assertion is not allegation of fact—Title even if not denied in written statement would not absolve plaintiff from burden of its proof: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 75.

In a suit for declaration that the plaintiff was a hawkdar of certain land by virtue of being in possession thereof the land having been delivered to him by the Court, it is for the defendants to establish their title to the land if they want to have the claim of the plaintiff dismissed: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 14: I.L.R. (1957) Mys. 120.

Plaintiffs alleged that Rambharos (husband of plaintiff No. 1) got the suit lands in 1922 from the Ruler and thereafter he and plaintiffs were in possession of the land. But in pursuance of a mortgage deed by defendant No. 2 in favour of defendant No. 1 the possession of the suit land was taken by him in 1955. The Courts below held that Rambharos did not acquire the land from the Ruler in the manner alleged but relying upon the weakness of the case of defendant No. 2, passed a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs.

Held, that the Courts below while passing decree for possession disregarded the well-established principle that a person claiming title to the land must depend on the strength of his own case and he could not get any relief on the basis of the weakness of the defence of his adversary. When the title set up by the plaintiffs was not proved, the decree of the Courts below could not be sustained and must be set aside: 1963 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 94.

Suit for ejectment and khas possession—Defendant 2 alleged to be in occupation under an illegal and unlawful transfer of suit tenancy by defendant, the tenant, without plaintiff landlord's consent—Onus to prove alleged transfer by way of sub-letting is on the plaintiff—Suit must fail where he fails to discharge the onus—No presumption of subtenancy or sub-letting arises under the enactment in every case in which the tenant leaves the station permanently, as under the English Act: (1960-61) 65 Cal.W.N. 1175.

Ejectment suit—Suit for declaration of title and for possession impugning certain documents executed by an old illiterate lady of a village and involving large acreage of land—Onus: 26 Cut.L.T. 304: A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 100.

Where the disputed land is a forest waste, unenclosed in the midst of still larger waste, the fact that there is no satisfactory evidence of possession cannot relieve the Court of the duty of settling a line upon the evidence which is laid before it. The ordinary rule regarding the onus incumbent on the plaintiff has really no application to cases of that kind. The parties to the suit are in the position of counter-claimants; and it is the duty of the defendant, as much as the plaintiff, to aid the Court in ascertaining the true boundary. [I.L.R. 21 Cal. 504, Foll.]: 1958 Ker.L.J. 457: 1958 Ker.L.T. 303.

Suit for restraining defendants from entering upon disputed land and interfering with cultivation of plaintiffs—Defendants contending that they had acquired occupancy rights over suit land under Madras Act I of 1908—Held, onus of proving acquisition of permanent occupancy interest was on defendants: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 790: 32 Cut.L.T. 1134.

102. Torts.—Slander of title or slander of goods—Proof: (1966) 1 Mys.L.J. 508.

Vicarious liability—Liability of State for acts of its employees—Burden of proving existence of circumstances to claim immunity lies on State and its employee: A.I.R. 1970 J.&K. 5.

Vicarious liability for tort committed by servant—Onus to prove employment: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 13.

Even in an action in torts, if the defendant gives no rebutting evidence but a reasonable explanation, equally consistent with the presence as well as with the absence of negligence, the presumptions or inferences based on res ispa loquitur can no longer be sustained. The burden of proving the affirmative, that the defendant was negligent and the accident occurred by his negligence, still remains with the plaintiff; and in such a situation it will be for the Court to determine at the time of judgment whether the proven or undisputed facts, as a whole, disclose negligence: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1848.

103. Trade mark/patents.—Application for removal of trade mark from register—Onus: A.I.R. 1957 All. 683.

Likelihood of deception—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 636.

The burden of proving that the trade mark sought to be registered is not likely to deceive or cause confussion is upon the applicant: A.I.R. 1953 S.C. 357.

Trade mark—Infringement of—Initial burden on plaintiff—When burden shifts: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 290.

In an action for passing off, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the defendant's mark has near resemblance to his mark and there is likelihood of deceit and confusion: A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 51: (1973) 1 An.W.R. 129: (1973) 1 An.L.T. 278.

Onus of proving that a trade mark is not calculated to deceive or cause confusion is on the person pleading it: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 24: (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 37.

Burden of establishing proprietorship of trade mark lies on applicant—It is for applicant to satisfy Court as to his user: (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 37: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 24.

Trade mark alleged to have violated provisions of law—Onus of proving violation is on the applicant: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 186.

Application for registration of trade mark—Claim of honest concurrent user—Burden to prove user lies heavily on applicant—Evidence must be clear, cogent and specific—Burden of proof—Application for registration of trade mark—Applicant must allege and prove that he is proprietor of mark: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 148.

Action for infringement of registered trade mark and for passing off—Burden of proof on plaintiff—Extent of: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 141.

Infringement of Patent—Burden of proof on plaintiff: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 255.

Patents and Designs—Onus of proving invalidity of Patent is on defendant: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 255.

104. Trust.—Where the discoverable origins of property show it to be trust property, the onus of establishing that it must have illegitimately come into the trustee's own right does not rest upon the beneficiaries. On the contrary, the onus is, and is heavily, upon the trustees to show by the clearest and most unimpeachable evidence the legitimacy of his personal acquisition: I.L.R. (1968) 18 Raj. 803: 1968 Raj.L.W. 347: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 314.

The plaintiffs brought the suit claiming to be trustees and praying for a declaration of their own title as trustees and for a declaration that the defendants were not trustees and for possession of the trust properties and other incidental reliefs. It was found as a fact that the meeting at which the plaintiffs were elected trustees had not been held on due notice to all churches interested and was consequently not a valid meeting. Held, that in a suit of this description if the plaintiffs were to succeed they must do so on the strength of their own title. Since the election of the plaintiffs was not valid, their suit, in so far as it was in the nature of a suit for ejectment, must fail for want of their title as trustees: 1958 Ker.L.T. 721: 1958 Ker.L.J. 874: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 31. Where the discoverable origins of property show it to be trust property, the onus of establishing that it must have illegitimately come into the trustee's own right does not rest upon the beneficiaries. On the contrary, the onus is heavily upon the trustee to show by the clearest and most unimpeachable evidence the legitimacy of his personal acquisition: A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 100.

Property in possession of Mahant whether his personal property—Presumption—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 221.

Where properties for long were held by Mahants as their personal properties wherefrom some ascetics occasionally found food and shelter and the Bihar State Board of Religious Trust claimed them to be owned by it as a public trust, held, the legal presumption would be in favour of the Mahants and the burden would lie on the Board to prove its claim; the position will not change even if the Mahants, not fully conscious of their rights in the properties or unaware of the true state of law, had been mentioning them as public trust properties in their returns to the Board; the Mahants are not estopped. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2057, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 95: 1973 Pat.L.J.R. 509 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 195.

Where transfer by a Mahant of his personal property was objected to by the Deity claiming title thereto, held, burden is on deity to disprove the Mahant's title: A.I.R. 1980 N.O.C. 155 (All.); 1981 All.W.C. 714: 1981 All.L.J. 1082.

Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act (IV of 1939), S. 64 (2) and (1)—Suit by Mahant of math to set aside order of Commissioner under S. 64(1)—Onus is initially on plaintiff to show that order of Commissioner is wrong: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 256.

Religious endowment—Debts—Decree obtained by creditor against Mahant—Sale of idol's property in execution—Succeeding Mahant not bound—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1957 All. 77.

Trust property mortgaged for raising loan for repairs, etc.—Onus to prove necessity is on mortgagee: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 292.

Temple built out of private funds—Certain property gifted to person appointed as vahivatdar of temple—No dedication of temple to public—Villagers impliedly allowed to offer worship to deity—Gram Panchayat levying tax on house in which temple was built—Temple held not in nature of public trust—Property whether under public or of private trust—Burden of proof: (1961) 63 Bom.L.R. 274.

Suit for rendition of accounts against trustee—Death of trustee—Liability and duty of L.Rs. of deceased trustee—Burden of proof to show that monies were due from deceased plaintiff: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 75.

Trusteeship—Application under S. 41(c) of Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act, asking to declare applicants as hereditary trustees of deity—Onus is applicants to establish that they are hereditary trustees: 34 Cut.L.T. 1111.

Breach of trust—Onus: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 815: (1958) 1 An.W.R. (S.C.) 36: 1958 S.C.R. 214. Misfeasance—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 78.

"Hereditary trustee" of religious endowment—Suit for declaration—Burden to prove devolution of trusteeship from time of founder lies on plaintiff: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 257.

Failure to submit budget and accounts by Mutawalli—Prosecution must prove that it was wilful: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1182: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 332.

105. Undue influence.—(See also Notes 47 and 80, supra). Plea of "undue influence" to be investigated only when all particulars are pleaded—Relation of influence established—Person dominating to prove that no domination was practised: 1964 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 37.

A plea of undue influence, where set up, is a special plea. S. 103 of the Evidence Act places the burden of substantiating such a plea on the party which sets it up: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1999.

Undue influence—Onus: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 190; A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 363.

Where the executrix, aged 75 and a patient of cancer, was living with and under the care of her close relation, that is, younger brother of her adopted son and who was in a position to dominate her will and had obtained substantial benefit under the deed by way of agricultural land, held, whether or not he had used his influence over the executrix to obtain the advantage could be established by the beneficiary by his own evidence; by not appearing as a witness in the suit, an adverse inference has to be drawn against him; as the deed prima facie appears to be unconscionable, the burden shifted on to him to prove that the deed was executed by the executrix without undue influence: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 136: 1975 M.P.L.J. 156: 1975 Jab.L.J. 333 (D.B.).

Where the vendor was an old, blind, illiterate and tribal woman totally at the mercy of the vendee with whom she was living till her death, and the parties were so situated that vendee was in a position to obtain an unfair advantage over her, held, the initial onus to prove undue influence was on the plaintiff a person challenging the transaction and same was discharged when it was proved that no consideration passed at the time of the sale: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 956.

Where the executor of a lease deed was an old and illiterate pardanashin lady unable to see and hear, held, the onus to prove that she executed the lease deed after properly understanding the nature of deed is on the person who alleges its execution: 1981 (U.P.) R.C.C. 598.

106. Wagering contract.—See Note 32, supra.

107. Will.—A Will is proved after the testator is dead and gone and the best evidence is lost; a Will, very often, disturbs normal succession or inheritance; greater is, therefore, the necessity of circumspection; the mode of proving a Will is ordinarily not different from proving other documents except that attestation as prescribed in S. 63 of the Indian Succession Act is also to be proved and the propounder of the Will has to explain to the Court's satisfaction any suspicious circumstances surrounding the Will: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 206: (1983) 56 Cut.L.T. 301.

A Will has to be proved as any other document; it does not need mathematical certainty but only the satisfaction of a prudent mind; one of the attesting witnesses must be examined if he is alive and subject to the Court process; allegations of fraud, undue influence, coercion, etc., have to be proved by persons alleging them. However, despite absence of such pleas, the Will may well be shrouded by mystery or circumstances creating doubt about its execution in which case it is for the beneficiary to remove the doubts and clear the judicial conscience by suitable evidence; the onus probandi to prove the Will lies upon him who propounds it; he has to prove that the Will is the last Will of a free person, having a sound disposing mind and memory, and was competent to make it: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 145 (P.&H.).

Where a Will is propounded the onus probandi is on the party who propounds the Will. He must prove that the Will was duly executed and that it was in existence at the date of the death of the testator: 57 Cal.L.J. 8: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 449. See also A.I.R. 1955 Assam 81; A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 73. Applies to probate cases: I.L.R. 39 Cal. 245; A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 409.

It is undoubtedly for the propounder of a Will to establish its due execution and also to satisfy the Court's judicial conscience that it was executed by the testator in a sound and disposing state of mind in the presence of the attesting witnesses; where it was so proved by the propounder, the suspicious circumstances indicated by the other party, found, on facts, not sufficient to hold the Will as not duly executed: A.I.R. 1977 Andh. Pra. 348: 1976 An.L.T. 335.

The law casts upon the propounder the burden to prove satisfactorily that its executant had sound disposing mind and capacity to execute the Will and to explain and remove doubts from the Court's mind if there be circumstance against due execution; he has also to prove due execution by examining at least one of the attesting witnesses if available; held, on facts, suspicious circumstances explained: A.I.R. 1976 Gau. 94 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 529 [Because the attesting witnesses were chance witnesses is no ground for disbelieving them.]

It is desirable that all witnesses capable of being called should be examined. See (1919-20) 24 Cal.W.N. 860 (P.C.).

The onus of proving a Will is on its propounder; in the absence of suspicious circumstances surrounding the Will, it is sufficient for the propounder to prove the executor's testamentary capacity as to his sound and disposing state of mind and his signature on the Will by disinterested, satisfactory and sufficient proof that onus is discharged; but where suspicious circumstances suggest that the Will was unnatural, improbable or unfair, the propounder has also the onus to explain them to the Court's satisfaction; where the propounder also took prominent part in execution of the Will which conferred upon him substantial benefit which is generally taken as a suspicious circumstance, the propounder must also remove that suspicion. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 443; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 529 and A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 354, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 All. 66. See also A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 599 (D.B.).

The presumption ordinarily is that the executant knew and approved all the contents of the Will; where his mental capacity is challenged and it is shown that it was very doubtful for the testator to have executed the Will, the Court ought to find out from the cumulative effect of all evidence on record and relevant circumstances whether the Will had been established to be a genuine transaction. [(1911) I.L.R. 38 Cal. 355 (P.C.) and (1894) I.L.R. 21 Cal. 279, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 All. 66.

The propounder of the Will has to prove not only that it was duly executed and attested as is required by the law, but also that it is genuine if there are any suspicious features surrounding the Will, the burden lies on the propounder to remove the suspicion: (1990) 1 Bom.C.R. 33.

The onus probandi lies in every case upon the party propounding a Will and he must satisfy the conscience of the Court that the instrument so propounded is the last Will of a free and capable testator.

If a party writes or prepares a Will, under which he takes a benefit, that is a circumstance that ought generally to excite the suspicion of the Court, and calls upon it to be vigilant and jealous in examining the evidence in support of the instrument, in favour of which it ought not to pronounce unless the suspicion is removed, and it is judicially satisfied that the paper propounded does express the true Will of the deceased. Whether there is any inherent suspicion or not will depend upon the facts of each case: 1955 B.L.J.R. 337: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 377; 1957 M.P.C. 627; A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 74: 1977 Punj.L.J. 54 reversing A.I.R. 1975 P.&H. 377. See also I.L.R. 23 All. 472; A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 156; A.I.R. 1947 P.C. 169; A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 272.

The onus of proving the Will is on the propounder and in the absence of suspicious circumstances, surrounding the execution of the Will, proof of testamentary capacity and the signature of the testator, as required by law, is sufficient to discharge the onus. Where, however, there are suspicious circumstances, the onus is on the propounder to explain them to the satisfaction of the Court before the Court accepts the Will as genuine. Even where circumstances give rise to doubts, it is for the propounder to satisfy the conscience of the Court: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 349: (1984) 2 Cal.L.J. 182: (1984-85) 89 Cal.W.N. 832 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 599 (D.B.). It is only thereafter that Will can be held to be a genuine document: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 670 (P.&H.).

Merely because a Will is registered, its genuineness cannot be presumed. Registration of a Will does not change the onus of proof from its propounder to the challenger. Whether a Will is registered or not, it is for the propounder to establish by reliable evidence that the Will was signed by the testator, that he at the relevant time was in a sound and disposing state of mind and that he fully realised the nature and effect of the disposition and signed it on his own free will. As the burden is heavily upon the propounder to prove the Will he cannot adopt the stand that the registration of the Will itself is a circumstance to dispel any suspicious circumstance. When the genuiness of the Will is challenged, the propounder has necessarily to substantiate his case regarding its genuineness even in a case where it is registered. At best registration of a Will though not required by law is only a piece of evidence of the execution. But it cannot have greater sanctity: A.I.R. 1995 Ker. 208.

Where suspicion arises from the nature of the case put forward by the person claiming under the Will, held, he alone should remove that suspicion which his case creates: (1978) 1 An.L.T. 407: A.I.R. 1979 N.O.C. 41 (D.B.).

Where execution of the Will was surrounded by suspicious circumstances, held, the onus was on its propounder to explain them away to the satisfaction of the Court before the Will could be accepted as genuine: A.I.R. 1989 All. 17: (1989) 14 All.L.R. 814.

Where by and large suspicious circumstances surround the execution of a Will, it is necessary for the Court to see that all legitimate suspicions are removed before the document is accepted as the last Will of the testator. Naturally, the Courts start with suspicion and the presence of such suspicious circumstances tend to make initial burden very heavy and unless it is satisfactorily discharged, Courts would be reluctant to grant the prayer of the propounder. It is true that, if a caveat is filed by a caveator alleging fraud, undue influence or coercion, etc., in respect of the execution of the Will propounded, such pleas may have to be proved by the caveator; but nevertheless in the absence of such pleas also the propounder has a burden of proving the initial onus to remove any such legitimate doubts in the matter. Where delay in producing Will was clubbed with factors which threw doubt on its genuineness and the propounder failed to discharge the burden as to the execution of the Will, held, Will was not genuine: A.I.R. 1991 Ori. 289.

Construction—Suspicious circumstance: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 1332.

In dealing with the case of an oral Will by a Hindu it is beyond doubt that the burden of proving an oral Will rests very heavily on the person who is desirous of propounding the oral Will. He who rests his title on so uncertain a foundation as the spoken words of a man, since deceased, is bound to allege as well as to prove with the utmost precision, the words on which he relies, with every circumstance of time and place: (1957) 59

Bom.L.R. 1178: A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 79. See also A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 579; A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 285; A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 174; A.I.R. 1942 All. 201 (F.B.).

The burden of proving an oral Will by a Hindu rests heavily on the person propounding such Will, held, on facts, evidence adduced being conflicting, the Will was not proved. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 74, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1986 J.&K. 61: 1986 Kash.L.J. 64.

Will—Genuineness and execution—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 360.

Genuineness of Will—Onus is on propounder: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 318.

Onus of proof that testator was major when he made the Will and was competent to execute it is on person relying on Will: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 947.

Person who relies on last Will of testator has heavy burden to discharge: 1968 All.L.J. 69.

Plaintiff alleging that the executor of a Will was Hindu—Burden is on him to prove the same—If he fails to do so, he cannot abandon on his own case and turn round to adopt that of the defendant that the execution of the Will got converted to Christianity. [A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 186; A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 289, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1988 Mad. 132: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 895: (1987) 2 M.L.J. 481.

Onus is on propounder—Person taking benefit preparing will—Burden heavily on him to prove genuineness: 1960 B.L.J.R. 56.

Mode of proof — Onus — Principles — When Court would grant probate: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 529.

Validity—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 382. See also 13 Law Rep. 476 (Mys.).

Burden of proof—Onus to prove physical and mental act of testator lies on propounder: 1965 Kash.L.J. 337: A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 75.

Burden of proof—What propounder has to establish—Rules of proof of Will how far differ in case of other documents like gift or settlement: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 259.

The plea that the Will was not a genuine one has to be proved by the party alleging the Will to be forged and if established is a good ground for revoking a probate granted of the Will and further more that is a ground on which the creditor of the testator's heir may also apply for the revocation. There can be no doubt that the onus of proving that the Will is not genuine will lie on the creditor who applies for the revocation of the Will: (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 444: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 377.

Revocation of Will—Burden of proof and presumption: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 128. See also A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 657.

Where a person seeks revocation of the probate for want of citation, held, the burden lies upon him to establish prima facie case therefor; if he shows that he ought to have been cited, the burden would shift on to the propounder of the Will that non-citation was of no substance and did not constitute just cause of revocation. [A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 261 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Madh. Pra. 201: 1978 M.P.L.J. 433: 1978 Jab.L.J. 570 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 2.

Where a registered Will was proved by production of its registered copy, held, the burden of proving its revocation is on the person who claims that it had been revoked: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 164: (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 447.

Proper attestation—Contention that for valid attestation there must be something in Will itself to indicate that person concerned signed as witness and omission, lacuna or insufficiency, if any, in document in that behalf cannot be supplemented, or supplied by other evidence is an extreme proposition: I.L.R. (1966) 1 Cal. 408.

Where the plea of collusion or fraud raised by the objector of the Will was that it was procured after the executrix had become unconscious, her valuables had been removed and she had been left to die uncared for, as supported by medical certificate, held, the plea is not supported by sufficient particulars; the objector had, thus, failed to plead and prove the collusion or fraud. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1728; A.I.R. 1967 All. 64, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 All. 304.

Allegation of fraud, undue influence, etc., by caveator—Onus is on caveator: 1965 Kash.L.J. 337: A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 75; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 529.

Undue influence—Onus to prove undue influence is on caveator—Every influence is not undue influence and mere fact that bequest is in favour of persons who were looking after testator at or about time of Will does not by itself indicate that Will was executed under undue influence: I.L.R. (1966) 1 Cal. 408.

Where the caveator alleges undue influence, fraud and coercion in execution of a Will, the onus is on him to prove the same. If the caveator does not discharge the burden which rests upon him in establishing the circumstances which show that the Will had been obtained by fraud or undue influence, a probate of the Will must necessarily be granted if it is established that the testator had full testamentary capacity and had, in fact, executed it validly with a free will and mind: (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 157 (P.&H.).

Once it has been proved that a Will has been executed with due solemnity by a person of competent understanding, the burden of proving that it was executed under undue influence is on the party who alleges it. [A.I.R. 1919 P.C. 132, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 363; A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 599.

Execution of Will—Undue influence—Proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 115; I.L.R. 23 All. 472; I.L.R. 32 Mad. 400 (P.C.); (1920-21) 25 Cal.W.N. 779; (1920-21) 25 Cal.W.N. 45 (P.C.); (1993) 2 Bom.C.R. 67.

The law is well settled that the onus probandi lies on the person who propounds the Will, and this onus is in general discharged by proof of capacity, and the fact of execution, from which the knowledge and the assent to its contents by the testator will be assumed. But where a Will is prepared and executed under circumstances which excite the suspicion of the Court "it is for those who propound the Will to remove such suspicion and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document". [A.I.R. 1949 P.C. 272, Rel. on].

The burden of proving undue influence cannot be discharged by merely establishing that a person has the power unduly to overbear the Will of the testator. It must be shown that in the particular case the power was exercised, and that it was by means of the exercise of that power that the Will was obtained: (1973) 1 Cut.W.R. 697 (D.B.).

A plea of undue influence in execution of a Will is a special plea; under S. 103 the burden of substantiating such a plea lies on the party which sets it up. [A.I.R. 1971 All. 304, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1999: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 600.

The burden of proving due execution is always on the propounder and it is not lessened by the fact that the propounder is stranger to the family and attesting witnesses are men of the opposite camp: A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 674.

Where the propounder pleaded that the Will was executed by the testatrix during the last moments of her life whereby her entire property was bequeathed to the propounder, an unnatural succession, and it was found that she was a feeble and sick lady of 80 years, that she had also executed an earlier Will of which there was no mention in the Will sought to be proved and that the propounder had taken active part in the execution of the second Will, held, the Courts below went wrong in holding that that were not suspicious circumstances; the Will was vitiated and not proved. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 354 and 1965 All.L.J. 1080, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 32 (All.).

Where a person was claimed to have executed a Will, just 18 days before his death, whereby he bequeathed his entire assets including a three-storeyed haveli at Jaipur and agricultural lands in the village to his younger brother to the exclusion of his own wife and minor children, held, the burden lay on the younger brother to explain to the Court's satisfaction the suspicion surrounding the Will; the propounder did not examine a handwriting expert but the expert examined by the widow deposed that the signatures on the Will did not tally with the deceased's proved signatures; there were other circumstances proved which rendered the Will even more suspicious; the propounder did not discharge his burden: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 529 (Raj.).

108. Workmen's compensation.— See Note 62, supra and A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 601, cited in Note 5, supra.

109. Miscellaneous.—Where the defendant raises the plea that he was a minor at the date of the transaction forming the subject-matter of the suit and for that reason the contract is void, the onus is on him to prove the fact of his minority at the time: A.I.R. 1953 Sau. 177: 6 Sau.L.R. 172.

Nuisance — Meaning of — Burden of proof: 1963 All.W.R. (H.C.) 522.

The criterion that the burden to prove the absence of bona fides resting upon the person who challenges the same is not a burden requiring proof to the hilt but to render the same as reasonably probable is only for the purposes of finding whether or not there has been a valid exercise of the statutory power. If the Court is called upon to decide positive existence of an impugned wrong motive, it must be proved to the positive satisfaction of the Court: I.L.R. (1952) Cut. 529: A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 121.

Hindu belonging to Adi-Dravida caste converted to Christianity ceases to belong to Adi-Dravida caste—Burden lies on him to prove that on conversion he again became member of Adi-Dravida caste: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 101.

Wilful default—What is—Burden of proof: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 144.

Affirmation of facts and onus—Burden of proof—It is for petitioner to plead all essential facts since he assails that order—He cannot throw the burden of proving that claim on respondent. Civil Writ Petn. No. 150 of 1968, dated 23rd July, 1968 (Raj.), Dist.—(Constitution of India. Art. 226—Burden of proof—Certiorari)—Civil Services—Rajasthan Medical Services (Collegiate Branch) Rules, 1962, R. 5(1)(ii): 1969 Raj.L.W. 568: (1970) 1 L.L.J. 199: 1970 Lab.I.C. 550.

Where the receipt of the goods sent by the seller was admitted by the purchaser, held, it was sufficient to raise the presumption that the purchaser had placed the order for supply of the goods on the seller; the burden would then shift on the purchaser to rebut the presumption by evidence: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 977: 1980 U.J. (S.C.) 446: (1980) 3 S.C.R. 22: 1980 (Supp.) S.C.C. 1.

Where the guarantor of a Bank's advance loan contract pleaded to be relieved of his liability on the ground that under the agreement the Bank was to advance money on the security of fully insured goods which it did not and the goods were in fact not under its control and had been lost whereby the guarantor's rights were impaired and his eventual remedies against the debtor were lost, held, the onus lay on the guarantor to prove its case; the decree set aside and the case remitted for deciding the issue on the basis of evidence adduced by both the parties: A.I.R. 1994 Ori. 329.

Where a Bank's customer made over cheques and moneys for depositing and crediting in her account with the Bank not to the Bank employee working on the relevant counter but to another employee who was her neighbour and her husband's close friend and the moneys were mis-appropriated by that latter employee, held, the Bank could not be held vicariously liable unless it was shown, the burden therefor being on the customer, that the latter employee was acting in the course of his employment while accepting the mis-appropriated cheques and monies: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1263: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 514: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 399.

The burden of proving that after cession of territory by the Scindias to the British by treaty on 12-12-1860, the British acknowledged or recongised the sovereign rights of any person over some part of that territory lies upon the party which pleads it, held, on facts, the burden is not discharged: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1201: (1982) 2 S.C.C. 414: 1982 U.J. (S.C.) 524.

When a doctor raised the plea that the patient had refused to give consent for the surgery or the medical treatment advised by him, the burden lies on him to prove that the non-performance of surgery or the non-administration of treatment was on account of the patient's refusal to accord his consent, and especially where the patient was not alive; consent is implicit where a patient submits to a doctor for treatment; the absence of consent is, thus, to be proved by the person alleging it. In most instances, the patient's consent is implied; a surgeon who failed to perform an emergency operation must prove by satisfactory evidence that the patient had refused to undergo the operation not only at the initial stage but even after he was informed about the dangerous consequences of not undergoing the operation: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 52: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1026 (D.B.).

Where the right of sister is challenged on the ground that they are excluded in the presence of collaterals, the onus of proving the existence of collaterals is on those who challenge the sister's right: 10 O.W.N. 424: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 231.

In case of persons hailing from a common ancestor who owned land, presumption would be that it devolved on them as co-sharers; the possession of co-sharers would ensure to other co-sharers unless their ouster is pleaded and proved by specific evidence. The inference of such ouster cannot be easily drawn: A.I.R. 1993 All. 168: 1993 All.L.J. 545.

Acquisition of occupancy rights—Purchasers of homestead lands claiming that their transferors had acquired such rights by virtue of S. 236(1) of the Orissa Tenancy Act (II of 1913)—Onus is on purchasers to specifically plead and prove such claim: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 86.

Agricultural Lands (Prohibition of Alienation) Act, 1972—In regard to alienations prior to 24-1-1971, the burden of proof remained as under the general law and was not affected by the provisions of either of the said two Acts dealing with prohibition of alienations: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 471.

While computing the ceiling area under the Orissa Land Reforms Act, 1960, held, the burden lies on the Revenue Officer to establish that lands located in urban areas were linked with agricultural operations and were agricultural lands. [A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 298 (Ori.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 83: (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 1 (D.B.).

According to the provisions of the U.P. Consolidation of Holdings Act, the person who wants to dispute the correctness of the basic year entry has to prove the fact that the basic entry is incorrect and further according to S. 44 of the U.P. Land Revenue Act there is a presumption about the correctness of the entry and the burden lies on the person who wants to dispute it: 1981 All.W.C. 204: (1981) 7 All.L.R. 274.

Where admittedly A is in possession of the disputed lands after the death of B till the date of the suit, and C alleges that A was entrusted with the lands by D (widow of B) and after her death by C, it must be held that the onus of proving such entrustment of the lands is on C: (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 814 (D.B.).

105. Burden of proving that case of accused comes within exceptions.—When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions in the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860), or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances.

It cannot be laid down as a matter of law that no land in the Poona Cantonment could have been the subject-matter of private ownership before or after the settlement of the Cantonment limits. Thus, where some lands in the Cantonment were taken over by Government on the ground that they were resumable, held, the evidence relating to the terms on which the land was resumable must be placed before the Court by Government. Further, the conclusion which emerges from the consideration of the evidence in a particular case cannot be put on the pedestal of a proposition of law in another case. On the facts of each case, it will have to be found out whether the land in a Cantonment area belongs to the Government and whether there is evidence before the Court in regard to the actual tenure of this land. Till such evidence is adduced and found reliable, it would be unsafe to assume that the land belonging to a private person was taken over by the Government in pursuance of one or the other of the regulations framed by the Government. [A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 1, Rel. on; (1911) 13 Bom.L.R. 788 (P.C.), Disting.]: A.I.R. 1980 Bom. 9 (D.B.).

Where the settlees of a Housing Board Colony sought a mandamus to stop the Board from constructing building on the open space shown in the Colony's site plan as "reserved for other utility" and maintain it as such, held, that alone was not sufficient to raise the presumption that the area was earmarked for the settlees' common use; the burden of proof not discharged by the settlees: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 236: 1982 B.L.J.R. 357: 1982 B.L.J. 411 (D.B.).

The burden of proving the circumstances bringing the case under section 335 lies on A.

sense of introducing such evidence as will overcome the presumption of the absence of circumstances bringing the case within an exception. In the case of an accused when the burden is on him to prove an issue, he is not called upon to prove beyond all reasonable doubt, or in default to incur a verdict of guilty; it is sufficient if he succeeds in proving a prima facie case: A.I.R. 1950 Him. Pra. 18: 51 Cr.L.J. 786. The burden of proof laid on the accused in such a case is such as rests upon a plaintiff or defendant who is required to prove an issue in civil proceedings: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 623. See also A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 123.

S. 105 places "burden of proof" on the accused in the first part and in the second part we find a presumption which the Court can draw regarding the absence of the circumstances which presumption is always rebuttable. Therefore, taking the section as a whole the "burden of proof" and the presumption have to be considered together. It is axiomatic when the evidence is sufficient as to prove the existence of a fact conclusively then no difficulty arises. But where the accused introduces material to displace the presumption which may affect the prosecution case or create a reasonable doubt about the existence of one or other ingredients of the offence and then it would amount to a case where prosecution failed to prove its own case beyond reasonable doubt. The initial obligatory presumption that the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances gets lifted when a plea of exception is raised. More so when there are circumstances on the record (gathered from the prosecution evidence, chief and cross-examinations, probabilities and circumstances, if any, introduced by the accused, either by adducing evidence or otherwise) creating a reasonable doubt about the existence of the ingredients of the offence. In case of such a reasonable doubt, the Court has to give the benefit of the same to the accused. The accused may also show on the basis of the material a preponderance of probability in favour of his plea. If there are absolutely no circumstances at all in favour of the existence of such an exception then the rest of the enquiry does not arise in spite of a mere plea being raised. But if the accused succeeds in creating a reasonable doubt or shows preponderance of probability in favour of his plea, the obligation on his part under S. 105 gets discharged and he would be entitled to an acquittal: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1459: (1990) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 304: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1510.

The burden of proving the existence of the circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exception is upon the accused but this burden does not absolve the prosecution from discharging its initial burden: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 605; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563; A..R. 1968 S.C. 702. The evidence though insufficient to establish the exception may be sufficient to negative one or more ingredients of the offence, thus, casting a reasonable doubt on the case of the prosecution. The burden which rests on the accused to prove the exception is not of the same rigour as the burden of the prosecution to prove the charge beyond reasonable doubts: 1977 Raj.L.W. 212 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1570: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 764; 1989 Cr.L.J. 168 (Ori.) (D.B.).

S. 105 calls upon the accused to show that the circumstances bringing the case within the exceptions are present, as the Court cannot suo motu presume the "existence of the circumstances". The burden of proving the existence of circumstance must be liberally construed and the benefit should go in favour of the accused in view of the existent social millieu: (1987) 1 Crimes 791: 1988 Cr.L.J. 223 (Gau.) (D.B.).

The general rule in criminal cases is that the accused must always be presumed to be innocent and that the onus of proving the accused guilty of the charge against him is on the prosecution. S. 105 is an important qualification of this rule, and in view of that section the prosecution is not obliged to prove absence of facts which might bring the case of the accused within a special exception which the accused might plead in defence. It is for the accused to offer some explanation of the prosecution evidence, and if this appears to the Court reasonable, even though not beyond doubt, and to be consistent with the innocence of the accused, he should be given the benefit of that doubt: I.L.R. (1948) Nag. 903: A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 163. K.C. Das Gupta, J.—Where the evidence adduced by the accused to show that the case falls within an exception fails to satisfy the Court of the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception pleaded, the accused is still entitled to be acquitted, if on a consideration of the evidence of both sides, the Court is left in a state of reasonable doubt as to whether the accused is or not entitled to the exception pleaded: the test is not whether the accused has proved beyond reasonable doubt that he comes within the exception, but whether he has succeeded in throwing a reasonable doubt on the question of his guilt. Standard of proof required from the accused is not the standard of proof required from the prosecution. Per Sen, J. (contra.)—The proposition of law that the burden of proving everything essential to the establishment of a charge is upon the prosecution and that burden never shifts is not affected by any onus which is cast upon the accused by S. 105 of the Evidence Act. The standard of proof under S. 105 of the Evidence Act is the same as the standard which is required of the prosecution in criminal trial. Mitter, J.—While agreeing with the view of Sen, J., held that A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 182 was not obiter and that he was bound by it: (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 279: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 258.

An accused who pleads not guilty throws on the prosecution the burden of proving that the facts alleged in the indictment are true, but if he pleads a special plea and the prosecution traverses it, the burden is on the accused of proving that the facts alleged in his plea are true. If the prosecution does not give sufficient proof of the alleged facts to establish a prima facie case, a verdict of not guilty has to be directed. [(1909) 25 T.L.R. 612, Rel. on]: I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 632: 1972 Raj.L.W. 384: 1972 W.L.N. 375.

See I.L.R. 20 All. 459; 11 Cal.W.N. 1085; 25 Cr.L.J. 1077: A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 37. Burden of proof that case comes within exceptions of the Penal Code. See I.L.R. 6 All. 220: 1898 All.W.N. 208; I.L.R. 21 All. 122. See also 1940 P.W.N. 795; I.L.R. (1947) Kar. 1.

The general burden of establishing the guilt of accused is always on the prosecution and it never shifts. Even in respect of the cases covered by S. 105 the prosecution is not absolved of its duty of discharging the burden. The accused may raise a plea of exception either by pleading the same specifically or by relying on the probabilities and circumstances obtaining in the case. He may adduce the evidence in support of his plea directly or rely on the prosecution case itself or he can indirectly introduce such circumstances by way of cross-examination and also rely on the probabilities and the other circumstances. Then the initial presumption against the accused regarding the non-existence of the circumstances in favour of his plea gets displaced and on an examination of the material if a reasonable doubt arises the benefit of it should go to the accused. The accused can also discharge the burden under S. 105 by preponderance of probabilities in favour of his plea. In case of general exceptions, special exceptions, provisos contained in the Penal Code or in any law defining the offence, the Court, after due consideration of the evidence in the light of the above principles, if satisfied, would state, in the first instance, as to which exception the accused is entitled to, then see whether he would be entitled for a complete acquittal of the offence charged or would be liable for a lesser offence and convict him accordingly: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1459: (1990) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 304: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1510.

Under S. 105, the burden is on the accused to prove that he is entitled to an exception; he can discharge the burden even without leading independent evidence; he can use prosecution evidence to show that he exercised his right of private defence; the degree of proof necessary to establish private defence is preponderance of probability; it is not as onerous as the burden of the prosecution to prove its case beyond a shadow of reasonable doubt; even if he cannot prove his plea of private defence but if can still create a reasonable doubt about the prosecution case, he is entitled to acquittal: (1993) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 305 (D.B.).

The quantum of proof required under S. 105, is not proof beyond reasonable doubt. The accused pleading right of private defence need merely make out a prima facie case, in other words, it is sufficient if he satisfies the Court of the probability of what he is called upon to establish: A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 294: I.L.R. 27 Pat. 35. Even though the accused denies in toto the facts alleged, if it appears from the evidence for the prosecution that there are reasonable grounds for holding that the case falls within an exception, the presumption enacted in the last line of S. 105 does not arise at all. The burden is on the prosecution to establish guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt, and if upon a review of all the materials on the record there appears a reasonable doubt as to whether the case falls within any exception, the prosecution has failed to discharge that burden, and the accused must be acquitted or convicted only of the minor offence, as the case may be: I.L.R. 14 Rang. 666: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 83 (F.B.).

It is for the accused persons to substantiate their plea as required by S. 105 of the Evidence Act if they can claim the benefit of any exception; but that proof may or may not be conclusive. This onus can be discharged without leading any evidence, and by bringing certain circumstances on the record which advance their plea. It is enough if they are able to prove that the version put forward by them may be true. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 97 and A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 696, Rel. on]: 1967 Cur.L.J. 850: 1968 Cr.L.J. 712 (Punj.).

Burden of proof: 1959 M.L.J. (Cr.) 986: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 48.

The initial burden of proving that the case of the accused comes within an exception is on him. But the burden of proof is not as heavy as it is on the prosecution to establish that the accused committed the offence: I.L.R. (1975) Cut. 1254: 1976 Cr.L.J. 772; (1975) 77 Punj.L.R. 676; 1976 Raj.L.W. 345: I.L.R. (1976) Raj. 499: 1977 Cr.L.J. 59; (1977) 2 Karn.L.J. 412 (D.B.); 1984 Cr.L.J. 440: (1983) 2 A.P.L.J. 270; 1985 Cr.L.J. 1943 (Bom.).

The plaintiff who wants to take advantage of an exception to a statutory bar must clearly prove that his case is covered by the exception: I.L.R. 31 Pat. 484: A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 140; I.L.R. 29 All. 685 (F.B.); 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 355 (Mys.) (D.B.); 1974 Ker.L.T. 792.

Burden is not of same nature as one which lies on prosecution to establish commission of offence beyond reasonable doubt: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 802.

Discharge of burden—Accused claiming benefit of exception need only prove his case beyond a reasonable doubt: 1968 Cr.L.J. 836 (Mys.).

According to the scope and construction of S. 105, the accused is presumed to be innocent till his guilt is established by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt. The natural corollary of the presumption is that it is not for the accused to establish his innocence. If there is even the slightest doubt as to his guilt, the benefit must go to him. Even where the law casts a burden on the accused to prove the existence of circumstances which bring the case under any of the exceptions or proviso, it does not expect the same standard of proof that is expected of the prosecution. The legal burden of proving the guilt remains on the prosecution throughout the case and never shifts. What S. 105 of the Evidence Act provides is that the Court shall not presume the existence of facts which may bring a case within the exceptions. Where in a murder charge, the prosecution evidence itself establishes the circumstances which support a plea of self-defence by the accused and which the prosecution has failed to explain, the conviction of the accused for murder cannot be sustained: 1961 M.P.L.J. 71: 1961 M.P.C. 31: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 241 (D.B.).

The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the general exceptions, which under S. 105, lies on the accused, is not so onerous as it is on the prosecution. The prosecution must prove the offence beyond reasonable doubt, but onus on the accused is as in a civil proceeding. If the accused proves that the probabilities of the case are greater on his side, the burden stands discharged though it is not established beyond reasonable doubt. In a case where positive assertions of facts are to be made, the defence case definitely becomes a weaker when the plea taken is a complete denial: 31 Cut.L.T. 516: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 1; A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 199: 32 Cut.L.T. 441: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1176.

Under S. 105, the initial burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception to S. 300 of the Penal Code is upon the accused. He cannot discharge this burden by complaining that the prosecution has not examined witnesses who are not material witnesses: 1960 M.L.J. (Cr.) 808: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 120: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 21.

It is no doubt true that by S. 105, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exceptions contained in S. 499, I.P.Code, is upon the accused and the Court starts with the presumption about the absence of such circumstances, but the burden is not as heavy as is required for positive proof of an event or fact. The degree of proof is not as high as is required of the prosecution: 1971 All.L.J. 1005.

If the accused is able to succeed in raising a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court with regard to either the requisite intention or the requisite knowledge, he has discharged the burden of proving the exception under S. 105. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563; A.I.R. 1968 Del. 177, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1978 J.&K. 53: 1977 Kash.L.J. 94 (D.B.).

In view of S. 105, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code is on the accused. But the accused is not required to prove the facts beyond reasonable doubt; if on a review of the evidence the Court is left in doubt whether the circumstances bring the case within the general exception, the accused is entitled to an acquittal. All that may be necessary for the accused is to offer some explanation of the prosecution evidence, and if this appears to the Court to be reasonable, even though not beyond doubt and to be consistent with the innocence of the accused, he should be given the benefit of it. No such circumstances to bring the case of an accused within an exception shall be presumed unless he has introduced evidence on the point by cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses or by adducing defence evidence or by stating the circumstances in his examination under S. 342, Cr.P.Code, if such statement read with the circumstances brought out create a reasonable doubt that the plea may be true. The burden does not, in other words, extend to proving the defence affirmatively but the probability of the truth of the defence must be reasonably probable. This does not mean that mere statement of the accused is enough, but what is necessary, is that it must be reasonably probable: 1966 Cr.L.J. 841: 1966 Jab.L.J. 587: 1966 M.P.L.J. 877.

The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the "exception" or "proviso" is no doubt cast on the accused by S. 105, but this does not in any way absolve the prosecution of the burden laid on it by S. 102. The burden of proof so far as the entire "proceeding" is concerned, remains on the prosecution even though the burden of the "fact in issue" pleaded by the accused is cast upon him. Hence, it is manifest that even in cases to which S. 105 applies the prosecution has to prove the guilt of the accused: I.L.R. (1941) All. 843: 1941 All.L.J. 619: A.I.R. 1941 All. 402 (F.B.).

The last words of S. 105 show that the Court is to presume the absence of circumstances bringing the case of the accused within an exception. They imply that until and unless the accused discharges the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception, the Court is bound to hold the other way. As to the standard of proof required to discharge that burden, the authorities show that it is the same as in a civil case. The accused must vary the proof to a preponderance of probability in favour of the exception: (1981) 20 Del.L.T. 41 (S.N.). See also A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 960; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 660: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 218: 1980 Cr.L.J. 459.

When the accused sets up a plea of general exception under the Penal Code, the burden is upon him to establish that plea, although he is not required to establish it beyond reasonable doubt: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1416 (Gau.) (D.B.).

The burden to prove the existence of circumstances to bring a case within any of the exceptions, technically lies upon the accused person, as laid down in S. 105, Evidence Act. But the burden has not to be discharged in the same manner as by the prosecution in proving a charge against the accused. The burden can be discharged by the accused either by himself leading evidence or by merely placing reliance upon the admission of the prosecution witnesses or on the circumstances of the case proving or indicating in the affirmative the existence of such circumstances. On consideration of all such evidence or circumstances the burden would be discharged if the accused is able to establish the defence beyond any doubt. But even if the evidence or the circumstances do not reach that mark to prove the exception beyond doubt, accused would still be entitled to the benefit of the exception, if he satisfies the Court that there exists a reasonable possibility of the existence of the circumstances to bring the case within the exception: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1291: A.I.R. 1956 Bhopal 57.

See also the under-mentioned decision. No doubt, the prosecution has to prove the case beyond all reasonable doubt, and the benefit of any doubt must be given to the accused; but the proof and the possible doubt is related to the preparation of the offence, the circumstances in which it was committed, and the complicity of the accused. In other words, the benefit of the doubt which the law gives on the presumption of innocence is available only where the prosecution has not been able to connect the accused with the occurrence. It has nothing to do with the mental state of the accused. For that purpose alongwith the presumption of innocence the law has created another presumption albeit rebuttable, that every person shall be presumed to be sane: S. 105, Evidence Act places a burden upon the accused, which is that where the accused pleads insanity in opposition to the presumption created by the law, the burden of establishing his insanity is upon him. This burden the accused cannot discharge merely by creating a fleeting doubt about his sanity. He is not required to do it by evidence more cogent than a plaintiff or a defendant is required to give in order to establish an issue in a civil litigation. While the burden of proof may not go higher than that, merely creating a doubt about sanity is not that proof. The accused has to establish facts and circumstances from which the Court may reasonably infer that the accused was at the time of the commission of the offence by reason of insanity of mind incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. This burden cannot be discharged without establishing the facts required for an affirmative finding about insanity: 1956 Nag.L.J. 304: A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 187, overruled on another point in A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563.

The test is not whether the accused has proved beyond all reasonable doubt that he comes within any exception to the Indian Penal Code, but whether in setting up his defence he has established a reasonable doubt in the case of the prosecution and has thereby earned his right to an acquittal: I.L.R. 14 Rang. 666: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 83 (F.B.).

Burden of proof in criminal trial: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1654: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 41.

If it is apparent from the evidence on the record, whether produced by the prosecution or by the defence that the general exception would apply when the presumption is removed and it is open to the Court to consider whether the evidence proves to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused comes within the exception: I.L.R. 45 All. 329: A.I.R. 1923 All. 327 (2). See also 1941 All.L.J. 619: A.I.R. 1941 All. 402 (F.B.); I.L.R. 3 Lah. 144: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 1; 1987 Raj.Cr.C. 460 (D.B.) [Even when the accused does not take the plea of any of the exceptions, it is Court's duty to examine whether the case comes within any of the exceptions of the Indian Penal Code.]

The burden of proof in a criminal trial is always on the prosecution, and it is only shifted on to the accused in so far as the latter may set up the existence of circumstances bringing his case within any of the exceptions. The mere fact that the defence theory is rejected will not prove the guilt of the accused: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 485.

Even in a case to which S. 105 applies, an accused may rely upon an exception in his defence and fail to prove it, and yet be entitled to acquittal, for the prosecution may have failed to prove all the necessary elements in the offence of which the accused has been charged or the accused may, by his statement, read with the other evidence on record, have raised a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court and so have entitled himself to an acquittal: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209. Once the prosecution is found to have established that an offence was committed by the accused the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing his case within any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code or within any special exception contained in any other part of that Code must lie on the accused and the Court has to presume the absence of such circumstances. Thus, the burden of proving that the accused had acted in exercise of the right of self-defence which is in the nature of an exception is on him. This burden can be discharged otherwise than by producing defence evidence but in those cases the version of the accused must be proved to have been established or in any case prima facie made out either by the prosecution evidence or by circumstances proved on behalf of the prosecution or elicited by the accused in his cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution. The accused need not be called upon to establish right of self-defence unless the prosecution has succeeded in proving a case. But in a case where it has succeeded in making out the main facts, the prosecution cannot be thrown out merely because the prosecution evidence is to be regarded as unreliable on a few points: (1943) 45 Punj.L.R. 393: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 97; (1987) 1 Crimes 791: 1988 Cr.L.J. 223 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within an exception of S. 300 of the Penal Code is upon the accused and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. There is nothing in the Evidence Act to suggest that as regards the standard of proof required for the prosecution and defence the numerical values of the two sets of probabilities ought to be the same or that they ought not to be the same though in practice it may well be that the standard of proof required to bring the case within one of the exceptions in the Penal Code is lower than the standard of proof required of the prosecution to establish its own case: 1952 Cr.L.J. 137: A.I.R. 1952 Sau 3. Per Gurnam Singh J.—Assuming that the burden of proving the exception is on the accused, he can discharge this burden by relying on prosecution evidence without producing any defence evidence and even without making his own statement claiming the benefit of the exception. If the Court comes to a conclusion from the prosecution evidence itself that the accused is entitled to the benefit of an exception it should give the accused that benefit even though he may not plead exception and rely on it. In case a benefit of an exception is claimed by an accused person the burden placed on him is comparatively very light than the burden placed on the prosecution to establish the guilt of an accused person. In a criminal trial the burden of establishing the guilt of the accused always lies on the prosecution and it never shifts, but when the accused has claimed the benefit of an exception his duty under S. 105, Evidence Act, is to introduce such evidence as will displace the presumption of the absence of the circumstances bringing the case within the exception claimed and it will be sufficient if the Court is satisfied that such circumstances may have existed. However, when such an exception is not pleaded but it appears from the prosecution evidence that there are reasonable grounds for holding that the case of the accused falls within an exception, the presumption enacted in S. 105, Evidence Act, does not arise. The burden of proving the guilt of the accused remains on the prosecution. If upon review of the evidence and the circumstances present on the record there is reasonable doubt as to whether the case falls within an exception the prosecution has failed to discharge that burden and the accused is entitled either to acquittal or to benefit of the exception as the case may be. Per Passey, J.—The burden of proving the charge levelled against an accused person lies upon the prosecution and it is the prosecution who has to prove every element that goes to make up the offence the commission whereof is attributed to the accused. That onus never shifts on to the accused. But the prosecution cannot be expected to foresee or anticipate the defence which the accused would take up and it cannot, therefore, be the duty of the prosecution to lead evidence so extensively and so comprehensively as to repel all possible defences by the accused. If the accused depends for his defence upon an exception he has to prove it. He may not lead positive evidence to establish the exception or he may not even say that he is protected by a particular exception. It may be enough if he can upon a consideration of the evidence as a whole show that he is helped in invoking the exception, and if a reference to that evidence can create doubt in the mind of the Court whether the exception would come into play or not, the accused may be entitled to the benefit of that doubt. In the absence of any evidence, direct or circumstantial, leading to the necessary inference that the accused had acted under grave and sudden provocation the benefit of the Exception (1) to S. 300, I.P. Code, cannot be extended to him. Per Chopra, J. (on difference between Gurnam Singh and Passey, JJ.). It is correct that the accused is not bound to state the truth, nor it is necessary that the exception should be specifically pleaded; but at the same time it must be said that it is not a circumstance which is wholly irrelevant or one which should be altogether ignored while deciding the question. S. 105, Evidence Act places the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing his case within any of the exceptions upon the accused. The plea in support of which no evidence is led by the accused loses some of its force, however slight, if it is not raised by him even in his statement at the trial. By this is not meant that it is always necessary for the accused to take up the plea and lead evidence before he can be given the benefit of the exception. The law does not prevent an accused person from setting up an alternative or even inconsistent defence, e.g., plea of alibi and a plea of self-defence. It is not necessary that the exception should be specifically pleaded, nor is it necessary that the accused should produce evidence to establish it. The burden that lies on the accused can be discharged if it is apparent from the evidence produced by the prosecution that an exception is applicable and the Court must give the benefit of the exception to the accused, even though the accused denies the commission of the alleged act in toto. There is a difference of degree of certainty required in cases where the burden of proving a fact is on the prosecution and those where the burden of proof is on the accused. The prosecution has to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt but when the burden of proof of a fact lies on the accused he is said to have discharged it by creating reasonable doubt regarding its existence. In other words, if the Court, upon a consideration of the evidence is left in reasonable doubt whether the circumstances bringing the case within the exception pleaded by the accused do exist or not, the accused can be given the benefit of the exception: I.L.R. (1953) Patiala 655: A.I.R. 1954 Pepsu 160. See also 25 Cut.L.T. 16: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 141; 1960 All.L.J. 136: A.I.R. 1960 All. 223.

See however the undermentioned decision. The burden of proving that the accused committed the offence is on the prosecution. If there is any doubt left in the mind of the Court on this point, the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt and the prosecution fails. If the prosecution satisfies the Court that the accused committed the offence and the accused pleads an exception in defence, S. 105, Evidence Act casts the burden of proving the exception on him and enacts that the Courts shall presume the absence of circumstances which will bring his case within any of the exceptions. If the materials before the Court fail to satisfy the Court about existence of these circumstances but merely create a doubt whether such circumstances exist or not, the accused fails to discharge the burden and he must be convicted. The view that the Court is entitled to review the prosecution evidence as a whole and if even after the accused's explanation is rejected it finds that there is a doubt whether the accused has made out the circumstances which brought his case within the exception, he should be acquitted is not correct: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1234: A.I.R. 1956 Sau. 77. See also A.I.R. 1947 Bom. 38 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1952 Bom. 184; A.I.R. 1952 Sau. 3. However, see 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 201 (J.&K.).

When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code or within any special exception (example, S. 499, Penal Code) or proviso contained in any other part of the Code, is upon him and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. The burden that is cast on the accused in a criminal case by virtue of S. 105, no doubt, is not so onerous as the primary burden cast on the prosecution to prove the offence beyond reasonable doubt. It is sufficient if the accused who pleads an exception satisfies the Court of the probability of what he has been called upon to establish and if on the evidence it appears probable that the defence set up is true he is entitled to a decision in his favour even though he may not have succeeded, if proving the truth of his version beyond reasonable doubt. But in a prosecution for libel, to prove that the case of the accused falls under any of the exceptions under S. 499, Penal Code, it is not sufficient if the accused is able to create a doubt that the statement may or may not be true: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 31: A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 277: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 834.

What S. 105 provides is that the Court shall not presume the existence of facts, which may bring a case within the exceptions; that is, the initial or evidential burden of introducing the evidence to establish any such circumstances is on accused person. Such evidence may be introduced by the prosecution themselves or it may be introduced by the defence by cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses or by the statement of the accused or by defence evidence. Therefore, where such evidence has been introduced in any of the aforesaid ways and after consideration of that evidence the Court is of opinion that the accused person may rely on any of the exceptions, the burden of the accused under S. 105 is discharged: 1963 Ker.L.T. 538: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 262.

Where a party claims an exception to the general provision of the law, the onus lies on him to prove that the exception applies: I.L.R. 12 Rang. 55: A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 90. See also A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 183.

It is for the accused to prove the facts essential for the purpose of bringing the case within any of the exceptions: 144 I.C. 420: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 142. See also 165 I.C. 458: 1936 O.W.N. 1013; 1987 Cr.L.J. 1289 (Madh. Pra.).

There is no distinction between a case in which the exception is contained in the body of the statute imposing the prohibition and a case in which it is not so included: (1941) 43 Bom.L.R. 519: A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 273.

Offence under—Onus to prove exception is on accused: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 321: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 719: (1965) 78 Mad.L.W. 110.

Presumption under—Nature of—It only operates initially—S. 105 makes possible both kinds of acquittal one by proving plea fully and another by raising genuine doubt in the case—Line of reasoning in Parbhoo's case—Evidence as a whole (including evidence in support of general exception) creating reasonable doubt in the mind of Court as to guilt of accused—He is entitled to acquittal.

The Majority decision in A.I.R. 1941 All. 402 (F.B.), is still good law. The accused person who pleads an exception is entitled to be acquitted if upon a consideration of the evidence as a whole (including the evidence given in support of the plea of the general exception) a reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the Court about the guilt of the accused: Per Majority in A.I.R. 1970 All. 51: 1970 Cr.L.J. 132: 1969 All.L.J. 657 (F.B.).

Where a person accused of committing an offence sets up at his trial a plea that he is protected by the exceptions, general or special in the Penal Code or any other law defining the offence, the burden of proving the exception undoubtedly lies upon him. But this burden is only undertaken by the accused if the prosecution case establishes that in the absence of such a plea he would be guilty of the offence charged. Where the prosecution case did not by reliable evidence establish affirmatively that the accused had done any act which rendered him liable for the offence of murder and his responsibility, if any, arose only out of the plea raised by him, if the plea amounted to a confession of guilt the Court could convict him relying upon that plea, but if it amounted to admission of facts and raised a plea of justification the Court could not proceed to deal with the case as if the admission of facts which were not part of the prosecution case was true, and the evidence did not warrant the plea of justification: I.L.R. (1963) 1 Ker. 458: 1963 Ker.L.T. 450: (1963) 1 Ker.L.R. 468: A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 222.

Criminal trial—Nature and extent of onus of proof on prosecution and nature and extent of onus of proof on accused seeking to bring his case within exception: 1970 Cr.L.J. 83 (Andh. Pra.).

The law in India places the burden of proof upon the prosecution to bring the guilt home to the accused and does not admit of any exception. The presumption of innocence has to be dislodged by the prosecution by dealing evidence pointing to the guilt of the accused. Under S. 105 of the Evidence Act the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general or special exceptions is placed on the accused. It is the duty of the accused to introduce such evidence as will displace the presumption of the absence of the circumstances bringing its case within any exception, and that will suffice to satisfy the Court that such circumstances may have existed. Despite what is stated in S. 105, Evidence Act, the prosecution is not absolved from the burden laid on it by S. 102: 1959 Cr.L.J. 901: A.I.R. 1959 Punj. 332. Per Dunkley, J.—The phrase "burden of proof" is used in two distinct meanings in the Indian Evidence Act, viz., the burden of establishing a case and the burden of introducing evidence. In a criminal trial the burden of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies upon the prosecution, and that burden never changes. This principle is enacted in S. 101, and in this section the term "burden of proof", is used in the first of its meanings, namely, the burden of establishing a case. But it would clearly impose an impossible task on the prosecution if the prosecution were required to anticipate every possible defence of the accused and to establish that each such defence could not be made out, and of this task the prosecution is relieved by provisions of S. 105 and is closely allied section, S. 106. In S. 105 the phrase "burden of proof" is clearly used in its second sense, namely, the duty of introducing evidence. The way of the accused under S. 105 is to introduce such evidence as will displace the presumption of the absence of circumstances bringing the case within an exception in the Penal Code, and will suffice to satisfy the Court that such circumstances may have existed. The burden of the issue as to the existence of such circumstances is then shifted to the prosecution, which has still to discharge the major burden of proving on the whole case the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. The conclusion, therefore, is that if the Court either is satisfied from the examination of the accused and the evidence adduced by him or from circumstances appearing from the prosecution evidence that the existence of circumstances bringing the case within exception or exceptions placed by the accused has been proved or upon a review of all the evidence is left in reasonable doubt whether such circumstances do exist or not, the accused, in the case of a general exception, is entitled to be acquitted, or, in the case of a special exception, can be convicted only of the minor offence: I.L.R. 14 Rang. 666: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 83 (F.B.).

It is not always necessary that circumstances bringing case within general or special exception should be established by the evidence adduced on behalf of the accused. It is sufficient if upon a review of all the evidence on record, the Court is either satisfied as to the existence of the circumstances pleaded or considers the fact of their existence to be so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that they existed: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 181.

Though the initial onus is upon the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused, but when an accused pleads general exceptions, the burden of proof will be upon him. However, it is not necessary that in order to discharge the onus, he must adduce evidence from his own side. The accused, thus, is entitled to show that he comes within the purview of the general exceptions provided in Chapter IV of the Indian Penal Code relying on the basis of the evidence itself and/or the circumstances which have been brought on record showing the conduct of the accused prior thereto or after commission of the crime: (1991-1) 39 B.L.J.R. 397 (D.B.).

Even where an exception is not specifically pleaded by an accused person, he will be entitled to the benefit thereof, if upon the consideration of the evidence as a whole a reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the Court whether the accused is not entitled to the benefit of the exception: A.I.R. 1958 J.&K. 23.

Court can take into consideration even the facts proved which establish the defence if the accused has not raised that plea or defence: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 211: 1954 Nag.L.J. 429; A.I.R. 1951 Kutch 11; I.L.R. (1953) 3 Raj. 567; 1959 Ker.L.T. 1264; A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 258; 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 262 (Ker.); 1970 All.Cr.R. 482; (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 197; (1985) 1 An.W.R. 31.

The principle cannot be accepted that in every case the bare word of an accused person is sufficient to discharge the burden of proof of an exception. There must be some corroboration, direct or indirect, of the statement of the accused person: (1959) 61 Bom.L.R. 35: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 463.

Provisos engrafted on main part of penal sections to the effect that under certain conditions the offences, mentioned in the said penal portions, would not be deemed to have been committed—Onus with regard to such provisions is on the accused: 1953 Cr.L.J. 818: A.I.R. 1953 Cal. 401.

General exceptions pleaded by accused—Defence evidence failing to satisfy Court—Evidence as a whole creating reasonable doubt—Accused is entitled to acquittal: 1958 All.L.J. 511: A.I.R. 1959 All. 233.

In a murder trial the accused did not disclose the circumstances in which he murdered his wife either in his recorded confession or in the committal Court, but disclosed them for the first time in his statement before the Sessions Court. In an appeal, before the High Court against his conviction under S. 302, the Counsel for the accused relied on those circumstances for bringing his case under Exception 1 to S. 300, Penal Code. Held, that the mere fact that the accused disclosed the circumstances only before the Sessions Judge was not sufficient by itself in order to dismiss the same out of consideration as being an after thought. The Counsel for the accused is entitled to rely upon any circumstances which if accepted, would convert the offence into a lesser one, even if such circumstances had not been placed before the Court at an earlier stage. The question is whether such circumstances did exist, or not, though it was not disclosed at an earlier stage: (1957) 2 M.L.J. 9: I.L.R. (1957) Mad. 905: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 541. Homicide—Exception—Onus. See A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 81; A.I.R. 1958 J.&K. 23.

Where an accused claims the benefit of an exception, the burden of proving that exception lies on him only if the prosecution case establishes that in the absence of such a plea he would be guilty. Where there is no reliable evidence to support prosecution case and the responsibility arose only out of the plea raised by accused, the Court could convict him only if the plea amounted to a confession of the guilt: (1970) 72 Punj.L.R. 181: 1970 Cr.L.J. 982: A.I.R. 1970 Punj. 301.

Criminal trial—Accused previous convicts—Prosecution not relieved of its duty to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt: 1969 Cr.L.J. 739: A.I.R. 1969 Goa 68.

Criminal trial—Accused not examining himself—Presumption cannot be drawn against him—Burden is on prosecution to prove its case: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1950: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1393.

Exceptions not pleaded in Court below cannot be allowed to be raised in appeal: I.L.R. 21 All. 121; I.L.R. 23 Cal. 604; 3 All.L.J. 652; I.L.R. 17 Bom. 573: 8 I.C. 259; (1903-4) 8 Cal.W.N. 74; I.L.R. 32 All. 451: 7 All.L.J. 438; 4 P.W.R. 1910 (Cr.).

2. Applicability.—Sub-Cl. 17(1), Rajasthan Food Grains Control Order, 1949, cannot be treated as an exception to sub-Cl. 17(2). Hence, S. 105, Evidence Act, has no application and the burden of proof is on the prosecution to prove that the foodgrains, in excess of that prescribed under sub-Cl. 17(1) had been in possession of the accused for more than a week. The burden of proof is always on the prosecution even in cases where it is within the special knowledge of the accused as to for what period he has been holding the possession of the foodgrains: 1956 Raj.L.W. 378: I.L.R. (1956) 6 Raj. 316: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 178.

3. Alibi.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 24, supra). S. 105 is applicable to exceptions and not to alibi as alibi is not an exception under the Penal Code or any other law. Alibi is governed by S. 11 of the Evidence Act and the burden to prove an alibi is always on the accused and he must prove it to the satisfaction of the Court: (1981) 83 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 9: 1981 Cr.L.J. 667; (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 464 (D.B.); 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 252 (D.B.); (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 422; (1990) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 593 (Del.) (D.B.).

The burden of proving alibi undoubtedly lies on the accused setting up the defence. But even so, the burden of proving the case against the accused is on the prosecution irrespective of whether or not the accused had made out a plausible defence: 1956 Cr.L.J. 827: (S.) A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 460; (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 650.

Accused pleading alibi must show that he was so far away at the time of occurrence that he could not have been present at the place of occurrence: (1987) 63 Cut.L.T. 501 (D.B.). See also (1991) 2 Pat.L.J.R. 358.

Where the alibi pleaded in a murder case was that the accused's blood and urine were being examined and he was being medically operated upon and, therefore, could not be present at the scene of murder when there was no evidence as to the time of such examination and operation when the hospital and the place of murder were connected by a pitched road on which busses plied at short intervals, held, it could not be said that it was impossible for the accused to be present at the scene of murder when it was committed; plea of alibi not established: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 109: 1972 Cr.L.J. 22.

4. Corruption cases.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 33, supra). Although the onus lies on the prosecution to prove the charge (under S. 5(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act), yet where the entrustment is proved or admitted, it will be difficult for the prosecution to prove the actual mode or manner of misappropriation and in such a case the prosecution would have to rely largely on the truth or the falsity of the explanation given by the accused. It is sufficient if the accused is able to prove his case by the standard of preponderance of probabilities as envisaged by S. 5 of the Evidence Act, as a result of which he succeeds not because he proves his case to the hilt but because probability of the version given by him throws doubt on the prosecution case and, therefore, the prosecution cannot be said to have established the charge beyond reasonable doubt. Once the accused gives reasonable and probable explanation, it is for the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the explanation is absolutely false. In a criminal trial, it is not at all obligatory on the accused to produce evidence in support of his defence and for the purpose of proving his version he can rely on the admissions made by the prosecution witnesses or on the documents filed by the prosecution. In these circumstances, the Court has to probe and consider the materials relied upon by the defence instead of raising an adverse inference against the accused, for not producing evidence in support of his defence, because the prosecution cannot derive any strength or support from the weakness of the defence case. [(1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 510, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 170: (1976) 2 Kam.L.J. (Jr.) 65 (S.N.) 107: (1976) 2 S.C.W.R. 450.

Prevention of Corruption Act, S. 4—General burden to prove ingredients of offence under S. 161, Penal Code does not lie on prosecution—Creating reasonable doubt in mind of Court not sufficient—It is enough for accused to prove preponderance of probability: 1968 Cr.L.J. 150: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 17.

5. Insanity.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 56, supra). When an accused raises a plea falling under S. 84, I.P.Code (plea of insanity), it being in the nature of an exception, the burden of proof is on him to establish the same as per S. 105 of the Evidence Act. Every person is presumed to know the law, and the natural consequence of his act; and as per S. 105 of the Evidence Act, the Court shall presume the absence of exception. In such a case, the prosecution is not bound to show that the accused at the relevant time was not insane. However, thereby the onus of prosecution to prove the prosecution case beyond the shadow of reasonable doubt would not be effected: 1994 Cr.L.J. 450 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Criminal trial—Onus lies on accused to prove insanity—This burden is not as heavy as it is on prosecution to prove an offence: 1969 Cr.L.J. 623: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 102; 1987 Cr.L.J. 1289: 1986 Cur.Cr.J. 167 (Madh. Pra.).

Plea of insanity—The general burden is on prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt not only the actus reus lent but also the mens rea. However, if the accused pleads insanity, the onus is on him to prove it: 1969 Cr.L.J. 259: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 15; (1987) 2 Crimes 342: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1561: 1987 Cal.Cr.L.R. 1 (D.B.).

A plea of insanity or temporary insanity is to be generally taken by the defence and being a special plea the onus is upon the accused to prove that he was suffering from such insanity at the time of occurrence.

In a case where the evidence adduced by the prosecution showed that the accused was temporarily insane for a period of about one month prior to the occurrence and the witnesses narrated in one voice about his mental infirmity, the ends of justice required that the appellant ought to be examined by an expert in mental disorders: (1992) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 411: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 314: 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 32: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 1163: 1991 Cal.Cr.L.R. 304 (D.B.).

The initial burden of proving that the case of the accused comes within an exception is on him, but this onus may be discharged by producing evidence as to conduct of the accused shortly prior to, at the time of, and immediately after the commission of, the offence and also by evidence showing his mental condition and his part history, etc., in order to show that he was of unsound mind at the time of commission of the offence so as to attract the application of the provision of S. 84, I.P.Code. If it is so clear from the evidence brought on the record, whether produced by the prosecution or by the defence, that the case of the accused comes within the general exception, the Court is fully justified to consider whether that evidence proves to the satisfaction of the Court, that the accused's case actually comes within that exception: (1975) 77 Punj.L.R. 676: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1605.

In a case where the accused plead insanity at the time of commission of the offence, the burden of proof of this plea is undoubtedly on the accused as laid down in law. Of course, this burden is not so stringent as the burden of proof on the prosecution in a criminal case. If by defence evidence or from the prosecution evidence itself the accused is able to raise a reasonable doubt as to his sanity at the time of the commission of the offence, the accused may be entitled to the benefit of S. 84, Penal Code: 1971 Cr.L.J. 869 (Assam) (D.B.).

Every person is presumed to be sane until the contrary is established and the burden is on the accused to prove that at the time of committing the offence he was by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 1211 (D.B.). See also A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 187, cited under Note 1, supra.

In case of plea of insanity in a case of murder (1) the prosecution must prove beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had committed the offence with the requisite mens rea; and the burden of proving that always rests on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial, (2) there is a rebuttable presumption that the accused was not insane, when he committed the crime, in the sense laid down by S. 84 of the Penal Code: the accused may rebut it by placing before the Court all the relevant evidence—oral, documentary or circumstantial, but the burden of proof upon him is no higher than that rests upon a party to civil proceedings; and (3) even if the accused was not able to establish conclusively that he was insane at the time he committed the offence, the evidence placed before the Court by the accused or by the prosecution may raise a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court as regards one or more of the ingredients of the offence, including mens rea of the accused and in that case the Court would be entitled to acquit the accused on the ground that the general burden of proof resting on the prosecution was not discharged. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 605; A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 209; (1878) 4 Couper 70, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 187, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563: (1964) 7 S.C.R. 361; I.L.R. (1973) 23 Raj. 919: 1973 Raj.L.W. 535: 1973 W.L.N. 463.

Proof of insanity—Burden of proof lies on accused—Discharge of burden: (1964) 5 Guj.L.R. 474.

Insanity of the accused is a special defence and the burden to establish it lies upon him; such burden is certainly not as heavy as on the prosecution to prove the charge; the accused can discharge his burden either by leading evidence or from the prosecution evidence. However, before the question of the accused having discharged his burden is taken up, the Court has first to determine whether the prosecution has discharged its burden. The accused would be entitled to acquittal not only by proving insanity but also by creating a reasonable doubt by that evidence in the prosecution case: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2219: (1991-1) 11 Guj.L.H. 510 (D.B.).

Plea of insanity—Burden of proof—Nature and extent of proof: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 135 (Ker.).

Plea of insanity to be proved by the accused: 21 All.L.J. 776: 77 I.C. 236: A.I.R. 1924 All. 186 (2); A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 143; A.I.R. 1955 Pat. 209; A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 104; A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 68. Plea of insanity—Standard of proof required. See A.I.R. 1957 Ori. 168.

Where the accused pleads insanity, the burden though not as heavy as upon the prosecution in a criminal case, is upon the accused to prove that he was of unsound mind at the time of the commission of the offence and as such, incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that he was doing what was either wrong or contrary to law. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 216: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 299.

In order to find whether the accused was by reason of unsoundness of mind incapable of knowing the nature of the act, the Court may rely not only on defence evidence but also on what is elicited from the prosecution witnesses as well as on circumstantial evidence consisting of the previous history of the accused and his subsequent conduct in the surrounding circumstances including absence of motive. Generally motivation for the crime with which he is charged assumes unusual importance in such a case when sanity of the accused is called in question: (1992) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 411: 1991 Cal.Cr.L.R. 304: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 1163: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 314: 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 32 (D.B.).

An insane person is prima facie incompetent to plead insanity and indeed the very plea, if taken, would establish his sanity. As for the failure of the accused to adduce evidence to prove insanity, though the burden is on the accused to prove the exception of which he claims the benefit, it is now well-accepted that even if he lets in no evidence of his own, his case can be spelled out from the circumstances appearing in the prosecution evidence: 1959 Ker.L.J. 1444: (1960) 1 Ker.L.R. 87: 1960 Ker.L.T. 157: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1086: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 241.

The Court presumes absence of insanity in a criminal trial, this presumption, however, is rebuttable. The burden of proof of legal insanity is on the accused, though it is not as heavy as on the prosecution. The prosecution in discharging its burden in the face of the plea of legal insanity, has merely to prove the basic fact and rely upon the normal presumption of law that every one knows the law and the natural consequences of his act. To establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act, the accused was labouring under such a defect of reason from disease of mind as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or if he did not know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1897 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Insanity—Proof—Nature of: 1960 Cr.L.J. 480: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 102.

Defence of insanity—Burden of proving existence of circumstances bringing case under S. 84 lies on accused and Court must presume absence of such circumstances—Mere lack of proof by prosecution of a motive for offence cannot be a substitute for positive proof required of the defence: 1967 Cr.L.J. 494: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 92.

Burden of proof—Burden of proving offence lies on prosecution—Where necessary it has to prove intention—But where plea of insanity is invoked by accused it is for him to establish that fact: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 561: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1.

The law presumes every person of the age of discretion to be sane unless the contrary is proved. It would be most dangerous to admit the defence of insanity upon arguments derived merely from the character of the crime. The mere fact that no motive has been proved why the accused murdered his wife and child or, the fact that he made no attempt to run away when the door was broken open, would not indicate that he was insane or that he did not have the necessary mens rea for the commission of the offence: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2443: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1523.

Accused pleading insanity at time of act—Nature of burden of proof indicated: A.I.R. 1970 Goa 1.

There is no conflict between the prosecution's general burden—which never shifts—to prove all components of the offence and the special burden of the accused to make out the defence of his insanity; it is not sufficient for the prosecution to establish that the deceased's death was a consequence of the injuries inflicted by the accused but also that those injuries were caused with the intention or knowledge mentioned in S. 300 of the Indian Penal Code; it is only thereafter that the Court would consider the accused's plea of insanity. But even if the evidence of insanity is not sufficient to discharge the burden under S. 105 cast on the accused, but if it raises a reasonable doubt in the Court's mind about the existence of one or other essential ingredient of the offence, the accused is liable to be acquitted. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 605; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1971 Tripura 16: 1971 Cr.L.J. 407.

To establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must clearly be proved that at the time of committing an act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or, if he did know it, that he did not know that he was doing what was wrong or contrary to law. The crucial point of time at which unsoundness of mind should be established is the time when the crime is actually committed. The mere fact that on former occasion the accused had been occasionally subject to insane delusions or have suffered from the derangement of the mind or that subsequently he had at times behaved like a mentally deficient person is per se insufficient to bring his case within the exception. It should, however, be noted that the antecedent and subsequent conduct of the person pleading insanity is admissible in evidence as relevant facts only for the purpose of showing the state of his mind at the time the act was committed. The Court is only concerned with the state of mind of the accused at the time of the act. Where the evidence adduced fails to satisfy the Court of the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception pleaded, the accused is entitled to be acquitted if upon a consideration of the evidence on both sides the Court is left in a state of reasonable doubt as to whether the accused is or not entitled to the benefit of the exception pleaded. Where father and sister of the accused deposed that the accused was suffering from mental derangement but evidence did not show that the accused at the time of committing the act suffered from such unsoundness of mind as to make him incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law and on the other hand the evidence ruled out the possibility of such unsoundness of mind, held, the accused was not entitled to the benefit of S. 84, I.P.Code: 1988 Cr.L.J. 387 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Where in a criminal trial, the accused, who had a previous history of lunacy, takes the plea of unsoundness of mind, held, burden shifts on prosecution to establish negatively that accused was not of unsound mind when he committed offence: 1983 Cr.L.J. 619: (1983) 1 Karn.L.J. 115; (1984) 2 Crimes 788 (All.).

Under S. 105, the accused person has to discharge the burden of proving the exception relied upon by him. Thus, in the background of the medical opinion that the accused was suffering from paranoid schizophrenia which is a form of paranopid psychosis and relying on the prosecution evidence itself about the general state of mind of the accused preceding the incident and immediately after the commission of the offence, it was held that the plea of insanity was available to the accused and he was entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt: (1992) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 411: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 1163: 1991 Cal.Cr.L.R. 304: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 314: 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 32.

Murder—Accused charged with—Plea of unsoundness of mind set up—Burden lies heavily on him to prove unsoundness—He must prove that he was totally deprived of his understanding and memory—Held, accused failed to discharge burden of proof: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 806: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 213: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 33.

Exemption from criminal liability—Unsoundness of mind—When unsoundness is pleaded as a defence to a criminal charge, the burden of proof rests on the accused: 50 I.C. 991: (1918-19) 23 Cal.W.N. 621; (1940) 2 M.L.J. 1018 (plea of self-defence).

Behaviour antecedent, attendant and subsequent to the event may be relevant in finding the mental condition at the time of the event, but not those remote in time. If it comes to the notice of the Investigating Officer that the accused had a previous history of insanity, it is the duty of the Investigating Officer to investigate the mental condition of the accused and place the material before the Court.

Where the accused who had killed his child and injured his wife pleaded insanity and there was no evidence to show that the accused whose conduct was normal after the occurrence was suffering from manic depressive psychosis at the time of occurrence, held, the fact that the accused developed mental derangement about 10 months after occurrence was not sufficient to establish that the accused committed the act without knowing the nature of the act: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1372 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Where not only prior to the occurrence as also sometimes after it but also on the day of occurrence the accused showed symptoms of insanity and evidence on record was sufficient to lead to a doubt that the accused might be under a spell of madness when he shot an arrow at his father and that his explanation that he committed such act being not in control of his discerning faculties due to insanity might possibly and probably be true, held, he was entitled to the benefit of S. 84, I.P.Code: 1989 Cr.L.J. 168 (Ori.) (D.B.); 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 29 (Gau.); 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 7 (Gau.).

Where the accused pleading insanity appeared at the trial as well as on being examined to be perfectly normal, no symptom of insanity were found by the psychiatrist in his report, and no witness testified to his unsoundness of mind when he committed the murder, and not even a certificate was produced to disprove the sanity of the mind, held, the accused had failed to discharge his burden cast on him under law to prove that he was having an "unsound mind" at the time of causing the death of his wife: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1173 (Ker.) (D.B.); 1988 Cr.L.J. 1828: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 918 (Cal.) (D.B.).

The burden of proving the ingredients of insanity rests on accused and he has to show beyond shadow of doubt that he was innocent, every minor mental aberration is not sufficient to discharge the onus. Where a person attempted to hide the body of deceased, it prima facie showed his knowledge about the consequences of the act done by him and mere statement that he had gone mad before the commitment of act and he was being treated by doctor, not supported by material fact, is not sufficient to prove insanity: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 110: (1993) 75 Cut.L.T. 631 (D.B.).

The brutal and callous way in which a murder is committed, is not by itself, indicative of a insane mind: (1986) 1 Crimes 155: 1986 Cr.L.J. 27 (Ker.). Similarly, merely because a desperate offence was committed for a trifling thing, is not by itself, a pointer to insanity: (1983) 2 Crimes 166 (Cal.).

But where it was admitted by the prosecution that the accused was a lunatic and had caused the death of a child by throwing it into a pond, whether his conviction under S. 302 of the Indian Penal Code was justified. See 1981 Cr.L.J. 1205 (Gau.).

Where the accused raises plea of insanity, held, though the burden of proving such plea is not heavy, the Court should not be left with a doubt on such plea. Thus, where except for the evidence of the accused's wife, there was no other convincing evidence in support of his plea of insanity and as regards his subsequent conduct, the trial Court had observed that for a long period of seven months as the trial protracted the accused appeared in the Court but no abnormality was seen, held, the mere circumstance that without apparent motive he had committed atleast two murders and in all four ghastly murders, in itself does not lead to a reasonable inference that he suffered from insanity: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1861 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where an accused tried for murdering his own innocent two month old son despite entreaties from his wife and mother pleaded insanity and adduced no evidence in support but there was material on record that he was obsessed before, during and after the murder with the idea that the son was a devil, dangerous to the accused, his wife and all the world, held, the inference was irresistible that the accused committed the murder while suffering from legal insanity; he had sufficiently discharged the requisite burden under S. 105: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 722: 1985 Cr.L.J. 449 (D.B.).

Where the convict murdered his wife and three children pleading insanity failed to prove it but from the material on record the Court opined that the convict was provoked to commit the crime on account of some mental imbalance or some acute disturbing factor, held, the sentence of life imprisonment could not be enhanced to that of death. [A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1759, Foll.; 1985 Cr.L.J. 449: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 722 (D.B.), Disting.]: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3493 (S.C.).

The accused who was charged of committing murder in the course of committing theft, raised a defence of abnormality of mind, as impaired his mental responsibility for the act. Under S. 2(2) of the Homicide Act (English), 1957, it was for the defence to prove that he was not, for this reason, liable to be convicted of murder. While charging the jury, the Judge did not point out the difference between burden of proof on the defence and the burden of proof on the prosecution. Held that the burden of proof on the accused of the defence of diminished responsibility was not as heavy as the burden of proof on the prosecution and was the burden of showing preponderance of probability and that it was the duty of the Judge to direct the jury on the difference in the burden of proof, namely, that if the jury thought that the balance of probability was in favour of the defence, its verdict should be culpable homicide and if it did not come to the conclusion that the balance of probability was in favour of the defence, it was its duty to return the verdict of murder: (1957) 2 All E.R. 737.

Plea of insantiy has to be proved. See 1991 Cr.L.J. 2375: (1990) 92 Bom.L.R. 441 (D.B.); 1987 Cr.L.J. 618 (Ori.) (D.B.).

6. Defamation.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 40, supra). It is true that by virtue of S. 105 of the Evidence Act, the Court is bound to presume the absence of circumstances which would bring the offence within and of the special exceptions contained in S. 499, Penal Code, and the burden would primarily rest on the accused to show that that exceptions applied. But it is well known that the burden cast on the accused in a criminal case, by virtue of S. 105 of the Evidence Act, is not so onerous as the primary burden cast on the prosecution to prove the offence beyond reasonable doubt. If, therefore, on a careful review of the circumstances under which the complaint was made and the other events which have come to light, it appears to the Court that one of the exceptions to S. 499, Penal Code, may possibly apply, the accused may be held to have discharged his burden: 25 Cut.L.T. 16: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1006: A.I.R. 1959 Ori. 141 (D.B.).

Where in a defamation case under S. 500 of the Indian Penal Code no evidence was adduced by either side as to the presence or absence of good faith on the part of the accused, the presence whereof alone could entitle the accused to protection under the Exceptions 8 and 9 of S. 499 of the Code, held, the burden of proving good faith that lay on the accused not having been discharged, the accused was liable to conviction; acquittal set aside: (1984) 1 Bom.C.R. 194: 1984 Cr.L.J. 350.

7. Self-defence.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 98, supra). It is not for the accused to prove beyond reasonable doubt that he acted in self-defence; he has only to raise a probability in his favour of the same being true. He need not even set up the plea at all. [A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1079 and 1976 Cr.L.J. 697 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1921 (Gau.) (D.B.); (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 600 (D.B.). See also 1982 Cr.L.J. 173 (Ker.) (D.B.); 1982 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 201 (J.&K.) (D.B.).

It is not sufficient for the accused merely to establish that the right of private defence had commenced. He must further establish that the right had not ended: (1992) 2 Ker.L.T. 667 (D.B.).

Proof of right of private defence: 1 C.L.R. 62. An accused setting up a plea of self-defence in answer to a charge of murder has the burden on him to prove it. In the absence of proof, it is not possible for the Court to presume the truth of the plea of self-defence although the accused is shown to have had severe injuries on his person after the crime: A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 280: (1940) 2 M.L.J. 1018; (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 560.

It is no doubt true that in a criminal trial the burden of proof never shifts to the accused but where the accused plead right of self-defence by alleging their possession of the land in dispute, in fairness it is their duty to call the Patwari to prove their actual possession of the land: 1953 All.L.J. 62.

There appears in some quarters to be the opinion that where an accused person has admitted participation in a fight, in which one of the other party, is killed or injured, but pleads that he acted in the exercise of the right of self-defence, it lies heavily upon him under all circumstances to prove under

S. 105 the facts necessary to establish his plea. It must be remembered that in the vast majority of such cases in this country the accused persons are usually the only persons who could appear as witness in their own self-defence and they are barred from doing so by the law of procedure. The Courts, therefore, must be prepared to take their statements into consideration. In a case where the prosecution evidence is wholly unreliable and there is no other evidence to suggest that part of their statements in which they put forward the plea of self-defence is not correct, the Court has no other alternative but to accept their statements and act upon them: (1941) 43 Punj.L.R. 144: A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 333.

The principle that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner is no less a part of the law of this country as that of England. And, any attempt to whittle it down will no more be entertained here than in England. But whereas in India, defence of exception of private defence or grave and sudden provocation would come within the statutory exception in S. 105 of the Evidence Act, in England, it would come under no such exception and the burden it would appear, would lie on the prosecution to prove the absence of circumstances justifying such a defence if it is to prove the mens rea requisite for the offence. S. 105 of the Evidence Act squarely places the burden upon the accused and says that the Court shall presume the absence of circumstances attracting the exception. But the burden, it is well settled is not as heavy as that which rests on the prosecution of having to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt; it is no heavier than that which rests on a party in a civil proceeding. Reasonable doubt need not be excluded, preponderance of probability is enough. Logically, however, it is not enough if the evidence discloses a possible defence or self-defence or creates reasonable doubt in the mind of the Judge whether the act was done in self-defence. Held, the accused who had admitted acts of causing grievous hurt and death had failed to establish his plea of private defence and even if the true test was that it be enough if accused would succeed in creating a reasonable doubt in the mind of the Court as to whether or not he was entitled to the benefit of the exception of private defence the accused had not succeeded in creating any such doubt: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Ker. 640 (D.B.).

Right to private defence of property—Onus to prove is on accused—Nature of proof required—Making of prima facie case of exception—Meaning of: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 696: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 262. See also 11 C.L.R. 232; 1904 All.W.N. 113; A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 408.

The burden of proving the guilt always remains on the prosecution. S. 105 merely provides that the Court shall not presume the existence of facts which might bring the case within the exceptions enumerated in the Indian Penal Code or which amount to justification. That means that if no such evidence is on record, the accused runs the risk of being convicted, if the evidence against him led by the prosecution is believed. If, however, some evidence is introduced which makes out a prima facie case of the accused having acted in exercise of right of private defence, then the burden on the accused is discharged: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 85.

Ss. 96 to 106 of the Penal Code which confer and define the limits of the right of private defence constitute a general exception to the offences defined in the Code. The burden which rests on the accused to prove the exception is not of the same rigour as the burden of the prosecution to prove the charge beyond a reasonable doubt. It is enough for the accused to show, as in a civil case, that the preponderance of probabilities is in favour of his plea: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 702; A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1570. See also A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 960; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 660: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 218: 1980 Cr.L.J. 459.

Plea of self-defence—Burden lies on accused to prove circumstances to establish his case—To discharge burden it is sufficient if he makes out a prima facie case—Prosecution evidence leaving accused's guilt in doubt—Court must give benefit of doubt to accused and acquit him even though he does not prove beyond reasonable doubt the existence of such circumstances: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 41: A.I.R. 1964 Mad. 418; (1993) 75 Cut.L.T. 539 (D.B.)

In criminal cases the general rule is that the accused person must always be presumed to be innocent and the onus of proving everything essential to the establishment of the offence is on the prosecution. S. 105 is, however, an important qualification of this rule.

The burden of establishing right of self-defence is no doubt upon the accused and the Court has to begin with the presumption regarding the absence of such circumstances but if this presumption is sufficiently rebutted then even if the defence with regard to the right of self-defence is not established to the hilt, it at least creates reasonable doubt as regards the guilt of the accused, all that may be necessary for the accused is to offer a reasonable explanation which may be true, then even though the Judges or the jury, as the case may be, is not convinced that it is true, the accused is entitled to an acquittal: 1959 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 145.

The standard of proof necessary on the part of the prosecution to establish the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubts is not what is required of the accused persons to establish their plea under any of the general exceptions of the Indian Penal Code. But if the Court, after review of the entire evidence on record, finds that plea is a plausible theory and if the Court entertains a reasonable doubt in its mind as to the guilt of the accused, the accused is certainly entitled to the benefit even though the accused person has not been able to fully establish his plea of self-defence or any other plea under the general exceptions of the Indian Penal Code: (1958) 24 Cut.L.T. 321.

Plea of self-defence—Burden of proof: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1472: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 294.

Right of self-defence—Need not be specifically pleaded: 1965 All.L.J. 977: 1966 Cr.L.J. 503: A.I.R. 1966 All. 244. Plea of self-defence need not be taken at the first opportunity, i.e., in the report lodged with the Police; such a plea can be taken even at the time of cross-examination suggesting that the injured attacked him and seriously belaboured him: I.L.R. (1986) Him. Pra. 549.

The burden to make out a plea of self-defence rests on the accused. But the burden is not as heavy as it is on the prosecution to prove the charge. The accused is not required to prove his defence to the hilt. He can discharge the burden lying on him by showing a preponderance of probabilities in his favour: 1984 Raj.L.W. 473 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1341; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2161: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1865: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 254; A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 68.

It cannot be laid down as invariable proposition of law that as soon as it is found that the accused had received injuries the plea of private defence would stand prima facie established and the burden would shift on to the prosecution to prove that the injuries were caused to the accused in self-defence by the complainant party. For instance, where two parties come armed with a determination to measure their strength and to settle a dispute by force of arms and in the ensuing fight both sides receive injuries, no question of private defence arises: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1550. However, see 1990 Cr.L.J. 1510 (S.C.).

Where an accused pleads a right of private defence or any other exception to which he is entitled in law, a mere plausible defence in support of the plea is not enough for his acquittal. But even if he fails to establish the plea beyond doubt, it is still open to the Court to take the plea alongwith the prosecution evidence and then come to a decision whether the prosecution has succeeded in proving its case beyond reasonable doubt or not and if on a consideration of the evidence as a whole (including the evidence in support of the plea of exception) a reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the Court as to the guilt of the accused, he would be entitled to acquittal. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 605; A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 175; 1935 A.C. 462, Rel. on]: I.L.R. 43 Pat. 453: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 346: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 138.

That the case is covered by Exception 2 to S. 300—Burden is on accused to prove: (1965) 31 Cut.L.T. 265.

Plea of private defence—Accused pleading alibi—Plea if available: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 403: A.I.R. 1961 Mys. 74.

Accused need not be called upon to establish right of self-defence unless the prosecution has succeeded in proving a case. See A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 97, cited under Note 1, supra.

When a case of right of private defence appears or the right of private defence is taken at the stage of investigation or trial, it is the obligation of the prosecution to negative the circumstances and destroy the defence plea to sustain the conviction of the accused. Even if the defence plea is demolished by the prosecution yet the accused may establish his case by producing material or witness in support of his case and then it will be for the Court to consider which version is acceptable: (1987) 1 Crimes 791: 1988 Cr.L.J. 223 (Gau.) (D.B.).

The special burden is on the accused to prove the existence of circumstances bringing his case within any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code. It is open to the accused to adduce evidence for establishing those circumstances, but even if he fails to do that he can still show from the evidence adduced by the prosecution itself that the circumstances were such which brought his case within one of the general exception laid down in the Penal Code. In other words, the accused can point out to the Court the proper materials, justifying his action and raising a reasonable doubt with regard to the truth of the prosecution case. Held, on facts, that the accused had sufficiently made out that they had a right of private defence and they did not exceed it in causing grievous hurt to either deceased and simple hurt to another person. The facts and circumstances justified the inference that the deceased had caused multiple injuries to one of the accused that the manner of occurrence as alleged by the prosecution was not true and that there was a considerable doubt about the guilt of the accused: 1967 Cr.L.J. 102: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 464.

It is important to note that the burden of the accused to prove his case of private defence is not as onerous as that of the prosecution; whereas the prosecution has to prove the prosecution case beyond the shadow of reasonable doubt, the accused need discharge his burden by preponderance of probability. For sustaining such a plea, it is not necessary that the accused should have a specific plea of private defence nor is it necessary for him to adduce independent evidence if he can sustain his case of private defence by relying on the very evidence tendered by the prosecution. Where the occurrence took place within the court-yard of the deceased which was in his possession and the accused inflicted injuries on the deceased after committing criminal trespass, held, as the accused was the aggressor he was not entitled to the plea of right of private defence: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1738 (Ker.) (D.B.).

If a case of private defence irresistibly raises its head from the prosecution evidence only, the prosecution fails, even though the accused has remained absolutely mute and dumb and jargon that the burden of proof in such a case lies upon the accused would become mere logomachy. Nor can it be ruled as a strait-jacket formula that once a plea of private defence appears to require consideration, the burden is on the prosecution to prove that the accused exceeded his right or that the burden on the accused to prove that he did not so exceed. The question of burden on onus then loses all significance and it is for the Court to decide, on the materials on record, whether produced by the prosecution or the defence, as to whether the right of private defence has been exceeded or not: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 560.

Accused advanced plea of complete denial—Plea of right of private defence neither taken in statement under S. 342, Cr.P.Code nor raised in argument in lower Court—No material on record to indicate apprehension of grievous hurt or death by act of public servant. Held, there could be no right of private defence of property or person—Burden lies on accused to bring case under section: 1967 Cr.L.J. 97: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 1.

Where the prosecution failed to prove its case regarding the genesis, the manner and the place of occurrence by cogent and reliable evidence beyond the shadow of reasonable doubt, and the prosecution had suppressed the truth, held, on facts, that the prosecuting party clearly being aggressors, the accused had discharged their burden by preponderance of probability under S. 105; the burden on the accused to prove their pleas of self-defence is not as onerous as the prosecution's burden to prove the charge: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. (N.O.C.) 24 (D.B.).

It is well settled that the burden on the accused to establish the plea of self-defence under S. 105 is not so onerous as is cast on the prosecution by S. 101 to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt; the accused is required to establish his plea of self-defence by a mere preponderance of probability. Thus, where it was shown by the accused by such evidence that the deceased, within striking distance, was poised for imminent attack with a spear when the accused fired the fatal gunshot on the deceased, held, the plea of self-defence stood established: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 966: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 798.

Accused claiming to have assaulted deceased in exercise of right of private defence—Burden to prove claim is on accused (Per R. S. Bindra, Addl, J. C.): 1967 Cr.L.J. 184: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 11 (F.B.).

Plea of self-defence—Accused found to have killed another—Onus is on him to establish that killing was justified—It is, however, open to an accused person at any stage of trial to request the Court to examine the evidence and ascertain for itself whether it is consistent with a plea of self-defence: 1960 All. Cr. R. 399: 1960 All.L.J. 782: A.I.R. 1961 All. 38.

Murder case—Explanation by accused before trial Court but not before committing Magistrate that there was assault by deceased's party and that under apprehension of grievous hurt or death he had fired pistol-shot at deceased—If entire material in case spell out case of private defence, Court would acquit accused notwithstanding accused said nothing in defence, adduced no evidence and did not, even put forward, plea of self-defence—But when accused wants Court to believe a positive case set up by him such as alibi or a general exception, his failure to set up that case when opportunity to do so was afforded earlier is certainly a piece of conduct which can be taken into account in deciding whether his case is true or is only an after thought: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Ker. 640.

Where the prosecution evidence itself showed that the accused, performing his public duty, was obstructed and attacked by a crowd and apprehended danger to his life, held, the accused could not be called upon to prove his plea of self-defence: (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 434: 1989 Mah.L.J. 823.

Murder trial—Prosecution failing to establish its case—Plea of self defence by accused—Failure of accused to establish it—Effect: 1983 Cr.L.J. 532 (Ori.).

Where the deceased was killed in an incident occurring at about 11.30 A.M. by a gupti and the accused having stabbed the deceased took up the plea of self-defence and it was found that he had sustained only very superficial simple injuries whose depth was incapable of being measured and there was no explanation as to why he did not go to the hospital for 2 hours and 45 minutes after the incident, held, the accused had failed to discharge the burden of proving self-defence; the injuries sustained by him were not suffered by him in the occurrence: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2751: (1990) 41 Del.L.T. 468 (D.B.).

Injury causing death caused with intention to cause death—Offence comes under S. 302, unless accused brings the case under one of the exceptions—Right of private defence, plea of—Burden is on accused—Plea not taken—Prosecution evidence showing that act was probably committed in exercise of right of private defence—Prosecution would be taken to have failed to make out case against accused beyond reasonable doubt: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1362 (Ker.).

Where the accused being beaten with a stick stabbed the assailant in his heart resulting in his death, held, the accused exercised his right of private defence but exceeded its limit; it was a case under S. 304 of the Indian Penal Code: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1179: 1979 Cr.L.J. 706.

Where both sides, after a violent dispute at night over diversion of irrigation water, immediately thereafter proceeded to the Police Station, one side on a tractor and the other side on foot and their reports were lodged but no arrests were then made by the Police which without investigating the report of the accused, prosecuted them and took no action against the other party and the injuries on the bodies of the accused were found on trial to be neither self-inflicted nor otherwise explained away, held, the accused's plea of self-defence could not be rejected; their conviction set aside: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2205 (Madh. Pra.).

In a fight between two parties, the fact that injuries on deceased persons were more in number and serious in nature in comparison to those on the accused, held, clearly showed that the accused had used more force than was necessary or exceeded their right of private defence: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 33: 1968 Cr.L.J. 194.

Where the plea of self-defence was held to have been proved by the accused. See (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 673 (D.B.).

8. Free-fight.—In case of free-fight, there is no right of private defence to either party: 35 Cut.L.T. 255: 1970 Cr.L.J. 114 (D.B.).

Where in the case of a general fight it could not be said which party was to blame and which party was blameless, it would not be proper consistently with justice to convict the members of either party by relying on S. 105: I.L.R. 19 Luck. 25: A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 272.

The Court should consider the probabilities of the case and take a comprehensive view of the evidence especially where there was a sudden fight between the accused and the deceased and both were armed and there was no direct evidence as to who was the aggressor: (1950) 3 Sau.L.R. 174 (D.B.).

Where in a fracas it was established that both the sides received injuries and one of the accused had a gun and the deceased was killed by a gunshot wound, even assuming that the gun was deliberately aimed and fired at the deceased, it by itself would not entail any conviction under S. 302, I.P. Code unless the Court gets a true picture of the story and reaches the conclusion that the accused had no right of private defence of body so as to cause death. Such a view does not amount to throwing of the onus of proving the general exception under Chapter IV, I.P. Code on the prosecution contrary to S. 105 of the Evidence Act. The view is based on the theory that the Court must always get a true picture of the fracas. If after distinguishing the chaff from the grain the essential thread of the prosecution case is proved, a conviction would follow. If on the other hand, despite utmost care and scrutiny it is difficult to find out the truth and the defence version cannot be discarded as being reasonably true, the accused is entitled to benefit of doubt: I.L.R. (1969) Cut. 53: 1970 Cr.L.J. 931.

9. Provocation.—To come within Exception I to S. 300, I.P.Code, not only the provocation must be shown to be sudden, but also that the accused lost self-control as a result thereof: 1982 Cr.L.J. 975 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

There must be act of provocation, grave and sudden loss of self-control and retaliation proportional to provocation—There must not be time for passion to cool down—Deceased abusing accused filthily and then charging accused with having committed unnatural offence with a pigeon—Accused, held, entitled to protection under S. 300, Exception 1: 1963 M.P.L.J. 592: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 631: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 364.

The fact that the accused must have been subjected to grave and sudden provocation because the deceased abused him cannot be assumed from the nature of the incident. The burden lies upon the accused to make out a case so as to fall in any of the exceptions: 1955 Madh. Bh. L.J. (H.C.R.) 1199 (D.B.).

The accused need not specifically plead that his case falls under any of the exceptions to S. 300, I.P.Code so as to bring the offence under S. 304, I.P.Code. If there is material available in the case to bring the offence under any of the exceptions to S. 300, I.P.Code, even if the accused had not taken such a defence, the case should be brought under the exception of S. 300 which may be attracted by the evidence on record.

Where accused had controlled himself on various occasions when he was provoked by filthy abuses, held, it cannot be said that on the day of occurrence when he attacked the deceased, there could have been no such grave and sudden provocation: I.L.R. (1978) Karn. 140: (1977) 2 Karn.L.J. 412.

Accused charged with murder pleading grave and sudden provocation—Burden to prove existence of such provocation is on accused—Failure to discharge burden—Court can draw its own conclusion regarding existence of provocative circumstances from evidence on record: 30 Cut.L.T. 1: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 137.

It is for the accused who claims benefit of Exception 4 of S. 300 to prove circumstances specified in it which would attract the exception: 1967 Cr.L.J. 895: A.I.R. 1967 Madh. Pra. 167. Burden of bringing the case within exception is discharged when reasonable doubt is created in the mind of the Court from the evidence on record: 1984 Cr.L.J. 440 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.)

Mere wordy quarrel can be said to be so sudden and grave provocation as to cause loss of self-control and fire at the deceased: 1982 Cr.L.J. 975 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

10. Miscellaneous.—Accused charged under S. 66(b) of Bombay Prohibition Act, 1949—Burden is on prosecution to establish that what the accused consumed was prohibited liquor, i.e., liquor which was not liquid medicinal or toilet preparation containing alcohol—Accused need not establish that he consumed such preparation. See (1955) 1 S.C.R. 613: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 123. Per Collister, J. The onus is certainly on the Crown to prove all the facts which constitute the elements of the offence, and if there is any reasonable doubt left in the mind of the Court as to whether these facts have been established

106. Burden of proving fact especially within knowledge.—When any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him.

the accused person is entitled to the benefit thereof; but this general onus is subject by statute, to the special onus which S. 105 imposes on the accused person, and when the Legislature has enacted specific provisions in the Evidence Act as to what amounts to proof or disproof, the Court will not be justified in falling back upon the general principle that the Crown must prove the prisoner's guilt: 1941 All.L.J. 619: A.I.R. 1941 All. 402: I.L.R. 1. Scope and applicability—General.—Section applies only to parties to the suit: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 657: A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 87: 64 M.L.J. 413 (P.C.); 38 P.L.R. 427. See I.L.R. 14 Rang. 666: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 83 (F.B.). S. 106 cannot be utilised to help persons who are representatives of other parties and who step into their shoes: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 251.

S. 106 is an exception to S. 101, but standard of proof for a plea based on special knowledge is not so high as in the case of prosecution: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1751 (Cal.) (D.B.).

S. 106 is applicable to both civil and criminal cases; however, in criminal cases it should be applied with great care and caution: A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 58.

The place of knowledge does not affect the situation of the burden of proof. The proof may be difficult where the matter is peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge, but that does not vary the rule of law that the plaintiff must prove that which is the foundation of his right: (1868) 9 Suth. W.R. (Civ.) 190 (F.B.).

Where several persons have the means of knowledge of a particular fact, it cannot be said that it is specially within the knowledge of one of them: I.L.R. 12 All. 301 (F.B.).

S. 106 contemplates facts which in their nature are such as to be within the knowledge of the accused and of nobody else, and has no application to cases, where the fact in question, having regard to its nature, is such as to be capable of being known not only by the accused but also by others—If they happened to be present when it took place. It cannot be invoked to make up for the inability of the prosecution to produce evidence of circumstances pointing to the guilt of the accused. Section obviously refers to cases where the defence of the accused depends on his proving a certain fact, that is, cases where his guilt is established on the evidence produced by the prosecution unless he is able to prove some other facts especially within his knowledge which would render the evidence for the prosecution nugatory : A.I.R. 1936 All. 833 : 1936 All.L.J. 1124.

An order or notification, containing a recital, technically correct on the face of it, raises a presumption of fact under S. 114, Illus. (e). This presumption, however, is one of fact. It is an optional presumption. It can be displaced by circumstances indicating that the power lodged in an authority or official has not been exercised in accordance with the law. The original or stable onus laid down by S. 101 and S. 102 cannot be shifted by the use of S. 106, although the particular onus of proving facts and circumstances lying especially within the knowledge of the official who formed the opinion which resulted in the notification rests upon that official. The recital, if it is not defective, may obviate the need to look further. But, there may be circumstances in the case which impel the Court to look beyond it. And, at that stage, S. 106 can be invoked by the party assailing an order or notification. It is most unsafe in such cases for the official or authority concerned to rest content with non-disclosure of facts especially within his or its knowledge by relying on the sufficiency of a recital. Such an attitude may itself justify further judicial scrutiny: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 183: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 133: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 763: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 17.

S. 106 is an exception to general rule that burden of proof lies on the prosecution: (1986) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 142 (Del.).

The principle underlying S. 106, which is an exception to the general rule governing burden of proof—applies only to such matters of defence which are supposed to be especially within the knowledge of the defendant-respondent. It cannot apply when the fact is such as to be capable of being known also by persons other than the respondent: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 667.

A party personally knowing the facts and circumstances of his case is bound to give evidence on his own behalf and submit to cross-examination and his non-appearance as a witness would be a strong circumstance which will go to discredit the truth of his case: 1966 All.L.J. 904.

A party's failure to go into the witness-box raises a strong presumption against the truth of his or her case. The fact of a party being a pardanashin lady is not a sufficient cause for not getting into the box in as much as she could get herself examined on commission: 187 I.C. 317: A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 266.

The true object to be achieved by a Court of Justice can only be furthered with propriety by the testimony of the party who personally knowing the whole circumstances of the case can dispel the suspicion attaching to it. Thus, where the plaintiff has personally executed a deed of assignment which he seeks to be set aside on the ground of its being a benami deed, he cannot keep himself away from the witness-box and if he does so he takes the heavy risk of the Court accepting the allegations made by the defendant: 1954 B.L.J.R. 82: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 280.

It is the duty of a party who has certain facts relating to his case within his personal knowledge to appear before the Court at a very early stage of the case as a witness and to give evidence relating to cross-examination by the other side: (1931) 33 Punj.L.R. 906: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 243.

Where a party does not go into the witness-box to support his allegations regarding facts which are within its special knowledge there arises a strong presumption against him: 138 I.C. 525: (1931) 33 Punj.L.R. 207. See also Notes under S. 114.

Section should be confined to those cases, where a fact is especially within the knowledge of any person: A.I.R. 1959 All. 598. The burden of proving facts peculiarly within the knowledge of any person is on that person.

See 9 W.R. 190: 1 P.L.J. 168; I.L.R. 47 Mad. 800: 20 I.C. 600: 6 Bur.L.T. 129. See also I.L.R. 2 Rang. 549: A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 143; A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 39; 1939 Mad.W.N. 883: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 1; I.L.R. 63 Cal. 1146: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 493 (Knowledge of plaintiff's right in design and user by defendant in trade-mark suit.); A.I.R. 1959 Assam 98.

Non-production of documentary evidence—Presumption: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 390.

Party having material evidence within his knowledge—Failure to place it before Court is fatal to his case—Inference: 1969 Ker.L.R. 842: I.L.R. (1970) 2 Ker. 109.

Matter within defendant's knowledge—Burden of proving the fact is on the defendant: (1966) 1 An.W.R. 227.

Illus. (b) to S. 106 has obvious reference to a very special type of case, namely, to offences under Ss. 112 and 113, Railways Act. It does not exhaust the full content of the section nor does it curtail nor expand its ambit; and if knowledge of certain facts is as much available to the prosecution, should it choose to exercise due diligence, as to the accused, the fact cannot be said to "especially" within the knowledge of the accused: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 404: 1956 Cr.L.J. 794.

Intention to defraud Railway Administration on part of accused—Burden of proof—S. 106, not applicable: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 545: I.L.R. (1964) 16 Assam 196: A.I.R. 1965 Assam 38.

2. Applicability in criminal cases.—Language of S. 106 and particularly the word "especially" used therein connotes that the facts must in their nature be such as could be within the knowledge of the accused and possibly of no one else. S. 106 cannot come into play where facts concerned are such as are capable of being known by others also. If it were possible by due diligence and proper investigation to find out the facts even though it may be very difficult to do so, it cannot relieve the prosecution from the obligation of establishing the ingredients of an offence alleged. This section cannot be used to shift the onus of establishing an essential ingredient of the offence on accused: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1065: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 163.

S. 106 is an exception to S. 101 which lays down the general rule about the burden of proof which is that the prosecution is to prove its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt by evidence—direct or circumstantial—establishing reasonable probability about the commission of the offence; once the Court thinks that the case on evidence is acceptable against the accused and the accused takes up a plea based on facts within his special knowledge, it is for him to prove that plea for which the onus lies on him though the standard of proof for the accused would not be so high as in the case of prosecution: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1751 (Cal.) (D.B.).

General burden of proof of guilt which lies on the prosecution or on authority in the position of the prosecution never shifts—Prosecution cannot rely on S. 106 except in very exceptional cases and to a very limited extent: 1972 Mah.L.J. 20: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 575.

S. 106 cannot be pressed into service to relieve prosecution of its burden of proving a criminal charge: (1988) 2 Ori.L.R. 603 (D.B.).

Neither an application of S. 103 nor of S. 106 of the Evidence Act could absolve the prosecution from the duty of discharging its general or primary burden of proving the prosecution case beyond reasonable doubt. It is only when the prosecution has led evidence which, if believed, will sustain a conviction, or, which makes out a prima facie case, that the question arises of considering facts of which the burden of proof may lie upon the accused. Though the burden of proving a plea specifically set up by an accused, which may absolve him from criminal liability, certainly lies upon him, but the quantum of evidence by which he may succeed in discharging his burden of creating a reasonable belief, that circumstance absolving him from criminal liability may have existed, is lower than the burden resting upon the prosecution to establish the guilt of an accused beyond reasonable doubt: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 778: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 193: 1974 Cr.L.J. 664.

S. 106 can be resorted to in a criminal trial only when the evidence led by the prosecution, if believed, will sustain conviction; unless that has been done, no burden of proving anything would lie on the accused; any fallacy in explaining their intention for having assembled at the orchard at night could not absolve the prosecution from its primary obligation to prove the charge beyond reasonable doubt. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 778, Rel. on]: (1986) 34 B.L.J.R. 759: (1987) 2 Crimes 136: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1391.

Criminal case—Benefit of doubt—Accused is entitled to benefit of doubt if his version may reasonably be true though he might have failed to establish its truth—Onus on accused is not as heavy as it is on prosecution: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 1088.

Burden of proof—Criminal trial: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1654: A.I.R. 1967 Manipur 41.

The normal rule is that the onus is always on the prosecution to establish the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. This section does not affect this rule in any manner that when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person the burden of proving that fact is upon him. It cannot be invoked to make up the defect of the prosecution to produce evidence of fact and circumstances leading to the guilt of the accused. Prosecution must establish all elements of the offence. Positive facts must always be proved by the prosecution. This rule has, however, no application to negative facts. It is not for the prosecution to anticipate and eliminate all possible defence of circumstances which may exonerate an accused. When a person does not act with some intention other than the character and the circumstances of the act suggest, it is not for the prosecution to eliminate all other possible intentions. If the accused had a different intention, that is a fact especially within his knowledge which he must prove: 1968 Cr.L.J. 848: 33 Cut.L.T. 60: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 951; A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 169; A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 1.

In all criminal cases it is incumbent on the prosecution to establish positive facts giving jurisdiction to a Court and this burden it can discharge in a case of prohibition offence by proving circumstances from which it can be inferred that the accused drank intoxicant within the Court's jurisdiction. S. 106 can be resorted to appropriate cases in the course of a criminal trial as implied by Illus. (b). But it cannot be invoked to make good the lacuna in proving essential facts and more emphatically for establishing facts necessary to give jurisdiction to the Court. Ordinarily, there is very little scope for the application of S. 106, Indian Evidence Act, to criminal cases where onus of proof is always on the prosecution and the section cannot be invoked to shift the onus on the accused: 6 Sau.L.R. 327: A.I.R. 1954 Sau. 31. See also A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 178 [Burden of proof is always on prosecution].

Prosecution has to establish prima facie case in the first instance; it is not enough to establish facts which give rise to suspicion and then by reason of S. 106, to throw the onus on the accused to prove his innocence: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 1390; A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 339 (D.B.).

The absence of explanation or a false explanation is no doubt a circumstance that is sometimes relied upon to bring home the guilt to the accused in a case depending on circumstantial evidence, on the ground that the facts proving his innocence must be within his special knowledge and that the burden of at least offering a reasonable explanation is on him on the principle of S. 106, Evidence Act. But this would be so only in cases where the other circumstances proved are so sufficiently strong against him as to point to him as very probably the culprit and therefore, calling for his explanation. If in such a situation the accused gives an explanation which may reasonably be true in the proved circumstances, the accused gets the benefit of doubt though he may not prove the truth of the explanation. But to infer the guilt of the accused from the absence of a reasonable explanation (or a false explanation) where the other circumstances are not by themselves enough to call for his explanation, would be to relieve the prosecution of its burden: A.I.R. 1951 Ori. 53: I.L.R. (1950) Cut. 509.

The ordinary rule which applies to criminal trials that the onus lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused is not in any way modified by the provisions contained in S. 106 of the Evidence Act. Even where there are facts specially within the knowledge which could throw a light upon his guilt or innocence as the case may be, the accused is not bound to allege or to prove them. But in a criminal trial where the guilt of the accused is to be established by circumstantial evidence, where the accused does not throw any light at all upon facts which ought to be specially within his knowledge and which could support any theory or hypothesis compatible with his innocence, the Court can also take into consideration his failure to adduce any

An accused person is always entitled to hold his tongue; but when the only alternative theory to his guilt is a remote possibility, which, if correct, he is in a position to explain, the absence of an explanation must be considered in determining whether the possibility should be disregarded or taken into account: 43 I.C. 605: 19 Cr.L.J. 189.

S. 106 was never intended to be used to place upon the accused the burden of proving their innocence. S. 106 is not a proviso to the rule that the burden of proving the guilt of the accused is upon the prosecution but on the contrary, the section is subject to that rule. The burden of proving a particular fact or a particular defence is a different matter. S. 106 does not enable the Judge to say to the jury that the accused must explain this and that he must satisfy him on this point or that or be found guilty: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209: I.L.R. (1940) Kar. 249.

The burden of proof referred to in S. 106 is that of introducing evidence merely. This section does not cast any burden on an accused person to prove that no crime was committed by proving facts specially within his knowledge; nor does it warrant the conclusion that if anything is unexplained which the Court thinks the accused could explain, he ought, therefore, to be found guilty: I.L.R. 14 Rang. 666: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 83 (F.B.).

S. 106 does not affect the onus of proof in a criminal trial. S. 106 does not cast any burden on an accused person to prove that no crime was committed by proving facts lying specially within his knowledge. The section does not warrant a direction that, if anything is unexplained, which the jury think the accused could explain, they not only may, but must find him guilty: I.L.R. (1951) 1 Cal. 204 (D.B.).

See the under-mentioned decision. S. 106 cannot be invoked to make up for the inability of the prosecution to produce evidence of circumstances necessary to prove the guilt of the accused. But where the facts proved by the evidence give rise to a reasonable inference of guilt unless the same is rebutted, and such inference can be negatived by proof of some fact which in its nature can only be within the special knowledge of the accused, S. 106 can be applied and its effect be considered while weighing the evidence: I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 298: A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 31.

If the knowledge of certain facts is as much available to the prosecution on exercise of due diligence as to the accused, the facts cannot be said to be specially within the knowledge of the accused: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 46: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 339.

S. 106 is intended to meet certain exceptional cases in which it would be impossible or extremely difficult for the prosecution to prove the fact which is especially within the knowledge of the accused and the knowledge of that fact is not available to the prosecution. However, S. 106 cannot be utilised to cast the burden on the accused to prove his innocence by relieving the prosecution of its burden of proof: 1988 Cr.L.J. 481 (Gau.).

The ordinary rule that applies to criminal trials that the onus lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused is not in any way modified by this rule of evidence. The section cannot be used to make up for the inability of the prosecution to produce evidence of circumstances necessary to prove the guilt of the accused. It is only in cases where the facts proved by the evidence give rise to a reasonable inference of guilt unless the same is rebutted and such inference can be negatived by proof of some facts which in its nature can only be within the special knowledge of the accused. Where the accused contravened R. 5 by cremating dead body in a place within a hundred yards of dwelling houses and wells, the burden of proving that the place was not "provided, registered or licensed" under R. 5 was not upon the accused but upon the prosecution. S. 106 did not modify the ordinary rule of burden of proof in criminal trials: I.L.R. (1964) 1 Ker. 177: 1964 Ker.L.J. 353: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 73.

Although S. 106 should be applied with great care and caution in criminal cases, it cannot be said that it has no application to criminal cases. Where the accused is prosecuted for disobeying the provisions of S. 291(2), Calcutta Municipal Act, on the allegation that he has effected alteration in the water pipe of his house by persons who are not plumbers licensed by the Municipality, it is for the accused to disclose the name of the person he employed or to give some explanation for such non-disclosure. Otherwise, it can be reasonably presumed that he employed somebody who did not possess a license: 48 Cr.L.J. 999: A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 58.

S. 106 is an exception to S. 101. The latter with its Illus. (a), lays down the general rule that in a criminal case the burden of proof is on the prosecution and S. 106 is certainly not intended to relieve it of that duty. On the contrary, it is designed to meet certain exceptional cases in which it would be impossible, or at any rate disproportionately difficult, for the prosecution to establish facts which are "especially" within the knowledge of the accused and which he could prove without difficulty or inconvenience. It means facts that are pre-eminently or exceptionally within his knowledge. Illus. (b) to S. 106 has obvious reference to a very special type of case, namely, to offences under Ss. 112 and 113, Railways Act. It is true that an illustration does not exhaust the full content of the section which it illustrates but equally it can neither curtail nor expand its ambit; and if knowledge of certain facts is as much available to the prosecution, should it choose to exercise due diligence, as to the accused, the facts cannot be said to be "especially" within the knowledge of the accused. S. 106 must be considered in a commonsense way. The section cannot be used to undermine the well established rule of law that, save in a very exceptional class of case, the burden is on the prosecution and never shifts. In a prosecution launched two and half years after the alleged offence for obtaining certain sums from the Government as T.A. without travel, a booking clerk, as a prosecution witness, proved that no second class tickets were issued on relevant dates for the relevant places. But he also proved that tickets were not always issued and the passengers could pay fares on the trains and also could sometimes purchase a ticket for lower class and pay the difference to the guard of the train. There was no proof that one or the other of these courses was not followed on the relevant dates by the accused, although prosecution had registers and books, both of Railway and of the Department in which the accused worked and they could have proved it. Instead of doing it they proved that no second class tickets were issued and relying on Illus. (b) to S. 106 contended that the burden of proving that the accused, did pay the second class fares was on him. Held that the relevant and material information was as much within the especial knowledge of the prosecution as in that of the accused and the prosecution could not rely upon Illus. (b) to S. 106: 1956 S.C.R. 199: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 404

Though S. 106 cannot shift the onus of proving the offence from prosecution to the accused, but where the deceased dies due to manual strangulation inside the house when her in-laws alone were present there, held, in the absence of any other explanation, the only possible inference was that they had participated in the act and if any one of them claims contrary, under S. 106 the burden of proving that fact is upon him since that was within his special knowledge: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3029 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where the entire chain of circumstances, completely established, was consistent with the convict's guilt and wholly inconsistent with his innocence and was incapable of being explained on any other reasonable hypothesis, and since the murders were committed and the dead bodies of his wife and 3 children were found in his house where he also attempted to commit suicide, held, it was obligatory upon him under S. 106 to explain how all this had happened which was within his special knowledge; he failed to discharge his burden; conviction could not be set aside: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3493 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where accused was alleged to have killed deceased and though he was seen by good number of people in the vicinity and he was taken into custody at a place some distance away from the spot still he pleaded that he was not at all present at the spot and subsequently he stated that some persons murdered the deceased but the accused neither filed a complaint in police station nor took any steps to unfold his own version of the incident which did not even remotedly fit into the circumstances, held, when so much evidence had been led about he and the deceased having been together till the last point of time when she must have been done to death and when how she died could have been within his exclusive knowledge and when the version given by him does not in any way even remotedly fit into the circumstances and appears to be incredible, then, these circumstances brought on record do lead to the conclusion and the only conclusion that it was the accused and the accused alone who committed the murder of the deceased: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3798 (Karn.) (D.B.).

In case of dowry death, the person in whose care the victim was entrusted must necessarily account for the crime as he is supposed to have special knowledge about the crime: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 13: (1989) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 18 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where dowry death took place in the house of deceased's in-laws, held, onus was on the inmates of the house to explain circumstances leading to death: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1635: (1993) 2 S.C.C. 684: 1993 S.C.C. (Cr.) 655. Where in a prosecution for death in the Police custody, it was established that the deceased was taken into custody, held, onus was on the accused persons to show as to how the deceased went out of their custody: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2119: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2092.

Employing girl as prostitute—Onus is on accused to show absence of intention: 71 I.C. 232: A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 539. The presumption under S. 106 is very weak as compared to the presumption of innocence when the trial is one for murder. If an accused after a case has been proved against him withholds evidence in disproof, inference unfavourable to him may be drawn: 19 Cr.L.J. 81: (1916-17) 21 Cal.W.N. 1152.

Where prosecution failed to discharge the burden that the offence was committed by the accused and it sought to rely on the fact that accused gave false information to witnesses regarding the cause of death, held, the false information given by the accused would have the effect of being simply taken-in-aid to lend assurance to the prosecution story and could never form basis for drawing of inference that the accused and accused alone were guilty of the offence. It is only when the evidence led by the prosecution, if believed, will sustain a conviction or atleast makes out a prima facie case, that the question of accused discharging the burden under S. 106 arises. Therefore, there should be at least a prima facie case made out by the evidence let-in by the prosecution to take the false information given by the accused in-aid to lend assurance to the prosecution story: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1339: (1991) 2 An.L.T. 49 (N.R.C.) (D.B.).

The prosecution must establish, in a case of dacoity that the accused had conceived design for committing dacoity. It can only be established by proof of circumstances from which the intention can be inferred. Witnesses cannot give direct evidence as to the intention of the accused; and, if the legitimate inference from the circumstances which are established is that the intention of the accused was to commit dacoity, it is for them to prove that their intention was different. Illus. (a) of S. 106 makes this quite clear: 1960 B.L.J.R. 511: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1650: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 582.

Prosecution proving that intention of crowd was to commit dacoity—Accused not proving contrary intention—Prosecution version can be accepted—Contrary suggestion by defence Counsel and not by accused cannot be accepted: 1968 Cr.L.J 996 (Guj.).

Where the accused and his companions had assembled at night for committing a dacoity, held, the burden lay on the prosecution to prove that the accused intended to commit dacoity and nothing else; it is not for the accused to show that their intention was different from that of committing dacoity. [A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 82, Expl.]: (1986) 34 B.L.J.R. 759: (1987) 2 Crimes 136: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1391.

When the prosecution alleges that the accused, a medical practitioner, did not have the academic credentials which he openly pretended to have, held, the burden of proving that he, in fact, possesses such degrees is on the accused and not on the prosecution to prove that he did not possess such degrees. It would be a simple task for the accused, if he actually holds those degrees, to prove it by production of the diploma or degree or any such document. The maximum which the prosecution can be expected to prove in such cases is to show that the accused used those degrees openly and to the knowledge of the public so as to make them believe that he is the holder of such degrees and the further fact that the enquiry revealed that the accused did not possess such degrees: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2025 (Ker.).

In a prosecution of a postman for having dishonestly mis-appropriated the amount entrusted to him for disbursement under a money order, payable to a student M, the accused admitted not having delivered the amount in question to the payee M. The story set up by him was that though he did not really pay the amount to M, and M did not append his signature on the money order form in his presence, he gave the amount of the money order at the house of M to a boy whom he did not know from before. The boy took the money order form and the money inside a room, and he later came back with the money order form duly signed and told the accused that the money had been paid to M. M denied receipt of the amount. He also denied his signatures on the money order form. Two other students, one of whom lived in the same room with M and the other in another room of the same tenement, were examined but they denied that they received or handed over to M the money order form or its amount. The accused did not produce the boy though whom he professed to have sent the money order form and its amount into M's room nor any other evidence in support of his statement. Held that the prosecution having proved, and the accused having admitted that the payment was not made to nor the money order signed by M or by the only two other students who lived in the same tenements, it was for the accused to prove who that boy was through whom the accused professes to have made the payment and obtained the signatures of M. The only possible boys known were produced by the prosecution. Who, the other particular boy referred to by the accused, was, could only be known to the accused. That was a fact which was especially within the knowledge of the accused, and burden of proving that fact, therefore, was upon the accused, within the purview of S. 106, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1957 All. 381: 1957 Cr.L.J. 620.

Prosecution of Post Master for offence of forgery for having signed money order receipt as payee—Accused pleading alibi, viz., he was not in village on date of signature—Held, S. 106 was not attracted and accused could not be asked to prove as to who signed the receipt and who were witnesses to it—Charge of forgery was, however, proved on other evidence: (1967) 1 Mys.L.J. 548: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 501: A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 210.

Postmaster delaying entries in relevant registers regarding money received for remittance by money order—Proper inference arising from his conduct is that he has committed misappropriation and it is for him to establish his innocence: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 57: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 688: A.I.R. 1964 Ori.152.

Criminal breach of trust by public servant—Misappropriation of money—What prosecution has to prove—Proof of manner in which money was misappropriated is not necessary—Burden of proof: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 877.

Misappropriation and criminal breach of trust—Criminal breach of trust by public servant—Burden of proof—Burden rests on prosecution—S. 106, Evidence Act, 1872, does not affect prosecutions—Initial onus of proving guilt of accused: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 197: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 339: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 46.

Onus—Shifting of—Offence under S. 409, I.P. Code: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1168: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 135.

Where it was established by unimpeachable prosecution evidence that the accused, Sub-Treasury Officer, in connivance with other employees had embezzled huge amounts by encashing fake demand drafts of the Reserve Bank of India and falsified accounts by making payments thereof to admittedly fictitious payees, and the accused did not disclose the names of the persons identifying the payees at the time of encashment of the fake drafts nor examined them in defence nor explained the shortages in cash balance clearly within his special knowledge under S. 106, held, the prosecution had clearly discharged its burden beyond all reasonable doubts: (1992) 3 S.C.C. 30: (1992) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 130.

The proved facts of the case were that the 1st respondent was handed over the money and he put it in the iron safe. The keys of the safe remained with him all through and, when he returned the next morning, the safe was found to be unlocked. Held, that it was within the special knowledge of the 1st respondent whether he had locked the safe or not, and that being the position, it was for him to prove that he had locked the safe: A.I.R. 1957 All. 363.

The accused was charged that he attempted to obtain from a person named H, for himself a gratification as a reward for inducing, by exercise of personal influence, a public servant, namely, the Magistrate, to show favour to H in connection with a criminal offence, the trial of which was pending before the Magistrate. The accused was alternatively charged with attempting to cheat H thereby attempting dishonestly to obtain money from him by representing that he was able to induce the Magistrate to show favour to H. The accused was convicted on the second alternative charge. The trial Judge held that whether or not the accused could induce the Magistrate to show favour to H, was a fact which was specially within the knowledge of the accused and that under S. 107 of the Singapore Evidence Ordinance (corresponding to S. 106, Indian Evidence Act and S. 106, Ceylon Evidence Ordinance) the onus was on the accused to prove that the accused could induce the Magistrate to show favour to H. Held, that under S. 107 of the Singapore Evidence Ordinance (corresponding to S. 106, Indian Evidence Act and S. 106, Ceylong Evidence Ordinance) the onus was on the accused to prove that the accused could induce the Magistrate to show favour to H. Held, that under S. 107 no burden was placed on the accused to establish that there had been no deceit. S. 107 did not cast burden on the accused to prove that no crime has been committed. The burden was on the prosecution to prove, affirmatively that there had been deceit. It should have been made to appear sufficiently on proved facts that the accused had no reason to believe that he could have influenced the Magistrate. There being no evidence against the accused on the principle ingredient of the charge, namely, deceit, the case came within the range of those criminal cases in which Board of the Judicial Commissioner of the Privy Council interfered: (1958) 2 W.L.R. 599.

Offence under Explosives Act, S. 5(3)(a)—Explosion in licensed premises and death of minors—Failure to prove that the minors were actually employed in the manufacture of explosives or that explosives were manufactured at all on the day of occurrence—Held that it was for the prosecution to prove all the ingredients of the offence and S. 106 did not absolve it from proving its case: 1968 M.L.J. (Cr.) 730: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1273.

Where a person is charged with having been a member of an association declared unlawful by Government under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the burden of proof is not on the accused to prove that he discontinued his membership. It is for the prosecution to prove that he continued to be a member even subsequent to the notification by Government. The Act imposes no obligation on the member to do anything specific to terminate the membership and so there is no question of there being anything especially within the knowledge of the accused: I.L.R. 55 Bom. 484: A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 129. As to burden of proof in the case of material alteration of documents, see I.L.R. 25 All. 580 (F.B.); I.L.R. 7 Mad. 302; I.L.R. 9 Mad. 399; I.L.R. 12 Mad. 239; I.L.R. 7 Cal. 616; I.L.R. 12 Cal. 313; I.L.R. 7 Bom. 418.

Charge against accused under S. 66(1)(b) of Bombay Prohibition Act (XXV of 1949) must be proved by establishing that the accused consumed liquor in prohibited areas —Prosecution cannot absolve of that obligation by resorting to S. 106: A.I.R. 1970 Guj. 131: 1970 Cr.L.J. 956: (1970) 11 Guj.L.R. 573.

Offence under Prohibition Act for consuming liquor—Burden of proof—State of drunkenness established by prosecution—Accused not submitting any explanation—He must be held guilty of offence: A.I.R. 1970 Assam 49: 1970 Cr.L.J. 563.

Prohibition cases—Proof as to place where offence committed—Onus: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 409: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 273: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 234.

Illicit liquor recovered from box the key of which was with wife—Prosecution not proving that possession of liquor from wife was on behalf of accused—Conviction of accused is not sustainable: 1961 Ker.L.T. 584.

Where a person accused of lurking house-trespass by night pleads in defence that he had a specific intention in entering the house, i.e., to carry on a love intrigue in secret and not intimidate, insult or annoy, the onus of proof is on him: 49 I.C. 103: I.L.R. 40 All. 221; I.L.R. 37 All. 395: 29 I.C. 67. See also I.L.R. 22 Cal. 164; I.L.R. 23 All. 124; I.L.R. 14 Rang. 666: A.I.R 1937 Rang. 83 (F.B.).

Intention or knowledge—Burden of proof—Accused firing pistol at close range resulting in superficial injuries due to defective ammunition—Knowledge—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1958 All. 677: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1112.

3. Person includes juristic person.—Juridical persons are not exception—It is within special knowledge of Corporation, which of its officers acted in fraudulent manner: I.L.R. (1966) 1 Cal. 216. See also A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 184.

4. Corruption cases.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 33 and S. 105, Note 4, supra). Where the accused, a public servant, is found to be in possession of disproportionate assets, the burden is on him to satisfactorily account for his possession of such assets. However, the accused is not bound to prove his innocence beyond all reasonable doubt. All that he needs to do is to bring out a preponderance of probability: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1186: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 199: 1981 Cr.L.J. 884.

Question as to how the Government servant came into possession of property out of proportion to his admitted income—Onus. See A.I.R. 1954 Hyd. 28: I.L.R. (1953) Hyd. 648; A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 7.

5. In case of violation of order passed under Essential Commodities Act.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 45, supra). Where the cement seized was found to be levy cement which was in violation of Cl. 14(2), Orissa Cement Control (Amendment) Order, 1982, held, burden was on the accused to prove that cement was purchased in open market: (1989) 1 Crimes 84: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 83 (Ori.).

A person transported what purported to be "broken rice" and a permit granted under

Cl. 3 of the Southern States (Regulation of Export of Rice) Order, 1964 which was found upon seizure and confiscation under S. 6-A of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 to be an admixture of whole and broken rice, held, since the broken rice in the admixture, which should have been, in the common sense view, far less than the minimum of 50 per cent, and since the Miller had all along contended that "wholly broken" rice was being exported under the permit, the composition of rice was within their special knowledge; the seizure and confiscation was justified. [(1975) 2 A.P.L.J. 229, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1845: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 301: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1387.

Indirect evidence or circumstantial evidence, leading to irresistible inference of guilt is sufficient for a conviction even in murder cases, and much more so in less grave offences, like violation of emergency orders of State. Where an accused taking a permit for steel and iron for a specific purpose and undertaking to use the materials for the purpose and that purpose alone, and to return the permit in case the purpose had ceased to exist, had not admittedly utilised the materials for the purpose specified, held, the fact that the prosecution could not find out where the materials were and how they had been disposed of or used would not enable the accused to escape liability and punishment for the contravention of the permit. The accused had this special knowledge and hence would be liable under S. 106, Indian Evidence Act to be convicted for the contravention unless he proved that he had utilised the materials for the purpose granted. Courts should never fail to apply S. 106 of the Evidence Act to cases of special knowledge and burden of proof like this: (1951) 2 M.L.J. 199: A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 152.

Where the Rajasthan Milk (Export Control) Order, 1984 issued by the State Government was challenged as having been issued without the prior concurrence of the Central Government, held, such concurrence, if any, was within the special knowledge of the State Government and, thus, burden was on it to produce the same before the Court: A.I.R. 1986 Raj. 116: (1985) 1 W.L.N. 43.

6. Food adulteration.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 14(e), supra). Where in a trial for an offence under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 for selling sub-standard maida, the accused during the trial for the first time raised a plea that maida kept in his shop was not for human consumption but only for pasting purposes, held, the said fact being within the special knowledge of the accused, it was for him only to prove said plea which he failed to prove: 1992 Cr.L.J. 3930 (Mad.).

7. Custom cases.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 35, supra). Cases under the Sea Customs Act—Joint trial of accused persons for offences of smuggling goods under four enactments—Prosecution not relying on burden of proof being on accused under section but letting in evidence—Joint trial is not prejudicial to accused—Accused's case that they had no hand in smuggling—Burden is on accused to prove that fact: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 515 (Manipur).

Sea Customs Act, 1878, S. 167(8)—Burden of proof in respect of goods imported: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 507: A.I.R. 1964 Assam 121.

In proceedings for imposing penalties under S. 167(8) of the Customs Act, to which S. 178-A thereof does not apply, the burden of proving that the goods are smuggled goods is on the Department. However, it is not required to prove its case within mathematical precision to a demonstrable degree. All that it requires is the establishment of such a degree of probability that a prudent man may, on its basis, believe in the existence of the fact in issue. The broad effect of the application of the basic principle underlying S. 106, Evidence Act to cases under S. 167(8) of the Customs Act is that the Department would be deemed to have discharged its burden if it adduced only so much evidence as is sufficient to raise a presumption in its favour with regard to the existence of the facts sought to be proved. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1867; A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2136, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 264, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 859: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 544.

Proceedings under—Nature of—Contravention of order of prohibition—Onus—Department should prove importation of goods contrary to order—Plea of bona fide purchase—Rejection of, not sufficient to discharge burden: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 269: A.I.R. 1962 Assam 39.

Where on search by Excise Officials, the accused opened with his own key an iron safe and recovered from its secret chamber a bundle containing gold biscuits with foreign markings, admitted to have been brought from abroad and his having no import permit, but his plea was that some unknown person had delivered the gold to him, held, the accused knew but did not disclose name of the person who had given him the gold; he also knew that the gold was smuggled; he must have known whether the person who delivered the gold to him had brought it with or without permit; there is no reason why the prosecution cannot call into aid the combined effect of presumption under Ss. 106 and 114 of the Evidence Act; the charge under S. 135(b)(ii) of the Customs Act, 1962 stood clearly proved: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 793: (1980) 2 S.C.C. 262: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1631. See also A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2083: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1558; A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 182: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1603: 1975 Cr.L.J. 240: (1975) 3 S.C.C. 495.

8. Accident cases.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 16, supra). Ordinarily, a plaintiff or a claimant must prove every pie of his claim to the hilt and the burden lies squarely on him to plead and prove his claim but S. 106 provides an exception to the general rule. Where plaintiff claimed a higher amount than the one prescribed under S. 95(2)(a) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 as compensation and the amount of policy was not disclosed by any of the parties, held, it was the duty of the Insurance Company to disclose the amount of the insurance policy and bring on record the policy itself. [A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 143 (F.B.), Disting.; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1624, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 All. 397: 1980 All.W.C. 427 (D.B.).

Where in a motor accident case the plea of Insurance Company was that its liability was limited only to the amount on the "Act only" policy, but neither the policy nor any other evidence was produced to support the contention, held, the duty and the burden to prove the same was on the Insurance Company. [A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 143, Disting.; 1977 Acc.C.J. 501 (P.&H.); A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 223, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 Del. 403.

Where a vehicle was wrongly described as a truck and not tanker in the proposal and the insurer sought to avoid its liability under the policy on that count but did not examine the Agent despite contention that misdescription was to the agent's knowledge, held, S. 106 was attracted; the burden lay on the insurer to prove that the agent had no such knowledge: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 100 (P.&H.).

The normal rule that it is for the plaintiff to prove negligence but as in some cases considerable hardship is caused to the plaintiff as the true cause of the accident is not known to him but is solely within the knowledge of the defendant who caused it, the plaintiff can prove the accident but cannot prove how it happened to establish negligence on the part of the defendant. This hardship is sought to be avoided by applying the principle of res ipsa loquitur, i.e., the accident speaks for itself so that it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove the accident and nothing more. It will then be for the defendant to establish that the accident happened due to some other cause than his own negligence. Where a car is driven by a person other than the owner, the presumption is raised that the driver of the car is the servant or agent of the owner. Where driver of a scooter caused an accident and the insurance company sought to disown its liability on the ground that the driver was not holding a driving licence, held, the burden to establish that driver was not holding a licence to drive a vehicle was on the Insurance Company. The Court held that a mere averment to that effect in the written statement and a mere suggestion to a party in that behalf in cross-examination is not sufficient to discharge the said duty: (1985) 26 Guj.L.R. 1242: (1985) 5 Guj.L.H. 263.

Where in a motor accident case, the plaintiff sitting in the bus received injuries when said bus collided with a truck coming from opposite side, held, the factors that led to the accident were in the special knowledge of the two drivers. The circumstances, therefore, called for an explanation from them and if they failed to place the relevant facts before the Court, adverse inference must be drawn against them: A.I.R. 1974 Madh. Pra. 68: 1974 M.P.L.J. 16 (D.B.).

Where in a case under S. 304-A, I.P. Code, the evidence of the witnesses who saw the accident was to the effect that a lorry with a large number of persons on it ran over a little girl but there was no evidence on the record though evidence could be available as to who was the person who was driving the lorry at the relevant moment, S. 106 does not entitle the Court to say that the fact as to who was driving the lorry at that time was within the special knowledge of the accused and that the burden of proving that fact was upon him. The ordinary rule that applies to criminal trials that the onus lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of an accused is not in any way modified by the provisions contained in S. 106. This section on the other hand is to be taken alongwith the provisions of that general rule: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 235: 50 Cr.L.J. 456.

9. Damages.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 36, supra). Where the plaintiffs filed a suit for realisation of certain sum from the defendants for damages caused to his premises owing to carrying out of underground mining operation in an unscientific manner by the defendants, held, as the defendants had special knowledge as to whether it had carried out the mining operation scientifically or not, the burden to prove the same was on the defendants: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 267.

The responsibility of the Railway Administration in respect of goods booked under Railway risk is that of a bailee. The administration must, therefore, take as much care of the goods while under its control, as a man of ordinary prudence would take of such goods and would be liable for the loss, destruction, etc., if it happens by its default or negligence. It is not for the plaintiff, in the first instance to prove, when loss or destruction occurs as to how it happened. He has, no doubt, to satisfy that the defendant-administration was negligent; but the duty of showing how the consignment was dealt with during transit lies on the Railway Administration as matter within its special knowledge and when that has not been done to the satisfaction of the Court, it is entitled to presume negligence on the Part of Railway Administration: 1966 Mad.W.N. 196: (1966) 79 Mad.L.W. 237: (1966) 2 M.L.J. 16: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 381.

In case of discrepancy between the entry of the goods despatched as recorded on the Railways Receipt and the goods actually found on opening of the wagon, held, prima facie duty is cast on the Railway Administration to explain it; the Railway Receipts could not be prepared or issued if the goods mentioned therein were not factually produced and weighed; non-examination of the consignor in the circumstances did not absolve the Railway Administration of its burden to prove the discrepancy which is in its special knowledge: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 331: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 135 (D.B.).

The Railway Administration's general responsibility, prior to 1961, for loss, destruction or deterioration of animals and goods carried by it was, subject to other statutory provisions, that of a bailee; there are, however, two exceptions under S. 74-A and S. 74-C of the Railways Act, 1890; the Administration is not liable if as per the consignor's recorded note, the goods were not properly packed; and if goods are carried at the owner's risk, the Administration shall not be liable except on proof of negligence on its part; thus, the burden to prove negligence in both such cases would lie on the consignor and not on the Administration. [A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 173, Foll.; A.I.R. 1951 Assam 173, Not Foll.; A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 394; A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 149; A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 182, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 515: (1970-71) 75 Cal.W.N. 634 (D.B.).

Where the requisite notice under S. 78-B of the Railways Act, 1890 was issued to various authorities including the Chief Commercial Superintendent and the General Manager by a letter repudiated the claim the wording of which clearly revealed that this letter was issued only after receiving the correspondence addressed by the claimant, held, it must be presumed that the notice must have reached the appropriate authorities under the General Manager required to deal with the claim; the onus would lie on the Railways, and not on the claimant, to prove as to when the notice was served; it is the Railways which have special knowledge of the same: A.I.R. 1971 Assam 41: 1970 Assam L.R. 41.

Goods booked under Railway risk—Liability of Railway Administration—Loss of goods—Onus of proof: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 190.

When goods are carried at the Railway risk, the special facts and circumstances under which the consignment was handled are only known to the Railway Administration, and, therefore, it is for them to place that material before the Court for forming its opinion on the question whether it had taken as much care of the goods as is required of them. Non-production of record by Railway Administration justifies the raising of an adverse inference against them: A.I.R. 1971 Madh. Pra. 131: 1970 M.P.L.J. 758. See also A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 59.

Facts within the knowledge of Railway Administration—Railway Administration must prove such facts: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 153.

Goods sufficiently packed and carried at owner's risk rate delivered short—Consignor should under S. 74-C, prove negligence or misconduct on the part of Railway or its servants—Railway should under S. 74-D disclose how the goods were dealt with while in its custody—If no such disclosure is made, consignor can ask Court to infer that such disclosure, if made, would have proved negligence or misconduct of Railway or its servants: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 651.

Burden of proof of parties under—Not overridden by S. 74-D of the Railways Act, 1890: A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 130.

Where there is a loss of a portion of the contents of a package in a transit, according to the normal rule embodied in S. 106 of the Evidence Act, it is only the Railway Company which could have special knowledge of the manner in which the goods got missed in transit. The consignor can have no knowledge about this: A.I.R. 1951 All. 438: 1951 All.L.J. 350.

Where cotton unloaded on the platform was not removed to the shed and was damaged by fire within the transit period and the Railways denied negligence by ascribing it to sheer accident and pleaded having taken fire-extinguishing measures when fire had almost spread to all the bales, held, the three essential ingredients of the maxim res ipsa loquitur were satisfied, and read with S. 114(g), the Railways were liable for the loss; for the liability rested on them to prove that they were not negligent; the facts being within their special knowledge, the burden of proof lay upon them: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 438.

Short delivery and loss of goods in transit. It is true that in a suit for damages for loss of goods in transit it is for the plaintiff to prove that the loss occurred due to the negligence or want of skill of the defendant carrier. But it is the duty of the carrier to show how the consignment was dealt with during transit as that is a matter within the special knowledge of the defendant or its servants and agents. The defendant must first adduce evidence disclosing its treatment of the goods and the plaintiff may rely on that evidence in addition to any tendered by him to show that the loss had occurred by reason of the defendant's default or negligence or that the loss could not have occurred but for such default or negligence. If the defendant does not adduce all the evidence at its command the plaintiff may, in proper case, ask the Court to make a presumption under S. 114(g) and to come to the conclusion that the evidence which has been withheld would have gone against the defendant: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 362.

Insurance of goods sent by Railway—Policy covering risk of theft—Risk was to last only for three days after arrival of train at destination and no liability for loss would attach unless notice was given within 10 days of said risk to company—Assured not able to show date of arrival—Held: (i) Onus of proving as to when train arrived at destination lay on assured, (ii) (Per Tarkeshwar Nath, J). Stipulation of giving notice was essential condition and assured must prove that it was complied with before saddling company with liability for loss: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 69.

Loss of goods in transit—Certain fact cannot be said to be blameworthy or has fallen into error of law: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 532.

Res ipsa loquitur—Applicability of maxim—Burden of proof of negligence: A.I.R. 1962 Cal. 544.

The burden of proving exact date of a mortgage transaction entered into orally being not peculiarly within his knowledge does not lie on the mortgagee: 115 I.C. 451: A.I.R. 1929 All. 209. Though in cases alleging negligence against a public body, the burden of proving negligence lies on the plaintiff yet the provisions of S. 106 must be borne in mind. The fact that the burden of proving negligence may be on the plaintiff does not necessarily preclude the burden of proving any particular fact being upon the defendant public body: A.I.R. 1940 Sind 254. Bailment—Hire of elephant for term of one year—Death of elephant before expiry of period of hire—Claim to damage—Negligence of bailee—Burden of proof. See A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 411: (1937) 2 M.L.J. 329.

Where in a suit by the insurer, subrogating the assured, there was admission by the common carrier in the written statement that goods delivered to it were lost because of an accident, held, it is for the carrier to establish absence of negligence; all facts relating thereto are in the special knowledge of the carrier; S. 106 is clearly attracted: A.I.R. 1993 Cal. 26.

When the goods are solely under the control of the bailee, the fact as to when loss, destruction or deterioration occurred is a matter specially within his knowledge and therefore, the burden of proving that the loss occurred at a particular time and not subsequently must be on him: 1932 All.L.J. 798: A.I.R. 1932 All. 584.

When fire breaks out in the premises under the control of the bailee, as between the parties to the case, bailee alone will be in a position to explain the cause of the fire. It is a fact specially within his knowledge and, therefore, under S. 106 of the Evidence Act, burden of proving of that fact will be upon him. Similarly, burden of proving that he had taken all reasonable precautions which an ordinary man of prudence would take is also on him. Plaintiff may show that the bailee has failed to place before the Court all materials available to him under S. 106 of the Evidence Act and ask the Court to presume that if produced, such documents may go against the bailee. He may also show that on the materials produced, it could be seen that the bailee has not taken as much care as is required under law: A.I.R. 1983 Ker. 154: 1983 Ker.L.T. 562: I.L.R. (1983) 1 Ker. 751 (D.B.).

Damage to goods by fire—Lack of sufficient care by bailee—Burden of proof: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 544: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 374.

If no risk-note is signed by a consignor of goods sending them by Railway, then under S. 106, Evidence Act, it is for the bailee (i.e., Railway) to whom the goods have been entrusted for delivery to prove that the loss caused was not through its negligence, as the matter lies especially within its knowledge and it is not possible for the consignor to prove what occurred during the transit to cause the loss: I.L.R. (1956) Hyd. 34: A.I.R. 1956 Hyd. 193.

Where goods have been entrusted to a carrier for being booked and he fails to book them and they are lost, he is in special knowledge and is bound to explain their missing under S. 106 of the Evidence Act and when he fails to explain, the presumption under S. 106 of the Evidence Act can be applied against him: (1951) 1 M.L.J. 53: A.I.R. 1952 Mad. 322.

Where an instrument hired by a person was for all practical purposes in his exclusive possession, it is for him to explain how it came to be damaged. It is for him to establish that it was a case of ordinary wear and tear and not of carelessness or negligence in any degree: 184 I.C. 36: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 245.

Where A hires temporarily a bicycle from B and alleges that he has lost it, the burden of proof of showing that the bicycle hired was lost is on A as it is a fact which is purely within the knowledge of A and as B cannot be expected to know which bicycle is lost and under what circumstances: A.I.R. 1957 Mys. 55: I.L.R. (1956) Mys. 281.

Collapse of building—Loss of life—Suit for damages—Question of negligence—Onus of proof: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 300.

The proved facts of the case were that the 1st respondent was handed over the money and he put it in the iron safe. The keys of the safe remained with him all through and, when he returned the next morning, the safe was found to be unlocked.

Held, that it was within the special knowledge of the 1st respondent whether he had locked the safe or not, and that being the position, it was for him to prove that he had locked the safe. Further, the presumption of negligence would arise from the proved facts of the case and it was for the 1st respondent to rebut that presumption: 1958 All.W.R. (H.C.) 367: (S.) A.I.R. 1957 All. 363.

Both parties giving evidence—Question of onus—Bailor and bailee: A.I.R. 1956 Assam 188.

10. Mesne profits.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 72, supra). The burden of proof, as a matter of law, in an application for ascertainment of mesne profits as in any other case, lies on the plaintiff who substantially asserts that he is entitled to mesne profits. The burden of proof as a matter of adducing evidence (onus of proof) shifts from one party to the other depending upon the weight of evidence adduced. If so the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff who seeks to claim mesne profits. The onus of proving the amounts actually received lies on the defendant as that matter is within his knowledge. But even in case of profits that the defendant might have received, though initially the onus might lie on the plaintiff, it may shift to the defendant if the former has adduced some evidence, direct or circumstantial, raising a presumption in his favour. But the question of burden of proof becomes immaterial if both parties have adduced evidence and the Court is called upon to ascertain profits on the basis of the evidence so adduced: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 64: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 427.

Where the plaintiff says that he is entitled to mesne profits at a particular rate, it would mean profits which a person in occupation might with ordinary diligence have received. But profits actually received also are within the contemplation of mesne profits and the burden of proving profits actually received is upon the person who has been in possession of the property. It is fair to presume that the person in possession may by ordinary diligence get rent according to the prevailing rates. Therefore, the plaintiff would be entitled to get the mesne profits calculated or arrived at on the basis of the prevailing rates or on the basis of what the person in occupation had actually received: 1961 An.L.T. 205: A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 428.

In a suit for mesne profits, if the defendant asserts that a particular amount and no more was received by him, the duty of establishing it affirmatively rests upon him, that fact being especially within his own knowledge. On his laying before the Court sufficient evidence to prove that fact, he shifts the burden to the opposite party of proving that more might have been received: I.L.R. 57 Mad. 49: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 825: 66 M.L.J. 263. See also I.L.R. 21 Pat. 735.

In a suit for mesne profits, the burden of proof depends on the nature of the claims made by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff limits his claim to the actual profits which the defendant is said to have received, obviously, in such a case, as the defendant is the person who had special knowledge of the actual receipt of profits received by him, the burden would lie on him to prove the actual receipts made by him by virtue of the provisions of S. 106. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff wants to make the defendant liable for profits which the defendant ought to have received by the use of ordinary diligence, it cannot be said that it is a matter within the special knowledge of the defendant and the burden of proof would rest on the plaintiff to prove the probable receipts in respect of the disputed property: (1949-50) 54 Cal.W.N. 355: A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 87.

Mesne profits—Determination—Burden of proof—Improvement by trespasser—Waste by trespasser: A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 286.

Suit by one co-owner against another who is in exclusive possession of joint property for his share of mesne profits—Burden of proving quantum of mesne profits actually realised by defendant lies on defendant: I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 244: A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 139.

For computing mesne profits recoverable from the landlord for the period he kept his tenant deprived of the enjoyment and possession of the demised premises, the rent payable by the tenant therefor is ordinarily a good measure; but if the landlord had earned more by the use of the premises, held, the burden would lie on him, because of its being within the landlord's special knowledge, to prove the same; it is only after such proof that the onus would shift to the tenant to rebut it: A.I.R. 1972 Del. 11.

11. Land acquisition cases.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 63, supra). Where Government acquired impugned lands and it was contended that there was no urgency which required an action under S. 17(1) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, held, the initial burden of proof to show urgency was on the Government. But after it was discharged it was then for the petitioner to show that urgency did not exist. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 183, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1979 Del. 84 (D.B.).

Grant Land Acquisition Officer having access to all relevant documentary evidence, not for a moment doubting that there was grant of minerals—Question of such grant not traversed before District Judge—It must be assumed that Land Acquisition Officer was fully aware that question of grant to minerals was not controverted: (1967) 1 Mys.L.J. 159.

Proof of contents of document—Person with knowledge must be examined—Land acquisition—Higher rate claimed—Onus of proof on claimant: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 270.

Non-statement of claim pursuant to notice under S. 9, Land Acquisition Act—Burden is on claimant to prove sufficient cause for omission: A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 124.

12. Landlord and tenant.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 43, supra). The initial burden of proof on the landlord when he makes a petition for permission to file a proceeding against the tenant for eviction, is to aver and to prove that the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between the parties and that the tenant is in occupation of the premises of the landlord, and also that the tenant is in possession of means to find alternative accommodation. He may make such averment according to such knowledge and belief as he may have entertained in this respect. But there may be honest cases in which landlords would not really know anything about the means of the tenant. In such cases, the landlords may truthfully say that they do not know if the tenant is in possession of the means to find alternative accommodation. The income of the tenant is a fact which is especially within his knowledge. The burden of proving the same is, therefore, on him. If therefore, neither the landlord nor the tenant adduced any evidence as to the income of the tenant, it is the tenant whose defence will fail and the landlord would obtain a permission for filing an eviction petition against him in view of S. 102 of the Evidence Act. [A.I.R. 1974 Del. 219, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Del. 221: 1974 Ren.C.R. 288.

The landlord in his application under S. 19 of the Slum Areas (Improvement and Clearance) Act, 1956 has to aver that the tenant against whom he seeks to institute proceedings for eviction is one to whom alternative accommodation, within his means, would be available if he were evicted. The burden then shifts to the tenant, and it is for him to adduce positive and satisfactory evidence regarding his income which is especially within his knowledge: A.I.R. 1973 Del. 71: (1972) 74 Punj.L.R. 253: 1972 Ren.C.R. 764.

For the determination of the means of a tenant for finding alternative accommodation if he be evicted from a shop let to him by the landlord not only the actual income earned by the tenant could be taken into account but also such other contribution or other payments of money made to the tenant by other members of the family or any other person which go to constitute his total means which would be available to him for finding out alternative accommodation if he may be evicted from the shop let out to him. It is not necessary that a person who may augment the means of the tenant must be a co-tenant. If a tenant does not show that income of all family members was not being pooled for meeting family expenses then tenant's means would be income of all. If members contribute definite sum then only such sum can be added to tenant's income. But such a presumption cannot be drawn when tenancy is of a commercial premises and tenant is individually doing business.

The landlord can shift the onus on the tenant by merely saying that he does not know what the income of the tenant is or he may say that according to his information the tenant's income reaches a certain figure. The burden resting on the tenant has to be discharged by a proper statement of the means by the tenant. When the tenant filed her own affidavit and that of the person employed her and her husband also filed an affidavit then looking to the nature of the business of a petty shop-keeper it cannot be expected that accounts would be maintained. It would be unrealistic for the competent authority to expect production of account books for such petty traders, particularly when such particulars can be taken from the fact stated in the affidavits: (1977) 13 Del.L.T. (S.N.) 15 (D.B.).

A landlord seeking his tenant's eviction for default, shall have initially to lead evidence of default; once he prima facie shows that the defendant is a defaulter, the onus to prove payment would be on the defendant for the simple reason that payment of rent is specifically within his special knowledge and the burden to prove it would be upon him. But the question of onus would shift to the background when the parties have led evidence: 1981 B.L.J.R. 649.

Where landlord files a suit for eviction on the ground of non-payment of rent and the tenant comes forward with the allegations that the rent was paid but no receipt was issued with no explanation whatsoever, for not sending the rent by money order, held, in such a situation, the oral testimony of the tenant in regard to the payment of rent cannot be deemed to be worth reliance at all. [(1993) 1 J.T. (S.C.) 162: 1993 A.I.R. S.C.W. 743 and (1989) 1 All. Ren.C. 540, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1994 All. 59.

In an eviction proceedings tenant contended that he used the shop for whole-sale business and there was no non-user of the shop, held, the question that the shop had not been used without reasonable cause was within the special knowledge of the tenant and thus, the burden was on him to prove the same. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. (Notes) 406; (1979) 1 Ren.C.J. 86, Rel. on]: 1982 Raj.L.W. 274.

The exact date of sub-tenancy is a fact which can be within the exclusive knowledge of the sub-tenant only. Thus, the onus of proving the date of the sub-tenancy must, therefore, be upon sub-tenant only: A.I.R. 1981 Bom. 446.

Where appellant-tenant was sought to be evicted on the ground that he had sub-let the shop in dispute without the consent of plaintiff-landlord and the tenant pleaded the existence of joint-tenancy, but he failed to produce any evidence in that regard, held, once it was found that the other person was not tenant in shop in dispute in joint capacity and was in possession thereof, it was for the appellant, within whose knowledge the specific facts and the evidence was, to show the capacity in which the other person was occupying the impugned shop. The best evidence being available with the appellant and he having not produced the same, adverse inference had to be drawn against him: A.I.R. 1995 Raj. 167.

Landlord alleging creation of illegal sub-tenancy by the tenant and placing material showing it prima facie—Tenant and sub-tenant denying creation of sub-tenancy—Burden shifts on tenant to show by material within his knowledge how alleged sub-tenant occupied premises—Tenant leading no evidence—Landlord entitled to decree for eviction on ground of illegally sub-letting—Lower appellate Court wrongly placing burden on landlord to prove sub-tenancy—There is error justifying interference in second appeal: 1963 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 269.

In a suit for eviction landlord alleged that the tenant had sub-let the premises to a firm, held, the question as to whether the occupier were parting with some money for the use of the disputed premises or not, was a fact which was within the special knowledge of the tenant and the occupier, the burden was on them to bring the facts before the Court. [1965 Cur.L.J. 341 (Punj.); 1975 Ren.C.J. 651 (Punj.); A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 280 and 1976 Ren.C.J. 87 (Punj.), Disting.]: A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 186: (1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 275.

In an ejectment proceedings on the basis of sub-tenancy, and the claim of the defendant sub-tenants that they were the tenants of the predecessor-in-interest of the landlord was also negatived, held, an inference could be drawn that the defendants were occupying the premises as sub-tenants and the burden was on the tenant to prove relationship between him and the persons occupying the premises. [1963 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 269; A.I.R.

1956 Madh. Pra. 121; 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 233, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Madh. Pra. 209: 1972 M.P.L.J. 91: 1972 Jab.L.J. 121.

In an eviction proceeding on the ground of sub-letting under S. 10(2)(ii)(a) of the T.N. Buildings (Lease and Rent Control) Act, 1960, held, their relationship being in the special knowledge of either of them, the burden would lie upon them that they are not related as tenant and sub-tenant and not upon the landlord; on a complete stranger being found carrying on separate business on the demised premises without any satisfactory explanation for his presence, an inference of his being a sub-tenant is justified: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 1064.

Transfer of right in lease or sub-letting—Burden of proof—Transfer of possession by tenant to third person—Presumption: I.L.R. (1969) 2 Ker. 575.

Tenant claiming exemption from eviction under special statute—Burden lies on him to bring himself within the exception—Landlord and tenant—Tenant claiming exemption from eviction under Kerala Land Reforms Act (I of 1964)—He has to show that he is a Kudikidappukaran within the meaning of that Act—Burden cannot be placed on landlord to show that value of building is such that Act does not apply on the ground that he has special knowledge of its value: 1969 Ker.L.R. 712: 1969 Ker.L.T. 524.

13. Election matter.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 44, supra). Though an election petition may not be akin in all respects to a criminal trial, but the burden of proof nevertheless lies on the election petitioner to prove each and every ingredient of the electoral misconduct; even if such an ingredient is pre-eminently within the knowledge of the returned candidate, it will not relieve the election petitioner of his primary burden though the quantum of proof may be affected; the petitioner has to adduce at least prima facie evidence: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 667; A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 44 (Del.).

Election disputes—Allegation of corrupt practice—Nature of proof required—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1964 Ori. 8. Corrupt practice under—Representation of the People Act, 1951, S. 123(4)—Burden of proof: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 107: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 184.

Election—Charge that election expenses did not show certain expenditure—Onus: (1960) 1 M.L.J. 100: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 170.

14. Suit for specific performance.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 32, supra). In a suit for specific performance of a contract, held, the facts of his being ready and willing to perform his part of the contract, being within the special knowledge of the plaintiff, he must plead and prove them, and though the non-denial of said plea by the defendant may be taken into consideration in appraising the evidence, but that does not absolve the plaintiff from adducing evidence of his being so ready and willing: (1993-1) 108 Mad.L.W. 219 (D.B.).

15. Income.—In a suit for maintenance, the plaintiff is not supposed to prove a thing which, under the circumstances, is impossible for the plaintiff to prove, especially when the facts regarding the income are within the special knowledge of the defendant-husband. When the question regarding the proof of the income is to be determined, in such circumstances the plaintiff can only give the figure on guesswork and not the exact figure: A.I.R. 1985 Guj. 187: (1985-1) 26 Guj.L.R. 374: (1985) 2 Hindu L.R. 29; (1990) 3 Crimes 268 (Cal.).

In a proceeding for maintenance pendente lite under S. 24 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, held, the onus is upon the husband to disclose his income but where he failed to do so and also did not specifically deny the amount alleged by the wife to be his income, the Court would have to go by such alleged income: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 98: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 677 (D.B.).

In a proceeding for grant of interim alimony under S. 24 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, held, the onus lies on the husband to disclose his income which is especially within his knowledge: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 61 (Raj.); (1980) 17 Del.L.T. 63 (D.B.).

Where the wife by an application to the Court required the husband to produce documentary evidence like title deeds of his properties, pass books of his bank accounts, profit and loss accounts of business concerns wherein he had pecuniary interest but the husband declined to prove on the abstract doctrine of the burden of proof lying on the wife but produced only his income-tax returns, held, the facts sought to be proved by the wife were within the husband's special knowledge; the husband had to prove his sources of income and assets; the presumption clearly goes against him that the documents if produced would have gone against him: (1994-1) 14 Guj.L.H. 78.

Where the debtor-defendant claimed protection under Maharashtra Debt Relief Act, on the ground that he was a genuine worker but he failed to give any particulars about his income, held, it was obligatory on the part of the debtor-defendant to set out the details of his income on such particulars which were within the knowledge of the debtor-defendant himself: (1983) 1 Bom.C.R. 345.

16. Employer and employee.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Notes 50 and 62, supra). Breach of contract of employment by employer—Salary payable to employee—Existence of mitigating circumstances—Burden of proof: 1969 Lab.I.C. 1324: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 373.

Where in a suit by an employee for a declaration that the orders of suspension and dismissal were illegal and ultra vires, the defence is that the orders were proper and justified inasmuch as plaintiff was guilty of misconduct, the circumstances justifying the dismissal are within the special knowledge of the defendant on whom therefore, lies the onus to establish the justification and accordingly it is for the defendant to give evidence on the issue relating to the question at the first instance: 1956 B.L.J.R. 59: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 145.

Where the State Government did not prove that the charge-sheet and suspension order were based on the preliminary enquiry held by authorised persons, held, such charge-sheet and order stood vitiated: A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 298: 1981 Raj.L.W. 355 (D.B.).

Where the deceased-employee met with an accident and died while discharging his duties, held, only the employer through its concerned employees could have personal knowledge about the accident and, thus, the burden would be on the employer to point out as to how and under what circumstances death of the deceased occurred: (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. 27: (1985) 26 Guj.L.R. 1315 (D.B.).

Whether an establishment at the material time had employed twenty or more persons is certainly within special knowledge of the employer, and the initial onus is on him and as such he should be asked to discharge the same: 1975 Lab.I.C. 1162 (Cal.) (D.B.).

17. Principal and agent.—Presumptions—Implied authority of agent—Extent of—Agent having authority to take delivery of goods and to sell them at any price he chooses—Presumption as to implied authority—Limitation on implied authority of agent—Burden of proof—Non-production of agent as witness—Adverse presumption against principal when can be raised: A.I.R. 1965 All. 34.

Scope of agent's authority to bind principal—Presumption—Onus on Principal to prove limited authority of agent—Landlord appointing Tahsildar to manage agricultural lands—Tahsildar letting out lands on bhag for proper cultivation—Transaction within scope of Tahsildar's authority—Implied holding out by landlord—Landlord bound by Tahsildar's acts—Landlord and tenant: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 564: A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 164.

Where an agreement, executed by the Sub-Divisional Controller on behalf of the State in matters of relief ex facie not disclosing his authority therefor, was impugned as invalid for non-compliance of the mandatory requirements of Art. 299(1) of the Constitution by the State as he was authorised only to execute documents relating to Food and Supplies by the District Magistrate and not relief matters, held, the State did not produce the order of the District Magistrate and as such an adverse inference had to be drawn against the State when the plaintiff had by evidence of the Sub-Divisional Controller and his Head Clerk established that he indeed was empowered to and had been executing agreements pertaining to relief matters under the authority of the District Magistrate: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 7 (D.B.).

Where the question is whether plaintiff is authorised by the Managing Committee of an institution to institute a suit on its behalf, and the proof of the minutes of the meeting of the Managing Committee constituting such due authority is available, it is sufficient to discharge any burden on the plaintiff under S. 106: 65 I.A. 106: I.L.R. (1938) Lah. 63: A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 73: (1938) 1 M.L.J. 359 (P.C.).

18. Tax laws.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 25, supra). Where S. 23-A inserted by amendment in 1981 in the Punjab Agricultural Produce Markets Act, 1961, primarily provided that the Market Committee can retain the fee levied and collected by it from a licencee in excess of that leviable under S. 23 of that Act, if the burden of such fee was passed on by the licensee to the next purchaser of the agricultural produce, held, it merely codified the well known principle of the general law embodied in S. 106; the licensees alone had the special knowledge and necessary records and data about myriad of their dealings with agricultural producers and next purchasers; the Market Committee could not possibly go on a wild goose chase to find out the details of the realisation and refund of the excess fee; S. 23-A clearly provides against unjust enrichment of the licensees: A.I.R. 1984

Where a company sought refund of octroi duty paid to the Municipality on the ground that it was brought within the Municipal limit for a temporary period for being taken out later, held, the burden of proof was on the Company to show that the said goods were not sold to the consumers within the Municipal limits and were sent out for sale or distribution outside that area, as those were the facts which were in the special knowledge of the Company: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 454.

Assessment of income-tax—Burden to explain receipts. See A.I.R. 1957 All. 746. Item whether assessable—Onus. See A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 73.

In cases of concealment of income and tax evasion, the modus of concealment being obviously within the special knowledge of the assessee, held, the onus should be placed on him and he alone can reasonably discharge the same: 1982 Tax.L.R. 983 (P.&H.) (F.B.).

Once the assessee explains the credit entry and brings in evidence to show that the entry related to a third party, and that credit was that of that party, the burden would shift to the Income-tax Officer to prove that this is not true. For instance, it would be open to the Income-tax Officer in such a case to establish that the entry was not real but was pseudonymous. The mere fact that the third party making the deposit in a firm happens to be the wife of the assessee-partner does not ipso facto make the assessee come into the knowledge of the source from which the money was realised. Under law, in the absence of specific proof of that knowledge, it cannot be assumed that the assessee has the knowledge in question within the meaning of S. 106 of the Evidence Act. In order to rely on this section, it must be established first that the person has special knowledge of that fact, having regard to the circumstances of the case. Where the accounts of the firm had been accepted and acted upon by the Department and no serious challenge had been made to their genuineness or that they were kept regularly in the course of business the accounts are relevant and afford prima facie proof of the entries and the correctness thereof under S. 34 of the Evidence Act, so that where a deposit is found to have been made by a third party in the accounts of the firm, the entry is prima facie proof that that amount in question was deposited by the person in whose name the deposit stands. They require the firm or the individual partners to go further and adduce proof of the sources from which the deposits in question appearing in the accounts in the name of third parties were derived by them, would be placing a burden on the firm as well as the partners, which is not required or justified by law. The fact that somebody else made a similar deposit on the same day is totally irrelevant in deciding upon the nature of the deposit made by a person and cannot be a "material" at all on which the Department could base its decision: 59 I.T.R. 632: A.I.R. 1968 Assam 1.

Sales tax assessment is dependent on the satisfaction of the Commissioner based on the material placed before him by the dealer at his own instance or at the instance of the Commissioner and in cases where the Commissioner is unable to make a proper assessment on the basis of such material or where the required material is not furnished as required by the Act, he is permitted to assess the dealer to the best of his judgment. Consequently, if a dealer does not want a best judgment assessment, or claims exemption under one or the other of the clauses of the Act or the Constitution, he must place all the relevant facts before the Sales tax authorities to enable them to determine if any exemption from liability can validly be claimed by him. Under S. 106 of the Evidence Act, when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him: 1961 M.P.L.J. 804: 1961 M.P.C. 582: A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 225.

19. Citizenship.—(See also S. 101-104, Note 29, supra). S. 3, Pakistan Citizenship Act, 1951, providing that person who was born in 1914 in territory which subsequently became part of Pakistan and who after 14th August, 1947 has not been a permanent resident outside Pakistan would be deemed to be citizen of Pakistan—Petitioner born in territory included in 1914 in territory subsequently included in Pakistan—Fact as to where he had been residing permanently since 14th August, 1947, is within his special knowledge and it is for him to prove his permanent residence by cogent evidence: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 272.

Where the petitioner contended that he was an Indian citizen and not a Pakistani national and that he went to Pakistan only in 1951, held, the fact as to when he went to Pakistan was a matter peculiarly within his knowledge and, thus, the burden was on the petitioner to prove said statement: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 28: (1974) S.C.C. 469.

20. Miscellaneous.—Ordinarily it is for the plaintiff to prove that his suit is within time. This is more so in a case when time begins to run from the date of the plaintiff's knowledge of a particular event and since the knowledge of that event can only be within the knowledge of the plaintiff and no one else, S. 106, Evidence Act applies and the onus should be upon him: I.L.R. (1953) Patiala 87: A.I.R. 1953 Pepsu 74.

"Facts" within special knowledge of vendor—Onus is upon him to prove them: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1261: A.I.R. 1967 All. 491.

Infringement of Patent—Defendant to prove his process of manufacture was different—Matter is especially within his knowledge: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 255. See also Ss. 101-104, Note 103, supra.

Will duly registered—No presumption about genuineness—The onus to prove it is on propounder, if there are any suspicious circumstances, to explain them: A.I.R. 1969 Assam 118. See also Ss. 101-104, Note 107, supra.

Board of Directors empowered to make loans by means of resolution—Whether there was such resolution—Burden is on company and not on lender: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 75.

Companies Act, 1913, S. 235—Appraisement of evidence—Nature of proof required—Burden of proof: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 1022: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 118.

Where the fact to be ascertained or proved is the state of mind of the defendant who purchased the shares held by the plaintiff in a company which shares were sold to recover the debt due from the plaintiff to the company, that is, whether prior to the sale, he has knowledge of the wrongful character of the transaction, this being within the special knowledge of the defendant, the burden of proving the innocent state of his own mind is on him. Assuming that the initial onus is on the plaintiff to lead some evidence, the burden of proof is shifted to the defendant where he has admitted in the written statement that he had some knowledge anterior to the sale. In determining whether the onus has shifted to the defendant, the evidence to be taken into account is the entire evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiff alone. Very slight evidence, if at all, is necessary to shift the burden on the defendant. It is imperative for the defendant to tender his evidence as to the quantum of his knowledge of the transaction resulting in the sale of shares and to prove that he was an innocent purchaser: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 715.

Where plaintiff contended that receipt for a certain amount was executed for the payment towards old debts, held, the burden rested on the plaintiff to prove the existence of those old debts: A.I.R. 1971 Madh. Pra. 124.

Article recovered from place in possession of joint family—Presumption of possession by head of family—Onus of proof: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 533: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 162.

Upon the death of the father, his entire property was mutated in the name of his son who continued to be in its possession and also acted as karta. He sold one of the old properties to construct another floor on the house at Lucknow and the sale of the old property was impugned by the son's mother and sons as being not for legal necessity, and the vendee pleaded that to his knowledge the vendor was the sole owner of the Lucknow house. Held, the vendee being a total stranger to the family, obviously his "knowledge" could only be a belief arising from what he was told by the vendor. Thus, it could not be said that the manner of acquisition of the house at Lucknow was within his exclusive knowledge; the vendee's failure to plead in his written statement about the Lucknow house being a coparcenary property or deposing about it being owned by the vendor could not be used as an argument against the vendee: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2128: 1982 Hindu L.R. 10: 1981 All.L.J. 1172.

Partition—Suit for partition of joint family property—Mere mention of arbitration agreement and award does not bar the suit—Burden to plead necessary facts in support of bar set up is on the defendant: A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 7. See also Ss. 101-104, Note 60, supra.

Failure to observe terms as to accounts in licence issued in prescribed form—Onus is on licencee to prove that he was prevented

Burden of proof—Fact specially within knowledge—Where a person has taken elephant on hire the burden of proving the number of days for which the elephant had worked is on him, since the fact is peculiarly within his knowledge: 1963 Ker.L.J. 1079.

Where the charge-sheet under R. 6, Passport Rules, had been furnished to the accused at Kanpur, where he was found to be residing and was being tried for the contravention of R. 3 of Passport Rules, the Kanpur Court shall have jurisdiction to proceed with the trial unless the matter contained in the Challan is positively disproved by the accused under S. 106, Evidence Act: 1963 All.W.R. (H.C.) 571: 1963 All.Cr. R. 297: A.I.R. 1965 All. 158.

Negotiable instrument — Failure to honour—Intention to cheat—When can be inferred: A.I.R. 1957 All. 246: 1957 Cr.L.J. 438.

In order to avail the immunity under S. 131 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the onus of proving that it has acted in good faith and without negligence in the process of collection lies on the collecting banker. Where sufficient connection between opening of the account and collection of cheque, which would prove negligence on the part of the collecting banker, could not be established, held, the collecting banker was not barred from claiming protection under S. 131: (1992) 1 M.L.J. 636 (D.B.).

Where the Government had cancelled a contract for supply and consolidation of shingle because of its breach by the contractor who sued it for the price of work executed by him, held, the burden lay on the State to plead and prove, because of S. 106, as to when was the contract cancelled to the contractor's knowledge; that would be time for reckoning whether or not the suit was barred by limitation; the time would therefore run from the expiry of two months from the service of notice under S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the State: A.I.R. 1976 J.&K. 93 (D.B.).

Where the defendant was given a contract on the basis of public auction for recovery of Tehbazari but he failed to pay part of contracted money although he recovered the said dues from various persons occupying the land, held, as the defendant was the person who was specifically aware of the real facts, the onus was upon him to prove the benefits received by him. Whether gas had been supplied to the appellant's premises, being within the special knowledge of the respondent company, within the meaning of S. 106, on withholding of such information by non-production of the Log Book, an adverse presumption can be drawn under S. 114, Illus. (g). The provisions of S. 106 are designed to meet certain exceptional cases in which it would be impossible for the plaintiff to prove certain facts which are in the special knowledge of the defendant: (1991) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 227.

107. Burden of proving death of person known to have been alive within thirty years.—When the question is whether a man is alive or dead, and it is shown that he was alive within thirty years, the burden of proving that he is dead is on the person who affirms it.

108. Burden of proving that person is alive who has not been heard of for seven years.—[1][Provided that when] the question is whether a man is alive or dead, and it is proved that he has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive, the burden of proving that he is alive is [2][shifted to] the person who affirms it.

12. Illustrative cases.

1. Scope.—S. 107 deals with the presumption of continuance of life and S. 108 deals with the presumption of death. Both the presumptions under Ss. 107 and 108 come into play after a suit is instituted. These sections deal with the procedure to be followed when in such a suit a question is raised before a Court as to whether a person is alive or dead. In either case, the presumption is always rebuttable. The presumption embodied in S. 108 is by way of proviso to S. 107. If the two sections are read together it would be evident that it would be erroneous to seek to apply both Ss. 107 and 108 to one and the same case and at the same time: A.I.R. 1970 Andh. Pra. 246.

The propositions regarding the scope of presumptions under S. 108 are: firstly, the occasion for drawing the presumption of a person's death if he was unheard of for seven years or more; secondly, the presumption is rebuttable; thirdly, there can be no presumption whether the person died during or at the end of that period; and, lastly, the time of his death is to be proved like any other fact. The presumption being a matter of procedure can arise only when the dispute is brought before the Court and not at any earlier point: (1972) 1 Cut.W.R. 299.

S. 108 is a proviso to S. 107. These two sections are based on the principle that once it is shown that a man was alive within a certain period, continuance of his being alive shall be presumed. The presumption is rebuttable. These two sections deal with the burden of proof in such a case: A.I.R. 1976 Gau. 15 (D.B.).

A combined reading of Ss. 107 and 108 shows that it is only upon proof that the person has not been heard of for seven years by those who would have naturally heard of him if he had been alive that the burden of proving that he is alive would shift to the party which so affirms: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 339.

Ss. 107 and 108, if carefully analysed and considered, provide that where a person is shown to be alive within thirty years, the burden to prove his death would lie on the person asserting his death; and when a person is not heard of for seven years by the persons who would have naturally heard of him, the burden of proving that he was alive would lie on the person affirming it, and no presumptions of death and life can be raised unless the existence of the necessary facts therefor are proved on record: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 328; 1985 All.W.C. (Rev.) 47.

S. 108 is an exception to S. 107. If a case comes within the four corners of S. 108 it is taken out of the purview of S. 107. S. 108 merely deals with the procedure to be followed, when a question is raised before a Court as to whether a person is alive or dead.

That section does not lay down any presumption as to how long the person concerned must be deemed to have been alive or at what time he died. The relevant point of time at which the presumption under S. 108 is available is when the factum of the death of the person concerned becomes material and not the date of the suit. Where the material point of time was the date of adoption, viz., 15th August, 1955 and it was established that the person to whom the adoption was made was not heard of by person who should have heard of him if he was alive, for seven years prior to 15th August, 1955, then the presumption under S. 108 would be that he was dead on or before 15th August, 1955: A.I.R. 1963 Mys. 115.

A close reading of Ss. 107 and 108 together will go to show that they deal with the burden of proof for establishing as to whether a person is alive or not if certain pre-conditions exist. If a man was alive within thirty years of the date when the controversy arise as to whether he is dead or alive, then the person would be presumed to be alive unless the contrary is proved. On the other hand, if a person has not been heard of for seven years or more by those persons who should naturally hear of him, the burden that he is alive would be on the person who claims that such a person is alive. The presumptions which arise under Ss. 107 and 108, however, are both rebuttable. The provisions of Ss. 107 and 108 merely provide a rule of evidence and do not raise a presumption in respect of death of a person at a certain time or on a particular date. Under these provisions it must be proved that the presumption mentioned therein extends merely to the fact of death after the period of seven years but it does not raise any presumption about the time of the death at any particular period, i.e. there is no presumption that the death of the concerned person took place after the expiry of seven years from the date when he was not heard of or at any other particular period of time. If the question was as to when a particular person died it must be proved by that person who asserts it. It may also be kept in mind that if S. 108 is applicable to the facts of a particular case S. 107 can have no application at all. The two sections are, therefore, mutually exclusive to each other. Ss. 107 and 108 both cannot apply to a particular case at the same time.

However, S. 108 is not the only provision to be applicable and presumption from natural course of human conduct can also be raised and if there were circumstances, it could be presumed that the person had died even during the period of seven years after a particular date: 1980 All.W.C. 53: (1980) 8 All.L.R. 276; 1979 All.W.C. 454. Even independent of S. 108, the Court can draw inference of death and presume the death of a person under S. 114, if circumstances of a case justify such inference: A.I.R. 1988 N.O.C. 76: (1988) 1 Ker.L.T. 45.

Under Ss. 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act, the burden is on the person who asserts that the man is dead or alive, to prove that he is dead or alive, as required by the sections. Where there is no proof that the husband has not been heard of for seven years by those, who would have naturally heard of him if he was alive, it should be held that the woman has not discharged the burden that lay on her to prove that the husband was dead in order to enable her to attain to the position of a widow: (1959) 2 M.L.J. 186: I.L.R. (1959) Mad. 807: A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 526.

Unless it has been established that the whereabouts of a person are not known and he has not been heard of for the past seven years before the date of the suit, the presumption would be that he is alive: I.L.R. (1953) Hyd. 202: A.I.R. 1953 Hyd. 187.

The principle of S. 107, Evidence Act (person known to have been alive within 30 years—Presumption that he is still alive) is that when once a state of things is shown to exist, there is in law a presumption of its continuance for a period for which such state of things ordinarily lasts. S. 107 of the Evidence Act is merely a deduction from this presumption.

The presumption under S. 108 (presumption that person not heard of for seven years is dead) is as to the fact of death at the time the question is raised and not at any particular antecedent time. There is no presumption also as to the cause and circumstances of the death: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 430.

The only presumption under S. 108 is that a person not heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard about him if he was alive, is dead; the burden of proving that he was alive shifts to the party who asserts that person to be alive; the presumption under S. 107 that a person shown to be alive within thirty years is alive and the burden to prove that he is dead lies on the party which says so. Since there is no presumption of the date of death of such a person, the burden lies on the party asserting death of such person to prove the date of death: A.I.R. 1986 Him. Pra. 6: I.L.R. (1985) Him. Pra. 193: 1986 Sim.L.C. 4.

Presumption—Benefit under the provision not available where the plea is neither raised nor proved: (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 1046: 1968 Cur. L.J. 268.

Where in order to succeed in a suit it is necessary, for a person to establish that a particular person was dead at a particular time, he has to prove the factum of his death at the same time by affirmative evidence either direct or circumstantial: A.I.R. 1932 All. 365: 1932 All.L.J. 175; A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 298: I.L.R. 10 Luck. 92 (F.B.).

Where the plaintiff sought to set aside the judgment in the earlier proceedings on the ground that he was alive not only at that time but also continued to be alive even during the later proceedings, held, the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove that he was alive and the question of applicability of Ss. 107 and 108 could not arise: (1991-1) 107 Mad.L.W. 45.

Where respondent husband filed a petition on 11-11-1976 for declaring his marriage with appellant as void on the ground that her previous husband was alive on 24-5-1970, i.e., the date when respondent married the appellant and the appellant admitted that her previous husband was alive in 1960, when she obtained a decree for judicial separation against him but had left for Indonesia after 14 months of marriage and was not heard of since then, held, as the appellant was admittedly deserted by her previous husband, therefore, it was not natural that he would have corresponded with her or her father if he had been alive. Further, the presumption under S. 108 about the death of previous husband of appellant even if raised would be restricted to the date of the filing of the petition by the respondent, that is November 11, 1976, and shall not relate back to May 24, 1970. Thus, respondent's marriage with the appellant was a nullity. [A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 9; A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 3; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134, Foll.; A.I.R. 1963 Mys. 115, Dissent.; A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 65, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1980 P.&H. 274: 1981 Hindu L.R. 301.

2. Applicability.—S. 107 does not apply to petition for a declaration of nullity of marriage under the Indian Divorce Act. The Divorce Act governs such proceedings, and S. 19(1) indicates in plain language that a decree for nullity can only be given on proof of the fact that the former husband or wife was living at the time of the second marriage. There is no room left in such cases for the application of S. 107, Evidence Act and it has therefore, to be ignored: (1945) 58 Mad.L.W. 529: (1945) 2 M.L.J. 389: A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 65: I.L.R. (1946) Mad. 416.

3. Presumption of continuance of life.—Any presumption of continuance of life is a presumption of fact and not of law and where no statute lays down another rule, the rule whether a person is to be presumed dead is, subject to one exception, also a question of fact and is not subject to a presumption of law. The exception is where due enquiries had been made for an individual and he had not been traced as a result of them, there is a presumption of law that if he had not been heard of during seven years by persons who would have been likely to have heard of him if he had been alive, he had died at some time within seven years.

In 1909 the husband married A, an orphan, with no known parents or other relations. A was then 18. Between October, 1909 and 1915 the husband was sentenced to terms of imprisonment. In 1915 he saw A on two occasions. In 1917 A was known to be in Yorkshire. From October, 1917 until 23rd April, 1933, the husband was continuously in prison. During that time he did not hear of A. On 15th May, 1933, the husband went through a ceremony of marriage with B. There was no evidence that in 1917 she was not normal in health with normal expectation of life. The husband prayed for a decree of nullity of his marriage with B on the ground that at the time of the ceremony in 1933 A was still alive and that his marriage with her was still subsisting. In her answer, B also prayed for similar decree. Held that it was for the husband or B to prove facts from which a cessation of the marriage in 1909 could be inferred. There was no presumption of law in his case, either of the continuance of life of A or of her having died. Inference from the known facts was A was alive when the ceremony of marriage with B took place and, therefore, the marriage, between the husband and B was null. Held further that the presumption of law had no application to the facts of the case, because the husband would not have been likely to have heard of his first wife during the period between 1917 and his proposed marriage in 1933: (1955) 3 All E.R. 721.

Where mother of a person filed an application for compensation in 1968 alleging that he died in a railway accident which occurred in 1966, held, as that person was admittedly alive within thirty years, so under S. 107 the burden was upon the claimant to prove that he was dead. But as S. 107 is subject to the proviso embodied in S. 108, if the claimant proves that he had not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him, the burden will shift on other side. But in the instant case no such evidence was adduced by the claimant and therefore, no presumption could be raised about that person's death: A.I.R. 1976 Gau. 15 (D.B.).

4. Presumption of death.—The two propositions regarding the presumption as to the death of a person unheard of for seven years are: (1) ordinarily, he shall be presumed to be dead on expiry of seven years, not earlier; (2) S. 108 is not exhaustive. The Court may raise a suitable presumption regarding the date of presumed death depending upon the attendant circumstances and other reliable material on record; but there is no rule of universal applicability; but the first proposition operates subject to the second proposition. [A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 298, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1993 Bom. 64.

Where a person has not been heard of for much more than seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him, had he been alive, the presumption under S. 108 of the Evidence Act will be that he is dead. The burden will be on the other side to rebut the presumption: (1964) 1 Cr.L.J. 367: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 654; (1983) 24 Guj.L.R. 359; (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 428 (P.&H.); I.L.R. 33 Cal. 173 (P.C.); I.L.R. 34 All. 36 (S.B.).

The presumption of death under S. 108 can be raised when the question of the person being alive or dead is raised in a Court proceeding, earliest at the time when the proceedings are instituted: A.I.R. 1986 Him. Pra. 6: I.L.R. (1985) Him. Pra. 193: 1986 Sim.L.C. 4.

No presumptions as to death of a person arises under S. 108 if the question arises just two years after the date of disappearance: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1234: (1984) 97 Mad.L.W. 181.

Where the petitioner claimed family pension on 24-11-1988 on the ground that her husband was traceless from the duty since 1-10-1987, held, no presumption could be raised that he was dead as the period of seven years had not elapsed: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 33: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1310.

The date of death of the person has to be proved as a fact by a person asserting the same or by one who wants to rely on it. The presumption of death does not validate an actual bigamous marriage entered into, on reliance upon the presumption of death provided by the Indian Evidence Act: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 113 (P.&H.).

The entry of mafrur does not connote "deceased" and because a person has not been heard of for many years, it does not mean that the death can be presumed to have occurred at a convenient time for the computation of the twelve years. The Court can, however, presume that death occurred seven years prior to the date of dispute: 13 R.D. 385.

Although there is no presumption of the exact date of death, S. 108 provides that when the question is whether a person is alive or dead and it has been proved that he has not been heard of as alive by those who would naturally have heard of him, if he had been alive, the burden of proving that he is alive is shifted to the person who affirms that. This presumption of death or fictional death tantamounts to physical death in the eye of law: (1987) 1 Cal.L.J. 278.

Presumption of death—Tantamounts to physical death for giving the widow a right to suit—Failure to observe obsequies connected with widowhood, no bar to claim partition, if she is otherwise proved to be a widow: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 70.

Date of death not a matter of presumption but of evidence: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 70.

Person not heard of for more than seven years after he disappeared from his place of residence must be presumed to be dead: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 153: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134.

Presumption of death: 1956 All E.R. 603.

Where from the circumstances and evidence on record in the case it is clear that a person in question had disappeared forty years before and had not been heard of since then, it is to be presumed that he is dead and the burden of proving that he is alive would be upon him who affirms it: I.L.R. (1959) 9 Raj. 276.

If a person, continuously absent from home for a period of seven years and is unheard of by persons who would have naturally received intelligence from him, he is presumed to be dead. It is a rebuttable presumption. The burden of proving that he is alive is shifted to the person who affirm that he is not dead. The presumption extends to the fact of death at the expiration of seven years. There is, however, no presumption that the death took place after the end of the period of seven years or at any time earlier within that period. It has to be proved as a fact: (1981) 20 Del.L.T. 46 (S.N.) (D.B.).

S. 108 is only a rule of procedure to be followed when the question arises before a Court whether a person is alive or dead. This presumption cannot be used to request the Registrar of Deaths and Births to make an entry in the Register that the person concerned is dead: A.I.R. 1989 Mad. 248: (1989-1) 103 Mad.L.W. 306.

Where a question arises as to whether a person can be presumed to be dead under S. 108, the documents in proceedings in revenue Courts which have to be entered and maintained by the Revenue Officers in such matter as part of their official acts would be admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1947 Oudh 174.

The settlor and the first shebait of a Hindu religious endowment, about 80 years old, left his house on 24th June, 1959 and his whereabouts became unknown thereafter and on 2nd August, 1965, a suit was filed by one of his sons against the other two sons and a daughter of the settlor, the latter claiming that the settlor was alive and before leaving he had given her a power of attorney, and she had since been looking after the debuttor properties, and seven years not having lapsed, no presumption of the settlor's death could be drawn and the suit was bad for non-joinder of a necessary party. Held, presumption of death did not arise on the date of institution of the suit but on 24th June, 1966. However, presumption of death under S. 108 is not rigid; death may be proved before the end of seven years, if the unheard of person is shown to have been exposed some specific peril of death. Since the suit was heard in 1977 and the settlor was still unheard of, the burden lay on the defendant that he was alive; because of his advanced age, he is presumed to be dead: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 473.

Death—Presumption of—Inheritance depending on proof of person surviving female—Onus—Date of death. See 19 M.L.J. 502: 2 I.C. 977. See also 11 I.C. 202; I.L.R. (1939) Kar. 509: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 234.

Where in a proceeding for declaring her marriage with the respondent-husband as nullity on the ground that he was already married at the time he married her, the respondent stated that he last heard of first wife two years before his marriage with the petitioner and that the present proceedings were filed by the petitioner after six years of impugned marriage and neither he nor his brother heard of first wife, held, as on his own showing the first wife had gone in keeping of another person, the respondent and his brother could not be said to be the persons who would, in the normal course, have heard of her. Evidence of such persons that they did not hear of first wife did not give rise to any presumption under S. 108. Secondly, at the time of marriage with the petitioner, the first wife was not heard of by the respondent and his brother only for two years. Thus, no presumption under S. 108 could be raised: A.I.R. 1972 Madh. Pra. 57: 1971 M.P.L.J. 1014: 1971 Jab.L.J. 957 (D.B.).

5. Presumption regarding time or date of death.—S. 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act only deal with the procedure to be followed when a question is raised before a Court as to whether a person is alive or dead and that they do not lay down any presumption as to whether a person was alive or dead on any particular date before the institution of the suit in which question is raised. Neither of those sections warrant a presumption to be drawn as to whether a person was alive or dead at a particular time before the date of suit. The fact whether he was alive or dead on a particular date or at a particular time is a matter of proof, and if there is no admission as regards that matter by the opposite party it has to be proved affirmatively by the person who claims to establish in the suit the right dependent upon the existence or death of the person on the particular date or at the particular time.

No presumption can be drawn under Ss. 107 and 108 of the Evidence Act as to whether a person was dead or alive on any particular date or at any particular time before the date of the suit in which that question is raised: 1957 Ker.L.J. 1028: 1958 Ker.L.T. 8.

S. 108 has its origins in English Law which lays down: If a person has not been heard of for seven years, there is a presumption of law that he is dead. But at what time within that period he died is not a matter of presumption but of evidence. The onus of proving that the death took place at any particular time within those seven years who asserts the right to the establishment whereof the date is essential. Following these words it is constantly assumed, perhaps not unnaturally—that where the period of disappearance exceeds seven years; death which may not be presumed during those seven years may be presumed to have occurred at the close of seven years; that is not so; the entire period of being unheard of is one and continuous; the true rule may be stated more accurately by saying the period of disappearance should be not "less than seven years"; the date of death has, thus, to be proved like any other fact by the person upon whom the burden of proof lies. [(1870) 5 Ch. A. 139; (1939) 3 All E.R. 895; (1953) 2 All E.R. 1113; A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 9, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 129; 1958 Ker.L.T. 8, Appr.; A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 48, Dissent.]: A.I.R. 1971 Ker. 85: 1970 Ker.L.T. 976 (F.B.).

There is no presumption as to death at any particular time: A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 13; (1965) 78 Mad.L.W. 624. See also 165 I.C. 586. It depends upon the circumstances of each case whether a Court would not make a presumption that a person last heard of within seven years is alive, even assuming that a Court may make such presumption: I.L.R. 37 Mad. 440: 23 M.L.J. 443.

Presumption of death—Time of death—Onus: 1956 All.W.R. 603.

Both the presumptions under Ss. 107 and 108 come into play after a suit is instituted. The presumption of life prevails until displaced by the proof of actual death or proof of facts raising the presumption of death, and in the latter case presumption of death prevails till actual existence of life is proved. While initially the presumption of life extends over the whole period of 30 years, when the same is displaced, the presumption of death extends over the whole period of "unheard of": A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 3; (1993) 2 M.L.J. 283.

The time or date of death of a person who has not been heard of for seven years and whose death is presumed under S. 108, is not a matter of presumption, but of evidence. Neither S. 107 nor S. 114 of Act justifies such a presumption. The burden of proving that death occurred at a particular point of time is on the party who alleges the same: 21 Mys.L.J. 150 and 186. When a person has not been heard of for seven years, there is a presumption that he is dead. There is no further presumption authorised by the Evidence Act: L.R. 3 All. 393 (Rev.); A.I.R. 1930 All. 427; 1941 O.A. (Supp.) 906: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 1125; I.L.R. 6 Luck. 407: A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 40 (not heard of for 40 years).

All that S. 108 of the Evidence Act warrants is that when a person is shown to have been not heard of for seven years there is a presumption of the fact of his death. Regarding the actual time of death there is no presumption available under that section. The time of death has to be affirmatively proved by the person who alleges that death occurred at a particular time and who seeks to enforce rights or consequences that flow from the fact of the death at the particular time alleged by him. Where the defendant alleges that the judgment-debtor had died before the execution sale in 1115 and that therefore, the execution sale, is not valid, the validity of the execution sale, is a consequence of the judgment-debtor's death before 1115. The burden is, therefore, upon the defendant to prove that the judgment-debtor had died before 1115. The burden is not discharged by showing that he had not been heard of between 1108 and 1120: I.L.R. (1957) Ker. 53: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 45. Per Koshi, C.J.—Under the English law of evidence though there is no presumption of law as to the continuance of life, an inference of fact is very often drawn with respect to the continuance of life and the presumption is sometimes extended even beyond the period recognised by Statute Law in India. When it is remembered that

S. 107, Evidence Act enacts only a rebuttable presumption of law, the absence of a statutory provision in English law enacting a presumption as to the continuance of life and fixing a time-limit for it, does not really make the English law in substance any the different from the Indian law. The difference is only to the extent that in India there is a rebuttable presumption of law as to the continuance of life while English law permits a presumption of fact to be made with respect, to it. Presumptions of fact are, of course, always rebuttable: A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 129: I.L.R. (1955) Trav.-Co. 1100.

The section raises a presumption of death at the end of a continuous absence of seven years and not at the time when the question is raised or the suit is instituted. The party on whom the burden of proving the life of the absentee lies cannot get rid of that burden of admitting the absentee's death at some subsequent time: 8 I.C. 55 (All.); I.L.R. 35 Cal. 25; I.L.R. 37 Cal. 103; I.L.R. 33 Cal. 173 (P.C.).

All that one can presume under S. 108 is that the person concerned is dead, but one cannot fix the time of the person's death under the provisions of the said section. S. 108, however, is not exhaustive on the question of presumptions as regards death of a person. The Court may, in the circumstances of each case, make a suitable presumption even regarding the time of death of the person concerned: 1963 All.W.R. (H.C.) 554: 1963 All.L.J. 851: A.I.R. 1964 All. 310.

Presumption under section—Operative only after institution of suit—Presumption of death—When arises—Date of death, not a matter of presumption—Onus to prove death: A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 210.

Presumption as to when a person died—Presumption arises only when question whether person is alive or dead is in issue—held, on facts, that the presumption under S. 108 arises only when the question as to whether a man is alive or dead is in issue, in other words, there is no presumption, so long as there is no dispute about a man being alive, that a man died after a particular time after his disappearance. In the present case no question arose before the High Court when it was dealing with the appeal, whether the plaintiff (lunatic) was alive or dead. If really it was petitioner's case that he was dead, he should have raised that question before the appeal was disposed of. The preliminary decree passed by the High Court was, therefore, valid.

If the question is raised before the Court at a particular point of time, and more than seven years had elapsed by that time from the time when a man was last heard of, the presumption will be that he had died before the date when the question was raised. That is not the same thing as saying that when such a question is raised long after the seven years period is over there is a further presumption that he had died at any particular time during that period or at the end of seven years from the date of disappearance. The presumption under S. 108 would only be as to the fact of death at the time the question is raised and not at any particular antecedent time: (1964) 1 M.L.J. 246: I.L.R. (1963) Mad. 993: A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 385.

Nø presumption as to the death of a person at a particular time—Person relying on fact bound to establish it by evidence—No presumption that a person died leaving no heirs: 33 M.L.J. 295: 42 I.C. 241; see 38 P.R. 1918: 45 I.C. 70; 21 O.C. 143: 46 I.C. 808; A.I.R. 1930 All. 427.

The initial burden to prove that the person who was shown to be alive within 30 years is dead, is on the person who asserts that he is dead. But his burden is discharged on his establishing that the person has not been heard of for seven years. To prove that death took place at any particular time within seven years, lies upon the person who claims right to the establishment of which that is essential. [(1988) 2 Ker.L.T. 537 Not foll.]: (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 452: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 395: I.L.R. (1990) 3 Ker. 496.

Relevant point of time at which the presumption under this section is available is when the factum of death of the person becomes material, and not at any particular antecedent time: (1991) 2 Ker.L.T. 373.

S. 108 simply changes the burden of proof or lays it upon a particular party. It does not prove death; it is a presumption which is rebuttable. Though it raises the presumption that the person concerned was dead on the date of the suit, the date of death must be proved like any other fact: 1966 Kash.L.J. 389: A.I.R. 1967 J.&K. 81.

The only presumption which is enacted by this section is that the party is dead at the time of suit, but there is no presumption as to the precise time of his death: (1930) 32 Punj.L.R. 704: A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 582 (F.B.); 11 C.L.J. 580; 6 I.C. 244; I.L.R. 8 All. 614; I.L.R. 23 Bom. 296; I.L.R. 35 Cal. 25; I.L.R. 54 Cal. 186; A.I.R. 1944 Pesh. 29; 100 I.C. 833: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 284; 22 Nag.L.R. 175: A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 104; A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 13; 53 I.A. 24; A.I.R. 1930 All. 427; 1944 O.W.N. 195: 1944 O.A. (C.C.) 136; I.L.R. 19 Luck. 581; A.I.R. 1972 Madh. Pra. 57: 1971 M.P.L.J. 1014 (D.B.).

Under S. 108, the presumption is as to factum of death of the person untraced and it starts from the date when the dispute arises, that is to say, when the suit was filed: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 356.

Though there is no presumption as to the date of death of a person not heard of for over seven years by persons who would have naturally heard of him, yet where such a person is shown as not having been heard for over seven years reckoned from the date of institution of pending proceedings wherein his being alive or dead is in issue, held, he may be presumed to have died at the latest on the date the proceedings were commenced. [Point not disputed.]: A.I.R. 1972 P.&H. 14: 1971 Punj.L.J. 539. If the exact date of death is not proved, the earliest date on which death can be presumed under S. 108 is the date on which the suit was filed. The presumption under S. 108 cannot have a retrospective effect: 1956 An.W.R. 137. This case has been explained in: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 380: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 55. See also A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 326: (1963) 1 An.L.T. 389; 115 I.C. 626. It is so because the occasion for drawing a presumption under the provision arises when the dispute regarding the death of a person who has been unheard of for seven years is raised in a Court of law and it is only then that the question of burden of proof would arise: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 48: 1967 Raj.L.W. 515.

If a person has not been heard for several years, there is a presumption of law that he is dead. But at what time within that period he died, is not a matter of presumption but of evidence and the onus of proving that the death took place at any particular time within seven years, lies upon the person who claims a right, to the establishment of which that fact is essential. The presumption under S. 108, is available at the point of time when the party approaches the Court for necessary relief: 33 Cut.L.T. 944: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 844: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 70; I.L.R. 15 Pat. 312 (P.C.); I.L.R. 50 Mad. 289: A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 9; 165 I.C. 586; 1943 O.W.N. (H.C.) 124: 1943 All.L.W. 219; I.L.R. (1938) Bom. 155: A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 228; (1949) 51 Punj.L.R. 1: A.I.R. 1949 East Punj. 267; A.I.R. 1958 Assam 15; (1958) 2 M.L.J. 53: (1958) 71 Mad.L.W. 445: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 453; A.I.R. 1970 Andh. Pra. 246; (1982) 2 Guj.L.H. 1006: (1983-1) 24 Guj.L.R. 359; (1985) 1 An.W.R. 257; (1992) 1 M.L.J. 187.

Where there is a dispute in a suit as to the date of death of a person from whom his relations had not heard for more than seven years it should first be for the person who alleged a particular date to prove that date affirmatively, but if no one could prove any specific date then the Court should draw a presumption that he was dead on the date of the institution of the suit and not at some antecedent date: 1952 Ker.L.T. 691: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 114; I.L.R. (1959) 9 Raj. 276. Held Per Koshi, C.J. and Joseph, J. (Govinda Pillai, J. dissenting)—Where a party's case depends on establishing that a given person who is presumed to be dead was alive or dead at a particular time within the seven years period and there is no evidence at all on the subject, success or failure will depend on whether the party has succeeded in proving the date of death, Per Koshi, C.J.:—Under S. 108, Evidence Act there is no presumption as to the time, although there is as to the fact of the death; S. 108 does not enunciate anything more. While that section entitles the Court to presume that a person was dead on the date of the institution of the suit, it does not help the Court to say as to when he died. There is no presumption that he lived for seven years. It is erroneous to seek to apply both S. 107 and S. 108 to one and the same case. In the same way as a person cannot at the same time both be alive and dead, a Court cannot seek to apply to a given case both the presumption relating to the continuance of life and the counter presumption relating to death. S. 108 comes as a proviso to S. 107. To a case where the proviso is attracted the enacting section can have no application. Govinda Pillai, J. (dissenting).—The presumption allowed to be drawn under Ss. 107 and 108 appears to be that if a person was proved to be alive within thirty years when the question was raised then the party who asserted his death at any particular period within thirty years should prove it. The burden of proving that the individual died within seven years after he was last heard of does not lie on the party who claims the right under that individual if he has not been heard of for seven years. What is only laid down in S. 108 is that the onus of proof would be on the party who asserted that he was alive after seven years. So the burden of proving the death within seven years or within the period when the question was raised when that period exceeded seven years would be on the party who asserted that that person was dead. Reading Ss. 107 and 108, Evidence Act together the proper working rule would appear to be that the person was alive till the question of his life or death was raised after the expiry of seven years from the date on which he was last heard of. This would be the reason for laying down the rule that the presumption of death would be on the date on which the question was raised and not on an antecedent date. If the person is not presumed to have died on an antecedent date prior to the one on which the question is raised the natural inference is that he was alive till the question is raised: A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 129: I.L.R. (1955) Trav.-Co. 1100.

S. 108 does not warrant that the exact date of death not being proved, the earliest date of death should be presumed as the date of institution of the suit; the exact time of death is a matter for evidence, not presumption. The onus of proof is cast not under S. 108 but under the general principle of the burden of proof: (1993) 2 M.L.J. 283.

Under S. 108 which is founded upon the principles of the English Common Law, the burden is on the person who asserts that a person is living when such a person has disappeared and has not been heard of for more than seven years. Under S. 108 the burden shifts to the party who affirms that the person 'is alive'. It cannot be disputed that that relates to the point of time at which the question itself emerges in the legal proceeding. Where a young man of 24 disappeared on 12th December, 1950 and failed to draw his usual allowance in January 1951, which was his only means of sustenance and was not heard of for more than seven years and no light was thrown on any probable motive nor was it suggested that foul play or accident was possible and one had to only speculate as to the cause of his disappearance, held, that it could not be presumed that he was dead even on the date of disappearance and that the only conclusion possible was that young man was dead at the time the question arose (date of plaint) owing to the failure of the opposite party to prove that he was alive: (1965) 78 Mad.L.W. 347: (1965) 2 M.L.J. 185: A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 440.

Where deceased widow inherited property of her husband on his death and she became full owner of said property after commencement of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956 and as she was not heard of for the last more than seven years before the filing of the suit by the plaintiff, it was contended that she should be presumed to have died, held, it was for the appellant to have proved about the time of death of widow as it was very material to find out as to whether she died after the commencement of Hindu Succession Act, 1956: A.I.R. 1975 P.&H. 222: 1975 Cur.L.J. 18.

Wife of a person who has been unheard of for seven years alienated his property to the plaintiff on 4th June, 1962. The plaintiff has been dispossessed by the defendants in July, 1962. In a suit by the plaintiff they challenged the right of the plaintiff's vendor to dispose of the same. In the absence of any proof as to the date of death of the transferor's husband, held, that he could be presumed dead earliest on the date when the plaintiff brought the suit and since on the date of the transfer there was no proof that he was not alive on that date, the plaintiff's suit could not be maintained: 1967 Raj.L.W. 515: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 48.

The respondent's husband had an insurance policy in 1946 and was not heard of thereafter. The premia under the policy were paid on behalf of the policy-holder till 1948 but discontinued thereafter. From 1948 to 1952, the insurance company itself paid the premia under the non-forfeiture clause in the policy so as to keep the policy alive. In 1955, the respondent filed an application praying for a declaration that her husband must be presumed to have died on or after 16th March, 1953, on the expiry of 7 years from the date of disappearance on 16th March, 1946, and that she was the sole beneficiary under the policy as a nominee. The Court passed an order declaring that the respondent's husband might then be presumed to have died and directing the insurance company to pay into the Court the amount payable under the insurance policy.

In pursuance of that direction the insurance company deposited the amount.

Thereafter the insurance company represented that it was entitled to refund of the amount which had been paid under the non-forfeiture clause to keep the policy alive. That sum was retained in Court pending investigation of the company's claim. The rest of the money was paid over to the respondent by the Court.

The respondent objected that since the applicant (Insurance Company) had not proved that the respondent's husband was alive in or after 1948, the applicant was not entitled to claim the money paid by the applicant to keep the policy alive. The respondent also claimed interest from the presumed date of death of her husband till the date of the presentation of the petition. Held, (i) that in the special circumstances of the case, the respondent must be presumed to have died after July, 1952, and that the applicant Insurance Company was entitled to refund of the amount claimed; (ii) as to the respondent's claim for interest, the money did not become payable till the Court gave a finding that respondent's husband should be presumed to be dead, and interest could not be allowed on money that had not become payable: (1958) 71 Mad.L.W. 445: (1958) 2 M.L.J. 53: A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 453.

Suit for possession of property alleging that successors-in-interest had died and his line was extinct—Court investigating case and dismissing suit after 6 years on ground that the death was not proved and hence suit was premature—Dismissal is not from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of like nature—Provisions of S. 14(1) do not apply when subsequent suit is filed—S. 108, Evidence Act raises only presumption of death but not time of death: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Punj. 774: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 80.

Where a coparcener's wife whose husband disappeared in 1930 and was not heard of thereafter sold the coparcenery property in 1970 and the sale was later on assailed on the ground that she had no right or title in the property sold by her, held, there is no presumption that the coparcener had died on any particular day; in the absence of evidence, it could not be said that the coparcener had died prior to the enforcement of Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937 on 14th April, 1937; having no right or interest in the property, its sale by her is of no effect; she could not have conferred any title thereto on the purchaser. [A.I.R. 1984 Mad. 340, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 995: 1994 D.N.J. 410: (1995-1) 115 Mad.L.W. 10: 1995 (Supp.) 1 S.C.C. 27.

Where the insured motor cycle occasioning the accident on 24 September, 1974 stood in the name of a Flight Lieutenant reported missing in the Indo-Pak war of 1965, held, the case is covered under S. 107; the burden lay on the insurer to prove that the insured was dead on the date of accident or that the policy was taken in the name of a dead person absolving the insurer of its liability; but the insurer adduced no such evidence; even if not heard of for 7 years, the insured could not be presumed to be dead either on the date the policy was taken or the accident occurred; the presumption of his death could only relate to the date the claim was instituted or the written statement was filed in the Tribunal and not to any period anterior thereto: (1993-2) 104 Punj.L.R. 96 (D.B.).

6. Presumption regarding death of judgment-debtor—Burden of proof.—Where a decree is challenged on the ground that the judgment-debtor was dead on the date of passing of decree and it is argued that the defendant was seen alive on a certain date, since it is the decree-holder who claims a right, namely of execution of decree, the onus is on him to prove that the judgment-debtor was alive on a particular date within seven years of his having been seen alive, that is the date of passing of decree: 1967 Ker.L.J. 304: 1967 Ker.L.T. 1082.

But see (1993) 2 Ker.L.J. 488 [Where a decree was challenged by LRs of one of the judgment-debtors on the ground that it was a nullity since it was obtained against a dead person, held, since there was no presumption as to the date of death, the burden to prove that as on the date of the suit one of the defendants was in fact dead was on the said LRs of the deceased judgment-debtor. (1988) 1 Ker.L.T. 45, Rel. on; in view of A.I.R. 1971 Ker. 85: 1970 Ker.L.T. 976 (F.B.), some of the observations in 1967 Ker.L.T. 1082 cannot be fully accepted.]

7. Presumption in case of absconder.—S. 108 is nothing more than a proviso to S. 107 and the two sections must, therefore, be read together in order to appreciate their full import. Where a person is absconding from justice in order to evade a trial upon a charge of murder, he would not communicate with any relations in the natural course of events because to do so would reveal his whereabouts and he might be apprehended by the Police and prosecuted. In such a case no presumption can arise because it is S. 107 and not S. 108 which would apply. There being, thus, no presumption of the death of the absconding person, the persons claiming his property as his reversioners have to prove that he had died before they succeed: I.L.R. (1956) Punj. 1232: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 316.

If a wife has absconded to an unknown place, it cannot be construed as her death in the eye of law unless the requirements of S. 107 are fulfilled: A.I.R. 1989 Madh. Pra. 198: 1989 M.P.L.J. 328: 1989 Jab.L.J. 387.

When petitioner was shown as "Farar" (absconding) in revenue papers, held, the presumption was that he was alive and the burden was on the contesting respondent to prove that the petitioner was dead: 1986 All.W.C. 1224.

The plaintiffs, sisters of the last holder of the ancestral land, sued his collaterals for its possession and the defence taken was that the "last holder" had in fact predeceased his father and they had inherited the land prior to the commencement of the Hindu Succession Act, in their own right under custom whether it was previously held by the "last holder" or his father and had perfected their title by adverse possession. The mutation had been effected on the basis of the "last holder" not having been heard of for seven years by persons who would have naturally heard of him and he was an army deserter but the plaintiffs gave no positive date of his death. Held, under S. 107, the burden lay upon the plaintiffs to prove that the last holder had died; under S. 108, the burden again was on the plaintiff to prove the date of his death when he had not been heard of by them during the previous seven years; the date of death is not a matter of presumption but of evidence; besides, the presumption of his death is misconceived for he was not a person who had not been heard of but an Army deserter, apprehending arrest and evading it, no presumption under S. 108 could arise in his case for it is covered under S. 107. [A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 9; A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 316; A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 80, Foll.]: (1992) 2 Rev.L.R. 136.

8. "Persons who would have naturally heard of him".—A wife, who left her husband and is in the keeping of another, is not one of the persons who would naturally hear from him if he were alive: 117 I.C. 209: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 127.

S. 108 provides that unless the provident fund authorities can give any proof that the husband of the petitioner is alive, the husband of the petitioner would be deemed to be dead as the wife of a person is the most likely person to know the whereabouts of her husband and she denied on oath any such knowledge: (1989) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 220.

9. Common catastrophe.—Where a husband and wife perish in a same boat disaster, there is no presumption of law arising from age or sex or state of health as to survivorship among them, nor is there any presumption that both died at the same time. The question is one of fact depending wholly on evidence, and if the evidence does not establish the survivorship of any one, the law will, treat it as a matter incapable of being determined, the onus of proof being on the person asserting the affirmative: 77 Cal.L.J. 209: A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 132.

Where two brothers die in the same catastrophe and it is not known as to who died first, there is no presumption either of survivorship or of contemporaneous death. In such cases the plaintiff must prove his assertion. Two brothers died in a fire and the widow of one of them sought to succeed to the entire properties on the ground that her husband being the younger of the two must be deemed to have survived the other. Held, there was no such presumption in the absence of direct evidence and that the onus of proving it lay upon her: I.L.R. 9 Luck. 461: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 101. Death of two persons in earthquake—No presumption of younger person surviving elder—Burden of proof. See 71 I.A. 171: A.I.R. 1944 P.C. 100: (1944) 2 M.L.J. 354 (P.C.).

10. Hindu and Mahomedan law rules.—The rule in S. 108 supersedes the rules in Hindu and Mahomedan law: A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 182: 43 M.L.J. 725; 2 Beng.L.R. 134; I.L.R. 9 Luck. 401: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 41. There can be a presumption and inference of death irrespective of S. 108: 103 I.C. 329: A.I.R. 1927 All. 687. The rules as to presumption of death contained in this section would govern the case of a Mahomedan who was missing for more than seven years. [I.L.R. 7 All. 297, Foll.]: 1932 All.L.J. 175. But see I.L.R. 2 All. 265 (F.B.).

11. No custom can whittle down or reduce period laid down in section 108.—The period of seven years laid down in S. 108 with regard to the duration when the whereabouts of a person are not known cannot be whittled down and reduced to 2/3 years under any custom. Where a woman, who married second time, pleaded dissolution of her earlier marriage automatically on the basis of existence of custom in her community according to which person whose whereabouts were not known for 2/3 years was presumed to be dead, held, such a custom being contrary to S. 108 was illegal and, thus, her second marriage was void: A.I.R. 1987 P.&H. 37: (1986) 90 Punj.L.R. 581: (1987) 1 D.M.C. 470: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 594.

12. Illustrative cases.—Presumption of life or death—Minor not heard of for some months—Mother appointed guardian. See 1 I.C. 465.

Admission—Construction—A stating that A and B are monthly joint tenants under the landlord of certain premises—This must be regarded as admission on part of A that B is alive and not that he is dead—S. 108 is ruled out and S. 107 is attracted—A must prove that B is dead: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786: 1963 Cal.L.J. 75.

When certain person A had not been heard of for last 20 years by his near relations and B filed a suit against A on 8th February, 1955, it was for B to prove that A was alive on the date the suit was filed as well as on the date of the service of the summonses and on the date the ex parte decree was obtained in that suit. When a presumption of A's death had been raised in the case, the burden would be shifted to B to prove, particularly when A had not been heard of for the last 20 years, that he was alive on any particular date prior to the date of a later suit which B was resisting on the basis of the ex parte decree obtained against A. When B had not discharged the onus on him, the decree in his favour cannot be given effect to: 1961 All.W.R. (H.C.) 622.

Where one of the two Muslim brothers, recorded as joint owners of land in revenue record from 1944-45 to 1965-66, had gone to Delhi for safety and was never heard of thereafter, and the other brother sought mutation of the lands in his own name as the heir of the unheard of brother, held, it could be presumed that the missing brother had not migrated to Pakistan for had he done so, the Union of India through the Custodian, defendant in the suit, would certainly have got half the land declared as evacuee property; the entire land belonged to the surviving brother in view of S. 108. [A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1206, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 P.&H. 106: 1981 Punj.L.J. 510.

Presumption of death, when can be raised—Ejectment suit by one of joint lessors—Other co-lessor alleged to have died in Kumbha of 1954—No evidence as contemplated by S. 108 given—Case held should be decided, not by applying S. 108, but by applying S. 107—Suit by one joint lessor held not maintainable—Contract Act, 1872, S. 45—Joint lessor—Suit by one for ejectment—Co-sharers—Joint lease by co-sharers—Suit by one for ejectment—Joint promises—Lease—Joint lease—T.P. Act, 1832, S. 111. Held, on facts, that it was impossible to hold that it was proved that co-lessor had not been heard of for seven years on the date when the second appeal was heard and decided by those persons who would have heard of him if he had been alive. As long as that was not proved, the provisions of S. 108 did not become applicable and the case had, therefore, to be decided not by applying S. 108 but by applying S. 107. Held, further that the suit by the plaintiff alone, without joining the co-lessor, in the absence of proof of the death of the co-lesser, was not maintainable, since one co-lessor alone could not terminate the tenancy and the rent was payable jointly to both: 1964 All.W.R. (H.C.) 294: 1964 All.L.J. 465.

Where plaintiff, wife of an employee of L.I.C., filed a suit for amount of death claim against defendant-Corporation on the ground that her husband was traceless for more than seven years and the defendant did not make any efforts to prove or disprove the factum of death of plaintiff's husband, held, the plaintiff was entitled to the policy amount in view of presumption under S. 108: (1993-1) 103 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 25: (1993) 49 Del.L.T. 145.

Where upon the death of the owner, his son and heir remained unseen and unheard by his wife and children for 22 years, when the wife and children sold the house by a sale

109. Burden of proof as to relationship in the cases of partners, landlord and tenant, principal and agent.—When the question is whether persons are partners, landlord and tenant, or principal and agent, and it has been shown that they have been acting as such, the burden of proving that they do not stand, or have ceased to stand, to each other in those relationships respectively, is on the person who affirms it.

deed executed by them, held, the son is presumed to have died much prior to the execution of the sale deed; the sale deed could not be said to be invalid: 1994 (Supp.) 2 S.C.C. 113.

A title suit was decreed and during the pendency of appeal the plaintiff was kidnapped and became untraceable. On the appeal being allowed, his wife and children preferred a second appeal. Held, since it could not be presumed under S. 108 that the plaintiff was dead, his wife and children could not be deemed his legal representatives; obviously, they could not wait for seven years to file the appeal because of the law of limitations and other complications; therefore, the High Court under its inherent powers for the ends of justice allowed them to maintain the second appeal as they were managing and intermeddling with the plaintiff's estate after his kidnapping as his legal heirs: A.I.R. 1993 Pat. 105: 1993 B.B.C.J. 104: (1993) 1 Pat.L.J.R. 340.

Where the husband had not been heard of for more than 7 years but a suit for partition and separate possession of the ancestral property, purportedly lodged by him was resisted by the wife on the ground that he was an imposter and not her husband, held, the burden to prove that the plaintiff was the husband alive rested on him; on facts found that he was not the huband: A.I.R. 1995 Mad. 120.

Section 109—Synopsis.

2. Partners.
3. Landlord and tenant.
4. Principal and agent.

1. General.—"Have been acting as such"—Single instance—If sufficient: 40 Mad.L.W. 810: A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 268. Continuance—Presumption of. See (1913-14) 18 Cal.W.N. 33: 22 I.C. 383.

2. Partners.—Under S. 109 of the Evidence Act when the question is whether the persons concerned are partners and it has been shown that they had been acting as such, the burden of proving that they are not partners or that they had ceased to be partners is on the person who says that he was not a partner or had ceased to be a partner. The presumption under this section, therefore, is that the appellant, who has been acting as a partner, is in fact a partner in the firm and that he continues to be such: A.I.R. 1958 All. 829: (1958) 9 S.T.C. 699: I.L.R. (1958) 1 All. 673.

A person seeking to charge another with liability as a partner of firm should prove that such person is a partner or that he had been acting as such: A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 175. Where the plaintiff comes forward with a definite case that the partnership was dissolved on the date mentioned by him, the burden is on him to establish the fact not by virtue of S. 109, but by the rule that the plaintiff must establish every fact on which he relies: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 528: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 29.

3. Landlord and tenant.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 43 and S. 106, Note 12, supra). Where the appellants proved that their predecessor and the landlord were acting as landlord and tenant and the landlord accepted the rent even after the expiration of tenancy and the holding was agricultural, held, the burden under S. 109 was upon the lessor to prove that they did not stand in that relation or that they had ceased to be tenants: A.I.R. 1973 Gau. 80.

When it is shown that the person in possession before the defendant was a tenant of the plaintiff at one time, it is for the defendant to show when the tenancy ceased and possession became adverse to the plaintiff: 28 M.L.J. 361: 27 I.C. 804; I.L.R. 26 Bom. 410; 4 Cal.L.J. 202.

Where a tenant at will admits the tenancy, S. 109 comes into operation and there is a presumption against him that he continues as a tenant till he proves that the relationship has ceased to exist: 173 I.C. 222: A.I.R. 1938 Sind 16. On this section, see also 89 I.C. 674: A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 99.

Where in a suit for possession by way of pre-emption of the land in dispute, when the name of the plaintiff was recorded as tenant in the Jamabandi, held, the burden was on the purchaser of the said land to prove that he, and not the plaintiff, was in possession of the land as tenant at the time of sale: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 695: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 78: 1981 Punj.L.J. 121.

Tenant for a year—Holding over—Presumption. See 39 I.C. 125.

Where in a suit for restoration of possession of the demised premises by the tenant on the ground of having been illegally evicted, both parties had adduced evidence, held, the question of onus is rendered immaterial; on the case being decided on merits on appraisal of evidence, the High Court will not interfere in revision: A.I.R. 1986 Del. 36.

4. Principal and agent.—(See also S. 106, Note 17, supra). Where there is an admission that parties stood in the relation of principal and agent, the burden of proving that they have ceased to stand to each other in that relationship is on the party who alleges such cessation of relationship: A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 49.

1. Scope and applicability.—By virtue of S. 110, a person in possession is deemed to be owner until the contrary is shown: 41 P.L.R. 123. See also 45 Mys. H.C.R. 57: 17 Mys.L.J. 510.

Though S. 110 recognises a presumption that the person is possession also has good title, there is no corresponding section saying that the person with title should be presumed to be in possession. This presumption is one that can only come under S. 114: A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 361 (D.B.).

A presumption of origin in some lawful title arises only where no actual proof of title is forthcoming. Such a rule would have to be resorted to if there is absence of actual evidence. But if there is actual and convincing proof of the nature of the grant, the rule can hardly have any application. [A.I.R. 1948 S.C. 25, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Mad. 182: (1973) 2 M.L.J. 317: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 613 (D.B.).

As per S. 110 when the question arises as to whether any person is owner of anything of which he is shown to be in possession, the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner. Possessionary title is sufficient to resist the suit for possession: (1991) 4 Karn.L.J. 526: I.L.R. (1991) Karn. 2761 (D.B.).

Possession implies co-existence of: (1) animus, that is intention to hold; and (2) corpus, that is physical control over property: 1974 M.P.L.J. 906 (D.B.).

The true import of S. 110 is that where a person is shown to be in possession of the property, the presumption of ownership is in his favour and the burden shifts on to the one who challenges that person's title to the property.

The presumption would arise if two conditions are satisfied, viz.: (i) that the possession is not prima facie wrongful; and (ii) that the title of the other contesting party to the property is not proved by direct evidence. The provisions of the section can be availed of by the party who alleges title in himself and also relies upon possession in proof of it, but fails to establish the title and succeeds in proving his possession. If a person claiming to be the true owner of a property interferes in the possession of another over it, the possession of the latter would cast upon the former the burden of proving his ownership: A.I.R. 1970 Manipur 50.

Before drawing a presumption of title from possession, such possession must have been long and continuous. Spasmodic and interrupted possession by persons will not be sufficient. The presumption under S. 110 would apply if two conditions are satisfied: (1) that the possession of the plaintiff is not prima facie wrongful and (2) that the title of the defendant is not proved. Possession constitutes by itself a limited title to the property, a title which is good against all except the rightful owner. Possession is evidence of title, and gives a good title against a wrongdoer; but a person who has no possession, cannot, without proof of title, turn others out of possession even though they may have no title; for possession is a good title against any one who cannot prove a better title. Lawful possession would, of course, mean possession which has not been obtained by force or fraud. Possession has two fold value; it is evidence of ownership and is itself the foundation of a right of possession: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 93 (Ori.).

Prior peaceful possession is prima facie evidence of ownership under S. 110, and is a good title against all persons except the true owner and can be relied on in successfully maintaining a suit for ejectment against another who has no title to the land in dispute: 118 I.C. 680 (Nag.).

Where nothing else is known, the person in possession of property is presumed to be owner: 45 I.C. 217.

Where plaintiff is in possession alleging ownership, onus of proving that he is not owner lies on defendant: 103 I.C. 36: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 841.

But where defendant is in possession the onus is on plaintiff: 10 L.L.J. 488.

Onus on the party out of possession—Shifting of onus, see 4 Bur.L.T. 159: 11 I.C. 777. See also A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 181; A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 162; I.L.R. 9 Cal. 744 (F.B.) on shifting of onus.

The onus of establishing title to property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting such possession and it would be contrary to all legal principles to permit the squatter to put the owner of the fundamental right to a negative proof upon the point of possession: A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 21. The onus resting upon the plaintiff to prove his title cannot be discharged by merely relying upon the weakness of the defence: A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 359 (D.B.); 1 I. A. 76 (P.C.).

S. 110 insists only on proof of possession. The section is not limited in its application to immovable property but applies equally to movable property. So where A was proved to be in possession of disputed quantity of pepper at the relevant time, the presumption is that he is the owner and the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner: 1959 Ker.L.J. 629: 1959 Ker.L.T. 682.

Lawful possession of land is sufficient evidence of right as owner as against a person who has no title whatever and is a mere trespasser. It is not necessary for the person claiming injunction to prove his title to the suit-land, it would suffice if he proves that he is in lawful possession of the same and that his possession was invaded by a person who had no title: I.L.R. (1951) Bom. 425: A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 380: (1951) 53 Bom.L.R. 163.

Title to land—Possession—Value of—Lawful possession—How far evidence of title or ownership. See I.L.R. 30 Pat. 1007: A.I.R. 1952 Pat. 314.

Where a person asserts ownership of a property he is in possession of, held, the burden of proving that he is not the owner lies on the party which affirms that the person in possession is not the owner: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 727 (D.B.); 1976 Punj.L.J. 224.

Presumption of title from possession can arise only where facts disclose no title in any party: 1968 Ker.L.J. 176: 1968 S.C.D. 500: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1165.

A plaintiff who has omitted to sue under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, when first dispossessed, is not debarred when the summary relief under that section has become barred by limitation, from relying, in a suit for ejectment on this section. As soon as he has proved that the defendant has dispossessed him, the onus is thrown upon the latter to prove his title: 2 P.L.J. 61: 38 I.C. 797.

S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 in no way controls the operation of S. 110 or a suit based upon possessory title. S. 9 provides a summary remedy to a person who has, without his consent been dispossessed of immovable property otherwise than in due course of law, for recovery of possession without establishing title. A distinction has to be drawn between a suit based upon possessory title and a suit under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. In the former case, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree only where the plaintiff's possession was sufficient proof of his title, while in the latter case the Court has merely to see whether the plaintiff was in possession within six months prior to the date of the institution of the suit: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 186.

A distinction must be made between the rule of evidence embodied in S. 110 and the principle on which the concept of possessory title is based. That principle is that possession constitutes by itself a limited title to the property, a title, which is good against all except the rightful owner. This title usually described as possessory title, has all the features of an estate in land. Like any other estate it can be transferred inter vivos or by a testamentary disposition and can also be acquired by inheritance. Possession has a twofold value; it is evidence of ownership, and is itself the foundation of a right to possession. A person who, while in peaceful possession, is dispossessed by a trespasser can file a suit and recover possession merely by proving his prior possession. The plaintiff is not required to establish ownership against the defendant-trespasser. Proof of title in a third person does not displace the limited possessory title which is enough for the plaintiff to succeed.

A suit on possessory title must be distinguished from a suit filed under S. 6 of the Specific Relief Act of 1963 within 6 months of dispossession. The latter type of suit cannot be resisted on the ground of title, so that the suit can be maintained even against the true owner if he has dispossessed the plaintiff otherwise than in due course of law. A suit on possessory title, on the other hand, can be filed within twelve years of dispossession (Art. 64 of the Limitation Act, 1963) and the plaintiff can maintain it against any person who does not have a better title. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1165 and I.L.R. 23 Mad. 179, Rel. on; Obiter observations of Broomfield, J. in A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 201 held not good law in view of A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1165]: 1970 Mah.L.J. 355: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 142: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 405.

Where the defendant pleaded that he is the owner alongwith the plaintiff and claimed share in the property, the burden is on him to prove that he is the owner, for he has admitted the plaintiff's title; the defence set up as a matter of pleading and law undoubtedly cast the burden on the defendant; if he fails to discharge it and the plaintiff's possession not being disputed, the presumption under S. 110 is attracted: (1984) 1 An.W.R. 129: (1983) 2 An.L.T. (N.R.C.) 49.

No presumption of title arises from the fact that a brother is residing in a house purchased by another brother: (1980) 2 M.P.W.N. 96.

When the property stands in the name of a person, the presumption is that he is the owner of the property and anybody who alleges that he is not the owner, must prove the same. Where the document of purchase stood in the name of the plaintiff and the defendant admitted said fact but he alleged that the property was purchased in plaintiff's benami, held, it was for the defendant to prove that the apparent state was not the real state and the plaintiff was really the benamidar of her husband and his brothers: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 128: I.L.R. (1972) 2 Cal. 703 (D.B.).

S. 110 no doubt enacts that title is to be presumed from lawful possession. This is a rebuttable presumption and like all rebuttable presumptions, must yield to proof. Where, therefore, title is proved or assumed the presumption created by S. 110 can no longer apply. Madras Land Encroachment Act, S. 2 declares, subject to a saving clause, that the Government is the owner of certain kinds of property including the beds of tanks. There is no conflict between S. 110, and this provision. The title of the Government being statutorily declared, the rule of presumption enacted by S. 110 is not brought into play. But there is nothing to prevent long possession being relied upon as evidence of a grant made by the original owner: 1938 Mad.W.N. 244: A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 193: (1938) 2 M.L.J. 434.

Possession avails the plaintiffs against the entire world than the true owners. On the basis of the possession, a presumption arises of his prima facie title and long peaceful lawful possession would lead to the inference of his title. It is not for the plaintiff to negative the alleged title of the defendant nor does the plaintiff carry the burden to prove adverse possession when the title is alleged in the defendant even though it may be the State. It is only when the presumption arising from the plaintiff's possession is displaced by the defendant leading evidence to establish title that the presumption under S. 110, in view of the known fact of the defendant's title, ceases to be available to the plaintiff. The burden thereafter shifts to the plaintiff to prove his title whether by acquisition from the defendant or by prescription. The length of such adverse possession which is statutorily required in case of the defendant State would be of course sixty years under the Old Limitation Act, 1908. This burden shifts to the plaintiff, only in those cases where the facts are known by the defendant having shown his title: (1971) 12 Guj.L.R. 668 (D.B.).

Where in a suit against the Secretary of State for declaration of the plaintiff's title to a certain vacant site, the plaintiff proved his possession for over 30 years, held, that the burden of proving that the plaintiff was not the owner was upon the defendant and that the mere classification of the land as village site by the Government had no legal effect whatsoever except as an assertion of title: I.L.R. 33 Mad. 173: 20 M.L.J. 71.

Plaintiff is not bound to prove adverse possession for sixty years to establish his title as against the Secretary of State for India in Council. (Ibid). Under S. 110 of the Evidence Act proof of long possession of an "otta" and therefore, of the land under it would constitute prima facie proof of title in the person in possession and the burden would shift on the person who wants to displace that presumption. This presumption avails even against the Government: A.I.R. 1951 Madh. Bh. 114.

The respondent filed a suit for declaration that he was the owner of site situated in front of his house as he was in possession of it for more than 12 years, and also for an injunction against the Government restraining it from taking eviction proceedings under the Land Encroachment Act. The defence set up by the Government was that site was surveyed as part of the public street, and unless the respondent was able to prove his title and possession beyond 60 years, he cannot maintain the suit. The Courts below relying on the presumption laid down under S. 110 of the Evidence Act held that the respondent had possession for more than 12 years and the Government had failed to adduce any evidence to prove that they had subsisting title to or possession within 60 years and decreed the suit. It is this view that is challenged in second appeal, by contending that the presumption laid down under S. 110 of the Evidence Act does not apply in a suit against the Government.

Held, S. 110 of the Evidence Act embodies the well-recognised principle that possession is prima facie proof of ownership. A person in possession is entitled to remain in possession until another person can disclose a better title. Therefore, once the plaintiff proves that he has been in possession of the suit property, the burden of proving that the plaintiff is not the owner is on the first defendant who affirms that the plaintiff is not the owner. The section does not make any distinction between the Government and a private citizen. S. 110 is, therefore, equally applicable where the Government claims to be the owner or challenges the ownership of the plaintiff who is in possession of the property: (1967) 2 An. W.R. 433.

In the case of a boundary dispute between the parties, the possession of the disputed land is an important element to be taken into consideration in determining the dispute: A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 632: 197 I.C. 756.

Where an assessee was found in possession of gold which was seized and he was convicted as carrier, held, inclusion of gold's value as his income under the Income-tax Act, 1961 was not justified as S. 110 of the Evidence Act, could not be invoked: (1984) 147 I.T.R. 251: 1984 Tax.L.R. 989.

The presumption of possession following title to land under S. 110 is recognised under S. 37(1) of the Land Revenue Code, 1879; it is rebuttable as well as available against the State: (1971) 12 Guj.L.R. 668 (D.B.).

Under this section it is presumed that woman has power to dispose of all property which was in her possession at the time of her death: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 618.

Trustee—Acquisition of possessory title: (1956) 2 All E.R. 881.

Where a person is in possession of property and he uses it for four months of every year for tethering his cattle, such possession is prima facie evidence of title, but the Court should not say that the person's ownership is established: 119 I.C. 701: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 318. See also A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 602.

2. Possession must be lawful.—For the application of presumption under S. 110, it must be proved that the possession is lawful. If a person is in possession of a land for a number of years on the basis of valid title deeds and there is nothing on record to show that the plaintiff or her predecessor-in-title had come into possession of the suit-land as a result of encroachment on municipal land, possession of the plaintiff over the suit-land cannot but be held to be lawful: 1985 M.P.L.J. 454.

Lawful possession however short is presumptive evidence of title as owner and of the title to possession: A.I.R. 1915 Mad. 345 (D.B.); I.L.R. 20 Cal. 834 (P.C.); (1968) 2 S.C.W.R. 344.

The presumption under S. 110 would apply only if the possession of the claimant (plaintiff) is prima facie not wrongful, and if the title of the defendant is not proved. It is necessary for the plaintiff to prove that his possession was of such a character as to lead to the presumption of title and not such a sort of possession as would be regarded as wrongful in its origin. The presumption under S. 110 will not apply when there is a statutory presumption in favour of the Government: I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 357: (1942) 44 Bom.L.R. 295: A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 161.

To apply the provisions of S. 110 to plaintiff's possession, that possession must be founded on a prima facie right. Mere acts of user will not lead to a presumption of title in case the possession is prima facie not proved to be lawful. In this suit filed against the municipality it was held that the plaintiff's possession of the piece of land in dispute was referable to a sale certificate issued to him by the executing Court and was prima facie lawful in origin and that the presumption arising in favour of the municipality under S. 36 (h), Indore Municipal Act was displaced: A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 70.

3. Evidence of possession.—The onus laid on a party by S. 110 is discharged by his showing that the possession enjoyed by the other party rests on a basis inconsistent with a right of property: 32 Sind L.R. 340: A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 87 (P.C.)

Proof of possession varies with the nature of property: A.I.R. 1915 Oudh 204. The possession to be proved must be such possession as, the property is capable of or such as has been the normal method of user usually: A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 223.

The mere fact that defendant claimed rent could not defeat the presumption of title arising in plaintiff's favour from the fact that the plaintiff had possession when the suit was instituted: (1934) 36 Punj.L.R. 64: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 324.

Land revenue receipts do not ipso facto prove actual possession of the land by the holders of the receipts: A.I.R. 1979 Gau. 55.

Where J, the plaintiff, claimed the reliefs of declaration and injunction against City Municipality of Indore in the City Munsif's Court alleging possession of the suit open sites in the temple and on behalf of the temple and the trial Court decreed the suit finding possession for over 25 years on the statements of the plaintiff and his two witnesses and such user as Tulsi plants, and a flower tree standing thereon for sometime which were used for the temple, the suit was dismissed in appeal by the District Judge on the ground that no title had been acquired by exclusive user or possession for the statutory period of sixty years as against the Government in whom the sites were vested. In the second appeal benefit of S. 110, Evidence Act was relied on. Held, possession is mixed question of law and fact. It has to be inferred from facts proved and cannot be founded on the bare statement of witnesses that a party had been in possession. Possession under S. 110 of the Evidence Act must be of such a character, as to lead to a presumption of title, based on prima facie right. Mere acts of user of the land, as in the instant case, do not amount to such a character. The title of the Government to the open sites (in suit) subsists unless proved facts lead to a reasonable inference that the right to the land has been parted with or extinguished by possession for over the statutory period: A.I.R. 1951 Madh. Bh. 80.

If in a suit by one aggrieved by the result in a proceeding initiated under S. 145 of Cr. P. Code, both the parties fail to prove their title to the property, then the party who proves to have had possession of it prior to such initiation of the proceeding under S. 145 must succeed: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1042: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 254.

In a suit for ejectment it is upon the plaintiff to make out his title by definite evidence which is not open to any reasonable doubt. He cannot succeed merely by showing a semblance of title or by adducing evidence which would support the case only so far as to establish it to some slight degree of probability. He cannot rely on the weakness of the defendant's title but must succeed on the strength of his own. Where he fails to satisfy the Court as to the truth of his claim, the suit has to be dismissed: 1947 O.W.N. 509. See also I.L.R. (1946) Kar. 24 (P.C.).

4. Part possession.—In question of disputed ownership of land occupation and possession of portions of the disputed area is not relevant evidence of title to the whole area unless it can be reasonably attributed to a right of the whole area. The portions so occupied may be so numerous and so closely adjoining that they practically cover the whole area. Alternatively, the occupation of a portion may be reasonably attributable to a right of ownership in a larger area, as for instance, occupation of a portion of a field may be attributed to a right extending over the whole field. But the area must be defined, in other words, it must be attributable to an existing boundary: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 185.

Where a portion of a house is proved to be in possession of a person for a long time, a presumption of ownership of that portion arises in his favour under S. 110, Evidence Act, although there may not be any documentary evidence on record to prove his ownership. A declaration of his ownership can, therefore, be rightly given in absence of any proof of title on the part of the disputing party. Similarly, if such owner has, for the enjoyment of his portion, right to use the pol, darichi and the staircase, the other party can rightly be restrained from interfering with the use and enjoyment of the disputed portion. But simply because one of the parties is the owner of a part of the house, an inference cannot be drawn that party is the joint owner of that property also which is necessary for the use of his portion: 1957 Raj.L.W. 647: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 294. See also 1982 M.P.W.N. 154.

6. Suit for possession.—Where a plaintiff not in possession sues for possession and sets up a case of possession by the defendant on his behalf but fails to discharge the onus on him, then it is open to a Court to presume that the defendant's possession must be rightful: A.I.R. 1950 Kutch 50.

It is not necessary for the person claiming injunction to prove his title to the suit land. It would suffice, if he proves that he is in lawful possession of the same and that his possession was invaded by a person who had no title: A.I.R. 1951 Bom. 380: I.L.R. (1951) Bom. 425.

Where in a suit for possession of suit land, the defendant contested the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the plaintiff was allotted the land being Harijan and he could not sell the same before the expiry of ten years, held, it was for the defendant to establish that there was any embargo on the right of the plaintiff to sell the land: 1994 Punj.L.J. 78.

Mere previous possession will not entitle a plaintiff to decree for recovery of possession except in a suit under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, even though peaceful possession for a long period of time may under certain circumstances give rise to an inference of title in the plaintiff as against a trespasser who has no right to possession what so ever: A.I.R. 1917 Cal. 469 (S.B.).

Where the plaintiff suing for possession did not prove title and the defendant who dispossessed the plaintiff also failed to prove the title, held, the plaintiff is entitled to decree on the ground of prior possession: 1979 M.P.L.J. (Note) 19.

111. Proof of good faith in transactions where one party is in relation of active confidence.—Where there is a question as to the good faith of a transaction between parties, one of whom stands to the other in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the good faith of the transaction is on the party who is in a position of active confidence.

7. Miscellaneous.—Where the bill of lading showed the owner to have consigned the goods to self or agent and thereby he retained his possession and right of disposal over the goods during the voyage, held, in a suit for damages for loss of goods by accident during the voyage, the burden to prove that the consignor was not the owner and the property in goods lost had passed to the person to whom the bill of lading was endorsed lies on the common career. [A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 730 and A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 290, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1983 Cal. 237 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1983 Cal. 408.

Where in a suit for specific performance of a contract and ouster of a trespasser from the suit land against the Improvement Trust, the Trust admitted ownership and possession but the trespasser claimed adverse possession, held, the burden to prove that the Trust was not the owner lay on the party claiming adverse possession and not on the plaintiff to prove the Trust's ownership: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 219: 1982 B.L.J.R. 403.

Where appellant filed an ejectment petition against respondent relying on a will under which he was made the owner of the house part of which was occupied by respondent even during the life time of the executant but the appellant failed to prove the genuineness of the will, held, once respondent was found to be in occupation of part of the house, then he was entitled to seek a declaration of possessory title as good against the whole world including appellant except the true owner. [A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 841; (1893) I.L.R. 20 Cal. 834 (P.C.) & 1902 Punj. Re. 78, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 P.&H. 122: 1980 Rev.L.R. 80 (D.B.).

Presumption as to possession—Pakani Patrika—Name of X shown in the column of "cultivators" for some years—Column left blank in subsequent years—Presumption is that X continued in possession in those subsequent years also—There is no warrant for assuming that the owner re-entered into possession in those years: (1979) 1 An.W.R. 58.

Gift of deities and their properties by shebait in favour of plaintiff—Suit by defendant challenging gift—Defendant already in possession since prior to gift—Onus to prove that defendant was not the owner is on plaintiff: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 918: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 201.

Possession as evidence of title—Nightsoil collected by sweepers of Municipal Board from houses and streets and deposited on leased land—Ownership in nightsoil before it was deposited on leased land must be deemed to be in Board: 1965 All.L.J. 432: I.L.R. (1965) 1 All. 435: A.I.R. 1965 All. 527.

Where the plaintiff is found to be in lawful possession and defendant does not prove superior title in himself, a decree for possession can be passed on the basis that plaintiff had prior lawful possession though the suit is not under S. 9, Specific Relief Act. G, after having been taken in adoption in 1929 by the widow of D, was in possession of D's property since then till he was dispossessed by T the daughter of D in 1944. G's adoptive mother died in 1936. T could not prove any superior title in herself. Held that G was entitled to a decree for possession: 1960 Nag. L.J. (Notes) 65.

1. Scope and applicability.—S. 111 relates to transactions entered into by persons between whom there is fiduciary relationship: 1936 O.W.N. 1106: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 56. See also 78 I.C. 850: A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 16; 8 Nag.L.R. 150: 17 I.C. 363; I.L.R. 36 Cal. 493: 2 I.C. 553; I.L.R. 25 All. 358; I.L.R. 30 Mad. 169: 17 M.L.J. 19 (F.B.) (Donor and donee); I.L.R. 18 Cal. 545 (P.C.) (Agent and principal); 11 M.I.A. 551; I.L.R. 20 All. 447 (husband and wife); A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 414 (deed by pardanashin lady).

S. 111 applies where the validity of a transaction, which is otherwise valid in all respects is called in question on the ground that the person benefiting from it did not act in good faith or took advantage of his position.

In a case where one party alleges that the other executed a promissory note in consideration of debt and the other denies execution and alleges that the document itself is a forged one, S. 111 ordinarily has no application: A.I.R. 1968 All. 224.

Under S. 111, whenever good faith of transaction between persons one of whom stands to other in position of active confidence is in question, there is presumption against the deed and the burden of proving good faith is on the person holding position of active confidence: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 87 (D.B.).

S. 111 has no application except as between parties to the transaction itself. Where there is transaction between two persons and one of the parties is in a position of advantage over the other, who puts trust in him, he must, if the other contracting party challenges the good faith of the transaction, prove that he has not abused that trust. But that does not mean that when a question arises which is entirely outside one of good faith as between the contracting parties, and the transaction is impugned from another angle altogether, merely because a sale takes place between solicitor and client or between person who have not that special relationship but some other analogous relationship, the method of impugning it should be different or the things to prove should, in any way, be varied: A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 412: 178 I.C. 772; A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 203 (D.B.).

S. 111 cannot come into operation unless the good faith of the parties is questioned by any one. In the absence of any allegation as to want of good faith by the plaintiff, no Court can assume this fact suo motu and place burden of proof of good faith on a defendant: 1943 R.D. 173.

When fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence is alleged by a party in a suit, normally, the burden is on him to prove such fraud, undue influence or misrepresentation. But, when a person is in a fiduciary relationship with another and the latter is in a position of active confidence, the burden of proving the absence of fraud, misrepresentation or undue influence is upon the person in the dominating position; he has to prove that there was fair play in the transaction and that the apparent is the real; in other words, that the transaction is genuine and bona fide: A.I.R. 1975 Gau. 30.

Obviously, as between parties inter se dealing on the footing of complete equality, want of good faith is not presumed; prima facie, law presumes in favour of the deeds duly executed; ordinarily, the burden lies on the party seeking to invalidate a transaction for fraud, undue influence and bad faith to prove the same. However, a major exception to this rule is that in case a relationship of "active confidence" or fiduciary relationship subsists between the parties like that guardian and ward, agent and principal, doctor and patient, spiritual advisor and disciple or trustee and cestui que trust, etc., the initial burden does not shift to the weaker party challenging the transaction; it rests on the person who upholds it: A.I.R. 1982 All. 376 (D.B.).

2. Active confidence.—Active confidence in S. 111, indicates that the relationship between the parties must be such that one is bound to protect interests of the other. But the words should, in order that the law may be really protective, receive wider interpretation: A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 671 (D.B.). Where there is relationship of confidentiality between the two parties to a deed, terms of which are clearly harsh and unconscionable as regards the interests of one of the parties, held, it is for the other party to prove good faith of the transaction: A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 139.

Person in position of active confidence—Burden of proving bona fides of transaction is on him: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 861.

Active confidence—Literate woman with considerable intellectual capacity and habits having dealings with another person—No presumption that person stood in position of active confidence to her—Pairoker is not necessarily in a position of active confidence to the person for whom he does pairvi in a suit: A.I.R. 1968 All. 224.

3. "Fiduciary"—Meaning of.—The word "fiduciary" as per Webster's New International Dictionary connotes "a person in trust, a person or thing holding something in trust; of or pertaining to a trust, pertaining to or of the nature of trusteeship". The Courts on noticing that any party is not in a position to exercise his independent will for such reasons, place the burden of proof on the other party in the advantageous position to establish that he did not abuse his advantage: A.I.R. 1982 All. 376 (D.B.).

4. Undue influence.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 105, supra). The three stages for consideration of a case of undue influence were expounded in A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 60 in the following words: In the first place the relations between the parties to each other must be such that one is in a position to dominate the will of the other. Once that position is substantiated the second stage has been reached, namely, the issue whether the contract has been induced by undue influence. Upon the determination of this issue a third point emerges, which is that of the onus probandi. If the transaction appears to be unconscionable, then the burden of proving that the contract was not induced by under influence is to lie upon the person who was in a position to dominate the Will of the other: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 878; 1982 Hindu L.R. 36 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

The questions of undue influence and of mental incapacity are totally different. For establishing undue influence, there must be evidence of either fraud or coercion: I.L.R. 22 Cal. 324 (P.C.).

To treat undue influence as having been established by proof of the relation of the parties having been such that the one naturally relied upon the other for advice and the other was in a position to dominate the will of the first in giving it, is erroneous. That merely proves influence. It must be further established that a person in a position has used the position to obtain unfair advantage for himself so as to cause injury to the person relying upon his authority or aid: I.L.R. 10 Lah. 761: A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 309.

Onus to prove undue influence is on caveator—Every influence is not undue influence and mere fact that bequest is in favour of persons who were looking after testator at or about time of will does not by itself indicate that will was executed under undue influence: I.L.R. (1966) 1 Cal. 408.

Undue influence—Burden of proof—When shifts: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Ker. 259: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 189.

Where the fact of undue influence was not seriously disputed, the burden lies on him, who denies it, to show that no undue influence was used and the transaction was made in good faith: 1934 All.L.J. 817: A.I.R. 1934 All. 507.

Execution of will—Undue influence—Proof: A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 115.

Undue influence would in normal circumstances presuppose some knowledge of the transaction by the influenced person. Thus, where the case of a lady, who was not a house-wife but was an artist and film actress, was that she had abandoned the entirety of the administration of the business of the family in the hands of her husband but she did not say that she had to accept whatever the husband said and her plea was that she was not at all aware of the transaction in question and that the signature was obtained from her by her husband on the impugned document without her being informed of the nature of the transaction, held, this was not a case of undue influence to which the principles of S. 111 would apply: A.I.R. 1990 Mad. 46: (1989-2) 104 Mad.L.W. 294 (D.B.).

Until it has been established that party against whom undue influence is pleaded was in a position to dominate Will of other party, no assistance on issue of undue influence will be available under S. 16(3), Contract Act. Burden of proof in such case remains on latter: A.I.R. 1932 P.C. 202.

Undue influence—S. 16, Contract Act, analysed—Presumption under sub-S. (2)—Shifting of burden of proof—Limited application of sub-S. (3)—Held, plea of undue influence raised by defendants was not proved: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1279.

Contract Act, 1872, S. 16(3)—Undue influence—Plaintiff old, infirm, weak and having none to look after him—Appellant, grandson of plaintiff's own brother, helping him at time of plaintiff's illness—Plaintiff executing a deed of gift believing it to be deed of Will in favour of appellant on his request—Held, burden lay on appellant to prove that deed was not induced by undue influence: A.I.R. 1966 All. 438.

Where a gift deed, executed willingly, is shown to have been obtained by exercising undue influence upon an illiterate man of 70 years on the pretext of its being a power-of-attorney to manage his property, held, the deed has to be set aside; the burden to prove absence of undue influence would lie on the party which seeks to sustain the deed: A.I.R. 1972 Him. Pra. 33.

Where the appellant, an issueless widow, who was living with her elder brother and was fully under the control and authority of said brother executed a will bequeathing her property and thereafter executed a settlement deed in favour of her nephew but later prayed for its revocation on the ground of undue influence and coercion by her brother, held , impugned deed was vitiated by undue influence: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 132 (Ker.) (D.B.).

Proof of person being in position to dominate will of another—Transaction entered into appearing on face of it unconscionable—Burden to prove that transaction is not induced by undue influence is on person benefiting by it: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 507: (1969) 18 Law Rep. 104.

Gift of entire property by old, illiterate Mohammadan in favour of his grand nephew on whom he was dependent even for his maintenance—Son and unmarried daughters disinherited—Independent advice given by friend but not accepted—Presumption of undue influence, held, rebutted: 1964 Raj.L.W. 302: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 250.

5. Husband and wife.—There is no presumption of law or fact in India that a woman to whom a man is engaged to be married is in a position to dominate his will so as to override his own real intentions; it is not mere influence but undue influence of the wife which has to be proved in order to vitiate the will; held, on facts, the will in favour of a newly married second wife by the husband to the exclusion of his mother, son and daughters was not brought about by the wife's undue influence. [A.I.R. 1971 All. 304, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1999.

Where husband was in management of wife's property who was illiterate and was signing any document asked to sign, held, in respect to a deed mortgaging all her property for benefit of husband, presumption of undue influence did arise. See A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 8.

Where a lady was not a house-wife but a film actress, held, presumption of undue influence could not be raised. See A.I.R. 1990 Mad. 46, cited under Note 4, supra.

6. Guardian and ward.—Where a minor soon after attaining majority executed what purported to be a deed of settlement in favour of his maternal uncle, the minor's de facto guardian after the death of his parents, and afterwards sued his maternal uncle for cancellation of the deed on the ground that it had been procured fraudulently by mis-representation, held, not having denied the factum of having been the minor's de facto guardian in his written statement, the burden lay upon the defendant to prove good faith of the transaction. The defendant was undoubtedly in the position of active confidence; merely because at the time the deed was executed the plaintiff was no longer a minor would make no difference; such minor cannot be expected to come out of that influence merely on attaining majority or within a short time thereafter. [A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 203; A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 671, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 297: (1977) 2 Cal.L.J. 54: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N. 960 (D.B.).

When the minor after attaining majority, ratifies the debt incurred by a guardian, held, in absence of anything to show that the ratification was due to undue influence by the guardian no presumption of undue influence could be drawn: A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 56 (D.B.).

7. Pleader and client.—Where a pleader who was engaged by a judgment-debtor in an execution proceeding, advances money to him to pay off the decretal amount and takes a mortgage of the judgment-debtor's property in favour of his (pleader's) son, thereby securing a long term and profitable investment for his money, held, in view of the fiduciary relation existing between the pleader and his client, it is incumbent on those seeking to enforce the mortgage to prove the utmost good faith on the part of the pleader in persuading his client to execute the mortgage. As the pleader knows that the onus of supporting his transaction would rest upon him, he must preserve the evidence which would be required to support it, if he desires that it should be upheld: I.L.R. 12 Luck. 435; A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 37. See also 1940 O.A. 910: A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 204: (1939) 52 Mad.L.W. 777 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 34 [Where a pleader purchases his client's property in execution sale in the name of his wife, after ceasing to be the client's pleader, the sale is vitiated.]

Gift by a person to his Counsel's wife—Validity—Proof of spontaneity eliminates proof of independent legal advice: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 111.

8. Pardanashin/illiterate ladies.—(See also S. 101-104, Note 80, supra). A pardanashin illiterate lady is entitled to protection at the time she executed a document; may be, she might gather business experience subsequently; but that would not disentitle her of the protection for there can be no presumption that the business experience she possessed subsequently was also there in her when the document was executed: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 499.

While dealing with a deed purportedly executed by a pardanashin lady, held, the Court must satisfy itself before giving effect to the deed that (1) she was really pardanashin, living in complete seclusion and having little or no commerce with the outside world; (2) the deed was executed by her or through an authorised person with full understanding of what she was about to do; (3) she had full knowledge and understanding of the effect of the deed, not merely the deed having been read over or translated to her; (4) she had independent and disinterested advice; and (5) she understood the deed as a whole: A.I.R. 1986 Gau. 71: (1986) 1 Gau.L.R. 147 (D.B.).

It is for the person claiming the benefit from the disposition of property by a pardanashin to establish affirmatively that it was substantially understood by the lady and was really her free and intelligent act: 31 Cal.W.N. 635: A.I.R. 1931 P.C. 100: 16 M.L.J. 94 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 208; A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 204.

Document executed by pardanashin lady—Proof of—Onus: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 110.

Judicial decisions recognising the principles protecting the transactions made by pardanashin ladies fall broadly into two groups, namely, firstly, cases where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and secondly, cases where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the latter class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically: A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 131.

Law gives special protection to pardanashin ladies due to social conditions of the time; they are presumed to have imperfect knowledge; if a document has been taken from them, the Court has to ascertain whether the executrix was a free agent and duly informed about the nature of the document; the normal presumption that a person affixing his name to a document knows about its contents does not apply to pardanashin ladies. It is well settled that the burden of proof always rests upon the person who seeks to sustain a transaction with a pardanashin lady to establish that she had executed the deed after having carefully understood its nature and it was not only her physical but also mental act; this special burden can be discharged by proving that the deed was explained to, and understood by, her but also by other direct and circumstantial evidence. This special rule for protection of pardanashin ladies should not be confused with the other doctrine of fraud, duress and undue influence applicable to all persons, whether pardanashin ladies or others: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 257: 1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 605; I.L.R. 3 Cal. 324 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 134.

Town-bred ladies, in parda or not, know that in case of illness in the house the physician should be called and for executing legal deeds, the lawyer should be consulted; even quasi pardanashin ladies in urban areas know this; in the fast changing situation, the protection should be extended only to real pardanashin ladies who are really ignorant: A.I.R. 1986 Gau. 71: (1986) 1 Gau.L.R. 147 (D.B).

As to whether the presumption in favour of parda woman should be extended to every illiterate and ignorant woman, see 10 Mys.L.J. 217.

It is well settled that the protection available to a pardanashin lady is equally available to an illiterate lady: (1973) 39 Cut.L.T. 499.

Originally applied to pardanashin ladies, the area of operation has gradually been enlarged to other similarly handicapped females unable to cope with the complexities of life: A.I.R. 1982 All. 376 (D.B).

In the case of execution of a deed by a pardanashin or illiterate lady, it must be proved affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was not only executed by, but was explained to and really understood by, the grantor. The Court would demand affirmative proof on the subject of the lady's intelligent understanding and execution of a deed and would not readily hold this onus to have been discharged where it is not shown that the lady had any independent advice: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 53: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 487 (D.B.).

Pardanashin lady—Mortgage by—Suit to enforce—Burden of proof on plaintiff—Proof of independent advice. See A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 62.

Where it was found that the woman executing the sale deed and suing for its cancellation was not only of advanced age but also an illiterate rustic village woman with a very weak eye-sight, held, she is entitled to the protection law accorded to pardanashin ladies; such protection necessarily arises from old age, infirmity, ignorance, illiteracy, mental deficiency, inexperience and dependence on others. [1965 All.L.J. 1080, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 All. 222.

Where a pardanashin lady was kept fully informed throughout of all the various stages of negotiations of compromise and was fully and intelligently aware that the Advocate engaged was clothed with authority to compromise the suit on her behalf and was in fact exercising his authority, held, it cannot be said that the lady had not been proved to have authorised the agreement: A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 158. See also A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 70.

Where the appellant claiming herself to be a pardanashin lady demanded benefit of S. 111 but the evidence on the record showed that lady rather behaved as a male member in her day to day dealings as she filed suits and complaints in various Courts and prosecuted them in a 'manly' manner and she was meeting the petition writers, the lawyers and all others coming in her way during the course of litigation, held, the lady could not, therefore, be deemed to be enjoying the status of a pardanashin lady and was, therefore, not entitled to the benefit of S. 111: A.I.R. 1985 J.&K. 22: 1984 Kash.L.J. 327 (D.B.).

The quantum of evidence required to prove a transaction by a pardanashin, old and illiterate woman would vary from case to case; the rule of special protection of such women cannot inflexibly apply to every case. Thus, where the donor, a Muslim pardanashin woman, illiterate and old, made an oral gift to her daughter, an only surviving issue, living with her for 15 or 16 years, held, she did understand the nature and effect of the gift; it emanated from her own mind. [(1914) I.L.R. 36 All. 81 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1955 All. 573, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 All. 219 (D.B.).

Where the scribe of the documents did not make any statement that he read over and explained the contents of the documents to the defendant, an illiterate lady, and that she understood the same, no other evidence was produced, held, due execution of the document was not proved. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1203, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1994 Ori. 111.

[1][111-A. Presumption as to certain offences.—(1) Where a person is accused of having committed any offence specified in sub-section (2), in—

(a) any area declared to be a disturbed area under any enactment, for the time being in force, making provision for the suppression of disorder and restoration and maintenance of public order; or

(b) any area in which there has been, over a period of more than one month, extensive disturbance of the public peace, and it is shown that such person had been at a place in such area at a time when fire-arms or explosives were used at or from that place to attack or resist the members of any armed forces or the forces charged with the maintenance of public order acting in the discharge of their duties, it shall be presumed, unless the contrary is shown, that such person had committed such offence.

(2) The offences referred to in sub-section (1) are the following, namely:—

(a) an offence under section 121, section 121-A, section 122 or section 123 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860);

(b) criminal conspiracy or attempt to commit, or abetment of, an offence under section 122 or section 123 of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).]

112. Birth during marriage, conclusive proof of legitimacy.—The fact that any person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man, or within two hundred and eighty days after its dissolution, the mother remaining unmarried, shall be conclusive proof that he is the legitimate son of that man, unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten.

1. Scope and applicability.—The presumption under S. 112 is applicable not only during the subsistence of the marriage, but also if the child is born within 280 days of the dissolution, provided the mother remains unmarried. A finding that adultery is not proved cannot bar the denial of paternity on non-access: (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 94: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 65: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 258: (1990) 2 D.M.C. 247.

The presumption, which S. 112 contemplates, is a conclusive presumption of law which can be displaced only by proof of the particular fact mentioned in the section, namely, non-access between the parties to the marriage at a time when according to the ordinary course of nature the husband could have been the father of the child. Access and non-access connote existence and non-existence of opportunities for marital intercourse. Non-access can be established not merely by positive or direct evidence; it can be proved undoubtedly like any other physical fact by evidence, either direct or circumstantial, which is relevant to the issue, though, as the presumption of legitimacy is highly favoured by law, it is necessary that proof of non-access must be clear and satisfactory: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 176; A.I.R. 1954 Him. Pra. 32; A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 169. Once access or intercourse by the husband is proved, no evidence will be allowed to show that the child is not the child of the husband, that is to say, the presumption to be drawn becomes an irrebuttable one: (1965) 78 Mad.L.W. 651.

Subject to proof of impossibility of access, the presumption under S. 112 of the Evidence Act shall be drawn by all Courts, civil, criminal and revenue, governed by the Indian Evidence Act: (1950) 1 M.L.J. 158: A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 394.

S. 112 can have no application to a case where the maternity of a person is in dispute, and not his paternity:(1939) 52 Mad.L.W. 57: A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 93 (P.C.). As to applicability of section, see I.L.R. 48 All. 625: A.I.R. 1926 All. 589; I.L.R. 7 Lah. 368: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 529; I.L.R. 49 Mad. 553: A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 628: 50 M.L.J. 453; I.L.R. 17 Luck. 416: A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 143.

S. 112 enacts a strong presumption favouring legitimacy against bastardy; the rule is founded in the notion that it is undesirable to enquire into a child's paternity whose parents had a subsisting marital status with access to each other; the continuance of the marriage and availability of access is conclusive proof of legitimacy; no evidence in such a case is permissible that the child could have been begotten of another man; such conclusive presumption is, however, rebuttable by proof of non-access at any time when the child could have been begotten; on facts found, the presumption of legitimacy stood rebutted: A.I.R. 1977 Karn. 115: (1977) 1 Karn.L.J. 206 (D.B.); 1982 M.P.L.J. 487.

S. 112 lays down a rule of prudence in accordance with the rule of natural justice. Subsistence of a valid marriage involves mutual rights and obligations; the husband is entitled to the wife's company and the wife is entitled to keep aloof only when justified; in a cultured society, chastity is the rule and lapses from virtue an exception. Presumptions of law are always in favour of the rule, not the exception; exception has to be proved in each case, depending upon its facts and circumstances. Morality and innocence are legal presumptions accepted as a matter of course and the converse is to be proved by positive evidence; this is the basis of the presumption of paternity available only to an offspring of a legally wedded couple. Lapses from virtue and non-access are matters for proof and not for presumption. The presumption which is the basis of the section is that he is the father whom the marriage indicates; it arises from the conception in favour of marriage and against concubinage in a civilised society. Public policy demands such a presumption. Law in general presumes against vice and immorality. These are the basic features on which the presumption embodied in S. 112 rests. But the presumption can definitely be rebutted by evidence; when either by admission or evidence non-access during the relevant period is proved and access of the paramour is established, the presumption stands rebutted. It is not impossible for a child to be born to a woman by her paramour when her marriage is subsisting; the presumption under S. 112 is strong but is not conclusive: 1985 Ker.L.T. 338: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1553: 1985 Ker.L.J. 293: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 451.

S. 112 can be applied with reference to recent events where the question of marriage or cohabitation can be examined: S. 114 is, on the other hand, sanctioned in order to provide for cases of ancient origin which may not admit to clear and direct proof.

It is the principle of law that "Odiosa et inkonesta non sunt in lege presumenda" (nothing odious or dishonourable will be presumed by the law). So the law presumes against vice and immorality. One of the strongest illustrations of the principle, is the presumption in favour of the legitimacy of children in a civilised society. But where illegitimacy seems as common as marriage and legitimacy, a presumption of legitimacy cannot be drawn and legitimacy or illegitimacy will have to be proved like any other fact in issue: I.L.R. (1960) Cut. 230.

The causes of adulterine bastardy have been reduced to two: (1) the impotence of the husband, and (2) the absence of sexual intercourse between the husband and wife when the period of the wife's gestation commenced. The general rule of law or presumption in favour of legitimacy being so strong the evidence to disprove the existence of sexual intercourse between the husband and wife was necessarily to be conclusive. The presumption in favour of legitimacy was expressly declared by some writers not to be a presumption juri set de jure but one that was liable to be controverted nor was proof necessary to controvert it required to be of the highest order. The Court is not concerned in cases of this nature with the question of the probability or the improbability of the legitimacy of the child but with the question of the impossibility alone. The only question that can be legally put to determine legitimacy of child is whether there was by the laws of nature a possibility, under the circumstances of access or non-access, that such a child can be the real son of the parent from whom he claims to derive his title. The presumption which is incorporated in S. 112 of the Evidence Act contemplates a conclusive presumption of law which can be displaced only by proof of the particular fact mentioned in the section, namely, non-access between the parties to the marriage, at a time, when according to the ordinary course of nature, the husband could have been the father. Access and non-access connote, existence and non-existence of opportunities for marital intercourse. It is also equally settled that non-access can be established not merely by positive or direct evidence; it can be established also by indirect evidence or circumstantial evidence, but it is necessary that the proof of non-access must be clear and satisfactory: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 15: I.L.R. (1966) 2 Mad. 373, affirmed in A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2352: (1970) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 121: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 49, relying on A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 176; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 569.

Difference between English and Indian law: (1926) 28 Bom.L.R. 607: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 248.

Under the English law rebuttal of the presumption of legitimacy is more a question of quality of onus whereas in Indian law it is rather a question of admissibility of evidence for discharge of the onus. [A.I.R. 1986 All. 259 and 1991 Cr.L.J. 939, Disting.]: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1659: (1992) 2 Cal.H.N. 327: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 1103.

Although the law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage, it does not presume that concubinage ripens into marriage by mere efflux of time or birth of children: A.I.R. 1952 Bilaspur 13. The presumption of legitimacy created by S. 112 can be rebutted only by proof of non-access leaving no room for doubt. If the husband has had access, the wife's adultery will not justify a finding of illegitimacy—Proof of impotence would be equivalent to proof of non-access: 26 I.C. 966: 16 Cr.L.J. 84: (1914) 11 U.B.R. 23; 10 I.C. 389: (1911) 1 Mad.W.N. 312; 77 P.R. 1911: 12 I.C. 946; 22 I.C. 409. See also A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 231: I.L.R. 1 Luck. 71; 5 Mys.L.J. 249.

Where children are born during subsistence of a marriage, it is a conclusive proof under S. 112 that they are legitimate children unless the husband contending otherwise can show that he had no access to the wife at any time when they could have been begotten. In other words, this conclusive presumption of law can be displaced only by proof of the particular fact mentioned in the section, namely, non-access between the parties to the marriage at a time when, according to the ordinary course of nature, he could have been the father of the children. Access and non-access only connote existence of opportunities for marital intercourse. A special protection is given by the law to the status of legitimacy in India. The law is very strict regarding the type of the evidence which can be let in to rebut the presumption of legitimacy of a child. Even proof that the mother committed adultery with any number of men will not of itself suffice for proving the illegitimacy of the child. If she had access to her husband during the time the child could have been begotten the law will not countenance any attempt on the part of the husband to prove that the child is not actually his. The presumption of law of legitimacy of a child will not be lightly repelled. It will not be allowed to be broken or shaken by a mere balance of probability. The evidence of non-access for the purpose of repelling it must be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive. The standard of proof in this regard is similar to the standard of proof of guilt in a criminal case. These rigours are justified by considerations of public policy for there are a variety of reason why a child's status is not to be trifled with. The stigma of illegitimacy is very severe and we have not any of the protective legislations as in England to protect illegitimate children. No doubt, this may in some cases require a husband to maintain children of whom he is probably not father. But, the Legislature alone can change the rigour of the law and not the Court. The Court cannot base a conclusion on evidence different from that required by the law. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 176; A.I.R. 1972 Ker. 80; I.L.R. (1837) 5 Cal. and Fin. 163; A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 396; A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 910, Rel. on]: 1975 Ker.L.T. 533.

The mere fact that a woman is immoral or is living in a house separate from that of her husband, is having relations with other men is not sufficient to rebut the conclusive presumption of legitimacy which is raised by S. 112 unless it is proved that the husband and wife had no access to each other during the period indicated in the section. The burden of proving such non-access is upon him who asserts it, for stigma attaches to illegitimacy, and it is wrong to brand a child as illegitimate on insufficient grounds: 1947 All.L.J. 569.

The terms of S. 112 must be given their due effect and any evidence to the effect that a wife has been leading an improper life, even if the Court should be prepared to accept it as true, will not rebut the presumption enacted in that section. A statement by husband that a child in the womb of his wife was not his child and must have been procreated by somebody else is not entitled to any weight; nor does it amount to such proof, even assuming it to be true, as will displace the effect of S. 112. The fact that the parties are governed by the Mohammedan law makes no difference so far as the application or effect of the presumption under S. 112 is concerned. The fact that under that law there may be a divorce of a wife by the husband making oath accompanied by an imprecation as to his wife's fidelity, and that if he denies the parentage of the child with which the wife is then pregnant, it will be bastardised, cannot override the presumption enacted in S. 112: 1937 Mad.W.N. 757. See also A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 266.

S. 112 of the Act applies where legitimacy of a child during subsistence of marriage is questioned—Illegitimate child born—Paternity to be proved by person alleging it: 1965 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 162.

The presumption under S. 112 applies quite irrespective of the fact whether the mother was married or not at the time of the conception: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 784.

S. 112 has to be interpreted and applied with reference to the facts and circumstances of each case to determine whether or not there was an opportunity for intercourse between the spouses; if it is proved that the husband did not have intercourse with the wife, he need not then prove want of opportunity: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 57: 1986 M.P.L.J. 105: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 543.

To rebut the conclusive presumption under S. 112 there must be conclusive evidence that the husband could not be the child's father: A.I.R. 1987 Rer. 5: 1986 Ker.L.J. 744: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1068: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 342: (1987) 1 D.M.C. 140: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 133 (D.B.).

Nature of presumption under the section explained: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 310: 66 M.L.J. 279. See also A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 318: 66 M.L.J. 283; A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 160.

The presumption under S. 112 of the Evidence Act is irrebuttable where as the presumption under S. 21 of the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act, 1987 is rebuttable. Therefore, the statutory presumption under S. 21 of the 1987 Act cannot be said to be unreasonable: 1995 Cr.L.J. 477 (S.C.).

Provisions are as much applicable to the offspring of a marriage between Hindus as it is to children of spouses professing other faith: (1968) 2 Mys.L.J. 39: 15 Law Rep. 204: A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 17.

S. 112 of the Evidence Act, is very general in its terms and it applies to all persons including Mohamedans who may have personal law of their own relating to legitimacy as there is no provision exempting them from the application of S. 112. [A.I.R. 1926 All. 589 and A.I.R. 1936 All. 528, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 182: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 98: (1977) 1 M.L.J. 482: I.L.R. (1977) 1 Mad. 303.

As to presumption of legitimacy from marriage in the case of Mahomedans, see A.I.R. 1936 All. 528.

Word "valid" in section means flawless, and hence presumption will not apply in case of "fasid" marriages under Mahomedan law: I.L.R. 1 Luck. 71: A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 231.

Hindu wife converting to Islam—Marriage does not stand automatically dissolved—Marriage with Muslim—Legitimacy of child born of that tie—Presumption: A.I.R. 1969 All. 75.

The case of a married woman stands on a different footing from that of a spinster or widow who may be living as a mistress with somebody. For a mistress it may be open to prove that the real father of the child born during the period of her concubinage is different from her paramour. In such a case the presumption which would naturally arise in respect of paternity of the child in favour of the paramour is capable of being rebutted: I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 383: 1942 Nag.L.J. 254: A.I.R 1942 Nag. 96.

As to proof needed to establish paternity, see A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1130.

Plea of illegitimacy—Onus of proof—Presumption: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 174.

The law is that there is a presumption in favour of the legitimacy in respect of the birth of a child born during subsistence of marriage unless non-access between the two spouses is proved and the standard of proof required in such cases is the same which obtains in a criminal trial, namely, proof beyond all reasonable doubt. In other words, the law is very jealous and zealous in vouchsafing the fact that a child born in the circumstances laid down in S. 112 ought not to be illegitimised or bastardised on frivolous and weak evidence with regard to the proof of non-access and the Courts are duty bound to see that the evidence adduced before them has made them morally certain that the factum of non-access inter se the spouses has been proved: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1852: (1989) 1 Sim.L.C. 237: (1989) 2 Crimes 165: (1989) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 587.

The presumption regarding legitimacy cannot be rebutted by circumstances which only create doubts and suspicions: 39 P.L.R. J.&K. 51. See also A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 129: (1941) 54 Mad.L.W. 411.

The presumption of legitimacy is so strong that that it is for the husband to prove that it was physically impossible for him to have cohabited with his wife during the time in which the child was conceived: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1214: A.I.R. 1953 Vindh. Pra. 28.

The effect of S. 112 is that where a child is born during lawful wedlock, that child will have to be assumed to be the child of the man who was at the time the husband of the mother, unless it is shown that they had no opportunity of sexual intercourse in consequence of which the child could have been begotten. Every assumption is to be made in favour of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock, and the onus of proving non-access or illegitimacy, is on the party alleging the same. The law requires in such cases the positive proof of a negative fact, that is, non-access as between the parties to the marriage and the mere fact that they are living separately in two different houses is insufficient to establish non-access. The fact of non-access has to be proved like any other physical fact and may be established both by direct and circumstantial evidence of an unambiguous character, but unless such evidence is forthcoming, it will not be possible for any Court "to believe it to be probable that there was no access". An entry in the birth register containing the name of the mother only does not warrant the inference that the child born is not illegitimate. An entry in the birth register may be relevant under S. 35 to show the date of birth but the question as to how far the fact that the name of the mother and not that of the father was given by the informant would bear on the question of the child's legitimacy, even if it is assumed to be relevant, depends largely on the means the informant may be shown to have possessed of the knowledge in connection with the child's birth. If the informant is a stranger, who did not know the father, the statement, even if relevant, would be wholly unimportant, and the entry would be of no value when the informant is not examined and no explanation is given for his non-examination by the party relying on the entry in support of his plea of illegitimacy: (1941) 54 Mad.L.W. 411: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 129. See also A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 632: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 108; I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 383: 1942 Nag.L.J. 254: A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 96.

2. Birth during continuance of marriage.—According to S. 112 of the Evidence Act birth during continuance of a valid marriage is "conclusive proof" of legitimacy unless, as the latter part of the section itself provides, it is proved that the husband and wife had no access to each other at any time when the child could have been begotten. Thus, the presumption of legitimacy though strong is rebuttable. No doubt the evidence must be strong and unequivocal. It is not quite impossible for children born to a married woman to be legally held to be the progeny of a paramour: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 390: 1962 Ker.L.J. 28: (1962) 1 Ker.L.R. 136: 1962 Ker.L.T. 138; (1841-46) 2 Moo. Ind. App. 245 (P.C.).

Birth during subsisting marriage—Conclusiveness of presumption: (1970) 2 S.C.J. 653.

The continuance of marriage for the purposes of S. 112 does not require to be shown in any particular manner: A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 11.

A child born during lawful wed-lock attracts the initial presumption of legitimacy; this rule of law is, however, rebuttable by showing non-access between the parents when the child could have been conceived. But once access by the husband is proved, no evidence can be allowed to show that the child is not the husband's child; it is immaterial how soon after marriage the child is born. Though ordinary period of gestation is 280 days, a child born within less than 280 days, if there be no evidence of non-access, be presumed to be legitimate, notwithstanding whether or not the mother was married at the time of conception. The section is based on the maxim pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant (father is he whom the nuptials indicate). [1978 Hindu L.R. 719 (Him. Pra.), Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1988 Del. 93: (1987) 1 D.M.C. 528: (1988) 93 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 1: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 583: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 384. See also 1994 D.N.J. 446 (Raj.) (D.B); 1982 M.P.W.N. 179.

Son born during continuance of valid marriage—Father disowning son but failing to establish non-access to wife during subsistence of marriage when son could have been begotten—Held, in the circumstances, presumption of legitimacy was available: 1982 All.L.J. 1335; 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 215.

Suit for declaration that child born to wife is illegitimate. Parents of child are not prohibited from deposing whether or not they had at any time when child would have been begotten access to one another [1924 A.C. 687, held did not apply in India]: 1953 Nag. L.J. 614: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 374: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 204. The principle of English Common Law according to which neither a husband nor a wife is permitted to give evidence of non-access, after marriage to bastardise a child born in lawful wedlock does not apply to legitimacy proceeding in India: (1954) 1 M.L.J. 152: 1956 S.C.R. 424: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 176. But see infra. In a divorce case where the paternity of the infant is in question, neither husband nor wife is permitted to give evidence of non-intercourse after marriage to bastardise a child born in wedlock: (1937) 39 Punj.L.R. 262: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 176.

Where no definite date of marriage was proved but it was established that a child was born to the parties after the marriage, held, it could be inferred that the marriage took place about 280 days before the birth of the child: 1983 Hindu L.R. 578 (P.&H.).

Where the question of paternity is one of evidence only, the case is governed by S. 112 and not by the personal law of the parties: 26 I.C. 996: 16 Cr.L.J. 84. A legal presumption in favour of legitimacy will arise only if it is proved that there was a valid and lawful marriage between the parents of the person whose legitimacy is in question. But the burden of proving such a lawful marriage is on the person who claims to be legitimate, and if he does not establish that he cannot rely on the presumption so as to shift burden of proving the contrary on to those who allege illegitimacy: 1935 O.W.N. 25: A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 80. See also 1944 O.W.N. 83: I.L.R. 20 Luck. 108.

The rule that continuance of a valid marriage will prevent an inference being drawn to the effect that the children born of the woman during the continuance of the valid marriage were born to another man as a result of adulterous intercourse is only a rule of evidence and not a conclusive presumption. It is open in a particular case to show that despite the subsistence of a valid marriage the husband had no access to the woman at the concerned period and the children were born to the paramour: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 529: (1962) 75 Mad.L.W. 681: A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 210.

Nothing except evidence that the husband did not have sexual intercourse with his wife at the period of conception, can illegitimise a child born in wedlock. The mere use of contraceptives does not alter this proposition of law: (1953) 2 All E.R. 1013.

A wife, who gave birth to a child, was, at the material time for conception, committing adultery with certain person. The adultery was condoned by the husband and the parties continued to sleep together and to have marital intercourse. The husband, however, used a contraceptive sheath on each occasion of marital intercourse during the relevant period. The parties accepted the probability that the child was the child of the adulterer and when registering the birth the wife left the name of the father blank. Held, that there was no repelling of the legal presumption and the child, actually born in wedlock, must be taken to be legitimate: (1959) 3 W.L.R. 447.

Where the legitimacy of a person is challenged in a suit, a mere finding to the effect that the husband after the marriage remained outside for long periods, that on his return from one of these periods of absence he found cause to be dissatisfied with the conduct of his wife and denied his paternity of the child to her, is not sufficient to meet with the requirements of S. 112. In order to fulfil the requirements of S. 112, it is necessary to prove that during the period there was no occasion for the wife to meet her husband: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 266.

Merely because the husband was suffering from a serious illness, that is not a sufficient reason for holding that the presumption which arises under S. 112 cannot be attracted: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 129.

Parties living in same room—Presumption of access and cohabitation. Held that in view of the admitted evidence that the wife was living with the husband in the same room it should be presumed that the pregnancy was due to cohabitation with her husband: (1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 341: 1959 Cr.L.J. 834: 1959 Cal.L.J. 39: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 454.

A girl born during the continuance of her parents' marriage would not justify the presumption that the marriage did not continue merely because the mother was getting maintenance from the father under Court orders; it could not mean that they could not or did not cohabit thereafter and that the girl was not born to her mother from the loins of her deceased father; the mother's categorical statement without rebuttal by the defendants is sufficient: (1984) 86 Punj.L.R. 358: 1984 Cur.L.J. 131.

Where the marriage between the parties was never dissolved and a child was born within two months after the wife was driven out of her husband's house, held, it could be presumed that the child was born during their wedlock: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 421 (Madh. Pra.).

Adultery is generally proved by presumptive proof based on (i) circumstantial evidence, (ii) evidence of non-access and birth, (iii) contracting venereal disease and (iv) confessions and admissions; adultery is seldom susceptible of proof except by proof of circumstances which clearly establish it; thus, where by medical evidence it was proved that a daughter born to a wife during the subsistence of the marriage was not and could not be born of husband, adultery stood established: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 57: 1986 M.P.L.J. 105: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 543.

When a child is born during the continuance of a valid marriage there is conclusive presumption that the child is legitimate issue of married couple but if it is shown that the couple had no access to each other at a time when the child could have been begotten, the legitimacy of the child cannot be presumed. Where petitioner's mother did not come with her husband at the time of marriage but she was detained by her parents for gauna ceremony and before gauna ceremony the petitioner was born, held, as the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at the time when the petitioner could have been begotten, therefore, the petitioner could not be presumed to be legitimate son of his mother's husband. [A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 361; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 194; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 266; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 176 and A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2352, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 143, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1982 All. 335: 1982 All.W.C. 534.

The parties to marriage were in touch with each other, residing for a short period in reasonable proximity, the wife being in the house of a relative of the husband. There was nothing to suggest that she was unfaithful or that the parties were on terms of personal hostility. Held that if the child could have been begotten during this period his legitimacy was undeniable: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 49: 66 M.L.J. 288 (P.C.).

Where a daughter, born during pendency of maintenance proceedings filed by her mother against her father, filed application for maintenance but the father denied that she was his daughter, however, there was evidence that when mother left her husband's house, she was pregnant and there was no evidence that she had illicit relations with anyone and distance of the houses of the couple was only of ten minutes walk and in the earlier proceedings filed by the wife for maintenance, he had admitted that he was father of the girl, held, paternity of the girl stood proved: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1008 (Him. Pra.).

Where husband and wife were living separately for long in the same village, held, a conclusive presumption arises as to the legitimacy of a child born during the subsistence of a valid marriage unless it is established that at the time child was conceived, the husband had no access to his wife. [I.L.R. (1966) 2 Mad. 373, Affirm.]: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2352: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 49.

Where a child was born during the continuance of a valid marriage and even according to the petitioner they had spent at least one night together and, thus, he failed to establish non-access to the respondent after marriage, held, the child was born to the petitioner: (1993) 2 Ker.L.J. 1019 (D.B.).

Where children were born during certain years of cohabitation of husband and wife, held, they were legitimate children of that husband and wife: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 359 (Andh. Pra.).

Where parties to the marriage were married for about 15 years and the wife was throughout living at the husband's village house while husband was posted elsewhere and a child was born to her on 2-8-1980 which the husband pleaded was not her child but wife stated that she visited the husband on 28-12-1979 and stayed overnight and during that time they had sexual intercourse, held, the very fact that they stayed under the same roof was sufficient to prove access and child born was legitimate child. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 49; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 176, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 All. 129: 1983 All.W.C. 952: 1984 Hindu L.R. 199.

Where though petitioner-husband underwent a vasectomy operation but he failed to produce any reliable material to show that such operation was successful, held, despite the presumption in S. 112, it could not be said that the child born to his wife during wedlock was not born to him: A.I.R. 1982 Ker. 68: (1982) 1 D.M.C. 256 (D.B.).

Where respondent married the appellant in 1969 and had three children and underwent vasectomy operation on 8-1-1976 and thereafter both of them lived together and on 30-8-1978 the appellant wife gave birth to another child which the respondent alleged was begotten through another man but the respondent failed to prove that in or about November 1977 when fourth child was conceived he was unable to procreate, held, the fourth child was begotten through the respondent only: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 5: 1986 Ker.L.J. 744: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1068: (1987) 1 D.M.C. 28: (1987) 1 D.M.C. 140: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 133: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 342 (D.B.).

Where in the contested divorce petition under S. 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 on the ground of the wife having given birth to an illegitimate child conceived during the subsistence of marriage when the couple had no access to each other, the charge was denied and the wife preferred a counter-claim for a decree of restitution of conjugal rights, held, on the husband's failure to prove the ground, the burden whereof was very heavy on him, the wife would clearly be entitled to the counter-claimed decree: A.I.R. 1980 N.O.C. 136 (All.).

A woman married a second time claiming that her first marriage had been dissolved and begot a child while she was living with her second husband. It was, however, found that her first marriage had not been legally dissolved and therefore, it was subsisting in the eye of law. But there was evidence to show that her first husband had no access to her at the time when the child was begotten by her. Held, that in the circumstances, the child should be held to the progeny of the second husband notwithstanding the fact that the first marriage was subsisting in law. No doubt the presumption in law is that a child born during the continuance of a valid marriage is the legitimate child of the husband by that marriage but this presumption does not arise where there is evidence that the husband and wife had no access to each other at any time when the child could have been begotten. The evidence to establish non-access need not necessarily be positive or direct evidence. Non-access can be proved like any other physical fact by evidence either direct or circumstantial which is relevant to the issue. But as the presumption of legitimacy is highly favoured by law, it is necessary that proof of non-access must be clear and satisfactory: 1963 Ker.L.J. 1002: 1963 Ker.L.T. 1038.

Where A and B remained as husband and wife and united in lawful wedlock the children born during the period could be treated as children of A and not of C also (younger brother of A) and could not inherit the latter's self-acquired properties though C and B also were conducing themselves as husband and wife during the life-time of A and C had admitted the children as his children: I.L.R. (1952) Trav.-Co. 709: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 470.

Child born during continuance of valid marriage—Wife living with her parents during one and half years before birth of child—Distance between village of husband and parents of wife about two miles—Wife also residing occasionally at Dohgri of her father—Distance between Dohgri and husband's village about two furlongs—

Husband visiting village occasionally during the previous three years—Both husband and wife young—It is not unreasonable to assume that husband had opportunity of intercourse—Mere fact wife was residing at her parent's house does not lead to only conclusion that husband could not have had such opportunity—Presumption under S. 112 remains unrebutted: A.I.R. 1967 Him. Pra. 38.

In proceedings under S. 488, Cr. P. Code, an admission of paternity of an illegitimate child by the alleged putative father is irrelevant in view of the clear wording of S. 112, if the applicant mother fails to prove that she and her husband had no access at the time when the child could have been begotten: (1941) 2 M.L.J. 693: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 251; (1943) 56 Mad.L.W. 383: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 108; I.L.R. (1960) Ker. 167: 1959 Ker.L.T. 945: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 119.

Where appellant's mother failed to prove that she had no access with her husband at the time when the child for whom she claimed maintenance could have been begotten, held, the burden of proof was not upon the alleged putative father of the children but it was for the mother to show that they were born only to the alleged father through an exclusive relationship with him. [1975 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 240; 1941 Mad.W.N. (Cr.) 161, Rel. on]: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 92: (1990) 2 Crimes 78 (Mad.).

Where opposite party who was already married developed intimacy with the petitioner and out of her alleged intimacy with the petitioner two boys were born and subsequently she filed a suit against petitioner for maintenance of alleged illegitimate children but she failed to prove that her previous husband had no access to her when the alleged children were conceived, held, she was not entitled to maintenance for them for the simple reason that they could not be held to be illegitimate children of the petitioner when the husband of the opposite party had also access to her during the period those children were conceived by her. [A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 141; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2358, Rel. on]: 1980 Hindu L.R. 790 (Pat.); 1989 Cr.L.J. 1852: (1989) 1 Sim.L.C. 237: (1989) 2 Crimes 165; 1972 Ker.L.J. 12: 1972 Cr.L.J. 696.

Where the appellant husband failed to establish that he had no access to the respondent wife during the period she was stated to have lived away from him and he never specifically stated that the child born was not from his loins and a petition for dissolution of marriage was filed after eight years of birth of the child alleged to be illegitimate, held, the child was legitimate: (1985-1) 87 Punj.L.R. 692: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 535 (D.B.).

3. Begotten—Meaning of.—The word "begotten" used in S. 112 means "conceived", not "born"; because as a general rule, it is the birth and not conception after marriage which makes the child legitimate. [1978 Hindu L.R. 719 (Him. Pra.), Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1988 Del. 93: (1987) 1 D.M.C. 528: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 583: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 384: (1988) 93 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 1.

S. 112 proceeds upon adopting the period of birth as distinguished from conception, as the turning point of legitimacy: I.L.R. 10 All. 289 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 529 (D.B.).

Presumption under S. 112 applies quite irrespective of whether the mother was married or not at the time of conception: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 784.

4. Access and non-access.—Access and non-access connote existence and non-existence of opportunities for marital intercourse: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 215; (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 258: (1990) 2 D.M.C. 247: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 65.

The word "access" means no more than opportunity of intercourse: I.L.R. 12 Rang. 243: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 49; 66 M.L.J. 288 (P.C.). See also (1941) 54 Mad.L.W. 411: A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 129; (1941) 2 M.L.J. 693; 1942 Nag.L.J. 254: A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 96; I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 53: A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 376: (1944) 1 M.L.J. 285; (1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 341; 1979 W.L.N. 555: I.L.R. (1979) 29 Raj. 1224.

The words "access" and "non-access" are words of significance in matrimonial causes. The Courts are bound to adopt the timorous course of construing such words of art in its correct and not in some vague and extended meaning. The words access can be explained as an indicia of opportunity for marital intercourse. Like any other physical fact it could be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. Direct evidence can only be secured through the spouses concerned.

There is nothing in the Evidence Act to prevent the spouses giving evidence of non-access: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 490: (1969) 1 M.L.J. 366: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 235.

The term "access" as used in S. 112 has been consistently interpreted to include the existence of opportunities for marital intercourse between the husband and the wife at the time when the child could have been begotten according to the ordinary course of nature. A conclusive presumption of legitimacy attracted by S. 112 can be rebutted only by showing that the husband and the wife had no access to each other at the time when the child could have been begotten. What is required to be shown for rebutting the conclusive presumption which is a presumption of law is that the husband and the wife had no access to each other at any time when the child could be begotten: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1659: (1992) 2 Cal.H.N. 327: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 1103; (1983) 9 All.L.R. 720; 1983 All.L.J. 1290.

5. Onus to prove non-access.—The burden of showing that parties to a marriage had no access to each other at any time when child could have been begotten is on the person challenging legitimacy of the child: I.L.R. 12 Rang. 243: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 49: 66 M.L.J. 288 (P.C.).

In view of S. 112, there is a presumption regarding legitimacy of a child born during the continuance of a valid marriage, the burden for proving non-access is on the husband who so alleges: 1982 Hindu L.R. 304 (Raj.).

In a claim for maintenance under S. 488, Cr.P.Code by the wife for herself and the child, the husband contended that the child being illegitimate the wife could not claim anything as she was leading adulterous life. Held, that the presumption of legitimacy being highly favoured by the law it was necessary that proof of non-access must be clear and satisfactory. It was for the husband to prove that it was physically impossible for him to have co-habited with his wife during the period in which the child was conceived. A mere statement by the husband that a child born of his wife was not his child and must have been procreated by someone else, was not entitled to any weight nor did it amount to such proof, even assuming it to be true, as would displace the effect of the provisions of S. 112 of the Evidence Act: 1960 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 179.

As to burden and nature of proof to prove non-access, see I.L.R. 55 Mad. 243: A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 39: 61 M.L.J. 878; I.L.R. 55 Mad. 292: A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 44: 61 M.L.J. 874.

Where a minor born within five months of dissolution of marriage of his parents but conceived before marriage filed an application for maintenance against his father, held, the onus to prove that the respondent father had no access with the mother of the petitioner was on the respondent: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 25 (Bom.).

Child born in lawful wedlock—Delivery 305 days after last coitus between husband and wife—Child is of the husband—Onus to prove non-access—Onus lies heavily on person alleging illegitimacy—Method of proof—Non-access may be proved by legal evidence as admissible to prove any other physical fact—Evidence of non-access—Family custom that husband and wife will have no coitus unless particular ceremony is performed—Ceremony not performed, but husband and wife living under same roof for months together—Non-performance of ceremony is not proof of non-access: 1966 Jab.L.J. 24: 1966 M.P.L.J. 11: A.I.R. 1966 Madh. Pra. 252.

Where the spouses' respective places were nearby and the fact in issue was whether the child born to the wife was illegitimate, held, the decision does not depend on whether the parties had in fact met at the time when the child could have been begotten but whether the parties had no access to each other at any such time; it is for the husband to prove non-access; otherwise the presumption is that the child was their legitimate child: A.I.R. 1983 All. 435: 1983 Hindu L.R. 605; 1989 Hindu L.R. 157 (All.).

Where in the maintenance proceedings under S. 125 of the Code of Civil Procedure the child's parentage was proved by an extract from the birth certificate issued under the T.N. Birth and Death Registration Act, 1969 wherein the child was shown as having been born to its parents, held, the child is entitled to maintenance; the father may challenge the child's paternity in civil proceeding by a full-fledged trial to obtain a final and authoritative decision by proof of non-access under S. 112: (1988) 1 Hindu L.R. 519 (Mad.).

Where a wife gave birth to a child during pendency of proceedings for dissolution of marriage and a question arose as to the legitimacy of child, held, the onus was on the husband to establish absence of access: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 458: (1982) 2 D.M.C. 6: 1982 Rajdhani L.R. 622.

It is for the husband to plead non-access and to have a proper issue framed and then lead satisfactory evidence. In the absence of this whatever admission or statements the wife might have made in an unguarded moment without due deliberation cannot be flung against her only at the time of arguments: I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 701.

6. Evidence of non-access.—There is nothing in S. 112 to show that the husband or the wife is precluded from giving evidence to show that they had no access to each other at any time when the child could have been begotten. In proceedings under S. 488, by married woman, claiming maintenance for an illegitimate child from its putative father, evidence of the husband and the wife on the point can be admitted: (1945-46) 50 Cal.W.N. 916: A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 183. Competency of husband or wife to give evidence of non-access. See I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 53: (1944) 1 M.L.J. 285.

According to S. 112 it could be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time which could have led to the conception. This could be established by the statement of husbands and wives who are under S. 118 of that Act competent to testify to any relevant fact: (1947) 49 Punj.L.R. 321.

Non-access can be established not merely by positive or direct evidence, it can be proved undoubtedly like any other physical fact by evidence, either direct or circumstantial, which is relevant to the issue, though, as the presumption of legitimacy is highly favoured by law, it is necessary that proof of non-access must be clear and satisfactory: 1965 M.L.J. (Cr.) 215.

The presumption of legitimacy under S. 112 though strong is rebuttable. But the evidence in rebuttal must be strong and unequivocal, that at the time when the child could have been conceived, the husband could not have had access to his wife: 1962 Ker.L.J. 28: (1962) 1 Ker.L.R. 136: 1962 Ker.L.T. 138.

It is well settled that proof of non-access must be distinct, definite and clear; the Courts are loath to hold that a child born to spouses in a subsisting marriage is really illegitimate; that is why very strict proof of non-access is insisted upon; though a negative fact, the Courts insist upon its positive proof; access in S. 112 does not imply actual cohabitation; it means no more than "opportunity of intercourse". Merely because a husband and wife are living apart or husband is living with another woman or wife is living with her paramour does not imply non-access; even when a child is born to her, the husband would be conclusively presumed to be its father. That presumption stands rebutted where the paramour effectively kept out the husband from the wife at the relevant period or the husband remained out of the country throughout that period: A.I.R. 1972 Ker. 80.

The presumption of legitimacy of a child born in lawful wedlock can be rebutted only in the manner contemplated by S. 112; once access is present or non-access is not proved, the presumption becomes irrebuttable and cannot be displaced, the contention of non-access cannot be accepted on a mere balance of probability; the standard of proof therefor has to be the same as is required to establish the accused's guilt in a criminal case. Access or non-access connotes only the existence or non-existence of opportunity for marital intercourse, and the burden of proving it entirely rests upon the person disclaiming it; even the fact that the wife is living in adultery is insufficient to prove non-access. And the question of access or non-access must be considered with reference to the time when the child could have been begotten; the normal period of gestation may vary between either side of nine months, no such assumption can be made under S. 112; the matter has to be decided on the facts and circumstances of each case and in the light of the common course of events and medical possibilities: 1981 Cr.L.J. 156.

S. 112 merely requires proof of the satisfaction of the Court that the parties had no access to each other, not that there was no possibility of access. A finding that there was no access is a pure finding of fact: 150 I.C. 306: A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 124. As to when the presumption is rebutted, see A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 67.

In order to disprove legitimacy it must be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when the child could have been begotten. Where the evidence showed that the father was living in another place and nothing more was proved, held that the presumption under S. 112 applied and that there is no question of divorce under those circumstances: 1929 Mad.W.N. 696: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 194.

Per Ramaprasada Rao, J.—In a petition for judicial separation against the wife, on ground of her adultery and consequent birth to her of a child in appraising the evidence of non-access during relevant time, it is no doubt imperative for the Courts to foster and protect the marital tie as it is a matter concerning society at large and is of grave public importance. A fortiori it is so, when a matter arises whether the husband should be deemed to have access to wife at the crucial time such that the resultant child may, be legitimised instead of bastardised. Husband's evidence of non-access should be considered with caution with a lynx eye. As corroboration of such evidence is practically impossible and indeed not required the surrounding circumstances, an overall picture and the conduct of the parties do act as legal accessories to weigh such uncorroborated testimony. Even in cases where adultery or any other matrimonial offence is alleged, the offence complained of should be proved beyond reasonable doubt. Undoubtedly, a matrimonial proceeding is an ordinary civil proceeding. But as it involves the disruption of a marital tie, law imposes a stricter degree of scrutiny of the evidence, if uncorroborated. Such corroboration is demanded as a rule of precaution and prudence so that a well instructed mind may be able, after bringing to bear its own observations and experiences of life to judge from the pros and cons of each particular case, whether the sole ipso dixit renders possible the theory set out. In the ultimate analysis, the evidence of the husband and other evidence and circumstances ought to be clinching and cogent to exclude the possibility of innocence of the person against whom the matrimonial offence is alleged: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 490: (1969) 1 M.L.J. 366: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 235.

The burden under S. 112 is a heavy burden and, since any pronouncement on legitimacy is a serious pronouncement having grave consequences, evidence of non-access should be clear and convincing. It is not enough for the husband to merely assert that he did not have access to his wife but it must be proved that the circumstances were such that there was no opportunity for access of sexual intercourse at any time when the child could have been begotten. In the absence of such evidence, the presumption is that the child was legitimate. The application for restitution filed by the wife was disposed of on the report made by the wife that the matter had been settled between the parties. During pendency of suit for maintenance filed by the wife subsequently a child was born. The husband merely denied that the child was born to him while the wife asserted that he was the father of the child. No evidence was produced by the husband as to what were the relations between the spouses at the most crucial point of time. Held, that the wife had not forfeited her right to maintenance on the ground that she was unchaste. There was a presumption that the child so born was a legitimate child and that presumption could be displaced only on production of proof that at the time the child could have been begotten there were no opportunities for access. The bald statement by the husband that the child was not his and that he had no access to her was not sufficient. It could be seen, from the manner in which the proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights terminated, that the mere fact that the two parties were arrayed on opposite sides to the maintenance proceeding, did not constitute an impediment to their coming together as asserted by the wife in those proceedings: (1968) 2 Mys.L.J. 39: 15 Law Rep. 204: A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 17.

It cannot be said that if a husband proves "non-access" in the sense that he never had intercourse with his wife, he should prove further, that he had no opportunity of having intercourse with her. Though a husband might have had an opportunity of intercourse with his wife, if he proves to the satisfaction of the Court that notwithstanding such opportunity he had no actual cohabitation with his wife, he establishes "non-access" within the meaning of S. 112. The rule that the evidence of the husband is not admissible in bastardy proceedings does not apply to India and hence the evidence of the husband cannot be ruled out: A.I.R. 1949 Mad. 881: (1949) 1 M.L.J. 426.

The presumption of law under S. 112 cannot be lightly repelled. The evidence of paramour must be strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive. It must be to the utmost satisfaction of the Court and that at the time of conception, there was no access by the husband to the wife in sexual sense. It can only be shown in rebuttal by the husband that he had severed of physical relations with the wife. The burden of proving non-access lies heavily upon him who disputes the paternity of child. Thus, where the husband gave only oral testimony that the wife never resided with him and they had no access, held, non-access had to be proved by a strong evidence and not by oral testimony of the husband: 1992 Mah.L.J. 237; 1986 Mah.L.J. 347.

Evidence of non-access—Living apart in different houses is insufficient to establish non-access: 1966 Jab.L.J. 24: 1966 M.P.L.J. 11: A.I.R. 1966 Madh. Pra. 252.

Proof per se that the woman was living with the paramour is no evidence of non-access by the husband. The fact that the husband has been living with another woman for a number of years, does not amount to clear proof of non-access. The mere fact that the husband and wife are living separately in two different houses is insufficient to prove non-access. The question whether the husband and wife had access to each other is one of the fact and the party interested in denying the legitimacy of the child, must set up a plea of non-access and prove the same: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 119.

Adultery of wife—No kind of access between couple since the wife began to live with parents from 17th November, 1957—Child born to wife 402 days after severance of ties and separation—Inference is that the child was born of adulterous intercourse of wife: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 235: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 490: (1969) 1 M.L.J. 366.

Where the husband sought to establish adultery by the birth of child on the ground that he had no intercourse with the wife because she would always pretend pains in her private parts, held, it did not amount to non-access; the presumption of legitimacy of the child not rebutted: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 681 (Bom.). See also 1979 W.L.N. 555: I.L.R. (1979) 29 Raj. 1224.

Where the parents married in 1897 but the wife deserted the husband three months thereafter and lived with a paramour near her husband's village and the evidence was that all through she had been living with her paramour, and there had been no kind of access between the husband and the wife, it was held that the presumption as to the legitimacy of a son born in 1901 was in the circumstances, rebutted: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 318: 66 M.L.J. 283.

Adultery—Proof—Non-access—Evidence: See I.L.R. (1957) Punj. 181.

7. Death of husband or dissolution of marriage.—The provision in S. 112 does not necessarily mean that if the child is born beyond a period of 280 days, it must be presumed that the child is illegitimate. Undoubtedly, if the plaintiff comes to Court, the initial burden is on him. But then one cannot overlook the rule laid down by S. 114, Evidence Act, and having regard to the common course of natural events and human conduct. If the child is born within a reasonably possible period of the normal period of gestation, then the Court should raise a presumption of legitimacy and then the burden would shift. The question of legitimacy is of grave importance, a matter of social status and affects the whole future of a person. The onus in such a case is founded on the interest of the child and the interest of the State in matters of legitimacy: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 752: 1963 Mah.L.J. 23: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 77: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 165.

Child born nine months after death of father presumed to be legitimate: 123 I.C. 550: A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 139 (2): 58 M.L.J. 708 (P.C.).

Where legal dissolution of the marriage has not taken place, child born must be taken to have been born during continuance of valid marriage: A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 194.

Child born within 18 days after dissolution of marriage. Presumption of legitimacy can be displaced only by proof of non-access between husband and wife: 1959 Ker.L.T. 71: I.L.R. (1959) Ker. 157: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 366.

Where a female child was born to the plaintiff within seven months of the death of her husband and there was no evidence on record to show that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at the time when she could have been begotten, held, the presumption under S. 112 was that she was the legitimate child of the deceased: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 125: (1989) 1 Rev.L.R. 145.

Where the second child was born within 280 days of the divorce between the parties, held, the presumption would be in favour of legitimacy of that child. It would be for the husband to rebut that presumption by bringing material on record destroying such presumption: 1980 Hindu L.R. 305 (Guj.).

While considering the question of legitimacy of a posthumous child born beyond the period of 280 days, the Court cannot disregard cases where the Courts refused to declare legitimacy of the child where the period that elapsed between the last coitus and the birth of the child was more than the normal period. They clearly show that something more than mere delay in delivery is required to negative legitimacy. Held, on facts, that unless there was anything either in the medical or other evidence led before the Court, the mere fact that 306 days had elapsed after the death of the father would not be sufficient to hold that the posthumous son was an illegitimate son and that the evidence was vague and wholly insufficient to negative his legitimacy: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 752: 1963 Mah.L.J. 23: I.L.R. (1961) Bom. 77: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 165.

Presumption as to the legitimacy under S. 112, does not necessarily mean that if a child was born beyond the period of 280 days it can be presumed that the child was illegitimate and if in the facts and circumstances of a good case and considering the medical evidence, if any, led by the parties it could be held that the child was born within a reasonable period of the normal period of gestation, then the Court should raise a presumption of legitimacy. Thus, where the alleged illicit relations between appellant's wife and another person developed prior to 19-3-1962 and a child was born on 27-2-1963 though the husband and wife were living under one roof upto 18-4-1962, held, the period of gestation of 313 days could not be said to be unreasonable nor even the period of 343 days counting it from 19-3-1962 when admittedly the appellant-husband had sexual intercourse with the wife and, thus, a presumption arose that the child was legitimate son of the parties. [A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 165 and (1947) 2 All E.R. 95 and (1823) 37 E.R. 1049, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Guj. 33.

A son was born to a Mahomedan wife 419 days after her husband's death. Held, that the period of gestation was so extraordinarily unusual as to be suspiciously improbable and rebutted all assertions of mother's chastity: 120 I.C. 495: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 97.

The fact that in determining the legitimacy of a posthumous child born beyond the period of 280 days, the Court applied the principles enunciated in divorce cases and that these cases occurred during lawful wedlock, would not in principle make any difference. As the question of adultery and legitimacy are closely interlocked, one completely dependent upon the other, the quantum of proof must be the same in each case and the evidence must show that the child is not a legitimate child beyond any reasonable doubt: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 752: 1963 Mah.L.J. 23: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 77: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 165.

8. Cohabitation, whether raises presumption of marriage:—(See also S. 114, Note 101, infra). Where a couple lived for considerable time as husband and wife till her death and the husband recognised her as a legally wedded second wife and her son as his own, held, a long and weighty catena of authorities raise a strong presumption in favour of marriage and against concubinage: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 27 (Cal.) (D.B.); A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 135; A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 185.

Where a couple lived as man and wife for half a century, held, a strong presumption arises in favour of wedlock; though it is a rebuttable presumption, a heavy burden lies upon the party which seeks to deprive the relationship of legal origin; law leans in favour of legitimacy and frowns upon bastardy; the objection that no evidence of the priest having conducted the wedding ceremonies is adduced deserves no consideration; the High Court's finding affirmed: (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 168 (S.C.).

A long uninterrupted cohabitation for over 30 years with children born and acknowledged as such throughout and the husband having himself managed the divorce of the wife from her previous husband, held, the presumption of the factum and validity of the marriage is clearly therefor justified; the term marriage inherently implies a valid marriage; a marriage which is not valid is no marriage at all: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 887: 1981 Hindu L.R. 211 (D.B.).

If a man and a woman are proved to have been having cohabitation over a long period of time, that cohabitation would produce a presumption that they were married spouses. But, if the woman with whom there was such cohabitation is proved to be a public woman, that presumption would be unavailable: (1966) 2 Mys.L.J. 60: 7 Law Rep. 97: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 155; I.L.R. 32 All. 345 (P.C.).

9. Period of gestation.—The premature birth of a child in seven months is not at all uncommon; in fact the child's death immediately or soon after makes it very probable that it was a premature arrival: 1953 Cr.L.J. 1214: A.I.R. 1953 Vindh. Pra. 28.

A child admittedly born in mid-January could have been conceived in previous June; computation is made from the date of commencement of the pre-intercourse menstrual cycle if known; otherwise, a period of 14 days is added to the date of conception or the date of intercourse, whichever is known. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 364, Foll.]: 1984 Hindu L.R. 157 (All.).

Where annulment of marriage was sought by the husband on the ground that the wife was pregnant by another person at the time of marriage and the wife delivered a full term mature boy and the Lady Doctor deposing as expert witness opined that conception had occurred a little less than two months prior to the marriage, held, though the Lady Doctor had not specialised in gynaecology, yet, her knowledge of midwifery as obstetrician having been proved to be of high order, her testimony could not be rejected by the High Court. [1968 Cur.L.J. 365 (P.&H.), Reversed]: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 879.

Where a child was born to the respondent wife within 162 days after the first coitus between the petitioner and respondent took place, held, the child was illegitimate. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1974 Mys. 61.

Where birth of the child took place only 6 months and 4 days after the marriage and the child was not premature and further there was no access between the parties prior to their marriage, held, presumption of legitimacy contemplated by S. 112 stood rebutted and there was left no manner of doubt that child born to the wife was not of the husband: A.I.R. 1988 Del. 93: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 384: (1987) 1 D.M.C. 528: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 583: (1988) 93 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 1.

Normal child born after normal delivery of 171 days after first coitus between wife and husband—Normally it should be held that child was not of the husband—Conflicting evidence of doctors on the point—Appreciation of. Per majority—The usual period of gestation from the date of the first coitus is between 265 and 270 days and delivery is expected in about 280 days from the first day of the menstruation period prior to a woman conceiving a child. Where the child was born after 171 days of the first coitus between the husband and wife, and the child and the delivery was normal, normally the Court should hold that the child was not the child of the husband, unless there is evidence which would justify the Court in holding otherwise. Held, on evidence (Per majority, Mudholkar, J. Contra) that the conception had taken place before the first coitus between the husband and the wife and that the wife was pregnant by someone other than the husband at the time of the marriage. The mere fact that the mother's character in general is not challenged does not suffice to rebut the conclusion arrived at from the various circumstances. S. 114, provides that the Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business in their relation of facts of the particular case. The conclusion about the child born to the wife being not the child of the husband fits in with the presumption to be drawn in accordance with the provisions of S. 114. People in general consider that the child born, being of a gestation period of 185 days, cannot be a fairly mature baby and cannot survive like a normal child. Medical opinion, as it exists today and as is disclosed by text books on Obstetrics and Gynaecology, however, refer to some rare exceptions of live-births even with a gestation period of a few days less than 180 days. But in the present case it was not possible to accept the wife's case of the conception having taken place from and after the first coitus with the husband for several reasons. S. 112 of the Evidence Act provides that the fact that any person was born during the continuance of a valid marriage between his mother and any man shall be conclusive proof that he is the legitimate son of that man, unless it can be shown that the parties to the marriage had no access to each other at any time when he could have been begotten. The fact that a child was born during the continuance of the valid marriage between the parties could not be taken to be conclusive proof of its being a legitimate child of the husband, as the various circumstances established that it must have been begotten sometime earlier than the marriage (which was the day of first coitus) and it had been found that the husband had no access to the wife at the relevant time. In the case of evidence of doctors, the Court should not leave the questions undecided merely because the two doctors differ. Where they differ, the Court relied on the evidence of the one who had superior qualifications and experience in the particular branch of medical science: (1964) 7 S.C.R. 267: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364.

Where a child was born to the couple 175 days after they had their first intercourse on marriage, held, the husband's burden to prove that it was not his child stood discharged; it is then for the wife to show that the husband had had pre-marital intercourse with her; on facts, the wife's plea not established; the child, even if born during the subsistence of marriage, is not legitimate: 1982 Hindu L.R. 499 (Madh. Pra.).

Where a daughter was born to a couple, governed by the Portuguese law, after 180 days from the solemnisation of their marriage, and its subsistence, held, the presumption is that she was a legitimate child; the presumption of legitimacy was legislatively established for protecting and safeguarding the family, a basic unit for any civilised society; only in very limited cases can such presumption be rebutted; the burden of rebutting it lay on the father denying his paternity; on facts, not discharged: A.I.R. 1986 Bom. 89: 1985 Mah.L.J. 788: I.L.R. (1985) Bom. 2447: 1986 Mah.L.R. 142 (D.B.).

Where the child was born on 240th day from the date of the marriage and the husband had opportunities to meet the wife at her parents place, held, the child born was the legitimate child of the parties: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 178: (1972) 2 Mys.L.J. 256 (D.B.).

Where the husband repudiated the daughter born 259 days after the marriage as not his, held, as per medical jurisprudence, a child can be born seven months after pregnancy and assuming that the wife had menstruated 15 days before the marriage, the daughter born during subsistence of marriage was legitimate; trial Court's finding to the contrary reversed: 1982 Hindu L.R. 603 (P.&H.).

Giving birth to a viable child after 28 weeks' duration of pregnancy is not biologically an improbable or impossible event. Thus, where the husband and wife were close relations and not strangers before marriage, held, on the sole ground that the child had been born in about 7 months time after the marriage, it could not be concluded that the child should have been conceived even before the husband had consumated the marriage: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1049: 1987 Cr.L.J. 849: (1987) 1 S.C.C. 624: (1987) 2 D.M.C. 225: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 362.

Period of gestation—Period may be as long as 308 days. [I.L.R. 24 All. 445, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 120.

A child born 11 months after marital intercourse between its parents had ceased, is illegitimate: 1913 Mad.W.N. 983: I.L.R. 38 Mad. 466: 25 M.L.J. 524 (F.B.). See also 27 M.L.J. 580: 26 I.C. 61.

Where a child was born to a married woman after over 8 months from the date of marriage and the husband alleged that the child was not his as he was incapacited from having sexual intercourse for one month from date of marriage due to some operation he had to undergo. Held, that even assuming that the husband was so incapacitated the time available, over seven months, was sufficient to raise the presumption that he was the father of the child: I.L.R. (1953) Trav.-Co. 726: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 434.

10. Acknowledgment of paternity.—Where there is an acknowledgment by parents as son by repute and habit for a long time, the burden is on the other side to disprove the presumption of paternity by other reliable evidence: 102 I.C. 713: A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 733; (1932) 34 Punj.L.R. 914: A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 520.

Under the Mohamedan law acknowledgment of a son as a legitimate son raises a presumption of marriage between the woman and the father of the child born: A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 159; A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 11, unless the other side can prove that the boy whose paternity was acknowledged was of illegitimate descent: A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 27.

Under Mohammedan law when the paternity of a child cannot be proved by establishing the marriage between its parents at the time of its conception or birth, the law recognises "acknowledgment" as a method whereby such marriage and legitimate descent can be established for the purpose of inheritance. The doctrine of acknowledgment, however, is not applicable where the lawful union between the parents of the child is not possible as in the case of incestuous intercourse or an adulterous connection. The doctrine is also not applicable where the marriage necessary to render a child legitimate is disproved. Thus, where at the time of the birth of the defendants there was no valid marriage between the plaintiff's father and defendants mother and the defendants were born during pre-marital stage and further there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff's father had, at any time, acknowledged the mother of defendants as his wife, held, the defendants could not be held to be legitimate sons of the plaintiff's father by relying on the doctrine of "acknowledgment". A child born of "Zina" could not be made legitimate by acknowledgment. [A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 27, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Mad. 209: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 97: (1981) 1 M.L.J. 402: 1981 Hindu L.R. 460. See also A.I.R. 1918 Nag. 32. See however A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 97; 1937 Mad.W.N. 957.

11. Blood-group test.—It may possibly be ascertained by blood-group tests that a particular person is not the biological father of the child; such tests by themselves cannot indicate with certainty that a particular person is the biological father. However, where one of the two men must be the child's biological father, and one of them is excluded by the blood as not being such father, held, the other man could be declared as the child's biological father: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1659: (1992) 2 Cal.H.N. 327: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 1103.

S. 112 is clear enough that once the husband is shown to have had access to the wife at any time when the conception could have taken place, the scope of adducing rebuttal evidence becomes non-available. The contending party cannot be permitted to say that he will rebut the conclusive presumption of law regarding paternity by proving directly by blood test that the husband is not the biological father of the child which will virtually be an abrogation of the existing provision of S. 112. In case of determination of paternity of a child born or conceived during wedlock, neither the language of S. 112 nor the interpretation it has consistently received throughout, nor even the consideration of welfare of the children in disputed cases of paternity in general, demands or permits blood test as exploratory or investigative experiment for determining paternity. However, the question whether blood test should be resorted to for determining the paternity of a child who was not born or conceived during wedlock, does not fall within the scope of S. 112 and different considerations may arise in such cases: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1659: (1992) 2 Cal.H.N. 327: (1991-92) 96 Cal.W.N. 1103.

Blood test can supply helpful evidence to exclude a particular parentage set up in the case. But the party asserting the claim to have a child and the rival set of parents put to blood test must establish his right to do so. It would be unjust to direct a test for a collateral reason to assist a litigant in his or her claim. The child cannot be allowed to suffer. If the Court believe that the application for blood test is designed for ulterior motive, it would not be justified to accede to such a prayer: A.I.R. 1986 All. 259.

Where the husband sought blood test of the child in a maintenance case to disprove the child's paternity, held, the application merited rejection; the rules about permissibility of blood tests to prove or disprove paternity are: (1) that Courts in India cannot order blood test as a matter of course; (2) applications made for blood test in the nature of having a roving inquiry cannot be entertained; (3) the husband must make out a strong prima facie case of non-access to dispel the presumption under S. 112; (4) the Court must carefully examine the possible consequence of ordering the blood test like branding the child as a bastard and the mother as unchaste; and (5) no one can be compelled to give sample of his or her blood for the test: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2295: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3233: (1993) 2 D.M.C. 162: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 253: (1993) 3 S.C.C. 418: (1993) 2 An.L.T. (Cr.) 3561; 1995 Cr.L.J. 81 (Mad.).

Though blood test is one of the tests for establishing paternity and, therefore, of adultery, yet no one can be compelled to give a sample of blood for its analysis; and no adverse inference can be drawn against that person for such refusal: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 57: 1986 M.P.L.J. 105: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 543.

Before a blood test of a person is ordered his consent is required because such test is a constraint on his personal liberty; whether even a Legislature can compel a blood test is doubtful as also whether the guardian ad litem can give consent for such test. The maximum that can be done where a party refuses to have a blood test is to draw an adverse inference which has only a very little relevance and will not advance the husband's case for he has to prove that he had no opportunity to have any sexual intercourse with the wife at a time when the children could have been begotten, the only proof permitted under S. 112 to dislodge the conclusive presumption enjoined by the section. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 176; A.I.R. 1972 Ker. 80; I.L.R. (1837) 5 Cal. and Fin. 163; A.I.R. 1959 Mad. 396; A.I.R. 1951 Mad. 910, Rel. on]: 1975 Ker.L.T. 533.

In the husband's divorce case on the ground of adultery, he pleaded that the children were not begotten from him and he asked for the blood-group test of his wife and children for determining paternity, held, though direction for test of the wife could be given but non-compliance by her would not be material as the onus lies on him to prove non-access during the relevant period; direction for blood-group test of children declined as it would cause them irreparable harm: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 71.

Where the wife did not agree to give her own and her daughter's blood for blood test to ascertain the paternity of the child born 259 days after marriage, held, since it is conceded by the husband's Counsel that such a test is of hardly any assistance in deciding about paternity, no adverse inference could be raised against the wife: 1982 Hindu L.R. 603 (P.&H.).

Blood test for establishing paternity provides circumstantial evidence of adultery: [Modes and implication of test discussed elaborately]: A.I.R. 1986 Madh. Pra. 57: 1986 M.P.L.J. 105: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 543.

12. Void and voidable marriages.—S. 16 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 which says that "Notwithstanding that a marriage is null and void under S. 11, any child of such marriage shall be legitimate," applies only if there was solemnization of marriage at any time. Thus, where there was no proof of solemnization of marriage, S. 16 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 could not be invoked and children born out of such union could not be treated as legitimate children: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 192: 1981 Hindu L.R. 362.

Marriage induced by fraud: 1960 Cr.L.J. 351: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 101.

13. Miscellaneous.—A youth of 15 years is not incapable of procreation and hence from mere age alone no conclusive inference that he could not possibly have been the father of the child, can be made. The question ultimately depends on the drawing of reasonable inference from the evidence and from the proved facts in this case: 29 Cut.L.T. 584: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 415.

Where marriage between a man and a woman was not established and a copy of birth certificate was produced to prove the paternity of child, the name of the child as well as the name of father were not disclosed in the entry, and no one was examined who had informed the authorities with respect to birth of the child, held, it could not be inferred that the man was the alleged father of the child: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 113 (P.&H.).

Legitimacy—Woman leaving husband ten days after marriage and living as concubine of appellant—Child born seven months after the woman leaving her husband—No evidence that birth of child was premature—No evidence that woman was living as concubine of appellant even before her marriage—Appellant cannot be presumed to be the father of the child: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 25: (1967) 1 M.L.J. 102.

Where in a suit for partition, the widow's right to inheritance was challenged on the ground that she had thrown the "thali" which was picked by her husband which amongst Kamma Redis, to which the couple belonged, amounted to customary divorce; the custom so pleaded being derogatory to the general Hindu law, the burden lay on the defendants to prove that it was ancient, certain and reasonable and fulfilled the requirements of a valid custom; found on facts, both the pleadings and the proof was sketchy and the custom was not proved; thus, divorce having not been proved, the widow was entitled to inherit from her husband as his lawful wife: A.I.R. 1977 Karn. 115: (1977) 1 Karn.L.J. 206 (D.B.).

In Khati community Natra form of marriage is possible even where the former husband of the woman is alive. The dissolution takes place in different shapes. Either the former husband is paid some Zagda money or he does not care to ask for any. Where there is a possibility of a valid Natra form of marriage and the man and woman live together as husband and wife even during the lifetime of her former husband who did not take any step to assert his rights as husband and the community regarded their children as that man's children, held, that every presumption would be made in favour of the validity of the marriage and the dissolution of the previous marriage and the Natra marriage with the second husband. This presumption is rebuttable, but rebutting evidence must be clear and specific and ought to indicate that no valid marriage could have taken place: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 245: 1961

113. Proof of cession of territory.—A notification in the [1][Official Gazette] that any portion of British territory has [2][before the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935 (26 Geo. 5, ch. 2)] been ceded to any Native State, Prince or Ruler, shall be conclusive proof that a valid cession of such territory took place at the date mentioned in such notification.

Suit for partition by mother on behalf of minor son—Evidence to show that the mother had deserted the defendant 24-30 years back and the minor was born subsequently—Defendant in cross-examination admitting that the plaintiff was his wife—Non-framing of fresh issue about non-access does not result in wrong decision of the case: (1968) 2 Mys.L.J. 42: 15 Law Rep. 197: A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 8.

Where the proof of the plaintiff's paternity was supported by a marriage invitation card of his mother with, and his birth entry in the birth register showing him to be the son of, the deceased who was then married to another woman and had begotten children, held, no presumption of the second marriage and the plaintiff's paternity could be raised on such scant evidence: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 175: (1986) 1 M.L.J. 225: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 190 (D.B.).

Where a question arose as to whether plaintiffs were legitimate children of 'V' and 'K' and it was found that in the funeral ceremony invitation card relating to 'K' which was issued by 'V' he had described her as his wife and that the voters' list showed 'V', 'K' and plaintiffs as voters living in family house and the house-tax receipts in name of one of plaintiffs were formerly in name of 'V', held, the fact that no elderly witness was examined or there was total denial of cohabitation by 'V' would not rebut the presumption of marriage between 'K' and 'V'. Thus, plaintiffs were legitimate children of 'K' and 'V'. [1989-2) 104 Mad.L.W. 197, Disting.; (1968) 11 M.L.J. 411; A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 756; A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 305, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1995 Mad. 188 (D.B.).

Where the evidence showed that the appellant was born during the continuance of a valid marriage, but 2 years after the husband and wife had separated they had no access after separation, held, that the presumption of legitimacy raised in favour of the appellant under S. 112 stood rebutted: A.I.R. 1965 Him. Where a rustic Muslim wife unable to remember either the date of her marriage or of the birth of her daugher but deposed that the daughter was born one year after the marriage; some discrepancies in time in the depositions cannot whittle down the effect of the positive plea of the daughter having been born one year after the marriage in proceedings under S. 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 for the child's maintenance: 1984 Hindu L.R. 618 (Ker.).

Where the wife gave birth to a child at her mother's home after, as per her husband, 14 months, and as per the wife, 10 months 10 days, after she had left for good the matrimonial home and none of them, admittedly, had access to each other during the interregnum, held, the wife's adultery stood established; direct evidence of adultery being rare, it is to be inferred from attending circumstances; inclination of the spouse and the opportunities available proved by clear, cogent and convincing evidence admitting of no other inference; the presumption of legitimacy under S. 112 stood rebutted: 1984 Hindu L.R. 609 (Madh. Pra.).

Though there is a strong presumption in favour of marriage and the defendant's burden to disprove it is heavy but the necessity to discharge that burden arises only if the plaintiffs discharge their burden by establishing the facts upon which the legal presumption in favour of marriage could be properly raised; on facts, held, the plaintiffs' evidence was not sufficient to raise the presumption; insufficiency of the defendant's evidence was of no consequence: (1986) 1 M.L.J. 225: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 190: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 175 (D.B.).

[1][113-A. Presumption as to abetment of suicide by a married woman.—When the question is whether the commission of suicide by a woman had been abetted by her husband or any relative of her husband and it is shown that she had committed suicide within a period of seven years from the date of her marriage and that her husband or such relative of her husband had subjected her to cruelty, the Court may presume, having regard to all the other circumstances of the case, that such suicide had been abetted by her husband or by such relative of her husband.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, "cruelty" shall have the same meaning as in section 498-A of the Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).]

1. Constitutional validity.—Though the prosecution has to prove its case to the hilt and the burden is always on it, held, S. 113-A is not discriminatory; commission or abetment of suicide by a married woman occurs within her marital home, an intractable terrain to others but accessible to the class of offenders, namely, the husband and his relations; they have the special knowledge of what had actually transpired; the Legislature, therefore, drew presumptive evidence in the prosecution's favour; but it does not absolve the prosecution from adducing "proof beyond reasonable doubt;" the accused may displace the presumptive evidence by some evidence; the prosecution has still to establish its case beyond reasonable doubt; S. 113-A is neither discriminatory nor hit by Art. 14; the point is not res integra. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 877, Foll.]: (1994) 3 Karn.L.J. 335: (1994) 1 D.M.C. 356: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 672 (F.B.); (1987) 3 Crimes 471 (Andh. Pra.).

By no stretch of imagination can it be said that S. 113-A has introduced an invidious classification as between the treatment of a married woman by her husband and his relations within seven years of marriage and after seven years of marriage; married women after lapse of seven years become a class apart; with the passage of time and birth of children, chances of her being treated with cruelty become remote. The classification is, thus, reasonable and has nexus with the object of the statute, namely, the eradication of the evil of dowry and ensuring a life of dignity for married women in their matrimonial homes: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3472 (P.&H.) (F.B.).

There being inbuilt safeguards in S. 113-A as the Court is required to have "regard to all the other circumstances of the case" before it can raise the presumption against the husband and his relations for having abetted the wife to commit suicide on proof of the wife having been subjected to cruelty (which has the same meaning as in S. 498-A of the Indian Penal Code), held, S. 113-A is not hit by Art. 21 or Art. 20(3) of the Constitution; the acts of cruelty are committed within the four walls of the matrimonial home which negatives the likelihood of the other evidence being available; there is nothing arbitrary or negation of fair procedure or equality in S. 113-A: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3472 (P.&H.) (F.B.).

Though the Supreme Court has struck out the offence of attempting suicide made punishable under S. 306 of the Indian Penal Code as violative of Art. 21 of the Constitution and for not being irreligious, held, it cannot be contended that the offence of abetting to commit suicide is also rendered a non-offence and ultra vires of the Constitution; a volitional attempt to commit suicide is altogether on different footing where the commission of suicide results from a well-planned cruelty compelling the wife to commit suicide: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3472 (P.&H.) (F.B.).

2. Scope and applicability.—The fiction under S. 113-A has been created looking to very peculiar, particular and special circumstances in which a wife is placed in her husband's house in Indian society; said fiction will not obviously apply to other cases of abetment to commit suicide where there is no relationship of husband and wife: 1995 Cr.L.J. 893 (Madh. Pra.).

The legislative intent is clear to curb the menace of dowry deaths, etc., with a firm hand. It must be remembered that since such crimes are generally committed in the privacy of residential homes and in secrecy, independent and direct evidence is not easy to get. This is why the Legislature has by introducing Ss. 113-A and 113-B in the Evidence Act tried to strengthen the prosecution hands by permitting a presumption to be raised if certain foundational facts are established and the unfortunate event has taken place within seven years of marriage. This period of seven years is considered to be the turbulent one after which the Legislature assumes that the couple would have settled down in life: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1532: (1991) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 489. Courts are expected to construe these provisions in a way that the object behind the provisions is fulfilled: (1994) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 541 (Del.) (D.B.).

S. 113-A deals with the presumption about abetment of suicide by a married woman; if she commits suicide within seven years of her marriage and it is shown that her husband or his relatives had subjected her to cruelty, held, the Court may, considering all other circumstances, presume that her suicide was abetted by her husband or his relatives; thus, in case of unnatural death of a woman in the husband's and his near relations' house to which others had no access, those inmates have to explain the circumstances of her death; if the explanation is not convincing, cogent and reliable, it would, alongwith other circumstances, be a factor against the husband and his near relations; S. 113-A, though technically inapplicable, applied to a case where second Muslim wife found strangled within four years of marriage and the explanation of dacoity found baseless: (1992-2) 40 B.L.J.R. 908 (D.B.); (1992) 2 Crimes 746 (P.&H.); (1992) 2 Crimes 462 (Pat.); (1987) 2 Crimes 325: 1987 Cr.L.J. 1163 (Cal.).

For raising a presumption under S. 113-A, it must first be shown that the woman had committed suicide: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2455: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 196: (1994) 1 D.M.C. 267 (Bom.) (D.B.); (1993) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 28 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

The words "intentionally aids" used in Cl. thirdly of S. 107 of the Indian Penal Code are wide enough to cover a married woman being treated with cruelty; S. 113-A further clarifies the import of the definition of abetment of suicide by a married woman as a response to the current social challenges; the two statutory provisions, thus, do not contradict, but rather supplement, each other: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3472 (P.&H.) (F.B.).

Under the newly inserted S. 113-A of the Evidence Act, presumption as to commission of an offence under S. 306 (abetment of suicide) would be available only on the proof that the deceased wife was subjected to cruelty by the accused within the meaning of the newly inserted S. 498-A of the Indian Penal Code: (1991) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 370: (1992) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 335.

It is only on the proof of the offence under S. 498-A of the Indian Penal Code having been committed that the trial Court has to draw the presumption of the accused's guilt for abetting the offence after taking into consideration all other circumstances; if the offence under S. 498-A of the Code is not proved, the latter exercise would be futile: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 52 (Andh. Pra.).

Scope of S. 498-A, I.P.Code, cannot be enlarged by reference to S. 113-A of the Evidence Act: (1986) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 194 (P.&H.).

The Explanation added to S. 113-A, provides the meaning of "cruelty" as in S. 498-A, I.P.Code. It appears to be clearly the intention of the Legislature to draw past instances of cruelty within a period of seven years from the date of the marriage of a woman who commits suicide as result of cruelty. Thus, when a period of seven years from the date of marriage is to be considered to raise a legal presumption, it cannot be done without drawing the past instances from the commencement date of the aforesaid provisions.

S. 113-A casts onerous duty on the Court to draw a presumption. The presumption that has been drawn must appeal to the judicial conscience. Suspicion, however strong, cannot take the place of proof. If there is no acceptable evidence, the Court also cannot come to a conclusion to convict the accused merely on the ground that it is morally satisfied about the truth of the case. By taking into consideration the spirit and object and the changed circumstances necessitated for introducing S. 113-A, the Court should shed its conservative approach in appreciating cases relating to suicidal deaths of married women or dowry deaths: (1988) 2 An.L.T. 946: (1989) 1 A.P.L.J. 2.

The presumption available to be raised under S. 113-A is rebuttable. The Parliament in its wisdom not only used the expression "may presume", but has also supplemented the same by using the further expression "having regard to all the other circumstances of the case" which casts a positive responsibility on the Court to take into consideration all the other circumstances of the case also, namely, the circumstances which may be there besides the two basic circumstances mentioned in the section itself: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2472 (Ori.).

Unless the husband (the Court was not concerned with his relatives in the instant case) can be held guilty of subjecting the deceased to cruelty, no presumption of abetting the deceased in committing suicide is available under this provision: (1986) 13 Cr.L.T. 298: (1987) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 480 (P.&H.).

Where on evidence, the outstanding demand for dowry—only "a radio, a bell-metal glass and Rs. 100"—had been met and settled before the married woman had committed suicide, held, no presumption under S. 113-A could be raised merely because there was no other "earthly reason" for the married woman to commit suicide; the presumption under the section is neither mandatory nor to be drawn mechanically in every case; in the absence of a nexus between the cause (demand for dowry) and the effect (death by suicide), no presumption is permissible; the Court is not required to "shall presume" or it only "may presume" but "having regard to all the other circumstances of the case"; on facts, presumption set aside: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 192: 1993 Cr.L.J. 134: (1992) 1 Crimes 850 (Cal.) (D.B.).

The degree of proof required in a criminal trial is stricter than in a civil proceeding; in a criminal trial, however intriguing may be the facts and circumstances, the charges against the accused must be proved beyond all reasonable doubts; the proof should not be based on surmises and conjectures. Such requirement continues even after insertion of S. 498-A in the Indian Penal Code and S. 113-A in the Evidence Act. Besides there is no absolute standard of proof in a criminal trial; whether the charges against the accused have been proved beyond all reasonable doubts must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case and the quality of evidences adduced and materials placed on record: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1418: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2104: (1994) 1 S.C.C. 73.

Where there was no dependable evidence on record to prove that on the relevant day when the deceased wife committed suicide, the accused husband instigated or aided in any manner the deceased to commit suicide, and further the marriage between the deceased and the accused took place before 10 to 12 years, held, the presumption under S. 113-A would not be applicable: (1990-2) 10 Guj.L.H. (U.J.) 10 (D.B.).

Where a bride died in extremely suspicious circumstances just five days after her marriage, held, a presumption arose under Ss. 113-A and 113-B against the accused: (1991) 2 Hindu L.R. 9 (Madh. Pra.).

Presumption under S. 113-A could be invoked only when the prosecution has discharged the initial onus of proving that the deceased woman had been subjected to cruelty. Where the prosecution could not establish that the accused had subjected the deceased to cruelty who committed suicide within seven years of her marriage, held, a presumption under S. 113-A could not be raised: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1602 (Karn.); 1992 Cr.L.J. 2385: (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 594 (Ori.).

A close reading of S. 8-A of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961 shows that merely because the accused is charged with offences under S. 3 or S. 4 of the said Act, the initial burden which is always on the prosecution to prove basic ingredients of the sections for bringing home the charges to the accused will not get displaced or dispensed with. Further, if in a prosecution for offence of dowry death presumption under S. 113-A can be validly raised and the burden can be shifted on the accused then in prosecutions for demanding dowry or for taking or giving dowry or for its abetment the shifting of burden of proof on the accused under S. 8-A of Dowry Prohibition Act can equally validly be countenanced: (1994) 1 D.M.C. 356: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 672: (1994) 3 Kam.L.J. 335 (F.B.).

3. Retrospective operation of section.— The provisions of S. 113-A do not create any new offence and as such it does not create any substantial right but it is merely a matter of procedure of evidence and as such it is retrospective: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 209: 1990 Cr.L.J. 562: (1990) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 279: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 353; (1990) 3 Crimes 9 (Madh. Pra.).

Ss. 498-A, I.P.Code and 113-A of the Evidence Act include in its amplitude the past events prior to the date of amendment, i.e. , 25-12-1983. Thus, a conviction can be based relying on the incidents of cruelty committed by the appellant prior to the commencement date of amended provisions. [A.I.R. 1983 S.C.

826; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 446; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 307, Rel. on]: (1987) 1 Bom.C.R. 668: (1988) 2 Crimes 580; 1987 Cr.L.J. 901; (1994) 1 Bom. C.R. 84 (D.B.).

Even before the insertion of S. 113-A, the Court was not absolved of putting the parties to proof that the wife had committe suicide on being abetted by her husband and in-laws; S. 113-A facilitates Court to raise a statutory presumption, though rebuttable, against the accused; raising the presumption is not part of the substantive law but of procedural law which is retrospective in nature. Thus, where the suicide was committed prior to the introduction of S. 113-A, held, the Court could rightly raise the presumption thereunder: (1987-1) 91 Punj.L.R. 115: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 189.

The provision though retrospective will not apply to a case where trial was concluded by the trial Court and the appeal against the trial Court's order was pending: (1991) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 380 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

4. "Relative"—Who is.—The presumption envisaged under S. 113-A is against the husband and his relatives; the father of the deceased woman cannot be said to be the relative of the husband for the purpose of S. 113-A: (1990) 2 Ker.L.T. (S.N.) 51: (1990) 3 An.L.T. 146.

5. Cruelty—What is.—Reminding his wife of and on, after she had once been coerced to bring to him from her brothers Rs. 5,000 that she should have brought a television, a fridge and a scooter and continuing to harrass her, held, the Court could presume under S. 113-A that it was the husband's cruel and intentional conduct to abet her to commit suicide; conviction upheld but sentence of imprisonment reduced: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 189: (1987-1) 91 Punj.L.R. 115; 1990 Cr.L.R. 377 (Guj.). See also 1994 (Supp.) 1 S.C.C. 173: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 235; 1989 Marriage L.J. 56 (P.&H.).

Where the appellant used to consume liquor almost daily despite constant protests by his wife and he also used to come home late at night, held, the conduct of the appellant did not amount to cruelty under S. 498-A, I.P.Code and, therefore, no presumption under S. 113-A could be raised: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1048: (1988) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 225 (P.&H.). But when such acts, i.e., consuming liquor daily and coming home late, were coupled with beatings and demanding dowry and harassment to bring money, held, such acts amount to cruelty, attracting presumption under S. 113-A: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1186: (1988) 2 An.L.T. 846.

6. Illustrative cases.—Where there was evidence to prove that the deceased, a newly wedded woman, was constantly abused, taunted for bringing less dowry and also defamed for carrying an illegitimate child by the accused who died of burn injuries, held, presumption as to abetment of suicide was available: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 209: 1990 Cr.L.J. 562: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 353.

Where deceased who committed suicide within seven years of her marriage and there was evidence that she was being subjected to physical and mental cruelty after her marriage but she did not implicate the accused in her dying declaration, held, a presumption could be raised under S. 113-A: (1994) 1 Bom.C.R. 84 (D.B.).

Where the wife had committed suicide within seven years of marriage and there was convincing evidence that her husband had been subjecting her to cruelty, held, he could be convicted under S. 306 and S. 498-A of the Indian Penal Code for abetment: 1989 Rajdhani L.R. 265; (1992) 1 All Cr.L.R. 420 (P.&H.) (D.B.); (1987) 32 Del.L.T. 329.

Where deceased committed suicide within less than seven years of her marriage and there was evidence that she was harassed and tortured by appellant's mother-in-law for bringing insufficient dowry, held, a presumption as to abetment of suicide by the appellant could be raised under S. 113-A: (1986-1) 89 Punj.L.R. 101.

Where oral evidence regarding alleged torture for non-payment of dowry was not reliable and the prosecution omitted to disclose letters, alleged to be written by the deceased-wife, held, presumption under S. 113-A could not be raised: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 138 (Cal.) (D.B.); 1987 Cr.L.J. 1412 (P.&H.).

Where there was no cogent or reliable evidence of the wife being maltreated or tortured by her husband or in-laws in connection with the demand for dowry or her having made any such complaints to her parents and the demand for a motor cycle was made only to her brother, endorsed by the wife herself, held, no presumption of dowry death could be raised merely because the wife had committed suicide within a few months of the marriage. [A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 209, Disting.]: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2472 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where the deceased wife had only once written to her father that if anything happens to her he should recover her dowry ornaments she would be leaving with her husband or in her almirah, besides asking him to take her to the parental home and all other letters addressed to her husband, her in-laws and her parents expressed love, respect and consideration for her husband and in-laws and her unhappiness emanated not from any demand for dowry but the loss of her infant son and her inability to remain with her husband at the places of his posting, held, no presumption under S. 113-A could be drawn against the accused: (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 594: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2385 (Ori.).

[1][113-B. Presumption as to dowry death.—When the question is whether a person has committed the dowry death of a woman and it is shown that soon before her death such woman had been subjected by such person to cruelty or harassment for, or in connection with, any demand for dowry, the Court shall presume that such person had caused the dowry death.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, "dowry death" shall have the same meaning as in section 304-B of Indian Penal Code (45 of 1860).]

Where, in the letter received by the sister of the deceased, a few days before she committed suicide, there was not even a word suggesting harassment meted out to her on account of any unlawful demand and the evidence of the father and sister of the deceased regarding demand of dowry was contradictory, held, no presumption could be drawn under S. 113-A: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1400 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where it was established that the woman who died due to drowning was harassed for dowry demands by the petitioners but there was nothing to show that she at any time revealed her mind or mood to be suicidal and further she was pregnant at the time of her death, held, it could not be said with certainty that she committed suicide and, thus, no presumption could be raised under S. 113-A: (1994) 1 D.M.C. 267: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2455: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 196 (Bom.) (D.B.). See also (1991) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 359 (P.&H.); (1993) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 404 (P.&H.).

Where it was alleged that the death of the deceased who died within seven years of her marriage was not a case of suicide but a suspected dowry death and Police was very much in the picture right from the beginning but still body was not sent for post-mortem and was cremated abruptly, and evidence also showed that deceased was harassed for dowry, held, investigation by C.I.D. was ordered: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1399 (Mad.).

Section 113-B—Notes.

The legislative intent is clear to curb the menace of dowry deaths, etc., with a firm hand. It must be remembered that since such crimes are generally committed in the privacy of residential homes and in secrecy, independent and direct evidence is not easy to get. This is why the Legislature has by introducing Ss. 113-A and 113-B in the Evidence Act tried to strengthen the prosecution hands by permitting a presumption to be raised if certain foundational facts are established and the unfortunate event has taken place within seven years of marriage. This period of seven years is considered to be the turbulent one after which the Legislature assumes that the couple would have settled down in life: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1532: (1991) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 489. Courts are expected to construe these provisions in a way that the object behind the provisions is fulfilled: (1994) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 541 (Del.) (D.B.).

When the question at issue is whether a person is guilty of dowry death of a woman and the evidence discloses that immediately before her death she was subjected by such person to cruelty and/or harassment for, or in connection with, any demand for dowry, S. 113-B of the Evidence Act provides that the Court shall presume that such person had caused the dowry death. Of course, if there is proof of the person having intentionally caused her death that would attract S. 302, I.P.Code: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1532: (1991) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 489.

S. 113-B, though mandatory, only enjoins upon the Court that on proof of facts and circumstances mentioned therein to draw the presumption of its being a case of dowry death; that would shift the onus on the accused that the deceased was not treated with cruelty by the accused soon before her death. It is, then, for the accused to seek the option of himself appearing as a witness or to prove his defence by other evidence; since under S. 315 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, no adverse inference against the accused can be drawn for his non-appearance as a witness, there are sufficient in-built safeguards against the provision being hit by Art. 21 or Art. 20(3) of the Constitution: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3472 (P.&H.) (F.B.).

The applicability of S. 113-B is limited to cases "when the question is whether a person has committed dowry death of a woman....." That too requires proof of two further facts. Firstly, it is shown that soon before her death such a woman had been subjected by such person to "cruelty" or "harassment" and, secondly, that the cruelty of her husband was "for or in connection with any demand for dowry". If these two facts are established by evidence, the presumption under S. 113-B as to the commission of the offence under S. 304-B, I.P.Code would be attracted straightway. The presumption under S. 113-B, cannot be read or drawn or inferable where the charge is confined to S. 302, I.P.Code: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2636: 1993 All.L.J. 920 (D.B.).

S. 113-B, as indeed S. 304-B of the Indian Penal Code, was incorporated on the anvil of the Dowry Prohibition (Amendment) Act, 1984, the main object whereof is to curb the evil of dowry and to make it severely punitive; S. 113-B permits a legal presumption that it would be a dowry death if the wife victim was subjected to cruelty or harassment for or in connection with any demand for dowry; the interpretation of its provisions must be in consonance with the modern needs: 1990 Cr.L.J. 1666 (Andh. Pra.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 174 (Ori.).

Under S. 113-B, where a married woman's death is caused by cruelty or harassment connected with dowry demand, held, the Court shall presume that such dowry death was caused by the person who had made the demand: (1992-2) 40 B.L.J.R. 908 (D.B.); (1992) 2 Crimes 746 (P.&H.).

The offence of dowry death under S. 304-B of the Indian Penal Code is a new offence created with effect from 19-11-1986; triable by a Sessions Court, it is punishable with minimum imprisonment of seven years extendable to life imprisonment. The corresponding amendments of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Indian Evidence Act relate to the trial and proof; the offence of dowry death is more stringent than the offence under S. 498-A of the Code; thus, if dowry death occurred prior to the enforcement of S. 304-A, it would tantamount only to be a death by cruelty which is triable by a Magistrate and punishable by fine and imprisonment upto three years. S. 113-B is, thus, not attracted in case of a dowry death prior to 19-11-1986: (1992) 1 Hindu L.R. 228 (S.C.); 1994 (Supp.) 1 S.C.C. 173: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 235; 1993 Cr.L.J. 2636: 1993 All.L.J. 920 [On difference of opinion between the two Judges in 1992 Cr.L.J. 2294: 1992 All.L.J. 749].

Husband or the relatives need not be the actual or direct participant in the commission of offence. See (1991) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 115 (Andh. Pra.).

A combined reading of S. 113-B of the Evidence Act, and S. 304-B, I.P.Code shows that there must be material to show that soon before her death the victim must have been subjected to cruelty or harassment. The expression "soon before" is very relevant. The prosecution is obliged to show that soon before the occurrence there was cruelty or harassment, and only in that case the presumption operates. "Soon before" is a relative term. It would depend upon the circumstances of each case and no fixed period can be indicated in that regard. Where in determining the question as to whether death of deceased was a suicide or homicide, prosecution failed to show that soon before the occurrence there was cruelty or harassment, held, no presumption as to "dowry death" could be drawn under S. 113-B: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1684: (1994) 2 D.M.C. 382: (1995) 1 D.M.C. 435 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Only when the prosecution establishes by cogent evidence that soon before the death the lady was subjected to cruelty or harassment for or in connection with any demand for dowry can there be a presumption that the death is a dowry death: (1994) 2 Ker.L.J. 632 (D.B.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 174 (Ori.). Thus, where the evidence about the alleged cruelty in connection with the demand of dowry was quite vague, incomplete, inconsistent and unworthy of credence, held, S. 113-B could not be pressed into service for raising presumption of dowry death: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1345 (Raj.).

Where though the deceased-wife died within $2^1/_2$ of her marriage by consuming poison and there were allegations of maltreatment and harassment for bringing insufficient dowry but evidence relating to cruelty soon before her death was vague and untrustworthy, held, presumption under S. 113-B could not be raised: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1020 (Raj.).

Where a bride died in extremely suspicious circumstances just five days after her marriage, held, a presumption arose under Ss. 113-A and 113-B against the accused: (1991) 2 Hindu L.R. 9 (Madh. Pra.).

Where the deceased committed suicide within $1^1/_2$ months of marriage and there was allegation of harassment for dowry, held, presumption under S. 113-B could be raised: (1987) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 512 (Del.) (D.B.). See also (1992) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 675 (P.&H.).

Where death of bride occurred within about 14 months of marriage and there was prima facie material in regard to harassment in connection with demand for dowry, held, a presumption arose under S. 304, I.P.Code read with S. 113-B of the Evidence Act against the petitioners: (1990) 2 Hindu L.R. 411 (Del.).

Where deceased wife died within one and a half years of her marriage and her father consistently stated that the accused son-in-law was dissatisfied with the dowry and used to taunt the deceased as she was less educated and un-intelligent, held, provisions of S. 113-B were applicable: (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 391 (P.&H.) (D.B.); (1992) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 387 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where the deceased woman died an unnatural death as a result of strangulation within seven years of marriage and the evidence of material witnesses indicated that there was demand for dowry and cruelty on the part of the accused-husband, held, a presumption as to "dowry death" could be raised under S. 113-B: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 120.

Where deceased women died within three years of her marriage otherwise than under normal circumstances and the evidence of her parents and neighbour clearly showed that she was being harassed for dowry, held, the accused persons were guilty of causing "dowry death" and they were liable to be convicted: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2330: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 449 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.). See also (1990) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 18 (P.&H.) (D.B.); (1995-2) 43 B.L.J.R. 928 (D.B.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 2728 (Mad.).

Where the accused persons had treated the deceased with cruelty in connection with demand for dowry and the death occurred within seven years of the marriage and from the evidence of the father, the brother and the mother of the deceased it was clear that they were not even informed soon about the death and the accused hurriedly cremated the dead body, held, the presumption under S. 113-B was attracted: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1226: 1991 Cr.L.J. 1713: (1991) 1 S.C.C. 371: (1991) 1 Hindu L.R. 409.

Where a married lady died unnatural death within seven years of marriage and there was evidence of maltreatment and harassment for bringing insufficient dowry, held, presumption under S. 113-B was clearly attracted: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 176 (P.&H.); (1994) 1 Hindu L.R. 351 (P.&H.) (D.B.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 989 (Ker.) (D.B.).

In case of dowry death, the person in whose care the victim was entrusted must necessarily account for the crime as he is supposed to have special knowledge about the crime: 1989 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 13 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where in the F.I.R. lodged by the brother of the deceased woman who died due to burn injuries, no allegation was made against the accused regarding harassment or cruelty towards the deceased on account of having brought less dowry, held, no presumption under S. 113-B could be raised: (1994) 1 D.M.C. 506: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 521: (1993) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 404 (P.&H.); 1995 Cr.L.J. 312 (All.) (D.B.).

Where there was no evidence that there was any demand of dowry prior to the marriage and witnesses admitted that nothing was given by the deceased's parents within five years preceding the incident and further deceased's brother stated that if his sister would have complained of any cruelty or harassment, he would not have sent her back when she had come to his house about twenty days prior to her death, held, simply because a young lady had brought her life to a tragic end by committing suicide, it could not be said that she had embraced death on account of any demand of dowry by her husband or mother-in-law which was not satisfied: 1992 Cr.L.J. 309 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where there was no convincing evidence to establish that the wife died within seven years of her marriage and that she was treated with cruelty for want of dowry soon before her death, held, no presumption could be drawn under S. 113-B: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 482 (Raj.).

Where there was no legal, cogent or reliable evidence to prove either that the appellants instigated, aided or abetted the commission of suicide by deceased wife or that the appellant acted with cruelty or that their wilful conduct was likely to drive deceased to commit suicide and testimony of brother of deceased was not sufficient to prove that the marriage of the deceased took place within seven years of her death due to intake of poison, held, no legal presumption could be drawn against the appellant that they were guilty of causing dowry death: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1679 (P.&H.).

114. Court may presume existence of certain facts.—The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case.

Illustrations

The Court may presume—

(a) that a man who is in the possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession;

(b) that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars;

(c) that a bill of exchange, accepted or endorsed, was accepted or endorsed for good consideration,

(d) that a thing or state of things which has been shown to be in existence within a period shorter than that within which such things or state of things usually cease to exist, is still in existence;

Where a bride died of poisioning but there was no evidence of harassment on account of dowry and, on the other hand, the mother-in-law immediately informed the neighbours and removed her to the hospital, held, presumption under S. 113-B could not be raised: (1991) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 118 (P.&H.).

Where a wife committed suicide but her letter, relied upon by the prosecution, complaining of ill-treatment by her in-laws was not proved, her father had admitted that he was prepared to marry his other daughter to the brother of his son-in-law, there was no cogent evidence to prove demand for dowry, there were no injuries on her body and she was removed to the hospital by her in-laws soon after she took poison, held, the prosecution having failed to prove that soon before her death and within seven years of her marriage, she was subjected to cruelty and harassment in connection with demand of dowry by her in-laws, no presumption could be drawn against them; conviction set aside: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3723 (Madh. Pra.).

Where though the death of wife occurred because of burn injuries within seven years of her marriage, but there was no evidence from which an inference could be drawn that her husband pestered her with demand for money, held, merely because accused failed to explain as to what else would have prompted his wife to end her life in jiffy, presumption envisaged in S. 113-B cannot be invoked: 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 15: (1991) 1 Ker.L.J. 359: (1991) 1 Ker.L.T. 494 (D.B.).

1. Scope and applicability.—Section is not exhaustive: 46 P.L.R. 355. S. 114 includes but is not limited to, the presumption of "regularity": 160 I.C. 332: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 1.

The principle laid down by S. 114 is one of very wide application, which covers, not merely the particular instances given in the illustrations to the section, but all sorts of analogous cases in which the actual facts are distinguishable from the facts presumed by any one of the illustrations but are equally amenable to the general principle enunciated by the section itself: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 292 (D.B.).

It cannot be said that before any initial presumption can arise or be raised, the Court must consider and weigh all the facts and circumstances of the case. S. 114 does not lay down any such rule: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 633.

The section is wide enough to permit the Court to raise a presumption not only with regard to oral evidence, but also with regard to documentary evidence: A.I.R. 1959 Bom. 414: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 1004 (D.B.). S. 114 does not enable the Court to draw one presumption based upon another presumption without any evidence: (1971) 73 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 145.

The language of S. 114 is not imperative; the Court is not bound to raise presumption even if the requirements of the section are fulfilled: (1983-2) 24 Guj.L.R. 1303.

It cannot be said that a Court should make a presumption under S. 114 on the materials before it. It is optional with the Court concerned to make a presumption under S. 114: 1948 All.W.R. (Rev.) 199: 1948 R.D. 348. Whether or not a presumption under S. 114 can be drawn in a particular case depends on the facts and circumstances of that case: A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 35: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 921: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 310.

S. 114 prescribes that the Court may presume a fact—Not that the Court must: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786: 1963 Cal.L.J. 75; 1971 W.L.N. 317.

S. 114 allows the Court to presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business in their relation to the facts of the particular case. Whether in given circumstances a presumption can be raised or not would depend upon the facts of each case. The words "may presume" in S. 114 leave it to the Court to make or not to make the presumption according to the circumstances of the case: (1975) 3 Chand.L.R. 224 (Del.); 1978 Cr.L.J. 1107 (S.C.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 1656 (Del.); A.I.R. 1943 F.C. 75: 45 Cr.L.J. 341; A.I.R. 1953 Mys. 48 (D.B.).

S. 114 uses the expression "may presume" and this expression has been defined in S. 4 of the said Act in the following manner: "Whenever it is provided by this Act that the Court may presume a fact, it may either regard such fact as proved, unless and until it is disproved, or may call for proof of it". In other words, even if such fact has not been disproved, the Court may instead of regarding it as proved, call for proof of it: (1983) 55 Cut.L.T. 531.

Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act is presumption of fact while presumption under S. 27, General Clauses Act is one of law: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 477: 1969 All.L.J. 849. And the only difference between such a presur. ption of law under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act and a presumption of fact under S. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act is that in the former case a presumption has got to be made by the Court, while in the latter case, i.e., under S. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act it may or may not be made according to the facts and circumstances of each case. However, even a presumption of law is rebuttable unless it is made unrebuttable by some provision of law. A presumption of law to be raised under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act has not been made unrebuttable: A.I.R. 1970 All. 446: 1970 All.L.J. 336 (F.B.).

Presumptions arising under S. 28 of the M.P. General Clauses Act, 1957 are mandatory; the Court is bound to draw it; but presumptions under Ss. 16 and 114 of the Evidence Act are optional. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 869, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 76: 1980 Jab.L.J. 285.

The presumption of fact is rebuttable: (1974) 1 Karn.L.J. (Jr.) 14 (S.N.) 45.

In considering the evidence on the merits even in the light of burden of proof, a party is entitled to seek the help of legal presumptions including those under the provisions of S. 114: (1986) 1 Hindu L.R. 62 (Ker.).

S. 114, Evidence Act does not lay down any hard and fast rule with regard to the circumstances in which any fact or facts may be presumed to exist nor does it contain an exhaustive list of such facts, though it gives few illustrations from various walks of life. The section, however, provides a guiding principle, namely, that the Court shall be guided by its own experience and knowledge of the common course of natural events, and public and private affairs: A.I.R. 1966 All. 214: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 504.

S. 114 enables a Judge to infer one fact from the existence of another proved fact having regard to the common course of natural events or human conduct. The illustrations given to the section are not exhaustive. The Court may always rely on the main section in regard to a different set of facts or combination of facts to draw the presumption embodied in that section. The section gives an option to the Judge whether to draw such a presumption or not, having regard to the circumstances of each case: I.L.R. (1956) Andhra 173: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 611.

Presumptions of fact are assumptions resulting from one's experience of the course of natural events of human conduct and human character, assumptions which one is entitled to make use of and has to make use of in the ordinary business of life as well as the business of Courts. A Judge of fact may raise such presumptions to assist him, if he thinks them likely in relation to the facts of the case with which he is dealing. It is always a question for the Judge of fact in any particular case whether he will make use of such an assumption, whether he will raise such a presumption of fact. His discretion in the matter is subject to re-consideration by an appellate Court if there is an appeal on facts. If the burden of proof lies upon one party, it is not reasonable to raise a presumption of fact which begs the question in favour of that party: 14 Mys.L.J. 491: 42 Mys.H.C.R. 163.

Presumption under section—Essentials to be proved: 1966 Cr.L.J. 1357: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1762.

S. 114 applies not only to civil but also to criminal cases: 41 Cr.L.J. 401 (2): A.I.R. 1940 Sind 42. See also (1974) 1 An.W.R. 42.

Presumption under section—Duty of Court—Court has to be very cautious in scrutinising evidence: (1966) 8 Guj.L.R. 145.

The effect of S. 114 is to make it perfectly clear that Courts of justice are to use their own common sense and experience in judging the effect of particular facts and they are to be subjected to no technical rules whatever on the subject: 151 I.C. 473: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 719 (F.B.). See also 164 I.C. 385: A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 332; I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 299: (1937) 1 M.L.J. 543: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 182.

If facts are ascertained, presumptions arising from conduct cannot establish a right which the ascertained facts disprove, nor can they negative the right which the facts establish: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 542.

Whether a general or a particular or special onus has been discharged is to be decided not only on the direct effect of oral and documentary evidence led but also from indirect inferences from proving or not proving easily proveable facts if they existed and presumption of law or fact could be drawn therefrom; presumptions under S. 114 cover a wide range of presumptions which the Courts may use to remove lacunae or fill a gap in the chain of direct evidence before the Court: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 183: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 133: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 763: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 17.

The rules of presumption are deduced from enlightened human knowledge and experience; they are drawn from the connection, relation and coincidence of facts and circumstance: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1099: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 30: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 486.

If presumptions arising under S. 114, which is a general section come into conflict with presumptions arising from provisions, which can be called special provisions then presumptions arising under the general provisions must yield place to the presumptions arising under the special provisions: A.I.R. 1963 Mys. 115.

Presumptions of law are legal fictions. They are designed for the sake of convenience and justice and are based upon wide human experience of a connection between the fact proved and the fact to be proved. Truth may sometimes be not permitted to prevail over a presumption of law: 1969 All.L.J. 849: 1969 Ren.C.R. 849: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 477.

Presumption and inference, difference between. See 25 All.L.J. 833: I.L.R. 50 All. 145: A.I.R. 1928 All. 16; I.L.R. 62 Cal. 956.

Inference of fact depends on mental process which is same all over the world: A.I.R. 1919 P.C. 11.

A presumption in itself is no evidence; it only makes out a prima facie case for the party concerned; it is a rule concerning evidence; it indicates the person on whom the burden of proof lies. If the presumption is conclusive, it obviates the production of any other evidence, whether in support or in opposition. In case of a rebuttable presumption, the other party may produce evidence, fairly and reasonably tending to show that the real fact is not as presumed; the purpose of presumption is then over; then only the evidence of the parties will determine the true nature of the presumed fact: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1099: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 30: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 486.

The presumptions under the Evidence Act are only the inferences which a logical and reasonable mind normally draws. Facts and circumstances from which certain inferences follow are indicated in various provisions of the Act. Whenever the law permits the raising of a presumption, the Court can by reason of S. 4, raise the presumption for purpose of proof of a fact. If the presumption is available in one section, it can raise it under that section. If it is not available in one section and is available in another section, then the Court can raise presumption under that section. It all depends upon the circumstances available in the case as applicable to a particular document: A.I.R. 1980 All. 385 (F.B.).

Presumptive and conclusive proofs are basically different; while conclusive proof raises a conclusive presumption, presumptive proof raises a conditional, rebuttable presumption. A fact deemed to be proved, irrespective of the existence or non-existence of other facts possessing probative force in the opposite direction, raises a conclusive presumption and the law accepts the fact as conclusively proved. Presumptive or conditional proof, on the other hand, is acceptance of certain facts which, on all probabilities, the law assumes to have taken place; it is only a conditional proof, accepted so long as there exist no other facts amounting to its disproof; and it is called rebuttable presumption: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 558 (Ker.).

A legal fiction is one which is not an actual reality but which the law requires the Court to accept it as a reality. Legal fiction is nothing but a presumption of the existence of a state of affairs which in actual reality is non-existent. However, the legal fiction and a presumption are not wholly identical in all respects. A presumption may be conclusive or it may be rebuttable. A presumption gives rise to a legal fiction. It is conclusive if no evidence can be permitted to be led to deny it. In case of a presumption which is rebuttable, unless the contrary is established, a fictitious state of affairs is presumed to exist as if it is an actual reality. S. 4 of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (1948) creates a legal fiction as to "deemed tenancy" and not a presumption: A.I.R. 1978 Guj. 208: (1978) 19 Guj.L.R. 799 (D.B.).

The question of presumption has to be kept distinct from the question of proof. For the purpose of raising the presumption what one has to see is the state of affairs prevailing on the date on which the presumption is sought to be invoked. On the other hand, in order to prove a certain legal relationship between the parties, the Court is not concerned with the state of affairs prevailing at the time when the question arose, but also with the state of affairs prevailing when the alleged legal relationship is said to have arisen: 1954 All.L.J. 187: A.I.R. 1954 All. 441.

When the plaintiffs have failed to produce evidence they may not be permitted to rely on a presumption under S. 114 in place of the evidence that they could produce: I.L.R. (1957) 9 Assam 1: A.I.R. 1959 Assam 98.

A presumption is a rule of law that attaches definite probative value to specific facts or directs that a particular inference as to the existence of one fact not actually known shall be drawn from a fact which is known and proved. It furnishes prima facie evidence of the matter to which it relates and relieves the party of the duty of presenting evidence until his opponent has introduced proof to rebut the presumption. It raises such a high decree of probability in its favour that it must prevail unless clearly met and explained and overturned by explanatory proof to the satisfaction of the Court. Presumption hold the field in the absence of evidence, but when facts appear presumptions recede: (1957) 59 Punj.L.R. 501: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 333: I.L.R. (1957) Punj. 1997.

S. 114 of the Evidence Act deals with presumption of facts. Presumption of facts are no more than logical inference of the existence of one fact drawn from other proved or known facts without the help of any artificial rules of law and they are always rebuttable. The provision gives a discretion to the Court to make or not to make a presumption and no party as of right can claim such a presumption being raised by a Court. When a presumption of fact will stand rebutted depends upon the nature and extent of evidence and circumstances of each case and the credit which the Court gives to the rebuttal evidence. The use of words "in relation to facts of the particular case" in S. 114 are significant in this connection: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 507: 1968 All.L.J. 707.

R. 141(2) of the Defence of India Rules, 1962, which lays down a rule of evidence contrary to the law contained in S. 114 of the Evidence Act, held, is saved by S. 43 of the Defence of India Act, 1962: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 1829: 1970 Cr.L.J. 1644: (1970) 2 S.C.R. 270.

Where the facts are once ascertained, presumption arising from conduct cannot establish a right which the facts themselves disprove: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 504.

Conflicting presumptions neutralise each other and leave the case at large to be determined solely on the evidence given: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 861.

Burden of proof and presumption—They have to be considered together—Their importance vanishes in the face of evidence given by both sides: A.I.R. 1970 All. 51: 1969 All.L.J. 657: 1970 Cr.L.J. 132 (F.B.).

2. "Common course of natrual events and human conduct".—Common course of conduct can only be that which is most common in the experience of the Judge who has to decide the point: 24 Nag.L.R. 87: A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 52.

Common course of natural events—Presumption: 1959 Cr.L.J. 712: A.I.R. 1959 Ker. 190.

Of two conflicting statements of witness, the statement against interest should ordinarily be preferred: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 293.

It is one of the strongest presumptions based on human experience that a woman must be unchaste when her children say so in the Court. The very word "mother" carries with it a sense of highest reverence. No doubt said presumption is one of fact and is rebuttable by strong evidence: 1961 M.P.L.J. 979: 1961 Jab.L.J. 466: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 236.

The evidence about the conduct of an animal can be taken into account under S. 114 of the Evidence Act as being covered by the words "course of natural events." Hence, the conduct of a calf in going to the house of its master and in starting to lick the udders of its mother, being guided by natural instinct can be taken into account in determining the ownership of the calf. [A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 47, Dist.]. Per Gurtu and Sankar Saran JJ. (Obiter in their opinion)—S. 114, Evidence Act itself does not consider the words "course of natural events" as interchangeable with "animal conduct." If the words are not so interchangeable then it is obvious that the facts relating only to human conduct can be taken into consideration. The conduct of an animal such as a calf does not appear to be covered by the term "course of natural events.": A.I.R. 1952 All. 481: 1952 Cr.L.J. 904. Human conduct, see A.I.R. 1954 All. 186: 1953 All.L.J. 689.

3. Illustrations to section 114—Scope of.—The illustrations appended to S. 114 are not statements of the law qualified only by particular exceptions. They are merely what they call themselves, illustrations or instances of the application of certain maxims out of many possible instances: 69 I.C. 257: 17 Nag.L.R. 113.

Illustrations in section are but illustrations and it is always open to the Court to see the main section and consider whether it applies to any given set of facts and draw inferences therefrom: A.I.R. 1947 All. 191 (F.B.).

The illustrations appended to S. 114 are not intended to lay down rules of law which are exhaustive of the presumptions that may be made under the provisions of the section itself nor are they intended to apply without exception. They are merely examples of circumstances in which certain presumptions may be made and other presumptions of a similar kind in similar circumstances may be made under the provisions of the section itself: 1944 All.L.J. 411: A.I.R. 1944 All. 281. See also (1944) 46 Punj.L.R. 355: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 472; A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 106. The presumption to be drawn under that section is one of fact and whether it should be drawn or not in a particular case must depend upon the facts of that case: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 1 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 35. But onus on the prosecution to prove the guilt does not change: A.I.R. 1952 Assam 97.

The illustrations to S. 114 are not and, from the very nature of things, cannot be exhaustive; they are for understanding the scope and thrust of the section itself: (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 156.

Presumption permitted under S. 114 is a presumption of fact and is one resting on the discretion of the Court. Illustrations are merely examples of circumstances in which certain presumptions may be made; they do not inhibit the Court from presuming other positions based on similar situations or circumstances. No hard and fast rule can be laid down about the extent of presumption which a Court can make in a given situation: (1992) 2 Ker.L.T. 129: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 112: I.L.R. (1992) 3 Ker. 309 (D.B.).

Illustrations appended to section—Principle of interpretation: I.L.R. (1960) Cut. 230.

The illustrations to S. 114 show the extent to which Court may draw presumptions and clearly S. 114 is no justification for a Court presuming without evidence that because a woman sleeps in a room with two cots, her husband, an inmate of the house, must have slept on the other cot on a particular night: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 130.

4. Constitutional validity.—The presumption raised under Illus. (a) of S. 114, Evidence Act, does not contravene the provisions of Art. 21 of the Constitution and as such is not unconstitutional or ultra vires: (1956) 58 Punj.L.R. 320: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 224.

5. Scope and applicability of Illustration (a).—Presumption under: 1959 Cr.L.J. 1271: A.I.R. 1959 All. 718.

Illus. (a) is enumerative and not exhaustive: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 21: 1967 Cr.L.J. 357 (F.B.).

The drawing of a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) is discretionary and a Court may refuse in the special circumstances of a particular case to draw such a presumption: I.L.R. (1957) Cut. 680: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 51.

As Illus. (a) indicates, the Court may presume that the petitioner is either the thief or has received the goods, known to him to be stolen: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 134: 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 7.

Possession of stolen things—Presumption: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 150: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 341: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1489.

S. 114 provides, as mentioned in Illus. (a), that a person who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen, unless he can account for his possession. The presumption from recent possession of stolen property is an optional presumption of fact. It is open to the Court to convict an accused by drawing the presumption where the circumstances indicate that no other reasonable hypothesis except the guilty knowledge of the accused is open to the prosecution. The presumption permissible has to be read alongwith the important time factor: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 17; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1097.

It is permissible to presume that a person in possession of stolen article soon after the theft is either the thief or a receiver of stolen property. But if her explanation of such possession is plausible, no such presumption would be allowable: I.L.R. (1956) Andhra 538.

Where a person is found in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft, it may be presumed that he is either a thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen unless he can account for his possession, but there is no rule of law which permits from the possession of stolen goods, a presumption of an offence of lurking house-trespass by night, or house-breaking by night as is contemplated by S. 457 of the Indian Penal Code: 1960 Cr.L.J. 653: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 286.

Presumption under Illus. (a)—When arises—Duty of Court to examine accused: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 414: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1012.

Mere recovery of stolen property not enough to attract S. 411, Penal Code: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 795: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 54: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 114.

The question whether a presumption should be drawn under Illus. (a) of S. 114 is a matter which depends on the evidence and the circumstances of each case. The nature of the recovered articles, their manner of acquisition by the owner, the nature of the evidence about their identification, the manner in which the articles were dealt with by the accused, the place and the circumstances of their recovery, the length of the intervening period and the ability or otherwise of the accused to explain the recovery, are some of those circumstances. [A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 522, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1183: 1978 Cr.L.J. 1107: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 279; 1991 Cr.L.R. 105 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Before an inference could be drawn against the accused in accordance with the provisions of S. 114, it must be established that the theft took place on a certain date and within a very short duration thereafter the accused was found in possession of the stolen property. Thus, where the prosecution failed to establish the time when the theft was committed and the time when the accused was in possession of the stolen property, held, the inference against the accused could not be drawn under S. 114: (1982) 1 Bom.C.R. 764.

The Court is entitled to presume that a person found in possession of property which had been stolen is either the receiver or the actual thief. The nature of the presumption in each individual case depends entirely upon the nature of the evidence adduced. Where a long interval has elapsed before the stolen property has been recovered, it is often unsafe to assume that the possessor is the actual thief: 184 I.C. 545: A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 361; 23 Cut.L.T. 18: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 439; A.I.R. 1951 Kutch 10.

The presumption permitted by S. 114, Illus. (a) does not arise until the prosecution has established three facts, namely, the ownership of the article in question, the theft of those articles and their recent possession by the accused. No fixed time limits can be laid down to determine whether possession is recent or otherwise and every case must be judged on its own merits. The presumption of guilt varies according to whether the stolen articles are or are not calculated to pass readily from hand to hand and, therefore, the importance to be attached to possession must vary with the circumstances of each individual case: (1949) 51 Punj.L.R. 110: A.I.R. 1949 East Punj. 315.

Inability to account for possession of property satisfactorily—Property cannot be believed to be stolen property or one obtained by fraudulent means: 1969 Cr.L.J. 824 (Mad.).

A Court may, in appropriate circumstances, presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after a theft, is either the thief or has received the goods knowing them to be stolen unless he can account for his possession, because if he cannot account for his possession he is likely to be the thief or to have received the goods knowing them to have been stolen. This applies to property criminally misappropriated which is also "stolen property": A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 208: (1945) 1 M.L.J. 202. But see contra. Illus (a) to S. 114 relates only to stolen property obtained by committing theft. In the case of property obtained by criminal misappropriation, although such property would no doubt be stolen property, the inference that a person who subsequently got possession of such property must have known that it was "stolen property", cannot be drawn in the case of such property: A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 26: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 334. See also (1950) 1 M.L.J. 792; 1950 All.W.R. 203.

In order to rebut the presumption arising under S. 114(a) of Evidence Act from recent possession of alleged stolen articles, the explanation of the accused of such possession must be so reasonably convincing as to throw a doubt on his guilt; but a mere denial of the prosecution story or any assertion inconsistent with facts proved by the prosecution, cannot amount to an explanation to make the presumption unavailable to the prosecution under S. 114(a) of the Act: A.I.R. 1952 Mys. 83: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1522.

The words "receives" and "retains" are generally used together and though Illus. (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act, expressly refers to dishonest receipt of stolen property, a presumption about dishonest retention of the stolen property may equally be made by virtue of that illustration: I.L.R. (1958) Cut. 131: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 106.

Though Illus. (a) to S. 114 only mentions a case of ordinary theft, it is well-established that its principle applies not only to ordinary cases of theft, but also cognate offences such as dacoity and robbery: I.L.R. 25 Pat. 262. S. 114 is general in its terms. Illus. (a) is only an illustration, and the fact that the section does not provide an illustration with reference to a dacoity does not mean that where the accused is in possession of property stolen at a dacoity, no presumption can be made either that he was one of the dacoits or that he had dishonestly received or retained the property, knowing or having reason to believe that the possession had been transferred by dacoity or knowing or having reason to believe that it was stolen property: (1944-45) 49 Cal.W.N. 392: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 421; 1971 W.L.N. 317. It is undoubtedly true that the presumption of guilt from recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property is not confined to cases of theft but may be extended to graver offences also. No invariable rules can be laid down when and what presumption may arise from recent exclusive and unexplained, possession of stolen property, and it depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case: 1977 Raj.L.W. 178: 1977 W.L.N. 218.

The essence of presumption that arises under S. 114, Illus. (a) is that when the facts relating to the ownership, theft and possession of the articles have been established, the Court may draw the inference that the accused was either the thief or that he had received the goods knowing them to be stolen. Illus. (a) to S. 114 of course, only mentions a case of ordinary theft; but it is well-established that its principle applies not only to cases of ordinary theft, but to cognate offences, such as, dacoity and robbery.

This rule of presumption has to be considered in the light of the circumstances of each case. Where the ownership of the articles produced by the accused, their removal in dacoity and the production of them by the accused have been established, the proper inference is that they were the dacoits and not receivers: 1960 B.L.J.R. 268: I.L.R. 39 Pat. 361.

The principle of Illus. (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act, applies not only to cases of ordinary theft but also to cognate offences like dacoity and when other necessary facts have been established, the presumption under S. 114, can be taken recourse to, to believe that possession of the stolen property was transferred by commission of dacoity and the accused was convicted under S. 412, Penal Code. Where an accused is charged under S. 412, Penal Code and the only circumstance proved against him is the recovery of stolen property soon after the commission of dacoity, the conviction may properly be only under S. 411: I.L.R. (1958) Cut. 131: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 106.

The presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, will not only apply to an offence of theft but also to other offences like murder, robbery and larceny connected with theft.

Observations regarding presumption held to be mistaken in view of the opinion of Supreme Court: (1970) 72 Bom.L.R. 830: 1970 Mah.L.J. 555; 1980 Chand.Cr.C. 121 (Del.); (1984) 2 Crimes 927 (Del.).

6. Conditions precedent for raising presumption.—The presumption permitted by Illus. (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act, does not arise until the prosecution has established three facts (1) the ownership of the articles in question, (2) their theft, and (3) their recent possession by the accused. When these essential facts relating to the ownership, theft and possession of the articles have been established, the Court may infer that the accused knew how they had been removed from the possession of the owner, that is to say, in a case of ordinary theft that they had been stolen, and in a case of dacoity that they had been stolen in the course of a dacoity: I.L.R. 25 Pat. 262. See also A.I.R. 1954 Manipur 13: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1713.

In order to draw the presumption under S. 114, it is necessary that the prosecution discharges the initial onus on it that the person charged with the offence had possession of the stolen goods soon after the theft. Thus, the two essential elements necessary to be established are his possession of the articles and that the possession is soon after the incident. So far as the possession is concerned, it implicitly suggests exclusive possession of the charged person, i.e., to the exclusion of all others. Possession indicates both physical as well as a mental act so that the person who possesses has the consciousness of physical possession over the property. In other words, the two elements of possession, i.e., both the corpus and the animus, are to be established by the prosecution before the presumption can be drawn. So far as concealment of the properties by the charged persons is concerned, it must be of such character that the accused had concealed the property in a manner so as to get exclusive control over the same with reasonable expectation that other would not be able to interfere with his possession. It follows that the place of concealment may not be necessarily his own house or land but may be a place otherwise accessible to the public, but if the concealment has been done in such manner so as to shield the articles from the public gaze and so hide it as to gain exclusive knowledge of the same, the element of possession can be taken to have been established: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2059 (Ori.).

A presumption under the section does not arise unless ownership of articles, theft and recent possession are established by the prosecution. In other words, before a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) can arise, it must be proved that the goods found in possession of the accused have been stolen. The onus of proof regarding these aspects never shifts, it lies on the prosecution. Some of the settled principles that have emerged therefrom may be stated as follows: (1) Under Illus. (a) the Court may, but is not bound to draw the presumption. But in any case the onus of proof does not shift, it is still on the prosecution. (2) It is not the law that if the accused fails to account for his possession of the goods said to be stolen, he must be convicted, even if the other proved facts do not predicate guilt. (3) If the explanation given may reasonably be true, although the Court may not be convinced that it is true, the accused is entitled to an acquittal. Or if the explanation is not inherently improbable or palpably false and the Court finds it to be reasonably true, the adverse presumption shall be deemed to have been rebutted. (4) The words "reasonably true" mean that the explanation must be sufficient to cast a doubt of the guilt of the accused. (5) The accused is not required to prove his explanation by adducing substantive evidence. In many cases it may be impossible for him to do so. (6) The accused need not even give any explanation unless he is asked to account for his possession: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 134: 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 7.

In order to draw the presumption under Illus. (a) to S. 114 of Evidence Act, the prosecution must prove that the articles in dispute were stolen goods and that the person against whom the prosecution was drawn was in possession of the same soon after the theft. Where the factum of theft itself is doubtful and is not proved beyond all reasonable and probable shadow of doubt, the presumption under S. 114(a), held, could not be drawn and the accused cannot be called upon to explain his possession:1968 All.Cr.R. 417.

Applicability of illustration—Property found in possession of accused must be shown to have been property stolen: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1620: A.I.R. 1960 Madh. Pra. 395; 1964 Raj.L.W. 171: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 715.

The explanation required of an accused under Illus. (a) of S. 114 is an explanation of possession of stolen property. If he alleges that the so-called stolen property is not in fact stolen property but is the property of his relation, he offers no explanation of his possession of it, and the presumption under the section may be applied to him: (1944-45) 49 Cal.W.N. 392: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 421.

Unless the connection between the articles said to have been stolen and those recovered from the house of the accused has been established, no presumption could be drawn under S. 114 (a) of the Evidence Act either that a person is the thief or receiver of stolen articles: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 482: 1957 Cr.L.J. 939.

7. Presumption—When can be raised.—Illus. (a) of S. 114 does not say when the presumption that the person is a thief may be drawn and when the presumption that he is a guilty receiver may be drawn. This will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down. If there is some evidence to show that the accused was found nearabout the place of commission of theft, either immediately before or after the commission of the crime and was subsequently found in recent possession of stolen property for which he was unable to give a satisfactory explanation, he may be presumed to be the actual thief. But if the only evidence against him is his recent possession of stolen property for which he was not able to give a satisfactory explanation, the better presumption would be that he is a guilty receiver and not the actual thief: 24 Cut.L.T. 1: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 51; (1978) 45 Cut.L.T. 124; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 257.

It would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case whether the Court should draw the presumption that a person found in possession of stolen goods soon after theft and who has not been able to account for his possession is the thief or whether he is the receiver of the goods knowing them to be stolen. The fact that the accused was found soon after the theft in possession of a very large number of stolen articles, and not merely a very few of the stolen articles, held, shows that he was himself the thief and not only the receiver of stolen goods: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2501: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1696.

Presumption from possession of the stolen property—Conditions—It must be shown that the accused were near the place of theft or that they received articles from anybody else: 25 Cut.L.T. 454; 1978 Jab.L.J. (Note) 75.

Possession of stolen property—Presumption—When arises: 1959 All.L.J. 161: 1959 All. Cr. R. 205.

Where a person is found in possession of stolen property soon after the commission of a theft, the presumption that ordinarily arises is not that that person has received it knowing it to be stolen but that he has stolen it. The inference that he is a receiver of stolen property should not be drawn unless there are circumstances which go to show that he did not obtain it direct from the owner or person in possession but from some other person who was himself the actual thief, e.g., when the person found in possession after theft is a woman who is not likely to have been the principal offender, or a pawnbroker, or some other similar individual to whom the actual thief may have turned for assistance in getting rid of his booty: A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 296: 52 Cr.L.J. 154. See also 1944 All.L.J. 411: A.I.R. 1944 All. 281.

In what circumstances the presumption under Illus. (a) may be drawn, depends upon the circumstances under which the discovery of the fruits of the crime are made with a particular accused, the time gap or the interval and the nature of the property involved, especially its quantity and character in the context. In some cases there may be other demerits also.

The question of raising a presumption arises only when the concerned accused cannot be connected with the crime in question except by reason of possession of goods concerned in the crime. [A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2501 and A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 54, Foll.; A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 476, Rel. on]: (1973) 2 Mys.L.J. 348.

Presumption under—Effect—Proof of receipt from another not necessary: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 51: 1958 Cr.L.J. 534.

The question what presumption arises from the fact of the accused having been found in possession of stolen articles must be answered after taking into account the entire situation which presents itself. A presumption of fact must be such as would naturally arise. This is quite clear from the language of S. 114 of the Evidence Act. Regard must be had to all the material circumstances before determining what presumption should justifiably be drawn. Thus, where it is clear that the person in possession of stolen property could not possibly have committed the theft, the only presumption that arises is that he received and retained it, either knowing or having reason to believe that it was stolen property and Illus. (a) to S. 114, is attracted to his case: 1962 Jab.L.J. 876: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 433: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 106.

The presumption under S. 114 (a) is one of the fact. It is not a presumption of law in which case, the Court will be required to reach that conclusion in the absence of evidence to the contrary. No doubt, when a person denies altogether his possession of stolen goods not in common circulation which possession the Court finds to be proved, it is normally easier to draw an adverse inference as to the person's guilty knowledge. But when he accounts for his possession of the stolen goods, the question which arises for consideration is whether his explanation is inherently or palpably false or such as to cast a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. Thus, when the charge is under S. 411, Penal Code and the accused denies knowledge of the fact that the goods in his possession were stolen, the question is whether a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act on the supposition that the accused had that knowledge: 1956 An.W.R. 282: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 755.

If the explanation offered by an accused person is plausible although a Court or a jury may not be convinced of its truth, the accused is entitled to an acquittal. The prosecution must show the explanation to be false. The recovery of the money does not lead to the inference that the accused was associated with crime in any way and there is no evidence to show that the currency notes lost are the very same currency notes recovered from the accused. In the absence of such connection no presumption could be drawn under S. 114 (a) of the Evidence Act either that the person is the thief or receiver of stolen property.

Circumstantial evidence in order to furnish a basis for conviction in a criminal case requires a high degree of probability, that is to say, sufficiently high that a prudent man considering all the facts and realising that the life and liberty of the accused depend upon the decision feels justified in holding that the accused committed the crime. It must be consistent and consistent only with the guilt of the accused. If any rational explanation is possible then there is an element of doubt of which the accused must be given the benefit: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 640: I.L.R. (1962) 1 Ker. 215: 1961 Ker.L.T. 1023.

The accused person was found in possession of a missing cycle. He pleaded that he purchased it. Hence, it could not be said that the burden was on him to prove conclusively that it was purchased by him. The accused in a case of theft is entitled to rebut the presumption under S. 114, namely, that he had stolen it by offering an explanation which is reasonable and probable. The prosecution must prove the guilt of the accused person. That does not mean that if the statute places the burden of proof on an accused he is not required to establish his plea; but when a presumption arises under S. 114, the degree and character of proof which the accused is expected to furnish in support of his plea, cannot be equated with the degree and character of proof expected from the prosecution which is required to prove its case beyond the shadow of a doubt: 1977 Cr.L.J. 298 (Goa).

Under Illus. (a), a presumption may be justifiable against a person found in possession of stolen property but not against one who is found in the company of such a person when he is offering it for sale. Unless the prosecution prove circumstances in which by statute a person may be presumed guilty under a particular section of the Cr.P.Code, the question of presumption of guilt does not arise: 43 Cr.L.J. 353: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 250.

8. Raising of presumption—Whether shifts onus of proof.—The onus of proving all the ingredients of the offence charged never shifts from the prosecution, even in cases in which a presumption under S. 114 (a), Evidence Act can be invoked: 1956 An.W.R. 286: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 1006.

The presumption under Illus. (a) of S. 114 of the Evidence Act, is one of fact and whether the Court or the jury ought to draw it or not must depend on the circumstances of each case. But the onus on the prosecution to prove the guilt does not change. If an explanation is given by the accused, it is for the jury to say on the whole evidence whether the accused is guilty or not that is to say, if the jury think that the explanation may reasonably be true, the accused is entitled to an acquittal: 1952 Cr.L.J. 979: A.I.R. 1952 Assam 97.

The illustration does not mean that the burden of proof is shifted on the accused. If the accused gives any explanation which in the opinion of the jury may possibly be true, although they do not necessarily believe it, then the Crown cannot rely upon the presumption and must prove the guilt of the accused just as in any other criminal case: I.L.R. 56 All. 250: A.I.R. 1933 All. 893. See also A.I.R. 1955 All. 696.

The presumption under Illus. (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act is not available to the prosecution, if the accused gives a reasonable explanation of his possession of stolen property. It is not, however, a reasonable explanation on the part of the accused to deny the existence of the facts proved by the prosecution, as to the ownership of the articles alleged to be stolen, their theft or his possession of the same. The explanation, which would render the presumption unavailable to the prosecution is an explanation of how articles belonging to the complainant are found in his possession shortly after they had been stolen. It is only when he offers such an explanation with regard to his possession that the presumption does not arise: I.L.R. 25 Pat. 262: 27 Pat.L.T. 323: A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 205.

A presumption under Illus. (a) is one which can be rebutted by the accused giving a reasonable explanation of his possession of the property in question. He is not bound to establish beyond all reasonable doubt that he obtained the property innocently. There is no question of the onus of proof being shifted on to the accused. If the explanation given by the accused is an eminently reasonable one and one which may well be true, the Court is bound to acquit the accused, even if it is not satisfied affirmatively that it is true: 23 Pat.L.T. 18: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 439; A.I.R. 1951 Kutch 10; I.L.R. (1951) Raj. 429: A.I.R. 1952 Raj. 97 [It is enough if the explanation is not inherently or palpably false]; I.L.R. (1958) Cut. 131: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 106. See also A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 618: I.L.R. 17 Luck. 182; I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 371: A.I.R. 1944 Sind 113.

The onus in a criminal case always rests on the prosecution and never shifts on to the accused. Before raising a presumption of guilt under S. 114 (a), the jury or the Court will be entitled to take into consideration the explanation of the accused in defence, whether supported by evidence or not and to find out for itself whether the explanation given by the accused even though not believed in its entirety is such as to raise a reasonable doubt in the mind of the jury or the Court as to the guilt of the accused: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 618: I.L.R. 17 Luck. 182.

Presumption under—Case under S. 411, Penal Code—If the stolen property is not recovered soon after theft the presumption does not arise—Even if the presumption arises but the explanation of the accused is possibly true, the onus is still on prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused: 1967 B.L.J.R. 304: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1181: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 300.

If the explanation offered by an accused person as to how he came by the goods recovered from him, but alleged to have been the stolen property is plausible, although a Court or a jury may not be convinced of its truth, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. The prosecution must show the explanation to be false. Otherwise the Crown would fail to discharge the onus imposed upon it by the law of satisfying the jury beyond reasonable doubt of the guilt of the prisoner. In such case, the burden of the proof never changed. It always rested upon the prosecution: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 482: 1957 Cr.L.J. 939: I.L.R. (1956) Andhra 538.

The burden cast on accused by Illus. (a) to S. 114 to satisfactorily account for his possession of stolen property is not as onerous as the burden of the prosecution to prove all the ingredients of the offence beyond reasonable doubt. Where the only evidence against an accused is possession of property recently stolen, a Court may infer guilty knowledge (a) if the accused offers no explanation or (b) if the Court is satisfied that the explanation is untrue; but if the explanation leaves the Court in doubt, the accused should be held not guilty: I.L.R. (1957) Cut. 680: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 51.

When a presumption arises against the accused by reason of the proof of his possession of stolen property, he is no doubt required by law to account for his possession. But it does not necessarily mean that he should prove his plea to the hilt. It is enough if his explanation might reasonably be true and consistent with innocence: 1944 All.L.J. 445: A.I.R. 1945 All. 19; A.I.R. 1955 All. 696: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1553.

The following propositions regarding the burden of proof in criminal trials may be deduced from the decided cases: General—(1) That in a criminal case the onus of proving the main issue is always on the prosecution and it never shifts on to the accused. Conspiracy—(2) That in a case of conspiracy, it is not enough that the prosecution theory is one theory which will explain the fact but it has got to be shown that it is the only theory which in a reasonable sense is compatible with the facts. (3) That under Illus. (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act, the Court may, but is not obliged to, make the presumption therein mentioned. (4) That even if the Court makes the presumption under Illus. (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act, the onus on the general issue is still on the prosecution. (5) That it is not the law that if the accused fails to account for his possession of the goods said to be stolen goods he must be convicted, if the other proved facts of the case do not predicate guilt. (6) That the accused is entitled to acquittal if he can give an explanation which may reasonably be true although the jury may not be convinced that it is true. (7) That the accused is not required to prove his explanation by adducing substantive evidence. In many cases it may be impossible for him to do so; particularly, if he alone knows the facts, for he cannot give evidence on oath on his behalf. (8) That the accused need not even give any explanation unless he is asked to account for his possession (Query): I.L.R. (1944) 1 Cal. 595: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 93.

9. Possession—What is.—In order to raise a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a), it must first be proved that the stolen property was in the exclusive possession of the accused and that there were no circumstances which could accord with contrary view or which could create a reasonable doubt in a judicial mind about it: 1959 M.P.C. 638: 1959 Jab.L.J. 576: 1959 M.P.L.J. 862; A.I.R. 1929 Sind 9 (D.B.).

In order to raise a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) the possession must be shown to be exclusive as well as recent. The prosecution must establish not only that the property was recovered from the house or other place in occupation of the accused but also that he was fully aware of its presence there: (1991) 44 Del.L.T. 185.

One of the main conditions precedent for drawing a presumption under S. 114 (a) is possession of stolen property with the accused. Such possession has not only to be recent but also exclusive. Mere recovery of the articles from the house of the accused by itself without further materials, may not be sufficient to establish exclusive possession of the same with the accused: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 134: 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 7.

In cases of pointing out, especially of stolen properties, the real question is not so much whether the accused was in physical possession of the properties hidden somewhere or buried on some field, as whether he was the person that so hid the properties, for a person who buries treasure in a spot unknown to others is really in possession of it and it does not matter whether it is in a field not in his occupation or in his own house. A person is said to be in possession of a thing when the facts of a case are such as to create a reasonable expectation that he will not be interfered with the use of it. Thus, a person who hides a thing is in possession of it because he gains thereby a reasonable guarantee of the use of it. Then if the accused does not satisfactorily account for its possession, mere denial of theft or possession is not explanation and the presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, can be drawn against him. The question, whether the person who has pointed out has not himself hidden, is purely a question of fact. If the Court comes to the conclusion on the facts that the accused has hidden the property in question, one important step in resorting to the aid of Illus. (a) to S. 114 of the Act is satisfied, viz., possession. [Line of enquiry as to whether the accused person who pointed out the thing was the person who had hidden it, discussed]: 1958 All.W.R. (Supp.) 38; A.I.R. 1958 Mad. 384.

Possession implies dominion and consciousness in the mind of the person having dominion over an object that he has it and that he can exercise it. Possession must be conscious and intelligent possession and not merely the physical presence of the accused in proximity to the object: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 534. For possessing a material object two elements are necessary, animus or intention and corpus. A person is said to be in possession of a thing when the facts of the case are such as to create a reasonable expectation that he will not be interfered with the use of it: A.I.R. 1950 Madh. Bh. 104 (D.B.).

It would be a reasonable inference to presume that people had committed theft or burglary if they were seen the next day with the stolen property in circumstances which suggested division of the booty. Mere physical relating arising from the possession of the object is insufficient to amount to possession which connotes control over the object possessed. The possession of stolen property should be exclusive as well as recent: 35 Cr.L.J. 994: A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 80.

Missing cow found in the cow-shed of the accused—No evidence that the accused had received the cow-dishonestly—Mere act of possession by the accused will not give rise to the inference under S. 114 that he was the receiver of the stolen property: 1987 Cr.L.J. 956: (1987) 63 Cut.L.T. 245.

Cl. (a) to S. 114 contemplates the presumption that the person in possession of stolen goods may be presumed to be either the thief or a recipient of the stolen property knowing the same to be stolen. But the basic foundation for such a presumption is that such person must be in possession of the property in question. Thus, where at the time when accused were arrested they were sitting in a stolen taxi, held, the accused could not be said to be in possession of taxi, no presumption of theft could be raised against them: (1984) 1 Bom.C.R. 154: 1984 Cr.L.R. 18; 1983 Cr.L.R. 85 (Guj.).

10. Possession must be recent.—The question as to what period is covered by the expression "soon after" in Illus. (a) must vary according to the circumstances of each case. The Court is not bound to draw this presumption and the Court must always ask itself whether in the circumstances of a particular case the presumption is one which in fairness to the accused can be drawn: (1941) 43 Bom.L.R. 629: A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 325. See also (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 63: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 292; A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 433.

"Soon after" — Meaning of — Interval should not be much between theft and recovery. It is not obligatory on Court to draw inference particularly when accused offers fairly satisfactory explanation: 1968 Cr.L.J. 895 (1): A.I.R. 1968 Assam 13.

The presumption under Illus. (a) to S. 114, Evidence Act, can be raised only when the person is found in possession soon after the theft. Lapse of time is an important factor to be considered. Where the case is one of theft of a bicycle, it has to be borne in mind that it readily changes hands; when it is not of any great value, a person who is found in possession of it about 12 months after the alleged theft cannot safely be presumed to be guilty of theft or of possession of stolen property knowing it to be stolen, and he cannot be required to explain how he has come by it, in such circumstances no conviction under

S. 411, I.P.Code, can be sustained: 47 Cr.L.J. 599: A.I.R. 1946 Sind 153.

In case of recovery of stolen property from the accused long after the theft, held, no presumption can be raised: A.I.R. 1918 Cal. 243 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 687; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 528.

Where the incriminating thing is one which may change hands quite frequently or is commonly available and is recovered from the accused many months after the theft, held, no presumption that either the accused was thief or a receiver of stolen property, can be drawn against him: 1984 Raj.L.W. 225.

The question as to what amounts to recent possession sufficient to justify the presumption of guilt in a particular case varies according to whether the stolen article is, or is not likely to readily pass from hand to hand. But the weight and nature of such presumption must vary according to the gravity of the offence and nature of the property involved: 109 I.C. 801: A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 213; A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 1; A.I.R. 1952 Him. Pra. 68; A.I.R. 1959 J.&K. 105 [Efflux of a period of nearly eight months was held not sufficient to take the case out of ambit of illustration]. Articles like muskets and Police great coats are not likely to pass readily from hand to hand, and their possession within 10 weeks of the theft can well be said to be recent: 1945 Nag.L.J. 17: A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 1: I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 151.

Information leading to discovery—Accused telling Police that he concealed the ornaments of which he gave discovery—Statement admissible in evidence—Theft detected and accused gave recovery of ornaments next day—Interval being small, the accused to be presumed thief—If interval were to be long, the presumption would be that he received the stolen articles: 32 Cut.L.T. 1083; 1980 Jab.L.J. 30 [Where recovery was made within 36 hours of the occurrence from the field of the accused.]

From Illus. (a) under S. 114, it is clear that the recovery must be soon after the commission of the crime. Proximity of time gap between the commission of dacoity and recovery of looted properties is the essence. An inference under S. 114(a) should never be reached unless it is a necessary inference from the circumstances of the given case, which cannot be explained on any other hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused.

Thus, where certain articles which were said to have been looted away in the dacoity were recovered from the accused after two days of the alleged offence and further the identifying witnesses were disbelieved regarding participation of the accused in the dacoity, held, the presumption as envisaged under S. 114 could not be made basis for conviction: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 65: (1990-1) 38 B.L.J.R. 222.

Illustration has to be read alongwith time factor—Recovery of stolen goods from accused two days after theft—Nothing suggesting that somebody else had kept the articles at the place of recovery—Presumption of dishonestly receiving stolen property may be drawn: (1964) 6 Ori.J.D. 284.

Where the stolen goods—gold and silver ornaments—were recovered from the accused within two days of the theft and the accused offered no explanation for being found in possession thereof, held, they could be presumed to have committed the offence under S. 411 of the Indian Penal Code: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 334: 1974 Cr.L.J. 277: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 565.

Where after five days of theft, stolen property was recorded from the accused, held, presumption could be raised that either he was a theft or receiver of stolen property: (1989) 2 Raj.L.W. 520.

Even though there was a lapse of 11 days, the discovery was from a place accessible to the accused alone and so the time factor cannot be said to be so long as to raise an inference about the article changing hands. Hence the accused can be safely held to be the offender: 1971 M.P.L.J. 498: 1971 Jab.L.J. 326 (D.B.).

If the interval between the commission of the offence and the recovery of the stolen article is of short period, the presumption can be raised that the person in whose possession the stolen property has been found is the thief. But when the interval is a longer one, the safer course is to draw a presumption that he is the receiver of the stolen property. Thus, where the interval between the commission of the offence and the recovery of the stolen wrist watch was of one month, held, a presumption could be raised that the accused was a receiver of the stolen property: 1986 Raj.L.W. 557.

Though there is no hard and fast rule to determine what is "recent" possession but where stolen watches were recovered from the accused four months after their theft, held, it could not be presumed that he was the thief or the receiver of stolen goods; what amounts to recent possession varies from the nature of the stolen goods; where goods cannot readily pass from hand to hand, a longer interval between the theft and recovery may be taken as recent: 1972 Ker.L.T. 608: 1972 M.L.J. (Cr.) 543.

The presumption under Illus. (a) to S. 114 can be drawn only when the accused is found in possession of the stolen property soon after the theft. Where the theft is alleged to have taken place earlier, and the recovery was made after 5 months of the alleged occurrence, it cannot be treated as "soon after the theft". Where the theft had taken in a busy place and the stolen articles could change hands quite rapidly in such a place, it would be illegitimate to call in aid Illus. (a) of S. 114 against the accused: 1973 B.L.J.R. 280.

Possession of stolen articles within six months of dacoity can be said to be recent in order to raise presumption under Illus. (a): 1960 M.P.C. 216: 1960 Jab.L.J. 356: 1960 M.P.L.J. 299; A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 17 (F.B.). But see 1978 Cr.L.R. (Raj.) 61 [Where the recovery was made more than six months after the report was lodged, held, no presumption under S. 114 could be raised]. See also (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 10 [Recovery after one year].

Where the barrel of a numbered gun carried away by dacoits was recovered from the accused after more than 8 months and he had no explanation for its possession, held, the presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) can be raised against him; the presumption can be raised if goods are found to be in possession of the accused soon after the theft though the Court may not be justified in drawing the presumption if long period had lapsed; but the lapse of time to justify raising the presumption would vary with the nature of the stolen property and facts of each case; if the stolen article is one frequently changing hands, much shorter period would be required but if it is such—as a gun barrel is—which does not normally change many hands, the presumption may be drawn after many months; the presumption is rightly drawn: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1830: 1974 Cr.L.J. 897: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 254.

When two idols with other properties stolen from a temple were recovered two and a half years after the theft from the accused, held, the nature of the stolen properties being such that they cannot be found in any other place than the temple from which they were committed theft of and there being no satisfactory explanation for his possession, a presumption could be drawn against the accused in accordance with Illus. (a) to S. 114, even after the expiry of the period of about two and a half years from the date of theft: 1985 M.L.J. (Cr.) 384; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 10 [Recovery after about five years of incident.]

11. Recovery from place accessible to others.—Generally speaking, where property is recovered from an open field at the instance of the accused the question whether the property was in his possession or not depends upon the actual words used by him when giving information to the Police. If the actual words used by him are such as to suggest that he had himself put the property there, the Court usually presumes that he was in possession of the property. But on the other hand, if the accused uses no such words when helping in the recovery of the property, it is not possible to presume that he was in possession of the goods for it is possible that he may be only knowing that the property was there without being in actual possession of it: 1952 Raj.L.W. 49. Whenever an accused person gets stolen things recovered from an open field, there are three possibilities always present, namely, (1) that the accused might himself have buried the things in the field, (2) that he might have seen some other person doing so, or (3) that he might have been told by some person who had seen somebody burying the articles. It is only when the Court can draw the first of these conclusions in a particular case that the Court can say that the accused was in possession of the articles found buried in an open piece of land. The mere recovery of the articles at the instance of an accused person and the absence of any explanation by him as to how he came to know that the articles were there is not sufficient for the Court to come to the conclusion that the articles must have been placed in that place by the accused and that he could not have acquired information about the presence of the articles at that place in some other manner: 1956 Raj.L.W. 165: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 234.

Recovery of stolen property at instance of accused person from place accessible to all and sundry—Property cannot be said to be necessarily in possession of any particular person: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 775; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 39: 1954 Cr.L.J. 335; (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 569.

Where the only incriminating circumstance against the two accused was that the stolen property was recovered from places not belonging to any of the accused as a result of simultaneous statements made by them to the Police, held, that in the absence of any other incriminating factor, mere discovery of the articles would not raise a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a), Evidence Act, either of theft or of receipt of stolen property by the accused knowing it to be such: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 169: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 71; A.I.R. 1956 Bhopal 40. But see infra. Admitting that the place from which articles were discovered was accessible to others but the fact that the articles were lying buried and had to be dug out indicates that the accused must have buried them there: 8 Sau.L.R. 339: A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 93.

Stolen articles found in accused's unfenced compound which was accessible to all—Mere fact of knowledge of accused of existence of stolen articles in such place is not conclusive proof of possession of those articles by accused: 31 Cut.L.T. 396.

Conduct of the accused while in Police custody leading to recovery to certain house breaking materials and other stolen articles from a bush closed to land of another person—Place of recovery is an open place accessible to everybody—It is difficult to hold positively that the accused was in possession of these articles: (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 499.

In a case of murder by poisoning, the recovery of incriminating articles from a place which is easily accessible to external agency and is not in exclusive possession of the accused or the articles are not in exclusive use of accused, cannot be treated as incriminating piece of evidence: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 321: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 38.

12. Mere knowledge of place of concealment.—The question of raising a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) arises for consideration only after it is proved that the accused was in possession of stolen articles, after the commission of theft. If the accused merely points out a place where the articles are hidden and produces those articles therefrom, there are several possibilities; one possibility is that he had knowledge of the exact spot where the articles were hidden, as he himself was an author of concealment. The second possibility is that he may have gathered that information from a person who was the author of concealment. Another possibility that can be envisaged is that he may have actually seen a person concealing those articles. If seeing a thief concealing those articles may not be objected to by that thief, as a thief might happen to be his friend or relation. It cannot be necessarily deduced from these circumstances only that he must necessarily be a thief. His knowledge without he being a thief, from other sources cannot be necessarily ruled out.

In absence of any other evidence, on mere pointing of a place where the articles were concealed, and on account of the production of those articles therefrom, it cannot be necessarily deduced that that person must be either a thief or a receiver of stolen property. If it had been pointed out very soon after the commission of the theft, no doubt it is a circumstance which will raise a very strong suspicion against the man. But a strong suspicion cannot take a place of proof. In the absence of any other evidence and in the absence of any incriminating statements made, at the time of giving information, as for example, that he was the author of concealment, this circumstance, found against that person can be explained on any other rational hypothesis. The circumstantial evidence therefore, will not be such as to be incompatible with the innocence of the accused. That person, therefore, cannot be presumed to be a thief or a receiver of stolen property: 1969 Cr.L.J. 471: A.I.R. 1969 Guj. 100.

The mere fact that a person points out the place in which stolen property is concealed does not give rise to any presumption under S. 114, or justify his conviction for the offence of receiving stolen property, still less for the offence of theft: (1938) 40 Bom.L.R. 927: A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 463.

The mere fact that the accused person points out the place in which the stolen property is concealed does not give rise to any presumption under S. 114 or justify his conviction of the offence of receiving stolen property. But that presumption would arise when the accused is not able to account for his possession of such stolen article: (1930) 32 Bom.L.R. 574: A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 244.

An inference under S. 114, Illus. (a) should never be reached unless it is a necessary inference from the circumstances of the given case, which cannot be explained on any other hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused. Where the stolen articles (drums) were recovered at the accused's instance from the compound of a Musafir-khana and it was not the prosecution's case that same were lying concealed or that the compound was under the lock and key of the accused, held, as it was possible that either it was the accused who had himself deposited those articles there or he only knew that they were lying there; the accused was entitled to benefit of doubt: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 483: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 828: 1976 Cr.L.J. 481: (1976) 1 S.C.R. 715.

The condition precedent for the application of Illus. (a) to S. 114 is that the accused must be in possession of stolen goods. But the production of property by itself would not necessarily prove his possession. It would at the most show that the accused had knowledge where the property was kept or concealed. Where the accused, without stating that he had concealed stolen property, merely produces it from a place to which other people could have access, it would not be sufficient to establish his possession even though the property may be concealed, because it is consistent with any other person having done so and the accused might have merely knowledge of it. In the absence of any incriminating statement made by the accused leading to the discovery of property, its production alone from another man's property or place or from a place of which he had only joint possession would not be sufficient to establish his possession. The possession of the articles must be clearly traced to him in order to justify the presumption under the illustration: (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 63: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 292. See also A.I.R. 1952 Him. Pra. 68: 1952 Cr.L.J. 1495.

13. Recovery from house in occupation of joint family.—Where stolen property is found in a house belonging to a Hindu joint family consisting of some male members, prima facie the karta may be deemed to be in possession but this will not follow as an invariable rule. Where the house was in occupation of a joint family consisting of the accused and his father and during the Police search the accused pointed out the places of concealment in the cowshed and bari from where the stolen articles were recovered, then in the absence of evidence that the accused was in exclusive control of the cowshed or of the bari, the possession of the stolen property cannot be attributed to him. The mere failure of the accused to explain how he came to know about the place of concealment will not justify a Court in drawing an inference against him on the question of possession: I.L.R. (1957) Cut. 164: A.I.R. 1957 Ori. 287. See also A.I.R. 1914 Cal. 396 (S.B.); A.I.R. 1951 Pat. 296; A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 534; A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 339; A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 758; 1975 Raj.L.W. 267.

Where in criminal proceedings against a postman under S. 52, Post Office Act, for secreting certain registered postal articles all that the prosecution had been able to prove was that those articles were found in an almirah of the house in which the accused lived jointly with his father and of which the key was furnished by the father, it would not be legitimate to infer that the almirah was in the accused's joint much less in his exclusive possession. The circumstances that the almirah contained, apart from the registered articles in question, certain other articles belonging to the accused cannot sustain an inference that the almirah was in the accused's possession exclusively or even jointly with his father. On the other hand, if the almirah also contained a large number of articles belonging to the father, since he had the key with him, it must be he who must be deemed to be in possession of the almirah and consequently of its contents, including the registered articles in question. The fact that the accused had the opportunity to get at the articles is not sufficient to infer exclusive possession of the accused of those articles. No presumption can, therefore, be drawn against the accused that he had secreted them from the mere fact that they were found in the almirah which, at best may be regarded as being in the joint possession of himself and his father. But even an inference of joint possession would not be legitimate. [(1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 595 (All.), Reversed]: (1963) 1 S.C.R. (Supp.) 408: (1963) 2 Lab.L.J. 667: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 822.

14. Presumption in case of carrier.—A carrier or the transporter, who carries or transports goods cannot generally be ascribed with the knowledge about the source of the property. It is hazardous to presume that because a property is stolen, the carrier or the transporter had the necessary knowledge that it was stolen property; presumption under Illus. (a) to S. 114 cannot be drawn in such a case. [1970 M.L.J. (Cr.) 59, (Mys.), Rel. on]: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2331 (Ori.).

15. Presumption of murder and robbery.—In murder cases, the Courts are reluctant to draw from the mere fact of the production by the accused of the property of the deceased, an inference that the accused committed the murder and have required the letting in of evidence to connect the accused with the crime. If there is no other linking evidence except the recovery of the property of the deceased at the instance of the accused, generally no such presumption for graver offence is drawn. Thus, where there was no evidence except the recovery of ornaments of the deceased in pursuance to the disclosure statement of the accused, to connect him with the murder of the deceased woman, held, a presumption of graver offence of murder could not be drawn against the accused under S. 114: 1984 Raj.L.W. 445 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 54; A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 135.

The mere possession by an accused person of articles which were on the person or in custody of a murdered man at the time of his murder without any explanation for such possession cannot lead to an inference that he took part in the murder or that he was privy to it. The presumptions mentioned in the illustration to S. 114 of the Evidence Act cannot be stretched to that extent. One can very well imagine a case where a jewel on the person of a murdered individual came to be in the possession of another without any kind of reasonable explanation being offered by that individual. The fact that no rational explanation is possible, or that the explanation offered is unacceptable, should not militate against the innocence of the individual with regard to the offence of murder. Something more is necessary than mere possession of articles. Ordinarily, the presumption from the possession of articles, belonging to the deceased by accused persons immediately after the murder, or robbery that the accused took part in the murder, should be drawn only where some more evidence is present to show that the accused persons were seen with the deceased immediately before his death or that the deceased was last seen alive in the company of the accused persons. Unless some kind of connecting link, however, remote it may be, is made out, between the movements of the deceased and the accused at or about the time of murder, even if no reasonable explanation can be suggested or invented by the Court for the possession by the accused of the stolen articles, it would be unsafe to convict the accused person of the offence of murder. Usually some testimony should be forth-coming that the deceased was last seen alive in the company of the accused or that the accused were found somewhere in the vicinity of the scene of murder at a time which has sufficient proximity to the incident. Unless some such connection can be made out, the inference of murder should not be drawn. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to show such connection: I.L.R. (1954) Mad. 602: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 526: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 152. Possession of property of murdered person, see A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 28: 55 Cr.L.J. 257; A.I.R. 1950 Madh. Bh. 76 (F.B.).

The presumptions mentioned in S. 114 are not exhaustive. Presumptions for graver offences may also be raised as the circumstances of the case would warrant. But no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what inference can be drawn; it all depends upon the circumstances appearing against the accused in the case. It is for the prosecution, therefore, to establish other circumstances and show further material to justify an inference of a graver offence to the exclusion of the lesser one. Where no article of the accused was found at the scene of occurrence which might directly connect them with the acts of murder and theft but some of the ornaments recovered were on the person of the deceased and those ornaments were recovered from the accused shortly after murder, held that murder and theft indeed appeared to be the parts of the same transaction, and the presumption of graver offence under Ss. 302 and 380, Penal Code, could be drawn against the accused: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 455: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 182: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 255.

The presumption that a person in possession of goods obtained by theft is aware of that circumstances is not confined to charges of theft but extends to all charges, however penal, not excluding even murder: I.L.R. 9 Pat. 606: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 513.

Bare circumstance that accused was found in possession of certain articles belonging to the deceased cannot lead to inference that accused is the murderer. [A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 400 and A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 522, Disting.]: 1984 Mah.L.J. 709; (1986) 3 Crimes 350 (Madh. Pra.); (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 172.

Mere possession of property belonging to the deceased is not sufficient to convict the accused under Ss. 302 and 380, I.P.Code; they could be convicted under S. 411, I.P.Code: 1984 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 163.

Though drawing of the inference under S. 114(a) is in the Court's option, the silence of the accused found to be in recent possession of the article may be taken into account with the other circumstances appearing in the case; the mere possession by the accused of the article, which was on the person or in the custody of a murdered person with no explanation therefor would not by itself lead to the inference that he took part in the murder or was a party to it. But if some other evidence or circumstance connects the accused to the crime of murder, recent and unexplained possession of the article would invite the inference that the accused was guilty of murder and robbery: 1982 Ker.L.T. 692.

The fact that a person was found in possession of property proved to have been in the possession of the deceased at the time of murder does not by itself indicate that that person had committed the murder or participated in it, in the absence of any other circumstance to connect the accused with the offence. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what inference could be drawn from a particular circumstance, but, broadly speaking, the single circumstance relating to the possession of these articles cannot compel a Court to draw the inference that the culprit was guilty under S. 302, Penal Code. It is not safe to invoke S. 114 (a) of the Evidence Act for finding the accused guilty under S. 302, Penal Code, on that circumstance alone: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 496: 1958 Cr.L.J. 600: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 273: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 222.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what inference should be drawn from a certain circumstance. Where, however, the only evidence against an accused person is the recovery of stolen property and although the circumstances may indicate that the theft and the murder must have been committed at the same time, it is not safe to draw the inference that the person in possession of the stolen property was the murderer. Suspicion cannot take the place of proof. From the solitary circumstance of the unexplained recovery of the two articles from the houses of the accused the only inference that can be raised in view of Illus. (a) to S. 114 is that they are either receivers of stolen property or were the persons who committed theft, but it does not necessarily indicate that the theft and the murders took place at one and the same time: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 54: 1956 Cr.L.J. 150, followed in A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 273: 1958 Cr.L.J. 600: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 496: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 222.

There can be no hard and fast rule as to what inference should be drawn from a particular circumstance. Whether the presumption could be stretched under S. 114, Evidence Act, even to a case of murder depends on the facts of each case depending mostly on the time factor. Where the statement of the accused under S. 27, Evidence Act, as a result of which articles belonging to the murdered woman were recovered, was made 12 days after the occurrence, it may not be quite safe to draw the inference that the accused had committed the murder or was privy to it. The reasonable course is to draw the conclusion that either he was the thief or receiver of stolen property: 1958 An.L.T. 419.

In cases in which murder and robbery have been shown to form parts of one transaction, recent and unexplained possession of stolen property in the absence of circumstances tending to show that the accused was only the receiver of the property would not only be presumptive evidence against the prisoner on the charge of robbery but also on the charge of murder. The question whether in a given case a presumption in the sense referred to above can be drawn must depend upon the facts of the particular case: I.L.R. (1953) Trav.-Co. 514: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 402; I.L.R. 32 Pat. 243: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 109 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1950 Madh. Bh. 104; 1954 Ker.L.T. 344: A.I.R. 1954 Trav-Co. 466; (1984) 3 Crimes 228 (Madh. Pra.).

Where an article admittedly belonging to the murdered person is found with an accused and the latter is unable to account for it, the circumstance can be relied on as an incriminating one: 54 Mys.H.C.R. 237.

(Per Desai, J.).—The meaning of Illus. (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act is not that the presumption is in the alternative; its plain meaning is that both the presumptions are possible and that which should be adopted in a case depends upon the circumstances. If the interval between the theft and the accused being found in possession is very small, the presumption can be that he is the thief. If on the other hand, the interval is relatively large, the presumption can be that he is the receiver. If the interval is very large, the Court may not draw any presumption. Possession is not an essential ingredient of the offence of murder and if a person cannot be convicted under S. 411, I.P.Code, because he is not found to be in possession, it does not follow that he cannot be convicted under S. 302, I. P. Code, also. If a person receives other articles, he may not suspect that the owner has been murdered, but if he receives clothes, and clothes of no particular value he cannot pretend not to know that the owner has been murdered. Other articles may be stolen on account of the value but used clothes of no particular value would not be stolen by any one. To say that unless there is evidence that the accused was seen near the place of the murder at or about the time of it, he cannot be convicted of the murder merely on account of his possession of the property removed from the deceased at the time of the murder, is fettering the discretion of the Court: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443: 1955 All.L.J. 468.

Where an accused is found in possession of the ornaments worn by the deceased at the time of the murder the question arises as to the inference to be drawn from this circumstance. When the accused does not offer any explanation of the possession but simply denies the fact, the question is whether this justifies an inference of robbery or whether in addition an inference that the accused has committed the murder of the deceased. The fact that an accused is not willing to admit that he took part in a robbery which is proved against him ought not to prejudice the question, whether he committed murder at the same time. In this respect, some theories in favour of the accused need to be considered and eliminated before drawing an inference of murder against the accused. The first is that it may be that some one merely committed the murder and went away leaving the ornaments. The second is that someone murdered the deceased and stole the property and then entrusted it to the accused. And the third is that the murderer who robbed the deceased of the ornaments was himself robbed by someone. After eliminating the possible theories suggested above, the Court is entitled, if it appears reasonable in all the circumstances of the case, to infer that an accused person committed a murder or took part in its commission, from the facts that he is found in possession of property proved to have been in possession of the murdered person at the time of the murder or is able to point out the place where such property is concealed and admits having concealed it there and fails to give any reasonable explanation of his possession: A.I.R. 1955 Sau. 93: 8 Sau.L.R. 339.

The presumption permitted to be drawn under S. 114, Illus. (a) of the Evidence Act has to be read alongwith the important time-factor. If ornaments or things of the deceased are found in the possession of a person soon after the murder, a presumption of guilt may be permitted. But if several months expire in the interval, the presumption may not be permitted to be drawn having regard to the circumstances of the case: 1954 Cr.L.J. 225: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 1 (Per Desai, J.)—The failure or refusal to offer an acceptable explanation is itself a circumstance, that is to be taken into consideration. As regards the effect of the failure or refusal to offer an explanation, the law makes no distinction between the inference of theft and that of murder. In every case in which an inference of theft can be made, an inference can also be made of murder, if it was committed in the same transaction as the theft, when the person offers no explanation, if one presumption can be drawn, the other also must be drawn: 1955 All.L.J. 468: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443.

It is well settled that on the stolen goods being recovered within a short time (on the fourth day in the instant case) after a murder and robbery are committed in a single transaction and the accused had no explanation for his possession of the looted property, held, it amounts to a presumptive evidence of the charge of theft or robbery with murder: 1977 Raj.L.W. 241 (D.B.); 1978 Raj.L.W. 272 (D.B.).

Where the prosecution succeeded in proving beyond any doubt that the commission of the murders and the robbery formed part of one transaction, held, recent and unexplained possession of the stolen property by the appellant justified the presumption that it was he, and no one else, who committed the murders and the robbery. [A.I.R. 1956

Where murder and robbery are proved to be integral parts of a single transaction, merely because discovery of articles was made after a long lapse of time, held, no presumption is permissible that the accused from whom the goods were recovered was only a receiver of stolen property and not guilty of murder: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 446: 1983 Cr.L.J. 846: (1983) 1 Crimes 784: (1983) 1 S.C.C. 330: (1983) 2 M.L.J. 46 (S.C.).

Where soon after the murder of the deceased, the accused was found in possession of his gold ornaments but he could not satisfactorily explain its possession, held, presumption arose that he not only committed murder but also robbery: 1984 Ker.L.J. 550: 1984 Ker.L.T. 774: 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 3; 1983 Cr.L.J. 694; A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 1598 [On the very next day of the murder the accused sold some ornaments belonging to the deceased and within 3-4 days recovery of remaining ornaments was made from his house—He also could not give any plausible explanation for lawful possession of said ornaments—Held presumption that he not only committed murder but also robbery could be raised]; 1995 Cr.L.J. 1880: (1995) 1 Ker.L.J. 265 (D.B.).

Under S. 114, Illus. (a), the Court may presume that a man who is in possession of stolen goods soon after the theft is either the thief or has received the goods knowing those to be stolen unless he can account for his possession. It has been authoritatively pronounced that this presumption does not rest there and can be extended to more aggravated offence such as murder. Such presumption is invoked if the Court is satisfied that the possession of the stolen property (in this case, ornaments) could not have been transferred from the deceased to the accused except by former being murdered. The presumption would be particularly applicable when there is a satisfactory proof that the ornaments were actually worn by the deceased immediately before the murder: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 317: I.L.R. (1964) Cut. 752: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 33.

Though Illus. (a) appended to S. 114, Evidence Act, refers to cases of theft, that provision of law is no more than an illustration and the presumption arising thereunder extends to all charges, however penal, including murder. Thus, the fact that the accused were seen with the deceased immediately before the murder and that they were found in possession of the goats belonging to deceased soon after the crime, go to show that they were involved in the murder of the deceased: (1954) 56 Punj.L.R. 183: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 201; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 400.

Murder case—Accused in recent possession of property of deceased—Presumption is that accused is not only thief or receiver of stolen property but also a participator in murder of deceased: 1966 Cr.L.J. 683: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 130; 1973 Ker.L.T. 886.

Robbery and murder—Unexplained possession of stolen articles soon after the crime will be evidence of murder also: 1960 Ker.L.T. 829.

Presumption—Presumption is one of fact and not of law and applies to all crimes—Illustration is enumerative and not exhaustive—Recent and unexplained possession of stolen property will be presumptive evidence against an accused on a charge of robbery as well as murder—Presumption is to be drawn with reference to time factor—Accused charged under Ss. 302, 397 and 201, Penal Code—He gave information while in custody, leading to the recovery of currency notes taken by him from the deceased—No explanation for possession of money is given by accused—Held, that presumption could be drawn against the accused for murder and robbery—Mere denial of possession could not help accused as the burden of giving reasonable explanation for the possession of money, soon after the crime, was on him, which he had not discharged: 1967 Cr.L.J. 357: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 21 (F.B.).

Charge of murder, robbery and receiving stolen property—Murder and robbery alleged to be simultaneous and part of same transaction—Finding of articles concerned in robbery in possession of accused—Nature of presumption to be drawn: I.L.R. 18 Pat. 450: A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 577.

Where gold ornaments worn by a lady who was murdered were recovered on the basis of the accused's discovery statement but there was nothing on record to connect the accused with the murder, held, no presumption of his being involved in the murder could be drawn merely because the accused remained silent; it is for the prosecution to prove its case affirmatively against the accused; however, the presumption that the accused was receiver of stolen goods could be drawn under S. 114; he could be convicted under S. 411 of the Indian Penal Code if its ingredients were proved: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1753: 1980 Cr.L.J. 1270.

In the absence of any evidence that the gold ornaments once pledged by the accused with certain persons were found with the deceased immediately before her murder, held, no presumption could be drawn that he had stolen them from the deceased, after killing her, at her house: 1973 Sim.L.J. 195 (D.B.), affirmed on this point in A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2773: (1973) 2 S.C.C. 808: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1.

Where certain ornaments which the deceased was wearing at the time of the incident were recovered at the instance of the accused and the time between commission of offence and recovery of ornaments was very short and a question arose as to whether the accused could be connected with the commission of the murder of the deceased-victim, held, the presumption for graver offences under S. 114, Illus. (a) could not be raised as there was nothing else on record to connect the accused with the murder but the recovery was sufficient to seek the conviction of the accused under S. 411, I.P.Code. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1063; A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 1753; 1984 Raj.L.W. 445 (D.B.), Rel. on]: 1986 Raj.L.W. 280 (D.B.).

When the prosecution has no case that the robbery or dacoity was committed by the accused, the mere fact that the accused was found to be in possession of the articles of the deceased need not raise a presumption that he is one of the murderers. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 1; (1912-13) 17 Cal.W.N. 1077; I.L.R. 13 Mad. 426; A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 400, Rel. on]: (1992) 2 Ker.L.J. 112: (1992) 2 Ker.L.T. 129: I.L.R. (1992) 3 Ker. 309 (D.B.).

Recovery of blood-stained barcha from the house of accused at the instance of accused—Accused 17 years old—Father of accused also prosecuted as being one of the participators in the crime of which accused was charged—Father living in the same house—Held, that the recovery at the instance of the accused had no bearing on the guilt of the accused for it was possible for the accused to have knowledge of the place where the barcha was to be found without himself being guilty of any offence: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 286: 56 Cr.L.J. 86.

Merely on the evidence of recovery of stolen property belonging to the deceased, from the house of the accused, and without any other evidence, the accused cannot be convicted of murder. Merely because the accused refused to give explanation about the possession of property stolen from a murdered person or gives unsatisfactory explanation, no inference can be drawn that the accused committed murder in the act of theft or robbery. The Court must be satisfied that the possession of the property could not have been transferred from the deceased to the accused except by the former being murdered: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1073: A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 119 (F.B.).

Where the only evidence against an accused person is the recovery of stolen property and although the circumstances may indicate that the property was taken from the deceased by the accused at the time of the murder, it is not safe to draw the inference that the person in possession of the property was the murderer: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 1052: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 755: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 135.

Per Mallappa, J.—No doubt possession of stolen articles soon after theft raises a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a), that the person in possession of the articles is the thief. But to draw a further presumption that persons found in the possession of stolen articles must have committed the murder of the owner of the stolen articles, other circumstances are necessary. In cases in which it has not only been shown that the stolen articles were in the possession of the deceased at the time of the murder but also that they could not have been removed without the deceased being murdered, the presumption of murder also would follow: I.L.R. (1954) Mys. 469: A.I.R. 1955 Mys. 17; I.L.R. (1951) Mys. 169: A.I.R. 1951 Mys. 1.

Where the valuables alleged to have been taken from the deceased were shown to have been recovered on the basis of the statements given by the accused after the lapse of one month of the disappearance of the deceased, held, this delay was fatal to the prosecution; if the recoveries put forth by the prosecution was relied on, it could lead only to the inference that they were either receivers of stolen property or were persons who committed the theft but it could not necessarily indicate that the theft and the murder took place at one and the same time. Even for drawing a presumption under S. 114, the possession of the stolen article by the accused must be soon after the theft: (1994) 2 Ker.L.J. 215 (D.B.). See also (1984) 1 Crimes 544 (Madh. Pra.).

Where as per evidence of an eye-witness, only three accused committed the murder and the remaining accused had merely looted the property which was after very short time recovered from them, held, the latter could not be convicted for murder but only for possession of stolen property under S. 114: 1994 Cr.L.J. 3407 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where there was no evidence against the accused connecting him with the murder except the recovery of the watch of the deceased at his instance, held, though the accused could not be convicted for murder of the deceased, he could be convicted under S. 411, I.P.Code, for keeping stolen property, by invoking illustrations to S. 114: 1993 Cr.L.J. 3901: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 110; A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 199: 1993 Cr.L.J. 181; A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 476: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 651; (1973) 2 Mys.L.J. 490 [Mere recovery of the deceased's jewels cannot connect the accused with the murder.]

It is an established rule that, if murder and robbery form parts of the same transaction, a presumption may be drawn against the accused for murder if he is found to be in possession of the jewels worn by the deceased in the absence of a reasonable explanation by him. But great care should be taken before drawing a presumption particularly in the case of a serious offence on slender material. Unless, therefore, some definite fact connecting the accused with the murder is established, the Courts should be chary to draw the presumption of murder from the mere fact of possession of the articles which were worn or were in the possession of the deceased: I.L.R. (1956) Andhra 173: (S.) A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 611.

The law is well settled that where murder and robbery are proved to have been integral parts of a certain transaction, the presumption that can be drawn from the possession of the property may, consistent with all the facts proved in the case, be that the person to whom such possession was traced not only committed the theft thereof but also committed the murder which forms part of the same transaction as theft. It must of course be established that, before any such presumption can be drawn, the primary thing to be proved is that the accused had no satisfactory explanation to offer for his possession of property. Further, where the accused offers an explanation, the burden of proving the truth of that explanation affirmatively does not rest on the accused. It still rests on the prosecution to prove that the explanation is not true. But where soon after the murder, a huge quantity of jewellery belonging to the deceased is found in the possession of the accused, the conclusion that the latter was a receiver of the stolen property is not correct. The accused in the circumstances must explain how he came by the property of the deceased. Since the explanation given by him, namely, that he got it from co-accused was palpably false, the correct conclusion to come to was not merely that the accused was guilty of receiving the stolen property but that he was the murderer: 1958 Raj.L.W. 353: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 338; A.I.R. 1966 Manipur 2: 1966 Cr.L.J. 767; A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 309; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 28.

The possession by an accused person of jewels belonging to a murdered person if unexplained, is presumptive evidence that he was the murderer as well as the thief: 12 Mys.L.J. 353: 39 Mys.H.C.R. 996.

Where murder and robbery of the jewels on the deceased person are proved to have been integral parts of the same transaction, the presumption that can be drawn from the possession of property which was on the deceased person may, consistent with all the facts proved in the case, be that the person to whom such possession was traced not only committed the theft of those jewels but also committed the murder which formed part of the same transactions as theft. But before any such presumption can be drawn, the primary thing to be proved is that the accused had no satisfactory explanation to offer for his possession of such jewels. Where the accused offers an explanation, the burden of proving the truth of that explanation affirmatively does not lie on the accused. The burden still rests on the prosecution to prove that the explanation was not true, if it is on the falsity of that explanation that the prosecution relies to invite the Court to hold that the possession had not been satisfactorily accounted for. The scope of the evidence on which the Court could come to a conclusion that the explanation was not satisfactory, must depend upon the circumstances of each case: (1954) 2 M.L.J. 673: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 1088.

The body of one Smt. Chandrani was found in a field and certain jewels she was wearing were found missing on her body. Some blood stains were present on the ground inside her house. The accused was found in possession of the above jewels soon thereafter. Held, that under S. 114 (a) of Evidence Act, the accused could be presumed only to be either the thief or retainer of the same knowing or having reason to believe that they were stolen. No presumption could be drawn under S. 114 (a) as to where the deceased was murdered and when and at what place the jewels were stolen from her person: 1968 All.Cr.R. 417.

Where the only evidence against an accused is the recovery of stolen property, although the circumstances may indicate that the theft and the murder must have been committed at the same time, it is not safe to draw the inference that the person in possession of the stolen property was the murderer. Suspicion cannot take the place of proof: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1075: I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 1323: 1973 Raj.L.W. 58 (D.B.); 1971 W.L.N. 317; A.I.R. 1992 S.C.W. 3357.

Where the accused is charged with murdering the deceased and with theft of articles on the person of the deceased, the inference or presumption of guilt for murder can safely be drawn, if the accused is in unexplained possession of articles of the victim after the crime, and if in addition, there is some evidence connecting the movements of the accused with those of the victim, either before or after the crime, thus in some manner or another establishing the nexus between the accused and the offence. The mere unexplained possession or production of articles of the victim by the accused would not be a safe basis to convict him for murder, when that is the only bare circumstance proved in evidence: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 168: 1966 Cr.L.J. 789: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 156.

Where only some of the robbed property was recovered from the accused and there was no direct evidence of the involvement of the accused in the commission of robbery, held, in view of presumption under the provisions of S. 114, the accused were liable to be convicted of offence punishable under S. 411, I.P.Code, only and not under Ss. 392 and 397, I.P.Code: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1066 (Del.).

Since the dead body of the victim was found in an open place, the presumption, which can be safely drawn, is that the accused is the receiver of the properties of the deceased; he is liable to be punished only under S. 411, I.P.Code: 1986 Cr.L.J. 103 (Raj.).

The mere circumstances of the trunk proved to have been taken away in the robbery having been recovered as a result of what the accused had said to the Police cannot connect him with any crime under S. 394 of the Indian Penal Code: 1959 Cr.L.J. 581: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 280.

16. Presumption of dacoity.—Once stolen property is recovered from the possession of a person under circumstances mentioned in Illus. (a) of S. 114 of the Evidence Act, the presumption of the knowledge, cannot ordinarily be limited in its scope or dissociated from the nature of the possession or the manner in which the property was originally acquired. If a person is charged under S. 395 and also under S. 412 of the Penal Code, there are usually circumstances for presuming the knowledge of the accused. It may not, however, be appropriate to convict a man under S. 412 of the Penal Code when he is not charged under S. 395, in the absence of circumstances indicating or suggesting that he had knowledge that the property for the possession of which he has been charged had been obtained by dacoity. Then again the time after which the property was recovered may also be a relevant circumstances in fixing or presuming knowledge about the nature of the possession: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1439: A.I.R. 1954 All. 684.

Where the accused is found to be in recent possession of the property stolen in a dacoity, it can be presumed that he was one of the dacoits or that he had dishonestly received or retained the property knowing or having reason to believe that the possession had been transferred by dacoits or that he had dishonestly received or retained it knowing or having reason to believe that it was stolen property: A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 421; 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 2: 1978 All.Cr.R. 334.

Recovery of stolen goods from accused three days after dacoity—Possible presumption that (1) he took part in dacoity, or (2) received goods knowing them to be stolen in dacoity, or (3) received goods knowing them to be stolen—Choice must depend on facts of each case: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 535: 1970 Cr.L.J. 601.

Mere recovery of ornaments cannot be said to have established that the accused was either one of the dacoits or receivers of stolen property: (1983) 2 Crimes 262 (Ori.).

The presumption under S. 114 is not confined to cases of theft. A like inference may be raised in the case of murder accompanied by robbery, in the case of burglary or in a case of dacoity. If some persons are found to be in possession of articles removed during the commission of dacoity immediately thereafter and they fail to explain their possession and take a false plea of denial recovery of properties from their possession which cannot be accepted in view of a large body of evidence from the side of the prosecution, a presumption can legally and legitimately be raised that they were the authors of the crime of dacoity: (1984) 58 Cut.L.T. 17: (1984) 2 Crimes 142; A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 106; 1960 B.L.J.R. 268.

Where the accused's statement led to the discovery of articles taken away by the dacoits, held, it raises a presumption under S. 114 that the accused had participated in the dacoity; his statement is admissible under S. 27: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1135 (Raj.); 1985 Cr.L.J. 1573; 1985 Cr.L.J. 1977 (Ori.).

Where valuable articles which were robbed after committing dacoity were possessed by the accused persons within a short time after the commission of dacoity, held, presumption under S. 114 clearly attracted that they themselves were the dacoits: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1042 (Kam.) (D.B.).

Where an article taken away by the dacoits was found in the possession of the accused after about two months of the dacoity and he was convicted under S. 395, Penal Code, held, that it would not be either fair or safe to draw the presumption that he took part in the dacoity, but that the circumstances of the case and his association with the other accused justified the presumption that he received the article with the knowledge that it had been removed in a dacoity and, therefore, his conviction should be altered into one under S. 412, Penal Code: A.I.R. 1957 Tripura 48: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1457.

Penal Code, 1860, S. 396—Prompt recovery of stolen articles from house of accused charged with dacoity—Strong presumption of complicity of accused arises: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 585: A.I.R. 1964 Tripura 54; 1982 Cr.L.J. 1656 (Del.); 1980 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 131: I.L.R. (1980) Madh. Pra. 1053.

Presumption—Dacoity: 1958 An.L.T. 476.

The presumption to be drawn whether the accused were receivers of stolen property or dacoits depends upon the circumstances under which the discovery is made; if the gap of time is too large, the presumption of the accused being concerned with the crime itself gets weakened; the presumption is, however, stronger when the discovery is made soon after the offence. The obvious reason being that disposal of property requires finding a person ready to receive them; the shortness of time, the nature of the stolen property, its quantity and character, determine whether the person having the goods in his possession received them from another or was himself the thief or dacoit. Thus, where the goods stolen were a large quantity of cloth, looted from the cartmen by a score of persons after pelting stones, and immediately afterwards searches were made and the goods were recovered from various persons, held, the presumption was rightly drawn that the persons from whom the goods were recovered were dacoits themselves and not merely the receivers of the stolen property: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 196: 1971 Cr.L.J. 260: (1970) 3 S.C.R. 720.

The factum of recovery of articles at the instance of the accused persons soon after the dacoity in the presence of police officers and panch witnesses, held, is itself sufficient to bring the case not under the provisions of S. 412, I.P.Code but under S. 395, I.P.Code with the aid of S. 114: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 486: 1985 Cr.L.J. 753: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 533.

Where on the basis of the evidence on record, though the accused could not be convicted under S. 395, I.P.Code, but in view of the fact that the articles proved to have been stolen in the course of dacoity were recovered very soon after the dacoity, held, the accused could be convicted under S. 412, I.P.Code: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 129: 1982 Cr.L.J. 610: (1982) 3 S.C.C. 214.

Where looted ornaments and other articles were not recovered from the possession of the accused shortly after the occurrence but were recovered two weeks thereafter and moreover the articles recovered were not of such nature as were not likely to change hands quickly, held, the only inference that could be drawn from the unexplained recovery of looted articles from their possession was that they were receivers of the stolen properties and not that they were the persons who had perpetrated the crimes punishable under Ss. 394, 397, 436 and 170, I.P.Code: 1977 Raj.L.W. 178: 1977 W.L.N. 218.

Where the only evidence against the accused was that ornaments stolen in dacoity were recovered from the house of the accused and there was no evidence that the accused was seen near the place of dacoity or of joining the gang, held, that it was not safe to convict the accused either under S. 395 or under S. 412; he could be convicted only under S. 411: 1958 M.P.L.J. 752: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 125; (1989) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 641 (Del.) [Where only part of robbed property was recovered.]

Per Desai, J.; Mushtaq Ahmad, J., contra.—A person who is in possession of goods carried away by dacoits soon after the dacoity can be presumed to be either the dacoit or to have received them knowing them to be so carried away: 1953 Cr.L.J. 848: A.I.R. 1953 All. 385; A.I.R. 1950 All. 398; 1980 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 144 (Cal.) (D.B.). But where there was a time lag between dacoity and recovery, no presumption as to participation in dacoity was permissible: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 65 (Pat.).

Where the accused was found in possession of radio-transistor immediately after dacoity, held, presumption could be drawn against the accused: 1985 W.L.N. (U.C.) 545.

Where property stolen in dacoity is recovered from the house in which the accused who was aged 17 years was living with his elder brother (who was also another accused) and it was not known whether some other persons were also staying there, it was incumbent on the prosecution to show that the accused was in exclusive possession of the house in circumstances on which it could be presumed that he knew of the presence of these stolen articles in the house. Where the prosecution has failed to lead evidence on these points it must take the consequences. In these circumstances, the conclusion that the suit-case containing the stolen articles was in the possession of the accused cannot be arrived at, without there being a reasonable doubt about it. The benefit of that doubt must go to the accused: A.I.R. 1958 Tripura 40: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1549.

Certain articles which were stolen in a dacoity were found in the house of D. At the time of the recovery of these articles, the accused who was brother of D, made a statement that the articles were handed over to D by him. Held, that actual possession was that of D. The mere fact that the accused had knowledge about their existence with D could not be enough to draw a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) of the Evidence Act against the accused: 1960 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 197.

When an accused was convicted under S. 412, of the Penal Code, and the Judge holding that under S. 114, he must be presumed to have known the nature of the dacoity, awarded him the maximum penalty, held, that as the presumption alone would not justify fixing the accused with knowledge that the goods recovered from him had been obtained by dacoity, the sentence was excessive: 59 I.C. 204: 32 C.L.J. 89.

17. Deaf and dumb accused.—From the mere fact that a deaf and dumb mute was found in possession of articles stolen and obtained by house-breaking, an inference under S. 114, that that person should have committed the offence of house-breaking and theft cannot be drawn, because such a person cannot be made either to understand what he is asked or to give an explanation. It is only on failure to explain the possession when an explanation is asked for that the presumption under S. 114, arises. No conviction on such a presumption of guilt can be sustained: A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 60: (1945) 2 M.L.J. 407.

In order to raise the presumption under Illus. (a) to S. 114, the accused must first be given an opportunity to account for his possession. When that has not been done, the accused cannot legally be convicted under S. 380 or 411, I.P. Code. The fact that the accused is dumb does not do away with the necessity to get the explanation of the accused, especially when he is able to express his thoughts through signs. In such cases the Court should get the aid of an interpreter and get the explanation of the accused. If that is done the conviction based on the presumption from the mere fact of possession is unsustainable: 53 Mys.H.C.R. 162.

18. Illustration (a)—Illustrative cases.—The accused from whom the stolen properties were recovered had not been able to give account for his possession of this property, but he gave three explanations at three different stages and it could safely be presumed that he was aware of the fact that neither he, nor his mother nor his father could have honestly acquired this property. There was direct evidence that the accused was in possession of this property shortly after they were stolen from the complainant's house, though they were recovered from him more than four years after theft. Held, that the accused must have known fully well that this property, which was in his conscious possession, was stolen property, and that his conviction under S. 411, Penal Code, was proper: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 921: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 310: A.I.R. 1961 Raj. 35.

Accused proved to have disposed of property stolen—No evidence as to theft—Conviction not sustainable: I.L.R. 54 Bom. 171: A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 155.

An accused was sentenced under S. 411, Penal Code under the following circumstances. The stolen buffalo in the case was seized from the gher belonging to the family consisting of his father himself and two brothers. It was at a distance of above 2 furlongs from his house. It had no gate under lock and key. It was open for anybody to enter; it was in an abandoned state. Near the gher was living a bad character. The accused had admitted the seizure from the gher but stated he did not tie it there and somebody else must have done it. Presumption of recent possession was raised and he was convicted. Held, the presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) of the Evidence Act can be raised only if the person found in possession is unable to account for his possession. In the circumstances, it could not be held that he was in possession of the buffalo recovered and his version that somebody might have tied it there is not unreasonable. It cannot be said that he had not accounted. There is no question of a burden being shifted on the accused in the case. On the facts and in the circumstance the presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) could not and ought not to have been raised: 1952 All.L.J. 736: A.I.R. 1953 All. 136.

Where the accused who were alleged to have stolen complainant's bullocks in the night, were found carrying the bullocks in the next morning at a distance of about six miles from the residential village of the complainant and the complainant and other persons were beaten by the accused when they were challenged, and there was neither any oral evidence nor any circumstances established on the record which could indicate that the accused had committed the theft, the only presumption which could be drawn from the facts would be that the accused were found to be in possession of the stolen property knowing them to be stolen and not that they had stolen them: 1966 All.W.R (H.C.) 549: 1966 All.Cr.R. 324.

Penal Code, 1860, S. 411—Stolen bullock recovered from accused little less than a year of theft—Presumption under Illus. (a) cannot be drawn against him: 1964 Cur.L.J. 155: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 338: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 400.

Merely because a cow, gone for grazing, was lost and later found in cowshed of the accused with a newborn heifer, held, no presumption as to dishonest intention could be drawn from the mere act of possession in the absence of any evidence: 1987 Cr.L.J. 956: (1987) 1 Crimes 687: (1987) 63 Cut.L.T. 245.

Where an accused receiver of a stolen cycle pleaded to have obtained it under pledge but the document in support of transaction of pledge did not mention the pledger nor was it proved for want of witnesses and several other cycles were also recovered from his possession, and it was not shown that the accused or his family members were maintaining any books without which the business of pawn-broking cannot be carried, held, the possession of cycles not having been accounted for, a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) may be raised that the accused had received the goods knowing them to be stolen. [(1971) 3 All E.R. 881; A.I.R. 1943 P.C. 211 and (1914) 84 L.J. (K.B.) 396, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 1561: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1048.

Where the accused were found in unexplained possession of the property belonging to the deceased but it was not known whether his movable property were removed from the possession of the deceased during his life time or after his death, held, the accused could not be said to be guilty of theft or even receiver of stolen property by resort to S. 114, Illus. (a) of the Evidence Act; proper section applicable to such a case was S. 403, I.P.Code: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1425 (Madh. Pra.).

Disclosure statement by accused—Discovery of articles in consequence of that statement—Possession of stolen articles with accused could be presumed: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 293: A.I.R. 1964 Him. Pra. 27.

The production of stolen property as a result of pressure or inducement by the Police does not stand on the same footing as an improperly obtained confession. When an involuntary confession leads to the recovery of stolen property, the recovery as regards its admissibility stands on the same footing as a recovery without an accompanying voluntary or involuntary confession and, in the absence of an explanation by the possessor is subject to the presumption that the possessor is either the thief or a knowing receiver if the production is shortly after the theft: (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 545: A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 5.

Stolen property—Receiving or retaining of—Husband storing looted property in house—His wife barely acquiescing in keeping such property in house—Such passive partnership is not enough to sustain charge under S. 412 against wife: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 344 (All.).

Accused found in possession of property taken in robbery soon after commission of robbery—Accused presumed to be guilty under S. 411, Penal Code, unless he could explain possession thereof: 1964 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 78; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 16.

Possession must be exclusive and recent—Stolen articles found in fenced compound of accused after ten days from theft—Accused not accounting for possession—Accused liable under S. 411, I.P. Code: 31 Cut.L.T. 396.

Presumption whether person is thief or receiver of stolen property depends on facts and circumstances of each case—Telegraph wires found in possession of accused—Accused denying recovery but giving no satisfactory explanation of their possession—Accused can be presumed to be receiver of stolen property: 31 Cut.L.T. 1022: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 123.

Where certain electric goods stolen from an Electricity sub-Station were seized from house of the accused and such goods were not commonly available in the market, held, a presumption that possession thereof was unlawful could be made; conviction under Ss. 379 and 411, I.P.Code, upheld: 1992 Cr.L.J. 121 (Ori.).

Ghee stolen from tins in a train was found in a railway wagon occupied by five porters and a policeman—No presumption can arise: A.I.R. 1929 Sind 7: 23 Sind L.R. 5.

Accused found to be in possession of stolen articles two days after theft—No evidence to show that accused committed the theft—No explanation by accused about possession of stolen articles—Accused must be presumed to be receiver of stolen properties and as such is liable for punishment under S. 411, I.P.Code—There is no legal bar to conviction of accused under S. 411, even though he was charged only under S. 380, I.P.Code in view of S. 237, Cr.P.Code: (1964) 6 Ori.J.D. 12: I.L.R. Theft of revolver in October—Revolver found with accused in following May—Presumption: 1933 All.L.J. 523: A.I.R. 1933 All. 461.

Where one of the accused was found to be liable for the offences under Ss. 380 and 454 read with S. 34 of the Indian Penal Code by breaking open a godown and stealing copper wire bundles therefrom and trucking them away for sale to the brokers at a weigh bridge and though the accused's presence at the godown was not proved yet he was found in possession of duplicate stolen keys of the godown at the weigh bridge, held, having no explanation for the custody of the duplicate keys, a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) could be raised against him of the probable facts which rendered him guilty; conviction upheld but sentence reduced. [A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 186; A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 261; A.I.R. 1950 Mad. 714, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 514: 1974 Cr.L.J. 469: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 544.

Where an accidented truck allegedly stolen and found soon thereafter in possession of the accused who explained his possession as having received it from the owner for repairing and plying and thereby recover the expenses incurred on the repairs, held, the explanation, fortified by the owner's writing, is reasonable; no presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) could be raised; conviction under S. 411 of the Indian Penal Code upheld by the High Court even when no charge thereunder was framed, set aside: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1097: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 882: 1976 Cr.L.J. 842: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 747.

It is more than doubtful if any presumption under S. 114 can arise against any person merely because his finger-prints were found upon a piece of stolen property: 196 I.C. 679: A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 479.

Where a person found in possession of stolen property shortly after it was stolen presumption under S. 114, Illus. (a) arises, and hence Sessions Judge cannot expunge the charge under S. 379, I.P. Code, without going into the evidence: 150 I.C. 558: A.I.R.

20. Presumption regarding consideration.—(See also Note 31, Ss. 101-104, supra). Under S. 118(a) of the Negotiable Instruments Act, until the contrary is proved, the presumption that every negotiable instrument was made for consideration shall be made. The presumption is rebuttable one: (1966) 32 Cut.L.T. 994. While the statutory presumption under S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act is mandatory, the presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act is permissive depending upon the exercise of discretion by the Court: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 219.

While Illus. (c) to S. 114 is confined to the acceptance or endorsement of a bill of exchange, S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act, applies to the making or drawing of it also: A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 599 (D.B.).

Consideration is presumed in the case of negotiable instruments and need not be proved independently as in the case of an ordinary suit founded upon contract. Circumstances may, of course, exist which would weaken the ordinary presumption that a negotiable instrument has been executed for value received and when all the facts are before the Court presumption raised by S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act may be rebutted and the burden of proof shifts back to the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 334 (F.B.).

Irrespective of any recital in the instrument or any allegation in the plaint regarding consideration, the law presumes that the instrument was made or drawn for consideration. The presumption is that there was consideration and not that there was any particular consideration, that which might be recited in the instrument or that which might be alleged in the plaint. The presumption arises as soon as the execution of the instrument is proved and the presumption continues until "the contrary is proved", that is, until it is proved that there was no consideration. It must be proved that there was no consideration at all for the instrument. Mere proof that the particular consideration recited or alleged did not exist may not suffice, though such proof must naturally be a circumstance to be considered in deciding whether there was no consideration at all. Therefore, a plaintiff who, quite unnecessarily, adduces evidence to prove a certain consideration but is unable to prove that consideration, need not necessarily lose his action for that reason. The burden of proving that there was no consideration is on the defendant and the burden has to be discharged irrespective of the failure of the plaintiff to prove a particular consideration which he sets out to prove: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 925.

In a suit on a bond the primary burden is on the plaintiff. He must prove execution and consideration. But once he proves or it is admitted, that the signature or thumb-mark (it does not matter which) is of the defendant's then the presumption arises and the burden shifts to the defendant. He can then either prove that he cannot be charged because of fraud, etc., or that the presumption under S. 114 cannot on the facts fairly arise. If he succeeds in doing that, then the burden shifts back: I.L.R. (1939) Nag. 160: A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 78.

Presumption that negotiable instrument is supported by consideration arises and burden of rebutting this presumption is on defendant: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 217.

It is open to the Court to consider in its proper setting, the fact that the drawer of a bill of exchange was a man of business, and the acceptor was a young and ignorant person completely under the former's influence. This is one illustrative fact which the Court may consider in raising the presumption. There may be other circumstances which may also justify the Court in declining to raise the presumption. S. 114 of the Evidence Act is a general provision which enables the Court to presume though not obliged to do so, that a bill of exchange or a promisory note was founded on a good consideration. S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, however, enacts a special rule of evidence which operates between parties to the instrument or persons claiming under them in a suit or proceeding relating to the bill of exchange and does not affect the rule contained in S. 114 of the Evidence Act, in cases not falling within S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act: (1965) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 152: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 920; A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 59 (D.B.).

The difference between S. 114, Evidence Act, and S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act, consists only in this, that under the first the Court has a discretion to make the presumption or not, whereas under the second the Court is bound to start with presumption, but once the presumption is made, there is no difference between the two cases: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 925.

Under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act there is a presumption that every negotiable instrument is executed for consideration: A.I.R. 1977 Pat. 98: 1976 B.B.C.J. 338: 1976 B.L.J.R. 235 (D.B.).

Presumption under S. 118, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881—Rebuttal—Nature and onus of rebuttal: (1965) 78 Mad.L.W. 573: 1965 Mad.W.N. 293; (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 407; A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1316.

Presumption is not rebutted simply because of some variation between recital in the pronote and the evidence led by the plaintiff regarding the payment of consideration: (1971) 1 A.P.L.J. 252.

Despite the failure of the plaintiff to establish that consideration passed in cash for the promissory note, he may get a decree on the basis of admission or evidence placed on record from the other side provided the same establishes that there was some other kind of consideration in lieu of which the promissory note could be executed. The presumption under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act that the promissory note was made for consideration does not fail on account merely of the consideration being shown to be not the same as indicated in the promissory note: A.I.R. 1985 All. 12. See also (1979) 20 Guj.L.R. 195.

Where the loan and the promissory note are contemporaneous, the presumption under S. 118(a) of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 cannot be excluded except where the executant is dead and his brothers and sons are sued on the pronote on the ground of the debt having been contracted for the joint family; however, the presumption under S. 114(c) may even then be raised provided the payment of consideration is proved. [A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 182, approved in A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 920, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 96: 1973 W.L.N. 778.

Suit against son on promissory note executed by Hindu father leading immoral life—Presumption is not available: 1961 All.L.J. 681.

In a suit on a promissory note, the initial burden is on the plaintiff to prove execution of the pro-note and only when this burden is discharged, the Court raises a presumption of passing of consideration for the instrument in the plaintiff's favour: 1986 Ker.L.J. 882.

Once the defendant shows either by direct or by circumstantial evidence or by use of other presumptions of law or fact that the promissory note is not supported by consideration in the manner stated in the promissory note or in the manner stated in the suit notice or in the pleading, the evidential burden shifts to the plaintiff and the legal burden of the plaintiff is revived, i.e., to prove that the promissory note is supported by consideration and at that stage, the presumption of law covered by S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, "disappears" and no longer subsists. 21. Presumption regarding continuance of state of things.—Presumption that things remain in their original state. See 11 M.I.A. 309: 11 I.C. 472; 9 I.C. 322.

The presumption mentioned in S. 114, Illus. (d) is a permissive presumption and Court of fact cannot be compelled to raise the presumption in favour of either party: 194 I.C. 428: A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 536. See also 1931 Mad.W.N. 1312 (a case of conviction under S. 69, Provincial Insolvency Act).

If any state of facts can reasonably be conceived to sustain a classification so as not to come within the bar of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India, the existence of such state of facts must be assumed: 1954 All.L.J. 618: A.I.R. 1955 All. 33.

S. 114 does not go so far as to enable the Court to presume that a certain state of things existed in the past without any proof from the party who is required to satisfy the Court on the point: (1930-31) 35 Cal.W.N. 133: A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 815.

The inference, that a given fact or set of facts whose existence at a particular time is one established in evidence, continues to exist as long as such facts usually exist, may be carried upwards or downwards where a state of facts for long period of years has been satisfactorily proved to have existed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumitur retro. This is particularly the case where a party to the suit could have produced documentary evidence in its possession to rebut the presumption: 1955 An.L.T 624: 1955 An. W.R. 734. But see infra. The rule of evidence is in favour of presuming the continuity of things shown to exist at a prior date. There is no rule of evidence by which one can presume backwards: I.L.R. (1951) Pepsu 373: A.I.R. 1951 Pepsu 18; (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 763: A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 707.

If a thing or a state of things is shown to exist, an inference of its continuity within a reasonably proximate time both forwards and backwards may sometimes be drawn. The presumption of future continuance is noticed in Illus. (d), S. 114. In appropriate cases, an inference of the continuity of a thing or state of things backwards may be drawn under this section, though on this point the section does not give a separate illustration. The rule that the presumption of continuance may operate retrospectively has been recognised in India. This is rule of evidence by which one can presume the continuity of things backwards. The presumption of continuity weakens with the passage of time. How far the presumption may be drawn both backwards and forwards depends upon the nature of the thing and the surrounding circumstances. Held, in the circumstance of the case, that the High Court rightly refused to draw the inference from the state of things during 1892 to 1909 that the ancestors of the plaintiffs held frontier plots in 1863: 1966 S.C.D. 485: (1966) 1 S.C.A. 35: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 605. See also 1995 Punj.L.J. 337.

No presumption can be made that a state of things that once existed continued to exist when that would militate against the fundamental presumption of law in favour of innocence. So merely because a person is shown to have been a member of an assembly before it was declared unlawful, he cannot be presumed to have continued as a member thereof after it was declared unlawful, because the initial presumption of law is in favour of innocence and lawful conduct: I.L.R. 55 Bom. 484: (1931) 33 Bom.L.R. 90: A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 121.

When a certain state of affairs has been proved an inference of continuity backwards may sometimes be drawn: 1968 Ker.L.R. 327: A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 21.

Applicability—Applicants and their predecessors in possession of deity's properties as marfatdars by hereditary right of succession for 100 years preceding application and no outsider ever holding such trusteeship—Held, presumption backward should be invoked that applicants were in possession of marfatdari right in such character even since time of founder: 34 Cut.L.T. 1111.

If the subject is hillock the presumption backward can be stretched upto, say a few years. But if the subject is a soap bubble it would be inept to presume that the bubble remained like that even for half an hour prior to the time. A backward presumption regarding existence of lease even for a few months prior to the date of proof of its existence may not be found in law: (1990) 2 Ker.L.T. 388: (1990) 2 Ker.L.J. 245: (1990) 2 Ren.C.R. 552.

Inference of continuance whether backwards or forwards is an inference of fact and may, therefore, be rebutted. Accordingly, a decision in S. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, proceedings in regard to possession of any specific plot of land can be taken forwards or backwards, within reasonable limits to the appointed date but it is always subject to rebuttal: (1977) 44 Cut.L.T. 615.

A state of affairs which is shown to exist at one time in the past is presumed to continue as it was: (1962) 64 Bom.L.R. 322: 1962 Nag. L.J. 428: I.L.R. (1962) Bom. 417: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 100; A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 247 (D.B.).

A presumption under S. 114, Illus. (d) can be drawn only on the existence of acceptable evidence of possession upto a particular time and there is no sufficient evidence of possession anterior to that date; this "presumption backwards" should be drawn on reasonable probabilities and legal inferences from proved and admitted facts alone, not on speculation and conjectures. [A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 409, Rel. on]: (1985) 1 An.W.R. 139: (1984) 2 An.L.T. (N.R.C.) 101.

Where the plaintiff and before him his father were shown by documentary evidence, to have been in possession of the land as tenants till rabi, 1973 but the defendants contended that the land stood in his name in the revenue records and was in his possession since 1971 when the plaintiff's father had surrendered it to them, held, the burden lay on the defendants to displace the presumption of the plaintiff and his father continuing to be in cultivating possession of the land; in the absence of evidence on the record as to how and under what circumstances the plaintiff's father had surrendered the land and on what basis the entries in favour of the defendants were made in the revenue records, the plaintiff is presumed to have continued in possession in 1972 when he sued the defendants; the lower appellate Court's decree reversed and that of the trial Court's restored: 1986 Punj.L.J. 19.

Suit for declaration of right of drainage of irrigation water—Evidence showing long user of drainage by plaintiff—Held, once long user was established user must be presumed to be as of right until contrary was proved: (1966) 79 Mad.L.W. 705.

Coconut, arecanut, jack, rubber, mango trees and pepper vine in existence in 1936-37 will be presumed to be in existence in 1939-40: 1966 Ker.L.J. 313: 1966 Ker.L.T. 333: A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 286.

In the case of land like jungle land, waste land, sand bed, hill top, etc., where actual cultivation and acts of possession of similar nature are not to be expected, possession would follow title. But Illus. (d) to S. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act would not apply to the land such as one covered by pepper garden which can never be called jungle land. A momentary delivery of possession, even of real possession and not symbolic possession, not followed up by subsequent possession and enjoyment, will not raise, in the case of such cultivated land, the presumption that it is continued for years together till the filing of the suit, in the absence of evidence on the part of the claimant that he and his people continued on the land after the delivery of possession and continued the cultivation: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 463.

Presumption of continuance of relationship of landlord and tenant after decision in rent suit, see 71 Cal.L.J. 100. On this illustration, see also A.I.R. 1941 P.C. 11.

Where it was clear from the documentary evidence that the premises was being used as residential premises before and after the purchase by the petitioner, held, in the absence of evidence that he converted the building into non-residential building, the presumption under S. 114, Illus. (d) came into play and the burden was on him to show that the state of affairs had changed: (1989) 2 M.L.J. 164.

Where a plaintiff proves that he got into possession of a land by settlement from the landlord and got a receipt from him, his possession would be presumed to continue till he is dispossessed: 1956 B.L.J.R. 108: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 92.

A civil Court's decree for possession in favour of a tenant is admissible as presumptive proof of his possession; the tenancy rights having become more valuable than the proprietary right, no tenant would surrender the possession of his tenancy land; there is a strong presumption of his continuing in possession: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1463: I.L.R. (1985) Him. Pra. 823.

Once the ownership is proved its continuance has to be presumed under S. 114 unless it is shown that either the owner or his successor-in-interest in any way transferred the property or abandoned it: 1979 All.L.J. (N.O.C.) 52.

Continuance of jurisdiction or power vested in officer by statute should be presumed unless it is ousted by statute expressly or by necessary implication: 1971 Tax.L.R. 648 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Where assets of plaintiffs were proceeded against in order to recover sales tax dues and the plaintiffs contended that defendants alone were liable as there was a dissolution of firm on 19-8-1977 but there was no public notice regarding dissolution and no notice to the sales tax authorities was given, and further the evidence showed that for the preceding assessment year the firm was continuing with plaintiffs also as partners, held, in the absence of evidence, the presumption must be in favour of continuance of the partnership with all the partners: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 239: 1987 Ker.L.J. 205.

Illustration (e)

22. Scope and applicability of Illustration (e).—The section read with the illustration, only raises a presumption, but that presumption must naturally be a rebuttable presumption; and a presumption is only a mode of proof which has to be considered alongwith other evidence. If there is evidence to the contrary, which the Court believes, the presumption can be of little avail: 1955 B.L.J.R. 583: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 161.

It is to provide for cases which on account of lapse of time, may not admit of clear and direct proof, that the presumption under S. 114 is sanctioned. There is no scope for presumption when facts are known: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 392.

Illus. (e) to S. 114, Evidence Act permits a presumption to be drawn in matters of procedure. That provision does not permit a presumption to be drawn where the question does not relate to the manner of doing an official act but goes to the root of the validity of that order: A.I.R. 1956 All. 689; A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 71: 1958 M.P.L.J. 8.

S. 114, Illus. (e) involves a mere formality or a detail of procedure in the routine of litigation or of a public officer's action. A presumption does not extend to the competence or the authority of person or body performing the particular act. The words "regularly performed" means "performed in accordance with the formal procedure": (1968) 1 Mys.L.J. 352: 13 Law Rep. 729.

Illus. (e) to S. 114 cannot and does not apply where the point at issue is not whether an official act was properly performed, but the point at issue is whether such an act was in fact performed, and (2) where evidence has been led on behalf of the Government or the concerned authority to prove that a particular official act had been regularly performed and that evidence clearly shows that such performance had not taken place. In either of these cases, there is no place or scope for drawing any presumption under S. 114. [A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 368 and A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 284: (1981) 83 Bom.L.R. 586: 1982 Mah.L.J. 229.

There is no presumption in law that official act has been regularly performed when the act itself is shown on the face of it to be unauthorised or not legal: A.I.R. 1989 Del. 51.

S. 114 is the source of presumptions of regularity to be invariably drawn in respect of public documents which form the acts or records of the acts of the sovereign authority, official bodies and Tribunals and of public officers—legislative, judicial and executive [Case law exhaustively discussed]: A.I.R. 1983 Bom. 1: 1983 Mah.L.J. 339.

23. Presumption is discretionary.—The presumption under Illus. (e) of S. 114 is discretionary one. The Court may or may not raise such a presumption. When a statutory authority makes an order, a presumption can be raised that it had followed the prescribed procedure. Illus. (e) permits a presumption to be drawn only in matters of procedure. It does not permit a presumption to be drawn where the question does not relate to the manner of doing an official or judicial act, but cuts at the root of the validity of the Act: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1749; (1989) 2 Raj.L.R. 755; (1992-1) 12 Guj.L.H. 253: (1992-1) 33 Guj.L.R. 434; A.I.R. 1989 Cal. 14: (1988) 1 Cal.H.N. 219: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 929 (D.B.).

The presumption is only an optional presumption. The Court is not bound to make it and the counter-illustration itself indicates a case in which the Court would not draw it, e.g., where there are some exceptional circumstances surrounding the doing of the act: (1942) 44 Punj.L.R. 300: A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 214.

S. 114 is not mandatory but leaves it to the Court in any particular case to raise a presumption as to the validity of official acts. The Court cannot raise a presumption as to a very essential ingredient constituting an offence in a case, where the liberty of the subject is either restricted or taken away. Where the offence consists in the contravention of a valid order, the validity of the order contravened has itself to be established by the prosecution and the prosecution cannot ask the Court to presume that the order is valid: (1950) 52 Bom.L.R. 223: A.I.R. 1950 Bom. 330.

24. Regularity of judicial acts.—The expression "regularly performed" in Illus. (e) to S. 114, Evidence Act, can only mean performed in accordance with form and procedure. The presumption mentioned in Illus. (e) is not to be drawn as a matter of course in the case of judicial acts of a special or contingent jurisdiction. Further, the presumption under Illus. (e), is only that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed. If a judicial or official act is proved to have been performed it may be presumed to have been regularly performed but not to raise a presumption that any act has been performed. It is so because the emphasis is on the word "regularly" and not on the word "performed".

The general rule in Courts of law is that only those acts can be taken to exist which are proved unless there be a legal presumption of their existence in the circumstances of the case. A Panchayat Court exercising powers under the Madras Village Courts Act is an inferior Court of a very limited jurisdiction. Its jurisdiction, as provided in S. 13, is confined to certain suits of valuation not exceeding Rs. 50. A special power is also conferred on it by S. 14 to hear and determine suits of value not above Rs. 200, in a particular contingency, viz., when both the parties to the action have expressed their consent thereto in writing executed before the Court. A party basing his right on a decree passed by such Court has to show that the decree made in the exercise of the special power was intra vires the Village Court and for that purpose to prove the essential requisite to the Court's special jurisdiction positively. He cannot avail of the legal presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e), Evidence Act: 1962 Ker.L.J. 743: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 9. See also (1968) 1 Mys.L.J. 352; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 64.

Although there is no presumption of law that a particular act required to be performed has been done, judicial act must be presumed to have been regularly performed: (1912) 16 Cal.L.J. 404 (D.B.).

S. 114 read with Illus. (e) in substance provides that where any judicial act is done in a manner substantially regular, a presumption in law arises that all formal requisites for its validity were complied with. There is no presumption in law in favour of irregularity, and it is well settled that in such case the party alleging irregularity must prove it by cogent evidence: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 487.

The High Court can safely presume that the official act of the transferor Court in sending the case direct to the Sale Officer instead of sending it to the Collector of the district was done in a regular manner and that the Court of the Sale Officer was seized of the jurisdiction to proceed with the execution of that case: A.I.R. 1953 All. 467: I.L.R. (1953) 2 All. 381 (F.B.).

No presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e) can be drawn about the order of transfer having been made by the Court which passed the decree to the transferee Court in cases covered by Cl. (d) of S. 39(1), C.P.Code. A presumption which is permitted by Illus. (e) to S. 114 is only in regard to procedure and not that an order, like the one under Cl. (d), has been made by the Court in its discretion. The Illus. (e) does not authorise a presumption, without any evidence, that a particular judicial act has been performed. All that it authorises is the presumption that a particular judicial act, which has been performed, has been performed regularly. [A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 416, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 All. 82.

There is a presumption under S. 114 of the Evidence Act that every Court does its duty by properly following the correct procedure. This presumption extends to saying that the appellate Court in its judgment dealt with all the points which had been urged before it by mentioning as points for decision and also by giving decision on each point. This presumption is rebuttable. One way of rebuttal is by an affidavit by an advocate appearing for the appellant in the lower appellate Court to the effect that he actually urged a contention which would necessitate the framing up of a point on that contention though the judgment makes no reference to such contention. In the absence of any such rebuttal the above presumption stands. On the other hand, there is no presumption that the advocate for the appellant pressed and urged every one of the grounds mentioned in the memo. of appeal. It is open to an advocate at the time of argument to press or not to press any of the grounds which are mentioned in the memo. of appeal. The advocate is presumed to know the strength or weakness, regarding such ground mentioned in the memo. of appeal, its having or not having an adequate support in the evidence or in law and the necessity or desirability of pressing such ground or of abandoning it.

Where in the case the presumption had not been rebutted by filing affidavit, it could not be contended that the lower appellate Court had failed in its duty and committed an error of law: (1968) 1 An.W.R. 374: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 223.

It is not of great consequence as to whether a competent Court or authority follows the procedure prescribed in the Wilkinson's Rules or one prescribed in the Code of Civil Procedure for the disposal of a dispute before it. But if it is known whether a particular authority has the power to try such a suit, there is inherent lack of jurisdiction in the authority or the officer to try such a suit, and in the face of this inherent lack of authority, his authority cannot be presumed: I.L.R. 45 Pat. 503.

Presumption is that Judges did their proper duty: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 124 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 151.

Presumption as to ordinary course of business—Where a Judge signs a decree, the presumption is that he had satisfied himself that it had been prepared in accordance with the judgment: 10 O.W.N. 884: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 466.

It is well established that the factual recitals or observations made in a judgment or order are taken to be correct unless rebutted. The burden to rebut it is on the person who challenges it. One of the methods to rebut such observation is to file the affidavit of the person who was present in the Court and to produce such material which may satisfy the Court that the recital in the judgment crept in inadvertently or it was erroneous: A.I.R. 1995 S.C. 350.

Mere statement of a party without any affidavit cannot be preferred to a fact recorded by Magistrate in his order: 1965 B.L.J.R. 582: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 530: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 442.

Statements made in course of judicial proceedings—Report of Magistrate on transfer application—It is administrative and not judicial matter—Value to be attached: (1963) 1 Cr.L.J. 820 (Madh. Pra.).

Judicial and Official Acts—Sale proclamation signed by munsarim of Court is valid: I.L.R. (1960) 10 Raj. 1088.

The Court must be satisfied that a Court peon's return is genuine before a presumption can be raised that all things had been done properly: (1949-50) 54 Cal.W.N. 810.

Order of remand not mentioning provision of law—Presumption is that it is passed under O. 41, R. 23, C.P. Code: A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 216.

Every judicial tribunal set up by a statute must be deemed to act properly and within the powers conferred upon it by the Legislature. If a member of the Commission under Taxation on Income (Investigation Commission) Act, 1947 discharges functions which may be delegated to him by the Commission, the Courts must presume that there was a proper authorisation: A.I.R. 1954 Bom. 184 (F.B.).

It is a well established rule of law that in a case fully fought out between the parties and well represented by eminent Counsel on both sides if a point available on the face of it is not argued or pressed then the presumption is that that point is without substance: I.L.R. 36 Pat. 1027: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 89.

When there is no mention of a contention in the judgment of the Court, the presumption is that that contention was not put forth and urged: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Punj. 363: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 178.

Where a point is definitely raised in the grounds of appeal and the Court makes no mention thereof in its judgment, it must still be presumed to have performed the judicial act of writing a judgment regularly and properly: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 94. Where a committing Magistrate writes at foot of the deposition that the cross-examination is being reserved he does not mean that it is being reserved by him and that the accused has not been given an opportunity for cross-examination: 120 I.C. 524: A.I.R. 1930 Sind 54.

Trial of offence under S. 20, Cattle Trespass Act—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Presumption is that Magistrate must have taken the proceedings in accordance with law: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1354: A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 150; 1983 M.P.W.N. 128 [Presumption regarding correctness of confession recorded].

Judicial acts—Regularity of: 1957 M.P.L.J. 89.

Correctness of facts recorded in order of Court: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 621 (Assam).

Where the wife objected to the execution of a consent divorce decree passed by the Family Court on the ground that her signatures on the consent and the petition therefor was obtained by the husband by force and coercion, held, the matters of judicial record being unquestionable and not open to doubt, the consent decree cannot be quashed on that ground: A.I.R. 1995 Bom. 30.

Where the appearance of a legal practitioner had been noted by the Judge in his own handwriting but the legal practitioner denied his appearance, such denial being neither supported by the record, nor proved by any independent evidence, held, that both on principle and authority it is the record made by the Presiding Judge that is conclusive on the point and not what the practitioner chooses to state after four years: 12 Mys.L.J. 311: 39 Mys. H.C.R. 461.

Allegation of denial of right to assistance by legal practitioner—No mention of request for such assistance on record—Prima facie order-sheet to be taken as representing correct state of affairs—Held, there was no such request and that article was not violated: 1968 Cr.L.J. 121 (Ori.).

Appointment not challenged as irregular on the ground that minor had attained age of majority or on any other ground by the said minor or by proposed guardian. Held, presumption was that appointment was made in accordance with procedure laid down in O. 32, R. 3(4) of C.P.Code and decision given in proceeding was binding on all—Minor could not challenge that decision specially when it was given against the guardian who was also the head of family: 1966 All.L.J. 697: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 515.

Failure of Court to record finding under S. 476, Cr.P.Code, that it is expedient in interests of justice to enquire into offence—No presumption can be drawn that Court had formed requisite opinion regarding expediency to enquire into matter, even if Court making complaint may be Court before which offence was committed. [A.I.R. 1962 All. 251, Dissent.]: A.I.R. 1970 Andh. Pra. 119: 1970 Cr.L.J. 443.

Where sums are paid before the Presiding Officer of the Court at the time when a receipt was given for them, the presumption under S. 114 is that the ordinary course of business was followed in the case in question. The mere statement by appellant's Counsel that these sums are not always paid at the time when the receipts are given was sufficient to throw the onus on the prosecution of proving that the plea was wrong: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 566.

Judicial act—Revision petition—Filing of—Delay—Tribunal hearing case on merits after it had once postponed decision on question of limitation—Tribunal is presumed to have condoned delay in presentation of petition: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 391: 18 Law Rep. 1.

When the order of the Magistrate is assailed on revision, then the High Court has to go into the question on the material on the record and the permissive presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e), Evidence Act, can by no means be conclusive in favour of the legality of the order: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1370: A.I.R. 1969 Del. 304.

Where the Court dispenses with the requirement of serving a notice under S. 80(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure when urgent relief against the Government or a public officer is sought, held, the legality of the Court order is to be presumed under

S. 114(e): (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 240: A.I.R. 1987 Mad. 187.

Presumption from entry of service of notice in order sheet of Court: (1941-42) 46 Cal.W.N. 967: I.L.R. (1943) 1 Cal. 22: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 114.

An entry in the order sheet of a suit to the effect that summons was served on the defendant raises a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e), Evidence Act that the service was in accordance with Rules prescribed and that the judicial and official acts were duly performed in the particular case: 3 D.R. 82; I.L.R. (1956) Trav.-Co. 1130.

The certificate in the order sheet of the Court in the proceedings for commutation of rent, showing service of notice on the landlord raises a presumption that the notice was validly and properly served upon him. This presumption, however, is rebuttable and the onus to rebut it lies heavily upon the landlord: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 577.

No evidence about non-affixation of prohibitory order—Presumption that Court proceedings were validly done would apply: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 370.

Presumption of regularity of service of summons—Rebuttal of—Order refusing permission to examine witnesses in rebuttal of presumption held not justified: I.L.R. (1953) Madh. Bh. 222: A.I.R. 1953 Madh. Bh. 82.

Where affixation of notice on the disputed property under S. 145(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not denied, held, it could legitimately be presumed under S. 114, Illus. (e) that all requisite legal formalities had been completed: A.I.R. 1971 Manipur 1.

Where there was no personal service but substituted one as notice was said to have been affixed at the outer door of the plaintiff and even the process server was not examined, held, service of notice could not be held to be valid merely on the presumption under S. 114. [A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 114, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Cal. 273.

Service of summons under O. 5, R. 20, C.P.Code—Presumption of correctness attaches to such act: (1973) 2 Cut.W.R. 1413.

Where the mandatory notice required under Ss. 37-A and 59 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act, 1864 was not served when the property of a dead owner was auctioned to effect recovery thereunder, held, since the official and judicial act was ex facie contrary to the law, the Courts below could not have drawn the presumption of their having been regularly performed: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 724: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 234: (1972) 2 M.L.J. 423.

It is not possible for a Court to ignore the evidence afforded by the Court officials to the effect that delivery in execution has been effected, on the mere allegation that there was no actual delivery. In order to reject the official records such as the bailiff's endorsements, there must be a definite and specific plea of fraud. In the absence of a plea of fraud with full particulars as are necessary to support the same, the Court shall not direct an enquiry as to whether there is actual delivery. In every case the judgment-debtor is interested in stating that there is no physical delivery in order that he may obtain an order of stay in the appellate Court. A bare allegation that the delivery is a paper delivery and the appellant continues in possession is hardly sufficient to direct an enquiry whether there is physical delivery: (1991-1) 107 Mad.L.W. 244.

Delivery of symbolic possession—Formalities—Burden of proving that formalities required by law were not complied with, at the time of giving symbolic possession of plaintiff is on defendant and not on plaintiff: 1965 Kash.L.J. 1: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 31.

Presumption that delivery of possession in execution is according to law—Onus is on the defendant to disprove it: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 910: (1929) 31 Punj.L.R. 1001.

Where Tahsil Court delivered possession in revenue case, held, action may be presumed to be correct unless otherwise proved: (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 6.

Where the Court accepted deposit by the tenant under S. 30 of the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Act, held, it would be deemed that the Court was satisfied that requirement of S. 30 had been fulfilled; the burden to rebut that presumption would be on the landlord: 1981 All.L.J. 844.

Judgment referring only to some of the witnesses—No presumption that Court was unmindful of other evidence can arise: 1967 Cr.L.J. 1042: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 254.

There is presumption under S. 114 of the Evidence Act that the evidence was read over to the witness, interpreted and admitted by him to be correct in view of the endorsement certified by at the bottom of the deposition. When the witness denies the factum that the deposition was read over, it is for him to displace the statutory presumption, and that the testimony of a witness put forth is found by the Court to be not believable the matter ends there. Further, S. 278(2), Cr.P.Code contemplates making a memorandum as regards the objection raised by the witness when the evidence was read over and found by him to be not correct but not re-recording or correcting the evidence already recorded. Thus, there is no power in the Court to re-record the evidence of a witness: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2265 (Andh. Pra.).

Presumption of correctness of a certified copy of a deposition in a suit of Cutch Court: (1928) 30 Bom.L.R. 1519: A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 24.

Presumption that oath was duly administered. See 11 All.L.J. 933: I.L.R. 35 All. 575.

Record of deposition of witness — As there is presumption in law that Court proceedings have been regularly conducted, it must be presumed that oath had been duly administered to the witness when he had appeared in the witness box for giving his evidence: 1968 B.L.J.R. 436: 1968 Cr.L.J. 213: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 74.

Where the record showed that there was no examination of the complainant on oath before issuing process, held, non-examination of the complainant on oath and non-signing the same by the complainant as well as the Magistrate being in direct violation and in equal disregard to the mandatory provisions of S. 202 of the Cr.P.Code, held, no presumption could be raised that the Magistrate must have acted according to his duties: (1982) 1 Bom.C.R. 117.

In the absence of evidence judicial or quasi-judicial, tribunal can base its conclusion on notorious facts—Amount paid as bonus to employees—Conclusion that it cannot be recovered even if not allowable, is valid: 1967 B.L.J.R. 690: (1967) 2 I.T.J. 251.

Where there is no evidence that a non-compoundable offence was compounded, it is to be presumed that criminal Court acted according to law and the presumption is that the criminal case was withdrawn and not compounded: 116 I.C. 749: A.I.R. 1929 All. 456. The very fact that the Magistrate convicted and sentenced the accused raises a presumption that he was not a minor at the date when he was convicted and it is for him to rebut that very strong presumption: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 582.

Furnishing copies of documents to accused—Obligation on Magistrate to enquire—No complaint from accused as to non-supply—Presumption arising for: 1966 Cr.L.J. 990: A.I.R. 1966 Guj. 217.

Though it may be desirable and advantageous to have concessions recorded under the signature of the maker in order to avoid confusions and difficulties, such a procedure may not always be possible on account of practical difficulties. During the course of argument, Counsel may be making concession on factual and legal questions. It may not be possible or practicable to get these concessions recorded under the signature of the maker. In some cases the argument notes of the Presiding Officer may be the only record, other than the judgment or order, from which the correctness of the concession could be verified later in case of doubt or dispute. In some cases such a record also may not be available and what is contained in the judgment or order and the memories of the Presiding Officer or the Advocate alone could be looked upon. A party may resile from a concession on the ground that it was made on a wrong appreciation of the law or fact and had led to gross injustice and the appellate Court may permit him in rare and appropriate cases. But he may not be permitted to call in question the very fact of making the concession recorded in the judgment: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2464: (1989) 2 Hindu L.R. 381 (Ker.).

Compromise decree—Presumption as to its validity: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 345.

It must be assumed that a Court which passed a decree on a compromise assented to by a pleader of one of the parties, satisfied itself that the pleader was authorised to effect a compromise on behalf of his client unless the contrary is established: (1936) 38 Punj.L.R. 467: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 91.

Where a compromise was recorded by the Court in the manner provided in O. 23, R. 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, carrying the Court's endorsement that it was read and recorded and the parties, having accepted it, put their signatures; the compromise stands on the same footing as a contract; if impugned by any party thereto, heavy burden would lie on that party to prove that the compromise was not explained to her and its admission in the compromise was procured by fraud; the Court's endorsement is a judicial record made in discharge of judicial duties and is to be taken as authentic and in itself a true evidence; the presumption under S. 114 would also arise in its favour: (1986) 1 Bom.C.R. 81.

Order sheet shows that a memorandum expressing that the complainant had no objection to the petition for withdrawal filed by the C. S. I. was filed—Such memorandum not available in the record—The statement in the order-sheet must be taken to be erroneous: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 600.

25. Happening before Court.—When there is a dispute as to what happened before a Court or tribunal, the statement of the Presiding Officer regarding it is generally taken to be correct: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 882: (1958) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 67: 1958 S.C.R. 499; I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 274; (1964) 1 Lab.L.J. 644: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 901. The best evidence of the fact as to what happened before the Court is what is recorded by the Judge in his order. The parties are precluded to challenge the correctness of the statement made by the Court in the order. It can only be changed if the Judge himself says that he incorrectly recorded the order or it did not so hapen but by mistake that was recorded or if both the parties agree that what is recorded by the Court is not correct: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 102; 1983 Punj.L.J. 402 (D.B.).

Contradiction in affidavits of parties regarding what happened in Court, held, Judge's note should be preferred—Judge had no interest or motive in supporting allegations of one side or the other and it must be presumed that he acted properly: A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 625 (D.B.).

Where a statement appears in the judgment of a Court that a particular thing happened or did not happen before it, it ought not ordinarily be permitted to be challenged by a party unless, of course, both the parties, to the litigation agree that the statement is wrong, or the Court itself admits that the statement is erroneous: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 245; A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 102.

The orders recorded by the Court are the final word as to what transpired between the parties in the Court at a particular point of time and the subsequent assertion of a party that some facts were wrongly recorded in the impugned order are of no help especially when no such objection was got recorded before the trial Court at the time of passing the relevant order. Thus, where the plaintiff or his Counsel did not object to passing of the order by the trial Court on the ground that the consent of the plaintiff was wrongly recorded therein and actually he did not consent to treating defendant as minor or to the appointment of his guardian, held, the order of the trial Court become final and could not be interfered with: (1989-1) 95 Punj.L.R. 314: (1988) 2 Rev.L.R. 477.

Where the High Court while dismissing a criminal revision against the trial Court's refusal to summon the Chief Minister for trial on corruption charges for want of the Government's prior sanction, directed on concession by the Government that the sanction for such prosecution should be dealt with not by the Law Minister but by the Governor in his individual discretion, and in the Special Leave Petition, the Government Counsel denied having made any such concession, held, the Supreme Court declined to launch into an inquiry as to what transpired in the High Court; it is simply not done; public policy bars and judicial decorum restrains the Supreme Court; matters of judicial record are unquestionable; they are not open to doubt; Judges cannot be dragged into the arena; judgments cannot be treated as mere counters in the game of litigation; it is well settled that statements of fact as to what transpired at the hearing recorded in judgment are conclusive; no one can contradict them by affidavit and other evidence; a party claiming wrong recording is bound to call the attention of the very Judges, while the matter is still fresh in their minds, that the statement recorded was made in error; that is the only way to have the record corrected: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 1249: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1581: (1982) 2 S.C.C. 463.

Where the arbitrator had mentioned in his award that the parties had paid him Rs. 100 each on account of his fee, held, this statement of the arbitrator, like a statement of a Judge as to what took place before him in relation to a proceeding should be regarded as almost conclusive and at any rate its correctness has to be presumed unless there is strong proof to the contrary: A.I.R. 1970 All. 525 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 274.

26. Regularity of attachment and sale in execution.—The presumption under S. 114 regarding regularity of performance of judicial and official acts can be raised when the formalities regarding attachment are complied provided attachment is actually proved by the Amin's report or otherwise: [A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 217, Foll.; A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 22, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 139, Expl.; A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 191; (1966) 1 M.L.J. 413, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1977 Ker. 119: 1976 Ker.L.T. 102: I.L.R. (1976) Ker. 361 (F.B.).

An order of attachment before judgment under O. 38, R. 5 of the C.P.Code does not by itself prove that the attachment was in fact effected; the presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e), therefore, is of no avail; that presumption can be drawn only if the factum of the property having been attached is established; it is only thereafter that the presumption of attachment having been regularly made can be invoked: A.I.R. 1995 Karn. 35 (D.B.).

Where after an attachment before judgment under O. 38, R. 5 of the C.P.Code, the plaintiff obtained the decree and obtained another attachment in execution, held, the second attachment did not thwart the effect of the first attachment; it continued to subsist and effective; it would be presumed to have been done in regular course; in fact, the second attachment is redundant: (1975) 88 Mad.L.W. 28.

Presumption about compliance of O. 21, R. 46(2), C. P. Code. See A.I.R. 1954 Bhopal 30. Attachment before judgment—Proof of—Presumption—When can be made. See I.L.R. (1954) Ori. 345: A.I.R. 1954 Ori. 222.

Applicability—'A' filing suit against B for recovery of money for property sold—Order for attachment before judgment—Notice in Form No. 5 of App. F pursuant to O. 21, R. 5 issued but prohibitory order pursuant to O. 21, R. 54 in Form No. 24 of App. E not served on B—After alleged attachment and long before Court's sale B selling property to C—Held, attachment was not effective and therefore, A could not make use of provisions of S. 64 to defeat rights of C—Held, further that since there was clear evidence as to what exactly was done, recourse, could not be had to presumption under S. 114: (1969) 17 Law Rep. 482: (1969) 1 Mys.L.J. 234.

When property is attached in execution of a decree, it can be presumed that the property was attached by the Amin in accordance with the law. An official act can be presumed to have been done correctly: 1959 All.L.J. 781: A.I.R. 1960 All. 453.

If the only evidence available is an order of the Court showing that attachment had been made, it would no doubt be presumed that all the necessary formalities were complied with. But where the execution record is available and the process-server's report regarding the attachment does not show that any copy of the order was pasted on a conspicuous part of the Court-house, the initial presumption is that what is not mentioned therein was not done: (1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 149: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 284.

Where all other modes of publication had been adopted by the Court and the Court had also been careful to send a copy of the attachment order for the publication on the notice Board of the Collector's Office, the Court would be justified in raising a presumption under S. 114 regarding the judicial and official act having been done as prescribed by law. [A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 217, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 191, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1974 Guj. 1: (1973) 14 Guj.L.R. 280.

Where the suit land was sold in auction by the Revenue Court for arrears of rent and the same is settled with the appellants as auction-purchaser, in the absence of any evidence, the normal inference in such a case under S. 114, would be that the Court auction sale was done in a regular manner, and that the arrear list had been accepted by the Revenue Authorities according to the rules of the State: (1960) 2 Ori.J.D. 82.

Where a Court auction sale was challenged on the ground that it was for a grossly inadequate consideration but no application was made under O. 21, R. 90 of the C.P.Code for setting aside the sale, held, it could be presumed that the price fetched at the auction sale was the best price that the property sold could fetch. [1966 All.L.J. 107 (F.B.), Disting.]: A.I.R. 1980 All. 63: (1979) 2 All.L.R. 431.

Where the Report of the Court auctioneer averred that the auction was postponed for less than 30 days to facilitate higher bids which was announced on the spot and the endorsement thereof was made on the bid sheet, held, his record per se being legal evidence as per S. 114, Illus. (e), his non-examination as a witness is immaterial; no adverse inference could be drawn for his non-examination. [A.I.R. 1983 Del. 317, Affirm.]: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 181 (Del.) (D.B.).

Certificate against decree-holder under S. 15(1)—Effect—Presumption as to issue of certificate—Application for execution of decree—Creditor held entitled to exclude time of pendency of conciliation proceedings as also time during which debt remained unpaid—Application not barred by limitation: 1962 M.P.L.J. 213.

Where the same Presiding Officer was acting as Munsif as well as Judge of Small Cause Court and in respect of a suit decreed as Small Cause Court a sale certificate was issued which was clearly purported to have been issued by the Court of the Munsif, held, the mere fact that below the signatures, the Presiding Officer was described as Munsif and Judge, Small Cause Court, does not detract from the validity or correctness of the sale certificate. In the face of the sale certificate, it was not necessary to establish that the decree had in fact been transferred for execution by the Court of the Judge, Small Causes to the Court of Munsif, as official acts must be presumed to have been performed regularly: A.I.R. 1978 All. 413: 1978 All.L.J. 629: (1978) 4 All.L.R. 564.

Where the property in question was put to public auction under the provisions of Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954 and a certificate of sale was issued as per the Rules framed thereunder, held, it could be presumed under S. 114, Illus. (e) that the property sold including the property in question must have been a part of the compensation pool as the act done by a public officer in his official capacity is taken as rightly done: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 91: 1975 W.L.N. 563: 1975 Raj.L.W. 561.

Tenant must apply before relief under S. 49-N of Bihar Tenancy Act can be given—Court not bound to grant the same suo motu—Sale in execution not invalid on that account: 1967 B.L.J.R. 606.

Applicability—Application for setting aside sale held under provisions of Partition Act—Who can apply—Provisions of O. 21, R. 89 are attracted in view of S. 7(b) of Partition Act—Estoppel: I.L.R. (1963) Punj. 665: A.I.R. 1963 Punj. 531.

"Official and judicial acts"—Order of the certificate officer showing that the holder had been in arrears of land revenue even from an earlier date—Court cannot, under S. 114, presume that the sale must have taken place in pursuance of such order since sale might have taken place subsequently: A.I.R. 1967 Tripura 19.

Service of notice to J.D.—J.D. cannot be presumed to have information about defective proclamation of sale: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Mad. 781: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 421: A.I.R. 1969 Mad. 5.

The return of the process-server regarding publication of the sale proclamation is an exhibit. There is a presumption that official acts have been duly performed. The onus is upon the judgment-debtor to show that there was no publication of the sale proclamation as alleged. Suspicion is not proof: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 468.

Auction sale of property—Certificate of sale granted to purchaser—Presumption that sale took place in accordance with formalities prescribed by law can be made: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 286: 1961 Jab.L.J. 72.

27. Regularity of official acts.—There is a presumption of regularity in respect of official acts but the said presumption is neither unrebuttable nor can it be applied without regard to the facts and circumstances of the case: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2124 (Del.); 1983 M.P.W.N. 243; I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 654: 1971 W.L.N. 108.

Public records which are maintained with regularity in the ordinary course of routine must be presumed to show official acts regularly and correctly performed until the contrary is proved: (1958) 2 M.L.J. 110.

There is a presumption that every person whether in his private or official character does his duty and unless contrary is proved it is presumed that all things are rightly and regularly done. This presumption applies with greater force to official acts: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 43 (D.B.).

There is a presumption of legality and constitutionality of the acts done by the Officers of the State in the course of performing their official duties. This presumption is, however, rebuttable and it is open to a citizen to challenge and prove the legality and constitutionality of the act done or proposed to be done: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. (N.O.C.) 26.

Presumption under in favour of State—Availability: A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 257.

Presumption as to official acts: 1968 Lab. I.C. 1173: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 406.

The Court must assume, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that official acts are done in accordance with rules and regulations governing them: 1955 An.W.R. 290: A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 192.

Things prescribed by statute may be presumed to have been properly done: A.I.R. 1926 All. 369 (F.B.).

Where under an Act certain things are required to be done before any liability attaches to any person in respect of any right or obligation, it is for the person who alleges that that liability has been incurred to prove that the things prescribed in the Act have been actually done: I.L.R. 24 Pat. 29: A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 307. See also (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 431: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 368.

Where a statute—U. P. Agricultural Income-tax Act (III of 1949), S. 6(1), Proviso—has conferred the privilege of exercising a discretion on a responsible officer, the Court can legitimately make a presumption that he has not acted capriciously: 1952 All.L.J. 557: A.I.R. 1953 All. 25: I.L.R. (1953) 1 All. 817.

Where acts are of an official nature, or require the concurrence of official persons, a presumption arises in favour of their due execution: A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 68: 1978 Lab.I.C. 123 (F.B.).

As to presumption of regularity of official acts, see A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 578; (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 324: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 254; A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 130; 1957 M.P.L.J. 89; A.I.R. 1959 All. 393; (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 393.

Presumption—Regularity of official acts. Onus of rebuttal: A.I.R. 1966 Guj. 62.

The Court will assume that public servant is discharging his duty and attempts to do certain things in the course of discharge of duty: 1971 Mah.L.J. (Note) 39.

The presumption provided for in Illus. (e) to S. 114 is only a presumption as to procedure that the necessary procedure in doing all official acts has been followed. There is no presumption that in carrying out public works the Government takes necessary precautions to see that no injury is caused by negligence to the public: (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 554: I.L.R. (1969) Bom. 564: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 127.

Public officers are presumed to act fairly. But this presumption holds good only as long as the aggrieved person is not able to adduce facts proving the likelihood of discrimination. The presumption will be rebutted as soon as facts are placed before the Court showing that the officials, in spite of every desire to do justice, may be placed in a position where it is difficult for them to hold the balance fairly between rival claimants: A.I.R. 1960 All. 45: (1959-60) 17 F.J.R. 290: (1960) 1 Lab.L.J. 745.

The normal presumption that all official acts are properly performed must be always recognised and given effect to in the absence of evidence to the contrary: 1960 Cr.L.J. 212: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 96.

In absence of specific proof to the contrary, regularity of official act must be presumed: 1970 Lab.I.C. 443 (Cal.).

There is a presumption that official acts have been regularly performed that they have been performed in accordance with the rules and regulations bearing on the subject. But this is a rebuttable presumption. In fact it is left to the Court to raise that presumption or not depending in the peculiar facts of each case. When officials who are required to perform their official acts regularly depose that they have failed to do so, that evidence is bound to be looked with suspicion particularly when it is self-serving or when it is given by their subordinates who are likely to be eager to have their grace or to avoid their displeasure: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 565: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 128.

No act can be said to be an "official" act within the meaning of Illus. (e) under S. 114, when it is forbidden by a statute: (1958) 1 An.W.R. 527.

Before entries in official records can be presumed to have been made in the discharge of official duties, entries must be proved by calling person who had made those entries or even some one who could say about the person having made those entries: 1969 Kash.L.J. 27 (J.&K.).

The presumption that official acts were rightly carried out applies to the return of a process under O. 21, R. 22, C.P. Code, as duly served so that the burden of proving that the record is wrong lies heavily on the judgment-debtor: (1931-32) 36 Cal.W.N. 242: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 627. See also (1938) 40

Punj.L.R. 142; 1938 R.D. 883; A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 705: (1938) 2 M.L.J. 266; (1947) 2 M.L.J. 310.

There is no presumption that just because an official of a Department of the Central Government files an affidavit deposing to certain facts, which are not known to him personally the affidavit is true: A.I.R. 1990 Mad. 312.

Whatever is published in a Government owned paper correctly represents the actual state of affairs relating to Government business unless it is successfully challenged and the real state of affairs is shown to be different from what is stated in the publication. [A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 361, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 2045: 1986 Cr.L.J. 1922: (1986) 2 S.C.C. 716: (1986) 88 Bom.L.R. 260.

The Constitution is intended to endure for succeeding generations to come; the founding fathers could not visualise the pitfalls in the political governance; Art. 356 has so far been used 90 times and one may even wish that it might not be "put to operation" or be a "dead letter" and at best may be used sparingly; but nevertheless the settled law remains that while interpreting the Constitution neither motives nor bad faith nor abuse of power be presumed except in individual cases; S. 114, Illus. (e) raises a statutory presumption that official acts are regularly performed. [A.I.R. 1990 Karn. 5 (F.B.), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1918.

It is well settled that a recital in a statutory order about the necessary conditions precedent for the exercise of statutory power having been fulfilled raises a presumption about its validity; the burden would then be on the other party that the conditions were not fulfilled; however, in the absence of such a recital it would be for the authority passing the order, if challenged, to prove that the conditions were satisfied. Thus, where a suspension order did not state that the Governor was satisfied that it was necessary or desirable, as required under R. 3(1) of the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, to suspend the official and no objection was taken to the validity of the suspension on the ground of the want of satisfaction by the Governor, such satisfaction would be presumed and need not be proved: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1262.

Suspension-order against Government servant—Question if proper authority in fact passed the order—Legal presumption attaches that official act of passing suspension-order was regularly performed. (Per Das, J.): (1966) 8 Ori.J.D. 249: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 150.

Mala fide action or malice in law are not to be easily presumed. A party alleging these has to satisfy the Court that there are such facts and circumstances on which malice or mala fides could legitimately be found. The mere non-adherence by a departmental inquiry committee to the strict procedure followed by a judicial tribunal does not amount to either acting mala fide or acting contrary to natural justice: A.I.R. 1957 All. 671. There is a presumption that public officials will discharge their duties honestly and in accordance with the rules of law: 1957 Ker.L.T. 971: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 33.

Where vacant posts of lecturers under Regn. 6(1) framed under the U.P. Intermediate Education Act were required to be filled up by promotion from lecturers in lower grade having a minimum of 5 years' continuous substantive service on the date, the vacancies occurred and certain lecturers holding the higher posts were found to be having no such service, held, the presumption would be that those vacancies were filled up by direct recruitment and not by promotion: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 2592: (1993) 2 U.J. (S.C.) 665.

Appointment of Chairman of Election Tribunal—Presumption. See I.L.R. (1953) Raj. 768: A.I.R. 1954 Raj. 129.

Where a blind person, otherwise qualified, had been appointed as the member of State Public Service Commission, and had been functioning as such and there was nothing to show that his initial appointment was illegal, held, there was a presumption of regularity of his appointment, which had not been rebutted: A.I.R. 1993 Pat. 22: 1992 B.B.C.J. 225: (1992) 2 B.L.J. 122: (1992) 1 Pat.L.J.R. 636 (D.B.).

Regularity of official acts—Original order appointing G as consolidation officer not produced by State—There is a presumption that G must have been so appointed because he would not act without a proper appointment: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 27: (1967) 2 S.C.R. 143: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 856.

Where while being the Chairman of a Housing Board, the respondent also functioned as member of the Legislative Council and no sanction as required under S. 7 of Bihar State Housing Board Second Ordinance, 1978 to undertake the work unconnected with the office of the Chairman of the said Housing Board was obtained, held, no implied sanction in relation to orders passed by the State Government could be inferred: A.I.R. 1980 Pat. 54: 1980 B.L.J.R. 228: 1980 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 32 (D.B.).

Once it is proved that an officer was lawfully invested with the power to carry out his duties, there may arise a presumption so far as the question of the manner of performing those duties is concerned. But there is no justification in presuming the very investment of those powers in the absence of evidence altogether and particularly when such appointment is categorically challenged in the cross-examination of the said officer. [A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 492, Rel. on]: (1987-1) 7 Guj.L.H. 407: (1987-2) 28 Guj.L.R. 725.

Where the Governor's subjective satisfaction about unsuitability of a candidate for a judicial post in civil services, entitled on merits to such appointment, was alleged by him to be based on his political affiliations with the R.S.S. and Jan Sangh and the denial of the ground based on political affiliations by the Government was found to be not credible but since the satisfaction was claimed to be based on other matters which the Government did not, and could not be forced to, disclose, held, the exercise of discretion by the Governor could not be said to be mala fide; the Courts normally presume that a discretion vested in a Government functionary is exercised fairly, and even more strongly when it is exercised by the Governor, the highest executive authority in the State; abuse of power is not to be easily assumed where the discretion vests in the Government and not in a minor official: A.I.R. 1961 All. 361.

Where the Tehsildar granted permission under S. 3 of the U.P. Rent Control and Eviction Act, 1947 to file eviction suit, held, the presumption is that the District Magistrate must have duly authorised the Tehsildar to grant such permission: A.I.R. 1973 All. 24: 1972 All.W.R. (H.C.) 628.

It is open to the Commissioner of Police to permit a Deputy Commissioner to exercise and perform any of the powers, functions and duties to be exercised by him. Where the authority which was given to the Sub-Inspector was an authority signed by the Deputy Commissioner of Police, but the authority has been issued by the Commissioner of Police, though signed for him by the Deputy, the authority cannot be held to be invalid: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 168: 1956 Cr.L.J. 382.

Presumption—Powers of requisitioning by State given to Collectors—Satisfaction about necessity by Collector—State presumed to be satisfied: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 376.

Where a certificate issued under S. 3 of Revenue Recovery Act not by the Collector but by a person who signed it "for Collector" was impugned as invalid, held, there is a general presumption that the official acts had been regularly performed and so, it could be presumed that the person authorised to sign "for Collector" must have signed the certificate: A.I.R. 1978 Andh. Pra. 420: (1978) 2 An.W.R. 443.

Where a contract is ex facie executed on behalf of the Governor by an officer in the course of official business and discharge of his executive functions, held, it has ostensibly to be taken to be in conformity with the requirement of Art. 299 of the Constitution; and if the State contends that the officer executing the contract had no authority, the burden to prove the same would rest on the State itself: A.I.R. 1977 Pat. 258 (D.B.).

Where by an open advertisement, the Collector acting on behalf of the President of India and in association with the Department of Tourism invited tender for lease of land and construction thereupon of a good and accomplished restaurant and eventually a completed contract between the parties was executed, construction was raised and the restaurant partially started functioning when the Government cancelled the contract on the ground of want of authority in the Collector, held, in so far as the petitioner were concerned, who were the other party to the agreement, they would certainly presume that the said official act of execution of document by the Collector was done regularly and that the Collector was acting officially for which he was authorised to do so and that would create legal lease-hold rights in their favour, more so, in view of all the events and the positive recitals in the lease deed and also by subsequent acts of the Collector and other officials: (1989) 2 Bom.C.R. 261 (D.B.).

Acting as Presiding Officers and Polling Officers in elections is prima facie evidence of their appointment; the law presumes in favour of regularity of acts and against misconduct and bad faith; and also because invalidity of an act or appointment of a public nature is more susceptible to detection than if it is of private nature; it is inherently improbable that a person would act officially unless he in fact held the office or appointment: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 113 (Gau.).

Circular by a public servant stating that it was made on the authority of the superior officer—Presumption: 146 I.C. 572: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 27.

Existence of industrial dispute—Reference reciting satisfaction of Government—Regularity of reference must be presumed: A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 248.

Where the State Government refused to make reference of a dispute under S. 10 of Industrial Disputes Act, 1948, held, so as high authority as the State Government should be presumed to act with complete propriety and without any bias while exercising a statutory function unless contrary was proved: A.I.R. 1971 Mys. 22: (1970) 2 Mys.L.J. 244 (D.B.).

Applicability—Order purporting to have been made under S. 3, U.P. Industrial Disputes Act, 1947—No expression of compliance of condition precedent—Presumption as to such compliance: A.I.R. 1956 All. 689.

Where special appeals were filed under S. 18, Rajasthan High Court Ordinance, 1949, and R. 134 of the Rules for High Court of Judicature for Rajasthan by Additional Advocate General, Rajasthan, held, it could be presumed under S. 114, Evidence Act, 1872, that he was duly authorised to file the said appeals: A.I.R. 1993 Raj. 76: (1992) 2 Raj.L.W. 344.

Tauzi ledgers being official documents, the Court repose great confidence on their fidelity and accuracy as being official papers kept in due course of business, properly and regularly. There is, therefore, a presumption that the kist dates, mentioned in them are the correct dates, and the onus is on a party disputing the same to prove the contrary: 226 I.C. 393: A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 283.

Endorsement by the Notary Public "document subscribed and sworn before him" raises a presumption of regularity of official acts, that he must have satisfied himself in the discharge of his duties that the person who was executing it was the proper person: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 761: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 379: (1971) 73 Punj.L.R. 314: (1971) 1 S.C.R. 38.

The presumption is that the public purpose of the Eviction Act for which the person was sought to be evicted from the public land was duly specified in the notice in compliance with the requirement of the Act. The maxim is omnia praesumuntur solenniter esse acta (meaning all things are presumed to have been done rightly): 1979 All.L.J. 714.

Permission to file suit for ejectment—Contention that permission granted by Rent Controller and Eviction Officer was invalid —Defendant not raising express plea that Rent Controller was not the officer duly authorised under S. 2(d) to grant such permission—Held, Court could presume that Rent Controller was duly authorised to grant such permission: 1967 All.L.J. 371.

Suit for ejectment—Plaintiff proving authority of Rent Control and Eviction Officer granting permission under S. 3 of U.P. Temporary Control of Rent and Eviction Act (III of 1947), by documentary and oral evidence—Defendant neither challenged such authority at the time of granting permission nor adduced, any evidence to disprove the authority—Presumption would be that Rent Control and Eviction Officer had such authority: 1964 All.W.R. (H.C.) 413: 1964 All.L.J. 788.

Where the Registrar of the society passed order of supersession against the petitioner society and the said order recited that a notice was served to the petitioner but it failed to respond, held, there is a presumption of regularity attached to an official act, therefore, if the order of supersession stated that the notice was served there was presumption that it was actually served: A.I.R. 1981 J.&K. 85 (D.B.).

Even during the strike period, although case record, due to non-availability of staff, is not put up before the Presiding Officer, still the requirement of preparing and signing the Daily Cause List is followed and one copy of the Daily Cause List is hung up on the Court's notice board and another copy is sent to the Bar Association. Thus, when there is no assertion that this was not done during the strike period, held, it must be presumed that the Daily Cause List was duly signed and hung up on the Court's notice board and also sent to the Bar Association: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 151.

Where a party challenged the grant of land by the Tehsildar, an official act, held, there is a presumption that he did so in accordance with proper procedure; obviously, the burden is on the party to call for necessary records, implead the Tehsildar in the suit and show that the procedure followed by the Tehsildar was vitiated by want of notice or violation of the principles of natural justice: A.I.R. 1984 Karn. 45: (1983) 2 Karn.L.J. 409.

Where a Mouzadar, while on leave, resigns and the Government orders the Deputy Commissioner to fill the vacancy after inviting applications and to allow the officiating Mouzadar to continue till the permanent appointment was made, the presumption would be that the Deputy Commissioner acted in accordance with the Government's order and the order was communicated to the officiating Mouzadar: A.I.R. 1954 Assam 12: I.L.R. (1953) Assam 447.

Allegation against Collector of Customs that he ante-dated his order under S. 110(2) of Customs Act—Non-production of affidavit denying the same—Effect: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 89.

Where a candidate was not admitted in the Medical College in the quota reserved for the Scheduled Tribes though his father's service record showed that he belonged to a backward caste but not to a Scheduled Tribe, held, reasoning was obviously incorrect; the Scheduled Tribes are one of the recognised species of the genus "backward classes"; the entry in the service record, the genuineness whereof was not challenged, could not be disregarded: (1987) 3 Bom.C.R. 615 (D.B.).

28. Presumption to be raised only when official act has been done.—S. 114, Illus. (e) simply raises a presumption as to the regularity of the procedure, if the official act is as a matter of fact proved to be done and not otherwise: (1940-41) 45 Cal.W.N. 44: A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 353. See also (1944) 46 Punj.L.R. 266: A.I.R. 1944 Pesh. 34.

There must be proof that the act was done—No presumption without such proof: I.L.R. 8 Pat. 1: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 600; 151 I.C. 337: A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 207 (a case of attachment); under S. 114(e) if an official act is proved to have been done, it will be presumed to have been regularly done: I.L.R. 8 Pat. 1; A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 207; A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 364. See also I.L.R. 7 Pat. 733: A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 459; I.L.R. 58 Cal. 598: A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 753.

Though the law enables a presumption to be drawn that official acts have been done in accordance with law, the presumption can be drawn only if a particular act is proved to have been done. There is no presumption that any particular act is done: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Karn. 1326.

S. 114, Illus. (e) only means that if an official act is proved to have been done, it will be presumed to have been regularly done; but it does not raise any presumption that an act was done of which there is no evidence and proof which is essential to the case: (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 431: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 368; A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 680: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1294; A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 107: (1954) 2 M.L.J. (Andh.) 220; I.L.R. 36 Pat. 989; (1989) 2 Raj.L.R. 755.

It is not, therefore, permissible to presume that a statutory notice was duly issued, and served on the plaintiff in the absence of any evidence that a notice was as a matter of fact, issued and served on him: A.I.R. 1955 Andhra 107: (1954) 2 M.L.J. (Andh.) 220.

Under S. 114, Illus. (e), in respect of an official act which has been done, it is presumed to have been done in the proper manner. But when the act itself has not been done, there is no presumption. Thus, when there was no conclusive proof regarding factum of service of registered notice, held, presumption of due service cannot be raised from the mere factum of issuance of such notice with correct address and its registration with postal authorities: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 750.

29. Presumption regarding Acts, Orders and Notifications of Government.—(See also S. 57, Note 2). Constitutionality of Act—Presumption in favour of. See A.I.R. 1957 J.&K. 32 (F.B.).

Constitutionality of statute—Presumption: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Punj. 283: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 24.

Whereas presumption of constitutionality will remain attached to a statute which has been challenged on the ground that it violates Art. 14 of the Constitution, and the burden to prove the contrary by pleading the necessary facts would be on the petitioner, the onus to prove that the restriction imposed on a fundamental right guaranteed to a citizen under Art. 19(1) is reasonable, will be on the State, once it is shown that the right has been taken away or even abridged by the impugned legislation. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 925, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1983 J.&K. 100.

Presumptions—Good faith of a Legislature in enacting a statute must be presumed: (1966) 2 M.L.J. 68: I.L.R. (1966) 2 Mad. 437: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 57 (F.B.).

Presumption as to official acts—Legislature must be presumed to know the facts and conditions rendering a statute expedient and beneficial: (1966) 2 M.L.J. 68: I.L.R. (1966) 2 Mad. 437: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 57 (F.B.).

In view of S. 114, it would be presumed that the rules which are required to be placed before the each house of the Parliament must have been placed accordingly. It is for the party making such a challenge to bring on the record material date in support of such challenge: (1972) 12 Guj.L.R. 725.

The statement of facts contained in the Official Gazette on private affairs or historical facts in some cases is the best evidence of facts stated therein; though entitled to due consideration, it is not conclusive of the matters requiring judicial adjudication; in an appropriate case where the evidence on record is not sufficient to prove the fact in issue, the statement of such facts in the Official Gazette may be relied upon without further proof as corroborative evidence. Thus, where the question in issue was whether Dhangars (by caste) of Bombay Province, were governed by the Banaras School of Hindu Law, held, the facts stated in the Indore State Gazette regarding their social status and habitation may be relevant and may in an appropriate case be presumed to be genuine but not conclusive; however, in complete absence of evidence to prove the party's family or ancestors' migration from Mathura area, the Indore State Gazette could not be accepted as sufficient to prove such migration for connecting Holkars of Indore with Dhangars of Bombay Province: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 306 (S.C.).

Presumption under Ss. 81 and 114 (e), Evidence Act apply to publication—S. 5(2) of Madras General Clauses Act complied—Effect of—Gazette held published on date it bore—Assuming publication sometime later—Act not rendered unconstitutional or invalid: I.L.R. (1961) 1 Andh. Pra. 296.

Notice of rule under Defence of India Rules—Absence of evidence as to direction on manner of publication under R. 119(1)—No presumption of knowledge arises. See (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 431: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 368. See also A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 307. But see infra. Where a Provincial Government's order regulating export of ghee is published in the provincial Gazette, it may be presumed that the publication of the order by the Government is sufficient publication and it may be further presumed that publication was made in the Gazette in compliance with all the provisions of R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules including the provision as to the determination of the most suitable form of publication. [I.L.R. (1945) Pat. 781, Appl.]: I.L.R. (1951) Nag. 775: A.I.R. 1952 Nag. 10.

Publication of Regulations—Validity—Presumption as to regularity in publication—Burden to prove otherwise is on party challenging validity: 1964 B.L.J.R. 160.

There is a presumption that the Legislature intends its enactment to have prospective effect only, as the settled or closed matters a e not to be unsettled or reopened. Therefore, in the absence of any indication in the statute that the Legislature intends it to operate retroactively, it must not be given retrospective effect. This principle is not different under the Portuguese system of law based on Code: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 3.

Where neither the language nor necessary intendment as revealed by the words used under S. 40 of Patna University (Amendment) Ordinance, 1982 lead to an inference of retrospectivity, held, the presumption that the legislation was prospective was applicable: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 163: 1982 Pat.L.J.R. 230: 1982 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 382 (D.B.).

It is possible for a section or a provision of different statutes to be in pari materia but to label two different statutes as in pari materia (unless they are pure carbon copy of each other) is inherently erroneous and inferences from such a presumption would necessarily lead to error. In matters of construction similarity is not identity, and no presumptions with regard to the purported policy of different statutes can be safely inferred or raised: A.I.R. 1986 Pat. 218: 1986 Pat.L.J.R. (H.C.) 373: 1986 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 249: 1986 B.L.J.R. 344 (F.B.).

Adoption of laws of another State—Presumption as to: 1957 M.P.L.J. 1 (N.).

Presumption as to repeal of a provision: A.I.R. 1969 J.&K. 9 (F.B.).

There is a presumption against repeal by implication. This is on the assumption that the legislation enacts law with a complete knowledge of all existing laws pertaining to same subject and the failure to add a repealing clause indicates that the intent was not to repeal existing legislation. Where the provision of a special statute are wholly repugnant to the general statute, it would be possible to infer that the special statute was repealed by the general enactment: (1988) 2 Bom.C.R. 127 (D.B.).

Promulgation of order—There is a presumption of its due promulgation: 1968 Cr.L.J. 946: A.I.R. 1968 Madh. Pra. 138.

An order or notification, containing a recital, technically correct on the face of it, raises an optional presumption of fact under S. 114, Illus. (e) which can be displaced by circumstances indicating that the power lodged in an authority or official has not been exercised in accordance with the law. The recital, if it is not defective, may obviate the need to look further. But, there may be circumstances in the case which impel the Court to look beyond it. And, at that stage, S. 106 can be invoked by the party assailing an order or notification. It is most unsafe in such cases for the official or authority concerned to rest content with non-disclosure of facts especially within his or its knowledge by relying on the sufficiency of a recital. Such an attitude may itself justify further judicial scrutiny: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 183: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 133: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 763: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 17.

It clearly follows from Ss. 37, 78, 81 and 114 (e) that the issuance of a notification is in the eye of law either notice or imputed knowledge of its contents to the citizens in general. This obviously cannot be so in the case of a mere order. The line which divides a mere order or decision of the Government or authority from formal notification is sharp and the dividing point thereof would be the publication or the formal declaration to the public or otherwise of the same. An order derives its sanction or source when the authority vested with the lawful power to pass the same appends its signature thereto and it is only the factum of proclamation or publication in the Gazette or other prescribed modes of publicity which alone would give such an order or decision, the indicia or the necessary stamping of a notification. Till then it would remain merely an order or decision and it may not travel beyond the knowledge of its author and might well remain completely cloistered. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1019; A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 52, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 87: (1983) 85 Punj.L.R. 741: 1983 Punj.L.J. 1: 1984 Rev.L.R. 1: I.L.R. (1984) 1 P.&H. 78 (F.B.).

It has to be presumed that the statutory power is validly exercised by Government in issuing a notification: 1971 M.P.L.J. 403 (D.B.).

Presumption of publication of official notification. See 18 I.C. 651: (1912-13) 17 Cal.W.N. 531; 49 I.C. 171: 3 P.L.J. 636; 39 P.L.R. 187; A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 14. See also I.L.R. 37 Bom. 415; I.L.R. 19 All. 493; I.L.R. 9 All. 920; I.L.R. 18 Cal. 129; A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 14; 8 Mys.L.J. 257.

The presumption that the facts stated in a Government notification are correct is not an absolute presumption and may be rebutted by proper evidence: A.I.R. 1953 Pat. 321: I.L.R. 32 Pat. 181.

The presumption under Illus. (e) to S. 114, is that of the regularity of the official acts, whether judicial or executive, and not that of the acts themselves being done. Where a notification is issued under the power given by law, there is a presumption that it was regularly published and promulgated in the manner it was required to be done. But there is no presumption that it was issued according to the terms of the section which empowers it. Where the Central Government issues a notification under S. 14 of the Hoarding and Profiteering Prevention Ordinance, empowering the Controller-General of Civil Supplies to sanction a prosecution for an offence under that Ordinance, it cannot be presumed that the Controller-General is given a rank not below the rank of a District Magistrate as required by S. 14. The fact that the officer is of a rank not below that of a District Magistrate must be proved by the prosecution, and it cannot be presumed by recourse to S. 114, Illus. (e): (1946) 48 Bom.L.R. 379: A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 492: I.L.R. (1946) Bom. 762.

Though ordinarily it may be presumed that a Government notification purporting to have been published in a Gazette of a certain date, was in fact so published, yet where the interval between the issue of a notification and action taken on it is so short, e.g., a night, a Court might require stricter proof that all the formalities requisite to the act of notifying, or in other words, publishing the notification, had actually been carried out: (1931) 33 Bom.L.R. 82: I.L.R. 55 Bom. 356: A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 132.

Order having been made by State Government in exercise of powers entrusted to it under the Notification issued by the Ministry of Home Affairs—Presumption as to regularity of public acts would apply—Court is entitled to presume that order has been made by State Government in due course: (1965-66) 70 Cal.W. N. 82: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 552.

Official acts—Notification—By State under S. 36(1), Motor Vehicles Act—Previous approval of Central Government recital as to—Presumption: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 413: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 175.

There can be no presumption against the expressed provisions of law which are embodied in any statutory enactment or in any rules made under such enactment or even against such principles enunciated in judicial precedents. Therefore, where the notification was found against the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, it could not be presumed to have been legally issued nor could it be held to be binding on the parties. S. 46 of the Regulation has no application in such a case: A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 18.

An action taken by a properly constituted authority should always be held to be legal unless it is demonstrably not so. When, therefore, a rice mill is notified under S. 193(1), Local Boards Act, it must be taken that the President of the Panchayat Board issued that notification in conformity with the law and cannot be said to be invalid: 138 I.C. 583 (1): A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 508.

Notification by Gujarat Government declaring that the acquisition of certain land was urgently necessary for public purposes—Satisfaction of Government on the question of urgency—Proof—Constitutional protection under Art. 166(2)—Presumption of regularity of official acts—Affidavits filed along with petition questioning notification, containing bare denial that Government had not formed an opinion—Necessity of counter-affidavit—Proper approach by Court: A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 870.

Where all formalities as to the requisite notification under S. 6-A (as in West Bengal) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 having been duly published had been completed but the Official Gazette where the notification had been published was missing and could not be procured from any other source and the party had even offered to put into the witness box an officer to prove publication, held, the Court could presume that all official acts required under the statute must have been regularly performed: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 149.

Notification imposing tax under Gram Panchayat Act—Court can always draw an inference, until otherwise is proved that necessary and prescribed procedure therefor was followed before issuing the notification: 1979 Tax.L.R. (N.O.C.) 9 (Guj.).

A shop is where goods are sold; when the authorities issued a notification under S. 2(13) of the W.B. Shops and Establishments Act, 1963 declaring depots used for storage of tea not sold there as shops without affording an opportunity of hearing to their owner nor did the authorities placed on record any materials on which the presumptions of law could be raised, held, the notification could not be given effect to: A.I.R. 1984 Cal. 109: (1984) 1 Cal.H.N. 6.

Where a notification under S. 4(1) of the Kerala Land Acquisition Act was published on 15-9-1987 in the Official Gazette, on 24 and 28-8-1987 in the local newspapers and its substance in the locality on 12-10-1987, and the subsequent declaration under S. 6(1), made on 7-10-1988, was published on 11-10-1988, in the Official Gazette, on 11-10-1988 in the local newspapers and on 7-10-1988 in the locality, held, the official acts would be deemed to have been regularly performed; the declaration was valid, having been published within one year of the notification under S. 4(1). [(1989) 2 Ker.L.T. 71, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1622, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1992 Ker. 136.

30. Regularity of registration proceedings.—When a document is accepted by the Sub-Registrar as duly presented, there is an initial presumption that the document was duly presented and that the person presenting it was duly authorised to do so: I.L.R. 15 Lah. 694: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 452.

A sale deed executed before the Sub-Registrar carries a presumption of genuineness and the burden to prove that it was benami is on the person who alleges it: A.I.R. 1979 All. 47.

Where the original deed of a private trust was indisputably executed and registered and there was evidence of its having been lost, held, a presumption under S. 114(e) could be raised about its certified copy having correctly and regularly been prepared from the original deed: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 381.

Where the certified copy of a sale deed was actually obtained from the volume book maintained in the Sub-Registrar's office, it bore the official seal and the certificate of its having been copied, compared and found to be true and the scribe of the original deed also deposed having written it, held, the correctness of the certified copy rightly presumed; the sale deed stood proved: A.I.R. 1994 Gau. 67.

Where a gift deed was challenged on the ground that the donor was not mentally competent to execute the same and the document was registered also, held, the certificate of registration would not enable the Court to presume animus et factum on the part of the executant of the document: A.I.R. 1977 Ker. 54: I.L.R. (1976) 2 Ker. 137 (D.B.).

Where the Sub-Registrar endorsed on the mortgage deed a certificate as required by S. 60(1) of the Registration Act, 1908 containing the word "Register" together with the number and page of the book in which the document stood copied, held, it would be proper to infer that in the ordinary course of business the certificate and the endorsement must have been copied in the margin of the register-book for proving a completed registration: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 173: 1972 Raj.L.W. 310 (F.B.).

Endorsement of Registration Officer—Presumption of requisite thing being done—Deed executed by ignorant and illiterate person—No presumption—Onus to prove deed lies on him who relies on the deed: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 26.

Registration of document—Proper presentation—Presumption from endorsement—When to be raised: A.I.R. 1958 Assam 56. Registration under S. 23-A of Registration Act—Presumption that it was in time: 1933 Mad.W.N. 1148.

Endorsement by Registrar on sale deed is presumed to be correct unless rebutted: (1980) 2 M.P.W.N. 96.

A document once exhibited without objection cannot be objected to later on. Thus, where the lower appellate Court rejected registered documents, 80 and 73 years old, respectively, which were exhibited during trial without objection, held, the lower appellate Court erred in holding that presumption of their due execution or genuineness could not be raised under S. 90; S. 90 is a solution to the difficulty in proving documents more than 30 years old by witnesses which may well be impossible; though presumption under S. 90 is discretionary; the Court could raise the presumption under Ss. 4 and 114; S. 60 of the Registration Act also provides for raising such presumption of execution and correctness of the contents of a duly registered document: A.I.R. 1988 All. 57: (1988) 14 All.L.R. 174.

Registration of will—Registrar's certificate containing recital that testator admitted execution—Thumb-impression of testator affixed—Recital in endorsement mentioning that signature could not be affixed because of testator's physical incapacity—Fact that testator was duly identified mentioned—But no signatures of identifying witnesses taken because soon after testatory became unconscious—Endorsement held was admissible to prove execution—Fact recorded therein could be presumed to be correct—Fact that no deposition of testator why he could not sign, was taken as required by standing order 675 of the Madras Registration Manual, was at most an irregularity curable under S. 87—No adverse inference could be drawn because of the non-examination of the Sub-Registrar: A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 178.

An endorsement by the Sub-Registrar on a registered Will that its execution was admitted by the executant being an act performed by him in official capacity, it should be presumed that he would not make such an endorsement unless the execution was admitted before him by the testator: 1958 M.P.C. 351: 1958 M.P.L.J. 513: A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 261.

Proposition that execution and registration of deed of adoption, in case of illiterate person, is insufficient proof of adoption is erroneous and contrary to S. 16—Law relating to sanctity attaching to registered documents does not make distinction between literate or illiterate executants: (1968) 70 Punj.L.R. 535.

31. Sanction for prosecution.—When the Government accords sanction for prosecution of a Government employee on corruption charges, S. 114(e) raises a presumption that the official acts have been regularly performed and the burden is heavier on the accused to rebut that statutory presumption. Once that is done then it is the duty of the prosecution to produce necessary record to establish that after application of mind and consideration thereof to the subject, the grant or refusing to grant sanction was made by the appropriate authority. Where investigation into the offence under S. 6(1)(b) of the Prevention of Corruption Act had been completed before the sanction for prosecution by the Government was accorded and the sanction order specifically stated that material papers like case diary and statements of witnesses had been carefully examined in respect of each accused though no separate file for each of them was maintained, held, the sanctioning authority could not be accused of non-application of mind; according sanction is an administrative and not a quasi judicial act; presumption under S. 114(e) is attracted: (1992) 1 An.W.R. 16: 1993 Cr.L.J. 558.

Where consent order for prosecution under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, showed that the competent authority had considered the report of the public analyst before issuing said order, held, presumption could be drawn that consent was given by the competent authority after perusing the material: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2289 (Andh. Pra.).

Where order of sanction for prosecution for offences under Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, expressly mentioned application of mind, held, presumption as to validity of sanction could be raised: 1984 Cr.L.J. 1224: 1984 F.A.J. 99 (Raj.).

Sanction to prosecution under S. 137, Customs Act, 1962—Prosecution should establish that the fact constituting offence has been considered by the authority before sanctioning prosecution—Presumption in favour of regularity of official acts arises: 1979 Cr.L.J. 1265 (Goa).

Officer according sanction not examined as witness—His signature proved but no evidence to establish that he had applied his mind to the case—Held, presumption was that sanction was duly accorded in absence of evidence to the contrary: A.I.R. 1970 Del. 102: 1970 Cr.L.J. 674.

Sanction—Presumption as to Official acts. See 1953 All.L.J. 660: A.I.R. 1954 All. 223.

Sanction by administrator of municipality—Presumption is that it was given on date on which it was shown to have been given—Allegation that it was antedated not made in grounds of appeal nor taken before trial Court—Appellate Court should not deal with allegation and hold that it was antedated: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 152: A.I.R. 1961 Tripura 18. See also (1989) 2 Raj.L.R. 755.

Where sanction for bye-laws has been accorded by the Government there will be a presumption in favour of the legality of those bye-laws: 1957 Raj.L.W. 506.

Where there was no evidence to show that the application of mind by authority according the sanction could not be and was not made, held, a presumption could be drawn that consideration of material and application of mind were duly made: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1797 (Cal.) (D.B.); 1989 Cr.L.J. 1793 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Form of sanction—Official communication—Letter intimating that sanction had been granted—Presumption as to: 1963 M.L.J. (Cr.) 434: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 666.

Sanction, form of—Section of Act need not be specified—Sanctioning authority to apply its mind before granting sanction: I.L.R (1963) 13 Raj. 996: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 527: A.I.R. 1963 Raj. 233.

32. Proceedings under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954.—In a case under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, the presumption of regularity under S. 114, Illus. (e) arises only when all the steps required to be taken for obtaining the Public Analyst reports are proved to have been duly taken. If there is a failure in performing any one of the required steps, the lacuna cannot be filled in by taking recourse to S. 114 (e).

Where the lower appellate Court found that there was non-compliance with the mandatory requirements of Rr. 7 and 18 of the Rules under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, the legal presumption could not be taken in aid to bring home the charge against the accused. [1968 B.L.J.R. 308, Foll.; 1970 Cr.L.J. 238, Expl.]: 1975 Pat.L.J.R. 464: (1976) 1 F.A.C. 99: 1976 Cr.L.J. 421: 1976 B.B.C.J. 500 (D.B.).

Public Analyst must be presumed to have performed his official acts regularly: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1554: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 330.

No doubt the Food Inspector and the Public Analyst are expected to follow the procedure laid down in the Rules but absence of direct evidence in proof of compliance with the requirements of the rule does not justify the conclusion that the requirements were not complied with. If the principal requirement of the provisions of Adulteration Act and the Rules as to the taking of the sample, sealing the sample, sending of the sample and analysis of the sample have been clearly made out, the procedural details as to the prescribed manner of doing these acts may be presumed depending on the facts of the case. The presumption is not mandatory but permissible. Whether or not to raise a particular presumption will, therefore, depend upon facts proved and the nature of the fact to be presumed as proved: (1970) 11 Guj.L.R. 530; (1988) 2 Rec.Cr.R. 236 (Guj.) (F.B.).

Raising presumptions does not depend upon the mandatory character or otherwise of the legal provisions whereunder the official acts are performed; once the acts are proved, the presumption of their having been regularly or properly performed may be raised; however, raising of the presumption is at the Court's option; it is not bound to raise it in every case. Thus, though under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act and the Rules, the Food Inspector and the Food Analyst are undoubtedly expected to follow the prescribed procedure but a mere absence of direct evidence thereof does not mean that they were not complied with. If the basic facts of taking samples, wrapping, fastening, sealing and sending them to the Food Analyst and their analysis are clearly made out, the procedural details may well be presumed to have been done, depending on the facts and circumstances of the case: (1981) 22 Guj.L.R. 404: 1982 Cr.L.J. 754 (D.B.).

The principle embodied in Illus. (e) under S. 114 of the Evidence Act is that when any judicial or official act is shown to have been done in a manner substantially regular, it is presumed that the formal requisites for its validity have been complied with. If the statute (Prevention of Food Adulteration Act) itself had provided that certain regulations and formalities must be complied with before the report of the Public Analyst could be admitted in evidence, the position would have been different, for, in that case, it would be necessary to specifically establish that those regulations and formalities were duly observed. In the absence of such a provision, what purports to be report signed by a Public Analyst is, without any other proof, admissible in evidence and the presumption arising under S. 114 of the Evidence Act to the regular performance of official acts also applies to it. The accused is not thereby prejudiced. He may rebut the presumption by cross-examining prosecution witnesses or leading other evidence. He has also been given under sub-S.(2) of S. 13 of the Act the right to show, if possible, that the report is incorrect.

The presumption under S. 114 of the Evidence Act and Illus. (e) thereunder in relation to regular performance of official acts applies to the report of a Public Analyst. It is, however, a rebuttable presumption. Thus, such a report is not rendered inadmissible only because it has not been specifically established by evidence aliunde that the requirements of Rr. 7 and 18 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955, were duly complied with.

The distinction between relevancy or admissibility of a piece of evidence and the value to be attached to it is obvious. S. 13(5) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act refers to admissibility of the report and leaves it to the Court to determine in the light of the circumstances of the case, what value ought to be attached to it. There is nothing in this provision to indicate that the report would be admissible only if it is obtained in the manner prescribed by the rules made under the Act. [1967 Cr.L.J. 1723 (Madh. Pra.), Reversed]: 1969 M.P.L.J. 732: 1970 Cr.L.J. 238: A.I.R. 1970 Madh. Pra. 29 (F.B.).

Where the petitioner was prosecuted for selling adulterated milk and he contended that R. 7(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rule, 1955 regarding comparison of seal on the container and the outer cover with specimen impression received separately by the Public Analyst was complied with, held, the presumption as to due comparison of seals by the Public Analyst was available to the prosecution and it was not open to the petitioner to make any grievance on the ground of non-examination of the Public Analyst. [A.I.R. 1970 Madh. Pra. 29 (F.B.), Rel. on]: 1987 M.P.L.J. 559.

It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that if once the Public Analyst issues a report regarding the result of the analysis, it may also be presumed that the Public Analyst or the person authorised by him has discharged his duty in compliance with R. 7(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955: 1985 M.L.J. (Cr.) 80: (1985) 1 Kam.L.J. 1: I.L.R. (1984) Karn. 752. See also I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 654: 1971 W.L.N. 108.

The official function of the Court under S. 11(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, is to despatch under its own seal to the Director of the Central Food Laboratory, the sample of food produced by the local authority on its application. The Court has to take the necessary steps provided therein; S. 11(2-B) of the said Act does not require the Court to contemporaneously or subsequently record the steps taken by it. The official acts having indisputably been performed by the Court, it can unhesitatingly be presumed under S. 114 (e) that they were regularly performed, more so because it was a Court. [1986 Ker.L.T. 1267; (1987) 2 Ker.L.T. 87; (1987) 2 Ker.L.T. 577, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1988 Ker. 60: 1988 Cr.L.J. 898: 1987 Ker.L.J. 1355: (1987) 2 Ker.L.T. 165 (F.B.).

Offence under Prevention of Food Adulteration Act—Presumption that official acts are regularly performed extends to sending of bottles for analysis and not to other details like bottling, sealing, etc.: 1967 Ker.L.J. 887: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 901: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 66.

Where the accused contended that the Food Inspector failed to show that the bottles in which the samples were taken were clean and dry as per R. 14 of Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955 though the Food Inspector had deposed that the samples were taken according to the Rules, held, in the absence of his cross-examination on this point, there was presumption that the bottles were dry and clean and were sealed properly. [A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 933; 1969 C.A.R. (S.C.) 15, Rel. on]: 1982 Raj.L.W. 432: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2325.

Where there was no evidence on record to suggest that the Director of Central Food Laboratory had compared the seals on the container and the outer cover of the packet received by him separately from the Court, held, no presumption under S. 114 can be drawn that the official act was followed. Comparison of the seal assumes greater significance in cases under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act because the fate of the accused depends upon the certificate issued by the Director, the contents of which are final and conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein and which are not open to challenge by the accused in any manner whatsoever.

Therefore, non-comparison of the seal affected the evidentiary value of the Certificate issued by the Director, Central Food Laboratory and thus, the conviction based upon it could not be sustained: (1992-1) 12 Guj.L.H. 253: (1992-1) 33 Guj.L.R. 434.

Report of Public Analyst in Form III—Non-mention of comparison of seals—Effect—Presumption of regularity of Official Acts: 1968 Cr.L.J. 729: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 247.

Where Analyst's report stated as to his having received sample, and specimen of seal separately, held, it was to be presumed that he received them in the manner stated; R. 18 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955 could be said to have been complied with: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1061: (1985) 87 Punj.L.R. 341: I.L.R. (1985) 2 P.&H. 204 (F.B.).

Where there is evidence to show that Local Health Authority forwarded a copy of the report of Public Analyst with necessary intimation or information to the accused, held, by virtue of S. 114, Illus. (e), the Court may presume that it was forwarded regularly, i.e., as required in S. 13(2) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 and R. 9-A of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955. [1985 F.A.J. 91 (Ker.) and (1981) 1 F.A.C. 287 (Ker.), Foll.; (1985) 1 Gau.L.R. 521; (1989) 1 Gau.L.R. 251; (1992) 1 Gau.L.R. 62, Overruled]: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2747 (Gau.) (F.B.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 1014: 1982 All.Cr.R. 140.

Where there is evidence to the effect that the sample was sent by the Inspector under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, to the Public Analyst, it is permissible to raise a presumption that the act of despatch was done regularly and properly: 1957 All.L.J. 89: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 385; 1971 Jab.L.J. 474.

Official act—Act of sampling, scaling and forwarding of article by Food Inspector and ascertaining seal to be intact by Public Analyst proved—That acts themselves were performed in accordance with prescribed form and procedure may be presumed: I.L.R.

(1965) 2 Ker. 301: 1966 Cr. L.J. 416: A.I.R. 1966 Ker. 70.

Analysis of sample—Delay in compiling report—Presumption that analysis was also delayed, if can be drawn—Examination of Analyst—Necessity of: 1967 Cr.L.J. 603: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 131.

"Proved"—Company charged for sale of adulterated buffalo-milk—Defence, that it was not buffalo-milk sold but toned milk—Company's entire business being at stake in all probability company would have taken steps to challenge Public Analyst's finding that sample sold was buffalo's milk by resorting to provisions of S. 13, Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954—Steps not taken—Held, it must be presumed that milk sold was buffalo-milk and not toned milk: 1965 All.L.J. 182: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 581: A.I.R. 1965 All. 525.

Mere storing of soya bean oil, an article of food, does not by itself lead to presumption that it was adulterated: 1981 All.W.C. 732: 1981 All.Cr.C. 337.

33. Police record.—Presumption that a person acts honestly applies as much in favour of a Police Officer and it is not judicial approach to suspect him without good grounds therefor: 1966 M.L.J. (Cr.) 726: (1966) 2 An. W.R. 338.

Police Officers are citizens and the public servants; a presumption under S. 114 can be drawn that they perform their duties in the ordinary course of business faithfully and sincerely. Their evidence cannot be discarded only on the ground that they are Police Officers. However, a note of caution will always have to be kept in mind looking to the law of the land; particularly S. 25 of the Evidence Act and S. 161, Cr.P.Code: (1988) 2 Crimes 737 (Raj.); (1982) 53 Cut.L.T. 187: 1982 Cr.L.J. 506; 1993 Cr.L.J. 1622 (Del.).

Packing and forwarding of material objects by an Investigating Officer, for which no particular mode is statutorily prescribed, are official acts and are to be presumed to have been regularly performed by him. Merely because he is interested in the prosecution, it cannot be presumed that he might have tampered with or concocted the materials during the period they remained in his custody; it would not be a proper judicial attitude or a healthy approach to start with distrust or suspicion the investigative exercises of public officers; that would run down the gut and gumption of Police administration and erode the morale of its investigating agencies. Thus, a mere failure to affix the seal on the packet sent to the Analyst would not necessarily lead to the inference that the Analyst's report was thereby vitiated: (1993) 1 Ker.L.J. 542: (1993) 1 An.L.T. (Cr.) 552 (D.B.). See also (1989) 1 Bom.C.R. 388 (D.B.).

Entries are made in the general diary about all the events that take place in the Police Station in chronological order, and it is ordinarily difficult to fabricate false entries in the general diary. Thus, there is a presumption as to correctness of the entries in the general diary: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1506.

Where the prosecution has shown that regular entries were made in the public document, namely, general diary, regarding registration of the case and forwarding of the special report to the higher authorities and return of the person who has taken the special report to the Police Station, the legal presumption would be that official acts must have been duly performed: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1142: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 439: (1978) 4 S.C.C. 302.

Where there is no evidence that the investigating Police Officer had any motive of setting up a case against the accused, it can be presumed under S. 114, Illus. (e), Evidence Act, that he has properly performed his official duty of recording the substance of evidence in his case diary under S. 161, Cr. P. Code and that he had not omitted inconvenient portions from his rough notes while entering them in the diary. Further, the Court may, if it thinks fit, presume that where the records have been destroyed this has been done for a reason, for example, because the Police wanted to improve on the evidence. Such presumption is a discretionary one and is an application of Illus. (g) to S. 114, Evidence Act. But no such presumption could be raised where there was no denial of right under S. 162, Cr. P. Code, as the case diary statements were available for the purpose: 1956 An.W.R. 406.

Where though the occurrence took place at 4.30 P.M., the fard beyan, recorded at 8.30 P.M. reached the Police Station next day at noon and the F.I.R. was sent to the Court two days thereafter but no explanation was sought for the delay while cross-examining the Investigating Officer and there was no ostensible gain by the delay to the prosecution, held, no adverse inference need be drawn against the prosecution; an adverse inference cannot be drawn in every case. [A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2679; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2304, Foll.]: (1989-2) 37 B.L.J.R. 458 (D.B.).

Lodging of F.I.R.—Inference that it was anti-timed—When can be drawn. See 1985 Cr.L.J. 966: 1985 All.Cr.R. 178.

Where though the first information report sent to the Court did not contain the Magistrate's endorsement regarding the time of its receipt, but the head constable deposed that the report was despatched to the Magistrate the moment it was received and the general diary contained an entry to that effect, held, an inference of ante-dating of the first information report could not be drawn: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1222: 1987 Cr.L.J. 991: (1987) 3 S.C.C. 331.

Where the first parcha of the case diary purportedly sent from the Police Station on 16-3-1977 was signed by the Circle Officer on 22-3-1977 presumably because Parliamentary elections were held on 18-3-1977 and 20-3-1977 and the Police was very busy in marking arrangements therefor, held, even though the Circle Officer was not examined to establish the cause for his not seeing the parcha earlier, no presumption can be raised that it was not sent by the Police Station on the purported date: 1990 Cr.L.J. 868: 1989 All.L.J. 492 (D.B.).

Official acts have to be presumed to have been regularly performed. It would require much stronger evidence to warrant the inference that the time mentioned in the first information report had been deliberately put back: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1170: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 482.

Where prosecution witnesses testified to the presence of other prosecution witnesses said to have sustained injuries during the occurrence and the F.I.R., lodged within 5 hours, contained a mention of their having been so injured, held, a mere delay by the Police in recording the statement of the injured witnesses is no ground to discard their testimony: 1978 Raj.L.W. 340 (D.B.).

Merely because statement of an eye-witness was recorded by the Investigating Officer two days after the incident, which delay had been satisfactorily explained, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution: 1990 Cr.L.J. 2720 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Where in a divorce proceeding, a certified copy of the first information report was placed on record, held, it could be presumed that the Police official who recorded the F.I.R. did so in a regular manner in due performance of his duty: A.I.R. 1981 P.&H. 119: 1981 Hindu L.R. 16.

Time of first information report—Presumption from entry in Police register: A.I.R. 1957 All. 809: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1378.

Where the F.I.R. gone through minutely contains no averment that the lathi blow given by the accused hit the deceased on his back, the eye-witnesses, about 200 paces behind the accused and the deceased, could not have seen whether the lathi blows in fact hit the body of the deceased, and the post mortem report did not point out any such blow on the deceased's back, held, there being no contradiction between the three, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution: 1991 Cr.L.J. 3227 (All.) (D.B.).

The presumption in favour of official acts being properly done is destroyed when it is established that the Investigating Officers have not acted in a straight-forward manner and have clearly made false statements in Court: (1936) 38 Punj.L.R. 1128: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 409.

Police Officer asked to remember certain date refusing to refresh memory—Adverse inference may be drawn: 164 I.C. 373: A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 707.

There can be no presumption that proceedings under Rr. 16-24 (ix) of the Punjab Police Rules were taken but, once it is admitted or proved that such proceedings were, in fact, taken, then it must be presumed, unless otherwise alleged and proved, that they were taken in accordance with law: A.I.R. 1956 Punj. 106: (1956) 58 Punj.L.R. 104. See also A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 347 (Presumption cannot supply deficiency in the proof).

34. Identification proceedings.—(See also S. 9). In a case where there is an unusually long lapse of time between the commission of the offence and the identification proceedings, and there is no proof of any coercive proceedings being adopted by the State during the period when the accused is at large, the Court of law is entitled to presume, under S. 114, the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events and human conduct in relation to the fact of a particular case. If no attempts are made by the Police to apprehend the accused person who runs away from justice, the Court may presume that if such attempts had really been made the accused would have been apprehended and identification proceedings arranged within a reasonable time so as to lend creditability to the performance of the prosecution witness in the parade. The prosecution cannot take advantage of its own laches in this regard and shift the burden of proof on to the accused by taking shelter under the plea that no such suggestion was made on behalf of the defence to the Investigating Officer: 1972 All.W.R. 822 (D.B.).

Where at least one of the eye-witnesses identifying the accused could reasonably be expected to have known some of the accused as residents of close by villages and his co-student, held, his feigned ignorance of prior familiarity with their identity becomes irreconcilable with the incidents of ordinary human intercourse; the omission to disclose their identity in the F.I.R. raises a reasonable doubt about the accused's complicity: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 345: 1988 Cr.L.J. 422: (1988) 1 S.C.C. 14: 1988 All.W.C. 374.

Identification parade—Refusal to participate—Adverse inference, if can be drawn and when: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 3: (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 42: I.L.R. (1983) 1 Del. 223.

In a criminal trial, the prosecution must adduce sufficient evidence to infer that the accused must be presumed to have committed the crime; any infirmity in the identification made for the first time before the Court cannot be set right by such presumption alone. It is high time for the Police and other investigating agencies to realise the necessity of holding pre-trial identification parades; merely because the accused usually complain in the Court of having already been seen by the witnesses should not stand in the prosecution's way in arranging such parades: (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 349. See also (1984) 2 Crimes 927 (Del.).

It is to be presumed under S. 114 that every official act is properly performed, but this presumption is hardly sufficient to satisfy a Court that such precautions have been taken as to render an identification truly valuable, e.g., mixing the accused in a large number of men dressed all like: 67 I.C. 721: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 31.

Victims of different dacoities making rival claims to particular article—Their identification of articles not reliable—Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act cannot be raised: I.L.R. (1962) Andh. Pra. 96: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 121: A.I.R. 1963 Andh. Pra. 314. See also 1988 Cr.L.J. 319 (Del.).

35. Warrant.—Offence under Mysore Police Act (IV of 1964), S. 80—Search under warrant—Court not putting to accused salient particulars of offence—Presumption under S. 80 Mysore Police Act cannot fill in lacuna in procedure: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1144: A.I.R. 1969 Mys. 277.

Where a warrant of arrest is on the face of it not defective the Court would be entitled to draw a presumption in accordance with the provisions of S. 114, Illus. (e). When the lower Courts have drawn such a presumption the High Court in revision would not be justified in disturbing the same especially when the accused were not being prosecuted for contravention of the warrants of arrest but for assaulting a public servant in the discharge of his duty: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 97: I.L.R. (1955) Cut. 50.

Where a delivery warrant is issued for division of properties by metes and bounds after a preliminary decree was passed in a suit for partition and possession, endorsement on a delivery warrant made by the revenue authorities cannot be conclusive evidence of the fact that division was effected and possession was given. No doubt, such an endorsement on a warrant may rise to a presumption that what is stated therein is true, but it is only a rebuttable presumption: A.I.R. 1957 Mys. 71: I.L.R. (1957) Mys. 14.

36. Record-of-rights.—(See also Notes under S. 35). A record-of-right is not a document of title and the same is at best an evidence of possession: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 248: (1986) 2 Cal.L.J. 1 (D.B.).

Entries in record-of-rights—Presumption: 1970 Cur. L.J. 166 (Punj.).

An entry in the record-of-rights is presumed to be correct until the contrary is shown. When presumption is in favour of a party, it is not necessary for him to establish the correctness of the entry by evidence nor is he under any obligation to establish the foundation for it. Generally speaking, there can be no presumption backwards from the record-of-rights, which refers to the time of preparation of the records. But, having regard to the facts of a particular case and the surrounding circumstances, the Court is entitled to presume both a forward and backward continuity of the said entries: (1989) 2 Cal.H.N. 5: (1989) 1 Cal.L.T. (S.C.) 447.

Official acts—Entries in record-of-rights —Presumption of due enquiry before making of entries. See I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 395: A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 73. See also A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 173.

Presumption of correctness of entries in record-of-rights: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 10.

Though entries in record-of-rights are presumed to be correct but if the civil Court on evidence finds them not to be founded on facts, the entries lose all their weight: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 246: (1984) 1 Cal.L.J. 408: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 864.

Record-of-rights — Entries in neither create nor take away a right—Presumption as to their correctness also is rebuttable: (1970) 36 Cut.L.T. 636.

A mere entry in the record-of-rights does not create or extinguish title. Thus, while considering the question as to whether a person by excavating a tank acquires right of occupancy in the tank under any provision of the Sonepur land laws, popularly known as the Bhumi Bidhi, held, it must be borne in mind that a raiyati status cannot be conferred merely on the basis of an entry in a record-of-rights and the source of acquisition must be referable to the revenue laws of the Sonepur State: A.I.R. 1985 Ori. 33: (1984) 57 Cut.L.T. 524 (D.B.).

The presumption that in a conflict between the old record-of-rights and the recent record-of-rights, the recent record is correct unless it is proved by evidence to be incorrect, as well as the presumption under S. 103-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act relating to the correctness of the entries in the record-of-rights is a rebuttable one and to say that a comparatively recent record of rights would under all circumstances prevail over the old record would be begging the whole question: (1958) 1 Cal.L.J. 199: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 78.

When there is a conflict between an old record-of-rights and a recent record-of-rights, the recent record is presumed to be correct unless it is proved by evidence to be incorrect: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 16. The fact of a person's name being entered in the Collector's book as occupant of land does not necessarily of itself establish that person's title or defeat the title of any other person. The Collector's book was kept for purposes of revenue and not for purposes of titles. It was not the function of the officer who compiles revenue papers to decide questions of title: (1965) 1 An. W.R. 246.

Record-of-rights—Presumption of correctness of entry—Party relying on presumption of correctness need not prove foundation or basis of correctness: (1964-65) 69 Cal.W.N. 210: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 328.

Entries in record-of-rights—Presumption that they are correct is rebuttable. [A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 404; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 799: A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 210; A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 255, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 Tripura 43.

An entry in the record-of-rights or other revenue records is not conclusive and raises a rebuttable presumption which cannot form the sole basis to decide one way or the other against one or the other party: A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 78: (1981) 1 Karn.L.J. 217; A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 246 (Cal.); A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 264.

The mere signing of an entry does not raise an irrebuttable presumption of law against which no evidence can be let in: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 820.

The entries in the record-of-rights made for the purpose of Land Revenue Act are not conclusive and are subject to the decision in a suit or other appropriate proceedings, presumption arising out of such entries is a rebuttable one: A.I.R. 1977 Karn. 4: (1976) 2 Karn.L.J. 117: I.L.R. (1976) Karn. 1430.

Though an entry in record-of-rights describing a property as an absolute debottar may raise the presumption but such presumption would be rebuttable; held, on facts, presumption stood rebutted: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 126: 1976 Hindu L.R. 655.

Record-of-rights—Presumption regarding truth of entries in—Presumption arises only when entries are made lawfully—Revision of the record without prior Notification—Presumption of truth, held, did not arise—Presumption not drawn as of course —Conditions precedent to official act not shown as satisfied—Presumption held should not be drawn: (1968) 2 Mys.L.J. 227: 15 Law Rep. 97.

Entry in record-of-rights with respect to an unregistered rehan deed—Sufficient to prove debt: 1963 B.L.J.R. 472: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 241. Election dispute: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 231.

Record-of-rights—Entries in—Presumption as to correctness under S. 135-J, Bombay Land Revenue Code—Incorrect alteration of entry relating to plaintiff's property—There is impact on civil right, though he continues in possession: (1969) 2 Mys.L.J. 202.

While every entry in a record-of-rights finally published is to be presumed to be true, unless proved otherwise under S. 103-B(5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 which applies to agricultural lands, such entries relating to non-agricultural lands also attract the presumption of truth under S. 44(4) of the W.B. Estates Acquisition Act, 1953; it cannot, therefore, be said that entries of C.S. settlement record relating to non-agricultural lands cannot attract the presumption of correctness and mere assessment of such lands to rent under the Bengal Non-Agricultural Lands Assessment Act, 1936 does not attract the presumption of truth: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 264.

When persons are jointly recorded in the record-of-rights in respect of a property and on evidence are found separately possessing portions of such property, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the only presumption available is of joint acquisition: 32 Cut.L.T. 944: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 588.

The record-of-rights and the mutation proceeds which are meant to keep uptodate the record-of-rights have the presumption of correctness attached to them; however, that presumption is rebuttable: A.I.R. 1982 Him. Pra. 38; A.I.R. 1978 Raj. 45: 1978 Raj.L.W. 30.

Where an entry in the record-of-rights is shown or admitted as showing the land to be self-cultivated by the landholder, it gives rise to the statutory presumption under S. 133 of the Land Revenue Act, 1964 that it is not a tenanted and does not vest in the State under S. 44 of the Land Reforms Act, 1962; the presumption is, however, rebuttable unless the contrary is proved or the entry is lawfully changed. The burden of proving the contrary lies on the party which avers contrary to the entry: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 289: (1977) 2 Karn.L.J. 126.

The crop-statements raise presumption only about crops raised and person raising them; there is presumption of title or of extent of possession; proper document for presumption of title is record-of-rights: 1976 Mah.L.J. (Note) 45. The entries in the crop-statements made by a Patwari in the course of his business under the Bombay Land Revenue Code are not conclusive; but under the provisions of the Evidence Act, the Court may draw a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (c) that the public officer has done his duty in the regular course of his business. This presumption, however, is rebuttable and not absolute: 1976 Cr.L.J. 751: 1976 Mah.L.J. 31.

Land—Land recorded at "Gair Mumkin land" is not "land"—Burden to displace presumption of entry: A.I.R. 1966 Punj. 185 (F.B.).

Where the record-of-rights contained no entry that the defendant was in possession of land nor was there any receipt in token of having paid rent therefor and the evidence adduced by him was not sufficient to rebut the plaintiff's possession as shown in the record-of-rights, held, the finding of fact by the Courts below that the defendant was tenant in possession could not be sustained in second appeal: 1981 Sim.L.C. 426: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 74.

The legal presumption as to truth of entries in record-of-rights and the Pahanis under S. 133 of the Karnataka Land Revenue Act, 1964 would be available until contrary is proved, mere observation that the entries were wrongly made, would not dislodge the presumption: (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 208: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 215.

Khasra entries—Entries are presumed to be correct, though party aggrieved may rebut such presumption—Proper forum for such rebuttal—Forum of ceiling authorities is not the proper forum for rebutting presumption: 1981 All.W.C. 600: 1981 All.L.J. 1021.

If khasras of certain years, the name of a certain person was recorded as the person in possession, but in the khasras of later years, that entry disappeared, held, the omission by itself is not enough to destroy the presumption of continuity of possession; the presumption can be drawn both forward and backwards. [A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 100, Rel. on]: 1982 M.P.L.J. 499.

Where the Commissioner suo motu called for and on examining the khasra girdawri entertained serious doubts about its authenticity, held, neither the statutory presumption of correctness under S. 44 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887 nor the optional presumption under S. 114(c) could be invoked in favour of the khasra girdawri: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 223: (1974) 1 S.C.C. 138.

The khasra girdawri embodies the record of a public servant's acts performed in the discharge of his official duties and is, thus, admissible under S. 35; true, it carries no presumption of correctness but its evidentiary value is certainly not nil; the Court should not start with the presumption that it is not correct; it can be rejected only if it is found on evidence to be false or its genuineness becomes suspicious: A.I.R. 1972 P.&H. 393: 1972 Punj.L.J. 118.

Though to a jamabandi is attached a statutory presumption of correctness but not to a khasra girdawri, held, yet entries in the latter may be relied upon, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, as proof of a person's tenancy: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 148: 1983 Punj.L.J. 339: 1983 Rev.L.R. 398.

There is statutory presumption of correctness of the entries made in the khatian: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 249 (D.B.).

Where in a suit for pre-emption, the plot sold was described in the R.S. Khatian as a tank appurtenant to a dwelling house and the vendor was described as a raiyati sthitiban, held, only a rebuttable presumption arose therefrom; it could not straight-way mean that the tank was agricultural: A.I.R. 1983 N.O.C. 46 (Cal.).

Where R.S. Khatian, a record-of-rights, prepared in 1964 showed title of one person and the one prepared in 1966 in the name of a different person without any proceedings for correction having been taken, held, the second entry being unauthorised had no value in the eyes of law; the normal rule that the later entry should be preferred over the earlier was not attracted: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 294: (1982) 1 Cal.L.J. 256: (1982) 1 Cal.H.N. 206 (D.B.).

Entries in khasra girdawri do not carry any presumption of truth but only constitute piece of evidence: A.I.R. 1966 Him. Pra. 48.

Where the plaintiff in a suit sought to prove their parentage from the entries in khasra and khatauni accounts of the village and the ration cards and muster rolls at the place where they were employed and the Court stated on no evidence that they were made on inquiry, held, that it might be presumed that the entries were made in a regular manner under S. 114 of the Evidence Act; but it is inconceivable that inquiries for such entries were made regarding the fact of S, being the father of plaintiffs. The Court is not bound to make any such presumption and the entries will be deemed to be made under exceptional circumstances: 1952 All.L.J. (Rev.) 203. A presumption of correctness attaches to the riwaj-i-am unless it is proved to be not a trustworthy document: (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 106: I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 156.

As laid down in S. 42(1) of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887, where it is not expressly provided in any, record-of-rights completed before 18-11-1871 that any forest, quarry, unclaimed unoccupied, deserted or wasteland spontaneously produced belonged to the land-owners, it shall be presumed to belong to the Government; such presumption, as per S. 42(3) of that Act is rebuttable. S. 42(2) of that Act, being in converse form, lays down that where the record-of-rights completed after 18-11-1871 does not expressly vest any forest etc. in the Government, it shall be presumed to belong to the landowners; such presumption is, however, not rebuttable. [1987 Punj.L.J. 393, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1991 P.&H. 134 (D.B.).

Where the plaintiffs seeking to injunct the defendant from interfering in their possession of the land on the ground that they were shown as in forcible possession in the remarks column of the panchsala khasras from 1963-64 to 1981-82 and they should be deemed to have continued in possession, held, since the M.P. Land Revenue Code, 1959 did not require the Patwari to make any such entry in the remarks column, he cannot be deemed to have performed an official act; no presumption of due performance and consequent continued possession of the plaintiff is permissible; injunction declined: 1991 M.P.L.J. 311 (D.B.).

Where apart from a judgment to which the defendants were not parties and which did not bind them and the plaintiff adduced no other evidence to establish the hiba-bil-evaz to be null and void, held, the Court always presumes the apparent to be the real unless the contrary is proved and, hence, the burden was on the plaintiff to prove his case which he failed to discharge; the hiba-bil-evaz is valid: A.I.R. 1976 Gau. 92 (D.B.).

An entry in khana shumari register not having been shown to carry a presumption of correctness, held, is not admissible under S. 32: A.I.R. 1974 P.&H. 343: (1974) 76 Punj.L.R. 444 (D.B.).

Fard Abpashi does not create right of irrigation, it only records such rights. The records are prepared for future use by parties whose rights have been recorded therein and if a person challenges the same as having been prepared incorrectly, the burden lies on him to prove it: A.I.R. 1980 Pat. 89: 1979 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 584: 1979 B.L.J. 619.

Entries in wajib-ul-arz—The wajib-ul-arz or village administration paper is a record of existing customs regarding rights and liabilities in the estate. It is not to be used for the creation of new rights and liabilities: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 286.

Wajib-ul-arz is village administration paper prepared with due care and after due enquiry by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties; being a part of the settlement record, statutory presumption of correctness attaches to it: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 861.

The entries in the settlement record-of-rights have only a presumptive value; the entries could be proved to be wrong by adducing rebutting evidence. Mere long possession of the land, however, will not show that the entries are incorrect: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 437.

Presumption of correctness of entries in settlement papers: 28 I.C. 239: 2 O.L.J. 127.

As to presumption of regularity of official acts in settlement proceedings, see A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 364. See also 1941 R.D. 198.

Settlement entry—Presumption of correctness—Presumption of correctness attaching to the settlement entry will prevail unless the contrary is proved by the plaintiffs as required by sub-S. (3) of S. 167: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 175: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 121.

The presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e) is a rebuttable one and once it is rebutted by the party challenging the settlement, the onus would certainly be on the successful party to support the settlement. [With a bare denial from the adversary, the entire burden does not come on the successful party before the Collector to uphold the settlement]. [A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 194; (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 143, Overruled; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 217; A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 763; A.I.R. 1955 Punj. 65, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1980 Ori. 199: (1980) 50 Cut.L.T. 393 (F.B.).

In the absence of other cogent and unimpeachable evidence to the contrary, the person in whose name the properties stood in survey and settlement registers should be taken to be the real owner thereof. The mere fact that tax was paid on one occasion by one individual in respect of lands standing in the name of somebody else does not denote that he is either the pattadar or is in enjoyment of the land. It might be that he paid it on behalf of the person in possession thereof: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 222: (1960) 1 An.W.R. 340.

Where in a suit for possession, the claimants relied on the revisional settlement record-of-rights in which suit lands were recorded in the names of their three predecessors but the three persons died long before the settlement operation, held, the entries had completely lost their presumptive force: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 79.

Where the whole land in a patti which was once owned by a common ancestor was at the time of the regular settlement in possession of his descendants according to ancestral shares and none of the descendants had acquired any land in the patti by purchase or introduced strangers in it by selling any portion of his ancestral holding, held, that an inference could be drawn from the circumstances of equality of holdings and reference to these in terms of ancestral shares in the settlement that the land had devolved by descent on the descendants: I.L.R. (1955) Patiala 36: A.I.R. 1956 S.C. 1.

Settlement pedigree tables—Presumption of truth of relationship: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 177: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 251.

Settlement records—Person recorded as raiyat of tank—Presumption is that he is raiyat—Presumption is, however, rebuttable: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Cal. 508.

Entries in settlement jamabandis are presumed to be correct unless proved otherwise: 1959 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 92.

Entries in jamabandi are presumed to be correct and raise presumption in favour of person whose name is recorded in jamabandi as tenant—Rejection of mutation relating to tenancy is no ground for not relying upon the entries as mutation order, which is not even presumptive place of evidence does not create or extinguish any right or title: A.I.R. 1966 Him. Pra. 61.

Entries in jamabandi presumed to be correct—However, old entries merely copied in new jamabandi not necessarily correct: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 344.

As to presumption regarding entries in jamabandi, see I.L.R. 13 Lah. 432: A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 586; 29 Nag.L.R. 273: A.I.R.1933 Nag. 130.

Entries in the jamabandi are not proof of title. They are only statements for revenue purpose. It is for the parties to establish the relationship or title to the property unless there is unequivocal admission: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 227.

Where in jamabandis the husband was recorded as a tenant and after his death, his wife continued to be so recorded for some years whereafter she was recorded as mortgagee in possession, held, on redemption of the mortgage, her tenancy in the land would revert back to her; the change in the record-of-rights, could not result in cessation of the tenancy: A.I.R. 1993 Him. Pra. 137.

Under S. 114 of the Evidence Act, there is a presumption that all the formalities in respect of a mutation had been duly complied with. Neither the Patwari who entered the mutation nor the Revenue Officer who attested the mutation need be examined to prove this: (1951) 53 Punj.L.R. 291: A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 126.

There is a presumption under S. 114 that official acts have been done in a regular manner and, therefore, it must be presumed that the mutation proceedings were preceded by a regular enquiry by the revenue authorities: (1972)2 Sim.L.J. 366.

Suit for redemption and recovery of possession of mortgaged property—Copy of mutation showing mortgagee having reported to Patwari acknowledging disputed mortgage—Report said to be destroyed—Held, presumption under S. 114 could not be raised and mortgagee could not be deemed to have signed or thumb-marked the report: (1966) 68 Punj.L.R. 408.

Where in a suit brought in 1961, for redemption of mortgage of 1895, by the purchaser of the rights of mortgagor, the plaintiff relied on certified copy of a statement made in mutation proceedings for the purpose of acknowledgment under S. 18 of the Limitation Act, but did not produce its original nor he examined any witness to prove the fact that the persons shown to have signed the original had in fact signed the same or those persons were the mortgagors/their representatives, held, in such circumstances, certified copy was no proof of the original nor the presumption under S. 90 or S. 114, Illus. (e) could be raised: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2342: 1970 Punj.L.J. 770: (1971) 2 S.C.R. 104.

Where the order sheet in mutation proceedings showed that the proclamation was issued but no objections were preferred, held, it was sufficient for the Court to raise presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e) that the official act of issuing the proclamation was regularly done: A.I.R. 1972 Ori. 148: (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 814 (D.B.).

A mutation in the name of a co-owner only raises a presumption of his being in possession; it does not amount to his being in exclusive possession or ouster of other co-owners; to pin point commencement of his adverse possession against a co-owner, the party must bring on record the proof of the co-owner's ouster: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 206 (Gau.).

The presumption of correctness cannot apply to papers of a survey until final publication, but the presumption arising from the circumstances that official duties are taken to have been regularly performed applies: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 468.

37. Revenue records.—(See also Notes under S. 35). Entries in the revenue records have a presumptive value as to possession. They may even be taken presumptive proof of title as held in I.L.R. (1937) Nag. 395. Because of the presumption, the burden is on person contending to the contrary to show the entries to be wrong. In the absence of anything more the presumption would be good proof of title: 1958 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 164.

The entries in the revenue records are good prima facie evidence to prove purpose or intended user of the disputed land but they raise only a rebuttable presumption. [A.I.R. 1969 Andh. Pra. 345 (F.B.), Reversed; A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 401, Overruled]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 113: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 146.

It is settled law as laid down by the Privy Council in 53 Ind. App. 220: A.I.R. 1926 P.C. 100; 47 Ind. App. 57: A.I.R. 1920 P.C. 46; A.I.R. 1948 P.C. 210, and by the Supreme Court in (1978) 1 S.C.R. 177: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2012; (1991) 2 S.C.R. 531: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1301 that mutation of names in revenue record is no evidence of title, though it may be relevant for other purposes; it is an equally settled law that in case of open land, title follows possession: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1496.

Though revenue record entries should generally be accepted at their face value but the presumption of truth attaches to genuine and not forged or fraudulent entries; the distinction, fine but real, is that though one cannot challenge the entry as incorrect but one can always impugn it as having been made fraudulently or surreptitiously; fraud and forgery would rob the entry of all its legal effect: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 1485: (1976) 3 S.C.C. 642: 1976 (U.J.) S.C. 573.

The revenue records including maps proved in a case are prepared after following certain prescribed procedure. They are presumed to be correct. The presumption, however, is rebuttable: A.I.R. 1977 Gau. 41 (D.B.).

The report of a Revenue Officer conducting a sale is admissible in evidence, and there is a presumption attaching to such report, it being for the objector to show that anything was done irregularly: (1937) 39 Punj.L.R. 187. See also I.L.R. (1945) Bom. 681.

Orders of Revenue Courts, of limited jurisdiction as they are, are conclusive only for the purposes of the proceedings before them; enquiries before them are of fiscal nature in the State's interest for ascertaining which of the claimant be put in occupation so as to facilitate revenue recovery; even certified copies of revenue records are not conclusive but are only prima facie evidence of possession or the right to hold the land; they confer no title which falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of the civil Courts which alone can fasten finality on such rights. [A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 408, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 6 (Andh. Pra.).

Revenue record showing party as tenant for kharif harvest of 1961—His possession of land in June, 1961, can be presumed: 1965 Cur.L.J. 669: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 1053: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 494.

Revenue records—Puduval Registry in name of certain person—Presumption of ownership: A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 335.

Where in a suit by a temple for a declaration that suit properties belonged to it and for possession of the same after ejecting the Archakas, it was found that barring some stray entries in favour of the plaintiff almost the entire revenue record was in favour of the defendants, held, no useful purpose would be served by discussing the oral evidence led by the parties as it was of uncertain character and was inadequate to displace the presumption arising out of the several entries spread over a large number of years showing possession of the defendants in their own right: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 1299: (1973) 2 S.C.C. 261.

Where a father-in-law intended to transfer a chawl in favour of his daughter-in-law as he thought that his son, being a speculator, was not dependable and the daughter-in-law and her children were to be provided for and only entries in the revenue records were made wherein the daughter-in-law was mentioned as "kabjedar", that is occupant, of the chawl, held, the only presumption that could be raised would be in regard to her possession, and possession alone, and not ownership which could only be conveyed by a registered deed: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1269: (1989) 2 S.C.C. 630.

No evidence that last male-holder possessed of certain items of property before he died—Revenue registers containing name of his widow as owner of these items—Fact that the widow was in possession of those items would not give rise to presumption that those items were the property of the male-holder and the widow get those items of property as heir of her deceased husband: (1968) 1 An.L.T. 377: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 276.

38. Election matters.—(See also Note 87, infra). The entry in the electoral rolls as to age is neither conclusive nor presumptive evidence. Under sub-S. (7) of S. 36 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, a certified copy, of an entry in the electoral roll shall be conclusive evidence of the fact that the person referred to in that entry is an elector for that constituency but recourse cannot be had to this sub-section for arguing that the age as mentioned in that entry also has any evidentiary value. The presumption under Illus. (e) of S. 114, Evidence Act, to the effect that the Court may presume that official acts have been regularly performed, is hardly applicable to an entry about the age in the electoral roll which is made on hearsay and is not verified or attested: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 433: I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 2246.

Elections—Counting of ballot papers—Single mistake deleted—Presumption of correctness attached in counting of votes is not destroyed: A.I.R. 1966 All. 20.

Where the nomination of a candidate for election to the Managing Committee of a Co-operative Society was challenged on the ground that being a defaulter he was not qualified to contest but he denied having received any notice of demand which alone could render him a defaulter and his opponents produced the original register and record which included a certificate of posting in respect of the notice of demand, held, though there appeared to be no doubt about the notice of demand having in fact been posted but it cannot lead to an irrebuttable presumption that the demand notice was indeed delivered; nothing on record of the Returning Officer afforded any basis, in view of the candidate's denial, that the demand notice was actually served: A.I.R. 1995 Bom. 91.

Constitution of Election Tribunal—Validity—Presumption: 1964 Kash.L.J. 335: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 88.

Where on the date of the scrutiny of his nomination papers for election to a Panchayat, a dismissed teacher of a recognised school governed by the Orissa Education Code had been reinstated in appeal but was not allowed to rejoin duty, held, he is presumed under S. 114, Illus. (e) to be in service and disqualified for contesting the election: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 68: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 942 (D.B.).

Where a candidate admittedly hold the post of an Extra Departmental Branch Post Master, an office of profit, justified his candidature as a Sarpanch on the plea of having submitted his resignation which was verbally accepted, held, it is a fantastic theory; resignations are never accepted verbally in official dealings; he was disqualified from contesting the election: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 68: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 942 (D.B.).

Presumption that the Presiding Officer under Punjab Gram Panchayat Election Rules has discharged his duties properly and in accordance with law—Rebuttal—Person seeking to rebut the presumption must lead evidence for doing so: 1966 Cur.L.J. 223 I.L.R. (1966) 2 Punj. 527.

39. Birth and death registers.—(See also S. 35). Birth registers are maintained by public servants in the discharge of their official duties, a duty specifically enjoined on them by law and in the generality of cases the entries therein furnish the best evidence of the date of birth unless they were shown to be wrong. It is not necessary to prove who made the entries and what was the source of his information. The identity of the person with the entry made in the register has to be established independently: (1969) 35 Cut. L.T. 60: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 859.

Though entries in a birth register, being a public document, are admissible per se but mere production of their copy does not, as a matter of law, connect them with the person concerned. Where plaintiffs challenged, a sale deed on the ground that they were minors at the time of its execution and they produced their birth entries as proof of their age, held, in the absence of any material on record that the said birth entries related to the plaintiffs, and the fact that they failed to come in the witness box, an adverse inference could be drawn that they were not minors at the time of the sale: A.I.R. 1983 P.&H. 366.

In so far as age factor is concerned, the medical certificates are only approximate and not accurate. They cannot fix up the exact date of birth. The features of body of human individuals vary depending upon several factors like social conditions, genetic factors, nourishment, etc. As such two medical opinions are bound to differ. May be in cases where there is no other cogent and clinching evidence one has to fall back upon the medical certificates regarding the age. But where there is clinching document, i.e., the certificate of birth issued by the Registrar of Births, a statutory authority who maintains the Birth Register as also the Death Register in accordance with the provisions of the Act and Rules made thereunder, held, such an official act carries a statutory presumption under S. 114, and the entry in the School Register mentioning the age cannot come in aid to rebut the statutory presumption attached to the certificate issued by the Registrar of Births basing on the duly maintained register in that regard. Whenever a conflict arises as regards the age of a particular person the certificate issued by the Registrar of Births is taken as more authentic and conclusive rather than a mere self serving statement of date of birth while admitting the students in the School: (1993) 2 An.L.T. 150.

Birth and Death Register—Presumption as to correctness attaches to entries in it: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 481.

Where an extract of death entry register was produced to establish the death of a person, held, in the absence of other evidence, it could not be presumed that the entry related to or proved the death of the person concerned. [A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 25; A.I.R. 1949 Ori. 22, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 248.

40. Municipal record.—Grant of exemption for a premises on the ground of its being a temple by a Municipality, held, is an official act; it can be taken as regularly performed while determining whether it is a temple or not: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 555.

Where a person was recorded lessee in Municipal records, held, the inference is that he is in possession: (1980) 1 M.P.W.N. 87.

Exercise of discretion—Presumption as to, Municipalities: 1959 M.P.C. 119.

Bye-laws made under S. 185(b) challenged—Plea that there was no beating of drum, proclaiming that original copy of draft bye-laws was open for inspection in municipal office and that there was no publication of draft bye-laws in a particular ward—There is presumption that an act done by Municipality has been done according to prescribed procedure—Held, draft bye-laws were published and proclaimed as provided under S. 356 read with S. 26 of Bihar and Orissa General Clauses Act, I of 1917: 1966 B.L.J.R. 717.

Allegation in petition that Vikas Adhikari was not nominated by Collector for purpose of co-option proceedings as envisaged under Rajasthan Municipalities (Appointment of Members Councillors by Co-options) Order, 1959—Allegation not supported by affidavit—Rule of presumption that official acts are regularly performed applied: 1964 Raj.L.W. 599: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 140: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 86.

41. Land acquisition proceedings.—Consent of Government under S. 40, Land Acquisition Act—Presumption as to grant of: A.I.R. 1958 All. 126.

Payment of compensation to widows in land acquisition proceedings—Payment of compensation would not necessarily mean that widow's title to land is established: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 153: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134.

Grant—Land Acquisition Officer having access to all relevant documentary evidence, not for a moment doubting that there was grant of minerals—Question of such grant not traversed before District Judge—It must be assumed that Land Acquisition Officer was fully aware that question of grant of minerals was not controverted—Land Acquisition Act, 1894, S. 54: (1967) 1 Mys.L.J. 159.

Judicial and official acts—Presumption—Land acquisition proceedings—Hearing of objections—Proceedings of Dy. Commissioner stating that intimation of adjourned date had been issued—Service of intimation must be presumed—Land Acquisition Act, 1894, S. 5-A(2): A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 55.

Acquisition of land for company by Government under Land Acquisition Act—Presumption is that land was acquired for purpose of business of company: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 338.

Land acquisition—Sale of adjoining properties—Sale deed registered—No presumption that price shown was actually paid: A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 265.

Where in the proceedings for determination of compensation payable for the land acquired, when the sale deeds of certain adjacent lands were sought to be relied upon for determining the market value of the property acquired, the claimants contended that the Court should proceed on the basis that generally less price is shown in the sale deeds, held, in absence of any evidence to the contrary, the Court cannot presume that the price shown in the sale deed was less than the actual price: A.I.R. 1994 All. 66.

Notification under S. 4, Land Acquisition Act—Giving of substance is an official act—Unless contrary is proved, it must be presumed to have been properly done: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Cal. 529.

"Public purpose"—Meaning—Decision of State Government as to public purpose—Presumption as to correctness is rebuttable—Court can examine the purpose: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 177.

Reservation of an area for particular purpose—Does not amount to restriction—

Presumption as to diminishing of value cannot arise: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 5.

Where respondent's land was acquired and compensation was awarded by concerned officer but subsequently she filed a claim for enhancement of compensation and pleaded that bar under S. 27 of the Kerala Land Acquisition Act, 1962 regarding enhancement of compensation did not apply as notice under S. 9 of the said Act was invalid inasmuch as it did not give prescribed 15 days time to the claimant to make a claim regarding compensation before the concerned officer, held, a presumption arose that the claimant had been prejudiced and, thus, bar under S. 27 of the said Act was inapplicable: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 162 (Ker.) (D.B.).

In a reference under S. 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, the presumption under S. 114 (e) of the Evidence Act is that the Collector was prima facie satisfied about the claimant's right to the reference; such a presumption is rebuttable as the acquisition authority (the Improvement Trust) was not heard when the reference order was made, the onus to dislodge the presumption lies on that authority; if that authority did not produce the documents in its possession showing the quantum of the lands and the compensation therefor paid to the landowners, the Court may draw an adverse presumption against it under S. 114 (e) of the Evidence Act: (1985-2) 88 Punj.L.R. 663.

Application for reference made beyond six weeks from date of award—Plea that applicant was not present when award was made—Plea not raised before Land Acquisition Officer or before District Judge—Held, circumstances indicated that applicant was present and affidavit filed by him that he was not present was not of much value: 1965 Raj.L.W. 495: A.I.R. 1966 Raj. 118.

Acquisition of land for company—Suit for declaring acquisition null and void—Plaintiff claiming locus standi on the basis of interest acquired under an alleged settlement of the land to him by the company making no attempt to prove his case—Court cannot find title in his favour by drawing adverse inference against the company for non-production of documents of title of plaintiff particularly where it had denied the existence of those documents: I.L.R. (1969) 1 Cal. 529.

42. Assessment record.—The Court is entitled to presume that all official acts are regularly performed and that every public servant discharges his duties in accordance with the provisions of law. It must be assumed, therefore, that before according his approval under S. 22 (4), Income-tax Act, the Commissioner had satisfied himself in regard to the necessity of calling for the world income of the assessee: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 26: I.L.R. (1957)Punj. 567: (1956) 30 I.T.R. 496.

Where under an Export Promotion Scheme, weavers residing in Maharashtra and Gujarat were issued cards entitling them to buy specified quantity of art silk yarn from specified manufacturers in terms whereof the manufacturer had to offer within a week of the allocation the yarn for sale and to complete a firm contract of sale within three weeks of the allocation but the manufacturer in Tamil Nadu delivered the supply to the weavers through its agent in Bombay, held, the assessing authority had correctly taken it to be an inter-State sale liable to be taxed as such; in case there were any intervening facts which could have rendered it a local, not inter-State, sale it was for the assessee to place them before the assessing authority; if he did not do so, the presumption is that they would have gone against the assessee: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1604: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 457.

43. Arbitration.—There is no presumption that the arbitrator must have given notice of the date of the hearing before him to one of the parties to the arbitration proceeding, it being not a matter of presumption but a matter of evidence: A.I.R. 1953 Ajmer 58: 1953 A.M.L.J. 111.

Rules of natural justice—Observance of, by arbitrator—Presumption as to—Violation of principles of natural justice, when justifies interference—Both parties heard—Minor grievance—No ground for misconduct: 1963 M.P.L.J. 284: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 15.

Steps in aid of proceedings as contemplated by S. 34 of the Arbitration Act—Presumption—Rebuttable: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 187.

44. Illustration (e)—Others.—No evidence of any dedication of the properties to the purposes set out in S. 3(1) of the Wakf Act—Held, no presumption that they constituted wakf properties. See (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 949.

Discretion vested in President under Cl. (1) of R. 11 of Central Civil Services (Provision) Rules, 1972, is neither arbitrary nor is likely to be abused; there is presumption in favour of legality of all official acts: 1984 Lab.I.C. 498 (Andh. Pra.).

Where the Registrar granted a licence under R. 9 of Bombay Money Lenders Rules, 1959, held, a presumption will arise that the licence was granted only after satisfaction about compliance of the conditions precedent: (1982) 2 Bom.C.R. 195.

Where the examination of two students in a combined competitive examination in general knowledge was cancelled merely by rejecting their reply to the show cause notice on its "careful consideration" as "not satisfactory" without a speaking order or assigning any reasons therefor, held, this being a quasi judicial decision having civil consequences, the authorities not having their objective mind and kept the writ Court in the dark, failed to observe the principles of natural justice: (1989-1) 37 B.L.J.R. 140.

Where the petitioner who was declared to have failed in some of the subjects applied for revaluation but no reply was received to his various letters calling upon the Registrar for revaluation and thereafter he prayed for a direction to Registrar to revalue certain papers but the University stated that the answer scripts of the petitioners were not available and later on it was found that same had been disposed of to a paper mill for purpose of pulps in violation of the University Rule which provided that the University should keep the answer scripts for at least six weeks from the date on which the results were announced, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the University that had the answer scripts been produced, the Court would have found facts adverse to the University's stand and, therefore, they had withheld the production of answer scripts arbitrarily and deliberately: A.I.R. 1989 Kam. 174.

It cannot be said that in the case of allegations of fabrication of a document, the contents of which are culled out from a record, maintained in a public office, there is an irrebuttable presumption that the parent record does not suffer from any infirmity. Each case will depend upon its facts. Where tabulation marks register declared respondent as unsuccessful but the certificate issued by the competent authority showed him as successful and his name was also gazetted in the list of successful candidates and it was not claimed that the said certificate suffered the vice of corrections or alterations or erasures and it was not signed and issued by the competent authority, held, in the absence of proper and clinching evidence, pointing out that the certificate issued by the competent authority and possessed by the respondent, must stand eschewed as a fabricated one, it was not possible to go by any universal presumption that the Tabulation marks register alone was reflecting the correct position and that presumption was irrebuttable: (1989-2) 104 Mad.L.W. 118 (D.B.).

Under Regn. 34(2) of the Gujarat Higher Secondary Certificate Examination Regulations, 1977, a candidate declared to have been failed can be declared successful only if on verification it is discovered that an answer was not evaluated or marked or there was a mistake in totalling. Thus, where the marksheet and the moderator's sheet supported by affidavit showed the failed candidate to have secured 18 per cent marks in Gujarati, held, his failure was prima facie proved and the presumption under S. 114 (e) could be drawn; merely because the Board had destroyed his answer book in haste and before the prescribed period is no ground to declare the candidate having passed: A.I.R. 1988 Guj. 6: (1987-2) 28 Guj.L.R. 839: (1987-2) 7 Guj.L.H. 219 (D.B.).

The fact of sickness or physical inability on the day of examination must be accepted on the basis of medical certificate in absence of any proof to the contrary. The fact that a person was in a position to travel on the next day cannot lead to an irresistible conclusion that he was not sick on the previous day: (1986-1) 27 Guj.L.R. 121.

Where proceedings under the Bihar Public Land Encroachment Act, 1956 were conducted in violation of the provisions of law, held, there could be no presumption that the judicial and official acts were regularly performed: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1092.

Though under S. 72-K(2) of the Kerala Land Reforms Act, 1964, a purchase certificate issued under that Act is conclusive proof of the assignment of the right, title and interest of the owner and the intermediaries of the holding and under S. 114(e) of the Evidence Act, 1872, there is a presumption of its having been granted regularly, held, it does not oust the civil Court's jurisdiction to try and determine whether it was obtained by fraud: A.I.R. 1991 Ker. 316: (1990) 2 Ker.L.J. 702.

U.P. Imposition of Ceiling on Land Holdings Act, 1960, S. 5—Determination of ceiling area—Family arrangement recognised by Consolidation Authorities—Such transaction cannot be characterised as fictitious merely because it tends to reduce holding of tenure holder—Nothing to show that this arrangement was arrived at with a view to defeat ceiling law—No such presumption can be drawn merely because it results in reducing the area held by tenure holder: 1977 All.W.C. 330: 1977 All.L.R. 534.

Where the award was unanimously given by the panchas appointed in terms of R. 20 of the Wilkinson's Rules enforceable under S. 1 of the Chotanagpur Tenancy Act, 1908 for partitioning property under the customary law governing the community, held, it could be presumed under S. 114(e) that the panchas were most conversant with the customary law and their judicial and official acts were regularly performed: A.I.R. 1988 Pat. 287: 1987 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 551: 1988 Pat.L.J.R. (H.C.) 39: 1988 B.L.J. 451.

Courts are bound to take judicial notice of prorogation and presume the regularity of these actions which must be interpreted as far as possible so that the thing done may be valid rather than invalid: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 903.

Ancient marriage register produced from proper custody evidenced payment of streedhanam to sisters of deceased—No motive for making, decades before the dispute arose, a false or imaginary entry regarding payment alleged or proved—Entries must be presumed to be genuine: A.I.R. 1979 Ker. 34 (F.B.).

Where after the malguzari villages vested in the State and the Forest Department auctioned the right to propagate and collect lac from malguzari forests and the auction-purchaser had also worked the contract, held, a presumption could be raised under S. 114 (e) of the Deputy Commissioner having transferred the possession of the forests on behalf of the State to the Forest Department in the normal course of official business. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1931, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1973 Madh. Pra. 274: 1973 M.P.L.J. 286 (D.B.).

Where a writ petition challenged a notification appointing a Commission of Inquiry to enquire into the allegations made against a Chief Minister and his Government, held, it is permissible to raise the presumption of the official acts having been regularly performed; however, it has been the practice of the High Court to ask the Government to State the facts and refer to the relevant documents to enable the Court to know, even before admitting the petition, whether the allegations made therein are true or not; though the Court does not follow the procedure of caveat, hearing the other side before admission is not unusual: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 223: A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 192 (D.B.).

Where on integration of services consequent upon the reorganisation of the States of Punjab and Himachal Pradesh, the composite Punjab State Electricity Board was dissolved and some of its employees were allocated to Himachal Pradesh and the joint integrated seniority list prepared was impugned by them on the contention that their representation against it was rejected by the Advisory Committee and the Central Government though statutorily required did not apply its independent mind to their representation, held, from the signature of the Minister appended on the record it could be presumed that the Central Government had considered all relevant facts and documents: 1981 Lab.I.C. 758 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

Effect of receipt under S. 39(3)—Presumption under a bill of lading—Word "tally"—Meaning—Tally of cargo—Duty of Port Trust—Port Trust giving receipt in general way without specifying brands which were also part of marking of consignment does so at its own risk—Issue of 'A' certificate by Port Trust precludes it from saying that steamer agents had not landed consignments with particular brand (Obiter): I.L.R. (1966) 1 Mad. 164: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 42.

Applicability—Regularity of official acts—Presumption—Affidavit sworn before Oaths Commissioner in Pakistan—Presumption does not apply: A.I.R. 1970 J.&K. 159.

Foreign ex parte decree against defendant a domicile and resident of India—Observation in the decree that summons was duly served on defendant—From this observation it cannot be presumed that defendant was resident, was physically present in that country on the date of suit when the summons was served since a defendant may be served even outside that country: A.I.R. 1967 Del. 22.

Where a Will executed in 1941 in Burma was also registered on the same day and a certified copy thereof with a certificate from the Registrar was produced in India, held, in the absence of other evidence, the factum of prima facie execution of the Will in the normal course of official business could be presumed under S. 114(e): A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 421: (1972) 2 M.L.J. 508: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 122 (D.B.).

Where a firm in contravention of contractual obligation tried to pass on different goods as those which were agreed upon and relying upon the inspection report the firm was black-listed, held, it could not be contended that action of black-listing the firm was not based on sufficient material; and, moreover, there is a presumption that official records maintained in the normal course of business are correct: A.I.R. 1992 Del. 295 (D.B.).

Where a Raja gifted certain valuable land called "Barang" to his younger brother at a nominal rent, held, a presumption arose that "Barang" was estate and donee was intermediary under S. 2(g) and (h) of the Orissa Estates Abolition Act, 1951. More so when after abolition of the estate, the State was directly receiving land revenue from the erstwhile tenants to the deceased petitioner treating them as raiyats. [A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 141 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1988 N.O.C. 61 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Where in a prosecution of an owner of a mine for failure to file the annual return under S. 66 of the Mines Act, 1952, there was on record a reminder issued by Chief Inspector of Mines, and a clerk was examined to show that no return was received in the office; held, that when the letter was issued by the Chief Inspector of Mines, the presumption was that the official business was conducted in common course of natural events. Accordingly, the Courts should presume that the letter was issued only after being satisfied that no return was received in the office. The onus was on the accused to prove that the return was filed: I.L.R. (1960) Cut. 162: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1355: A.I.R. 1960 Ori. 180.

Act V of 1859 is special statute dealing with Ghatwali lands while Act IV of 1870 is general statute dealing with management of estates that come under superintendence of Court of Wards—General later law does not abrogate earlier special one by mere implication—Special provisions under Act V of 1859 in regard to conditions imposed for validity of lease of Ghatwali land prevail over those imposed under Act IV of 1870—Ghatwali estate under superintendence of Court of Wards leased in perpetuity for purpose of effecting dwelling houses—Lease granted by Deputy Commissioner and not by Commissioner, on behalf of Court of Wards—Validity of lease not questioned for about 80 years and lessee in possession of land all those years—Presumption under Illus. (e), S. 114, Evidence Act, 1872, viz., official act if proved to have been done, is presumed to have been regularly done, arises—Lease held valid: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1931.

Satisfaction of detaining authority under Preventive Detention Act—Presumption: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 119: A.I.R. 1965 Punj. 270.

When the language of S. 50 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 obliges the officer concerned to inform the person to be searched of his right to be searched in the presence of a Gazetted Officer or a Magistrate, held, there is no room for drawing a presumption under S. 114(e) of the Evidence Act that he had so informed in absence of any evidence to that effect. If no evidence to this effect is given, the Court must presume that the person to be searched was not informed of the protection the law gave him: 1995 Cr.L.J. 2662 (S.C.).

As S. 3(2) of the J.&K. Preventive Detention Act, 1964 requires the detaining authority, other than the Government, to report to the Government about the detention and the place of detention of a person under the Act, held, being an official act, it must be presumed that, in the absence of an averment to the contrary, the report was sent, the Government was made aware of the place of detention and had approved of them: A.I.R. 1971 J.&K. 1: 1970 Kash.L.J. 338: 1971 Cr.L.J. 48 (F.B.).

An order of detention passed under the J.&K. Public Safety Act, 1978 signed by the Addl. Secretary to Govt., Home Department and issued by orders of the Governor, held, is presumed to be valid; such presumption is, however, rebuttable but in that event the onus lies upon such person who asserts the same to be contrary to the provisions of the Constitution: 1993 Cr.L.J. 727 (J.&K.).

Where the detenu under the National Security Act, 1980, was a practising advocate and the Advisory Board consisted of High Court Judges and the detenu had given very lengthy arguments before the Board citing a number of authorities in support of his submission and the board after due consideration concluded that his detention was proper and gave its reasons also for such conclusion, held, there was a presumption that the Advisory Board had considered all the documentary evidence produced by the detenu: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1082: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1348.

Where a detenu under Conversation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act (52 of 1974), contended that the confirming authority had not considered at all the deposition of the defence witness but it appeared that the Advisory Committee had in its report referred to the evidence of the defence witness, and the confirming authority had considered the report of the Advisory Committee, held, it will not be unreasonable to presume that all the records including the deposition of the defence witness were before the confirming authority and that it had applied its mind to the deposition of defence witness also: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 48: 1987 Cr.L.J. 318: (1986) 4 S.C.C. 240.

45. Illustrations (e) and (f)—Postal business—General.—A correctly addressed postal cover sent by registered post is presumed, under S. 114, to have been duly served upon the addressee; evidence of actual tender and refusal is wholly redundant and not necessary for raising the presumption; for if evidence was required to be produced, there would have been no need to provide for the presumption: A.I.R. 1976 Del. 111: (1976) 12 Del.L.T. 127.

A letter correctly addressed and posted, if not received back through the dead letter office must be presumed to have reached the addressee. A postal receipt does not normally bear the whole address of the addressee except the name of the addressee and that of the Post Office where the letter is addressed and, thus, it cannot be argued that the letter was not sent in the proper address. Therefore, where a letter containing a notice to quit was not received back, held, it had to be presumed, in the circumstances, that it duly reached the addressee and was received by him: A.I.R. 1971 Ker. 231: 1971 Ker.L.T. 273: 1971 Ker.L.J. 485; (1994-1) 113 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 114.

If it is proved that a letter addressed to the addressee had been handed over to the postal department, the presumption is that it has been delivered to the addressee. It is not necessary that there should be a despatch by registered post or under a certificate of posting: (1969) 19 Law Rep. 415 (Mys.).

If a notice was sent by registered post, the presumption is that the notice was served at the time when it would be delivered in the ordinary course of post. The presumption is, however, rebuttable: A.I.R. 1950 Cal. 256.

If a letter properly directed, containing a notice is proved to have been put into the post office, it is presumed that the letter reached its destination at the proper time according to the regular course of business of the post office and was received by the person to whom it was addressed and that presumption would apply even in the case of a letter sent by ordinary post: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 410: 1968 Mah.L.J. 797: (1969) 71 Bom.L.R. 214; A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 234: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 424: 34 Cut.L.T. 823.

As to presumption regarding notice and other processes of Court, see A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 487.

There is a presumption that there was proper service of summons: I.L.R. (1956) Trav.-Co. 1130.

Postal business—Presumption—When letter is posted, presumption is that it has reached destination and has been delivered to addressee—Letter sent by registered post—Presumption is still stronger—Acknowledgment signed by someone at other end—Presumption would be that it was received on behalf of addressee—Presumption is, however, rebuttable: 1966 B.L.J.R. 808: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 434.

A "properly addressed" cover for the purpose of presuming due service under S. 114, Illus. (e) need not be the "permanent" address; it would suffice if it is the party's correct address for the time being. [A.I.R. 1970 All. 446 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 All. 539.

A person may have more than one address and a notice sent to that person at any of the addresses under registered post may be presumed to have been validly served on him. But in such a case, there must be evidence that that person has more than one address: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 245.

With respect to letters which are not properly addressed, presumption cannot be raised that they must have reached the place of destination: A.I.R. 1975 Raj. 121: 1975 Raj.L.W. 107.

Notice posted by giving proper address—Presumption—Rebuttal: A.I.R. 1966 Assam 104.

A notice sent by registered cover properly addressed and pre-paid carries a presumption of due service, but when the addressee denies on oath about the tender of any such notice, the presumption stands rebutted: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 438; 1978 All.L.J. 44: (1978) 4 All.L.R. 90; A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 206: (1978) 1 Cal.L.J. 451: (1977-78) 82 Cal.W.N. 731.

Though there is a presumption that letters shown to have been sent by registered post had reached their destination, yet the presumption stands rebutted if the addressee denies having received them; it is then only on the evidence of tender by the postal peon to the addressee that the letters can be taken to have been duly delivered: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 142: 1972 B.L.J.R. 97: 1971 Pat.L.J.R. 587 (D.B.).

The presumption of service of a letter sent by registered post can be rebutted by the addressee by appearing as witness and stating that he never received such letter. If the acknowledgment due receipt contains the signatures of the addressee himself and the addressee as a witness states that he never received such letter and the acknowledgment due does not bear his signature and such statement of the addressee is believed then it would be a sufficient rebuttal of the presumption drawn against him. The burden would then shift on the plaintiff who wants to rely on such presumption to satisfy the Court by leading oral or documentary evidence to prove the service of such letter on the addressee. This rebuttal by the defendant of the presumption drawn against him would of course depend on the veracity of his statement. The Court in the facts and circumstances of a case may not consider such denial by the defendant as truthful and in that case such denial alone would not be sufficient. But if there is nothing to disbelieve the statement of the defendant then it would be sufficient rebuttal of the presumption of service of such letter or notice sent to him by registered post: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 2156: (1990-2) 10 Guj.L.H. 430.

A letter sent by registered post to the correct address of a named person is presumed and deemed to have been received by him and the mere statement on oath by the addressee that it had not been received by him will not rebut the presumption contained in S. 114 of the Evidence Act and the deeming provision in S. 27 of the General Clauses Act: (1970) 2 M.L.J. 535.

Existence of acknowledgments in respect of registered articles in Post Office—Existence would no more than raise a presumption that those articles were delivered to the addressee—Presumption may be rebutted by evidence of addressees that articles were in fact not received by them: (1963) 2 Lab.L.J. 667: (1963) 1 S.C.R. (Supp.) 408: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 822.

Where notice by land acquisition authorities was sent by registered post acknowledgment due to trustees of a charitable trust at residential address and acknowledgment duly signed was received by the postal authorities, held, a presumption of service of notice arose. Mere fact that the postman who tendered the registered packet was not examined would not rebut said presumption. [A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1284, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1995 Bom. 172 (D.B.).

Where there was no pleading by the plaintiff that the notice was not served upon him nor did he lead any evidence in that regard, held, presumption of service of notice could be raised: 1973 B.B.C.J. 120.

There is no warrant for holding that if a registered letter is not received back by the sender it must be presumed that it was received by the addressee: (1983) 85 Punj. L.R. 520: 1983 Cr. L.T. 344.

There is always a presumption under law that, in case any letter or a publication like the newspaper is forwarded under postal certificate on a correct address, publication or letter has reached the addressee unless it is received back with a report that the addressee does not reside at the given address. Thus, where the newspaper containing notice of the date of hearing of the suit sent at the party's address was not received back by the Court, held, presumption arose that it was correctly delivered at that address: A.I.R. 1991 Del. 50: (1990) 42 Del.L.T. 401: 1990 Rajdhani L.R. 425: (1991-1) 99 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 70.

The post marks of the places of posting and destination, on the invitation cards, held, are sufficient to infer that they were posted and received by the addressees in the normal course; they are, thus, admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 102 (D.B.).

Presumption of due service of letter—Report and intimation sent by registered post at correct address of accused with correct name supplied by him at time of taking sample—Presumption under S. 114, Illus. (f): 1982 All. L.J. 1338.

Where a notice is required or authorised to be served by post under any Central or State enactment and a notice is accordingly despatched by registered post, an obligatory presumption of due service would arise under the relevant provisions of the Central or the State General Clauses Act. Where any such notice is not required or authorised to be served by post, but a notice is nevertheless served by post, registered or ordinary, a Court may, not that it must, in a given case raise a presumption of due service under the provisions of S. 114. But in either case, the Court may, in view of the sworn assertion of the addressee to the contrary, or some other reliable evidence on record, hold any such presumption, whether obligatory or optional, to have been rebutted. Thus, S. 13(6) of the W.B. Premises Tenancy Act, 1956, not having required or authorised service of notice by post, the presumption of due service which would operate is not the obligatory one under S. 28 of the Bengal General Clauses Act, but the optional one under S. 114 of the Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1989 Cal. 14: (1988) 1 Cal.L.J. 250: (1988) 1 Cal.H.N. 219:(1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 929 (D.B.).

(a). Section 27 of the General Clauses Act vis-a-vis section 114 of Evidence Act.—Presumption of law under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act and that under S. 114 of the Evidence Act—Distinction explained: 1970 All.L.J. 336: A.I.R. 1970 All. 446 (F.B.).

Presumptions under S. 27, General Clauses Act and S. 114, Evidence Act—Distinction—Former is one of law and obligatory while latter is discretionary: 1969 All.L.J. 849: 1969 Ren.C.R. 849: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 477.

A presumption arises under S. 114 of the Evidence Act read with S. 27 of the General Clauses Act (1897) with regard to a notice sent to the tenants. The posting of the notice by mail and the endorsement of refusal recorded thereon are official acts and it will be presumed to have been done in the ordinary course: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 335: 1977 Kash.L.J. 57: 1977 Ren.C.J. 636.

Although presumption under S. 27, General Clauses Act can only arise when the notice is sent by registered post, there may arise a presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act when notice is sent by post as contemplated by S. 106, T.P. Act irrespective of whether it is sent by ordinary post or under certificate of posting.

Both the presumptions are, however, rebuttable. When the cover containing the notice has been returned to the sender by the postal authorities, then that fact is direct proof of the fact that the notice sent by post was not delivered to the party to whom it was addressed. Whether it was tendered and, if so, to whom tendered, remain a matter to be ascertained on evidence. If acceptable evidence is available, that it was tendered to the party personally, then such facts may bring the service of notice within the second mode mentioned in S. 106. If, however, tender or delivery is not to the party personally but to a member of his family or a servant, then it may be effective tender or delivery only when, the notice was addressed to the residence of the party. Such personal tender or vicarious tender may be effective even if it was through the agency of post office, and proof of that tender come from testimony of any person present at the event, and not only by examining the postman. If the letter containing notice sent by post has not been returned to the sender, then it is a case where presumption operates. Whether such presumption has been rebutted depends on the acceptability of evidence denying tender or delivery offered by the defendant. Mere denial will not lead invariably to rebuttal of presumption properly raised: A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 49.

The first presumption as to delivery of letter to addressee arises by posting of the letter in the ordinary course without registration under S. 114, Illus. (f) of the Evidence Act. The raising of this presumption is not in any way prevented by S. 27 of the General Clauses Act. The latter provision does not mean that no presumption of the delivery of letter can arise unless it is registered. The second presumption under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act arises only when the letter is sent by registered post. But the provisions of S. 114, Illus. (f) of the Evidence Act and S. 27 of the General Clauses Act are independent of each other and can stand together. They are not mutually repugnant. Thus, where a notice of demand was served by landlord under a certificate of posting as well as through registered post but the registered envelope was returned with remarks that nobody from inside gave a reply, held, the presumption of the delivery of notice arose only under S. 114, Illus. (f) and not under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act: A.I.R. 1973 Del. 39: I.L.R. (1972) 2 Del. 943: 1972 Ren.C.R. 960. See also (1979) 16 Del.L.T. 32.

Service by post—Presumption under S. 27, Mysore General Clauses Act (III of 1899)—Presumption is rebuttable—Contrary that has to be proved for rebuttal has no reference to actual service: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 77.

Where in ejectment proceedings, the landlady claimed to have sent the notice through registered post but defendants denied to have signed the acknowledgment, held, presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act and S. 27, General Clauses Act could be raised only if it was shown that the notice gave correct particulars of the addressee on the notices and on the forms of acknowledgment and such a presumption was indeed rebuttable. [A.I.R. 1971 J.&K. 20, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1978 J.&K. 31.

The presumption of service of a notice sent under registered post is available under Ss. 16 and 114, Illus. (e) of the Evidence Act as well as S. 27 of the General Clauses Act only when the plaintiff proves that the letter was properly addressed and put into the Post Office; but the full address given in the body of the notice raises no presumption that the envelope was also correctly addressed; at any rate, such presumption is rebuttable; thus, when the addressee appears before the Court and denies on oath the service of notice, the presumption stands rebutted; and here the evidence of the Postman becomes necessary: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 112 (Gau.).

S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act uses the words "sent by post" regarding service of the notice to quit; S. 27 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 also does not lay down that the notice to quit, when sent by post, must be by registered post; S. 27 of that Act does not extend to a letter sent under a certificate of posting, but S. 114 is certainly attracted; it raises a rebuttable presumption of the letter having been sent: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 478.

When the notice comes back unserved for refusal by the addressee to accept it, held, the notice must be presumed to have been served as contemplated by S. 27 of the General Clauses Act, 1897: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 1604: (1992) 1 S.C.C. 647; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1284; A.I.R. 1976 All. 515.

(b). Endorsement of refusal.—An endorsement made by a postman on the cover of a registered letter containing a notice, that the letter was refused, entitles the Court to hold under the presumption in Illus. (e) of S. 114 that the endorsement was made by the postman and it was correctly made. If, however, there is some evidence to rebut this presumption a different finding will follow. [A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 313, Dissent. from]: (1972) 74 Bom.L.R. 723: 1973 Mah.L.J. 51; 1971 Mah.L.J. (Notes) 17.

The question whether, where a registered letter is returned by Post Office as refused, a presumption can be drawn as to due delivery or service of the letter by post must depend on particular circumstances of each case. Though it is open to the Court under S. 114, Illus. (f) to presume that the common course of business has been followed, it cannot hold that the posting of the letter proves delivery, as it is a matter of common knowledge that postal servants are not always diligent: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 76: 146 I.C. 422; A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 14.

Where a notice sent by post in a registered cover is returned by the postman with a notice that the addressee refused to receive it and the posting of the notice has been proved there is a presumption under S. 114 that the addressee did refuse to receive it: 121 I.C. 382: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 439.

If a notice sent by registered post is returned with the endorsement "refused" the Court is entitled to presume that it was tendered. But the presumption is rebuttable: A.I.R. 1948 Cal. 63: 82 Cal.L.J. 9; (1901) 3 Bom.L.R. 420.

The fact that the letter came back does not in itself rebut the presumption that it was tendered. The writing of endorsement "refused" falls within the ambit of "common course of business" of the postman, and, therefore, even without any formal proof, involves the presumption that it was written on a refusal by the addressee: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 284. But see infra. Where a post card registered and sent by post but returned as refused is relied on as evidence of a notice having been given to the addressee, there must be evidence of the fact that it was so refused. In the absence of the evidence of the postal peon in question the registered post card cannot be accepted as evidence to show that it was actually refused: I.L.R. 26 Pat. 582: A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 337; A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 151.

The endorsement by the post-peon would be prima facie evidence of tender and refusal of the notice and it will be open to the other side to rebut the presumption which arises by reason of the endorsement: 1955 An.W.R. 609.

When a notice bearing the endorsement of refusal is produced, the Court has to deem that its service was properly effected at the time when the letter would have been delivered in the ordinary course of post; it is then for the addressee to prove to the contrary: A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 76: 1980 Jab.L.J. 285.

From the manner in which the post office deals with registered letters, the Court can presume under S. 114 that the endorsement of refusal was made by the postman in discharge of his official duties, that the delivery of the registered letter was offered to the addressee who refused to accept it under his signed receipt even in the absence of any substantiating evidence by the authority which had endorsed refusal on the letter. [A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 77; A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 247; A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 266 and A.I.R. 1964 Andh.

Where a notice was despatched to the addressee by registered post at his correct address and the postal endorsement of "refusal" thereon was proved by the postman, held, considering the manner in which post offices deal with registered letters, there is a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (e) and (f) of the attempt to deliver and the addressee's refusal to receive the notice; he is also deemed to have constructive notice of the contents of the letter as well; such presumption, though rebuttable, is not rebutted by mere denial of the addressee; it requires reliable evidence: A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 112: 1973 Raj.L.W. 611.

Letter sent by registered post returned as refused—Presumption: A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 439.

Refusal endorsed on back of registered letter—Presumption is that letter was delivered to addressee and was refused by him: 1967 All.L.J. 371.

Presumption about official acts and common course of business—Notice under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act duly despatched through post office by registered post to correct address of tenant—Presumption about due service of that notice can be made under Illus. (e) and (f) of S. 114 of the Evidence Act—Endorsement on notice "refused" strengthens the presumption: 1970 All.L.J. 336: 1970 Ren.C.J. 485: A.I.R. 1970 All. 446 (F.B.).

Letters received back with endorsement "refused"—Postman not examined—Presumption still arises that the letter was tendered to the addressee—Tendering of letters not clearly denied—Possibility of Munim returning letters admitted by shop-keeper—Presumption held not rebutted that the notices reached the defendant who refused to accept them: 1961 Raj.L.W. 456.

A presumption of correctness of the postal endorsement of "refusal" can be drawn with the aid of Ss. 16 and 114 but it is an optional presumption. If the presumption of correctness of the postal endorsement of "refusal" remains unrebutted, held, failure to examine the postman as a witness was of no effect: A.I.R. 1981 Madh. Pra. 76: 1980 Jab.L.J. 285.

The word "refused" in the endorsement raises a presumption that the postman concerned took the envelope and tendered it to the addressee who refused it, which obviates the necessity of producing the postman in evidence. But where the sender produces the postman himself in evidence and his testimony is disbelieved, the party producing him cannot fall back upon any presumption of law. The purpose of the presumption is to fill a gap in the evidence but not to make false testimony truthful. The presumption applies only where the postman concerned is not produced, but if he gives evidence the Court must ignore the presumption and assess his veracity and decide whether he should be believed. If he is not, no presumption can convert a lying witness into a truthful one: 1964 All.W.R. (H.C.) 333.

There is presumption of service of a letter sent under registered cover returned undelivered with a postal endorsement that the addressee had refused to accept it; the presumption is no doubt rebuttable and it is open to the addressee to show that the address on the letter was incorrect or the letter was never tendered to him or there was no occasion for him to refuse the letter, the burden whereof would lie on him; but if he places no such evidence on record to show that the postal endorsement was wrong, the letter would be taken to have been served: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1433: (1989) 2 S.C.C. 602.

Notice to quit sent in close envelope—Refusal to accept delivery—Knowledge of contents can be imputed to addressee—Notice addressed to joint lessees tendered to and refused by one of them—Constructive knowledge to other lessee may be presumed: A.I.R. 1964 All. 52.

Where summons were issued to the appellant through registered post but the endorsement on the envelope was that the appellant refused to accept it, held, said endorsement carried with it a presumption of its correctness, unless the contrary was proved: 1985 M.P.L.J. 408.

Where the summons was not accompanied by a copy of plaint, held, the refusal of the defendant to receive summons would not, by itself, give rise to a presumption that the defendant had acquired knowledge of date of hearing of the suit: A.I.R. 1985 Raj. 53: 1984 Raj.L.W. 62: 1984 Raj.L.R. 102.

It is true that the presumption that is attached to letter sent by registered acknowledgment due at correct address is rebuttable, but such a presumption is required to be rebutted only if the statement of the addressee is believed. If the statement of the tenant that he did not receive the notice or that he did not refuse to accept the same is believed then, of course, it was incumbent upon the landlord to produce the postman to substantiate his plea with regard to refusal of the notice by the tenant: (1992-1) 101 Punj.L.R. 90.

The presumption under S. 114 relates to an official act being done in a particular manner; if the Court is unable to raise such presumption, it should exhibit only the unopened registered cover addressed to the addressee, and not the endorsement of refusal made by the postal peon; the burden to rebut the presumption would lie on the addressee who challenges the endorsement of refusal: A.I.R. 1975 Guj. 54: (1975) 15 Guj.L.R. 655 (F.B.).

The presumption raised under S. 114 is one of fact; the Court, however, is not bound to raise the presumption; the Court may refuse to draw the presumption if the evidence on record or the circumstances of the case raise any doubt. But if the sender leads evidence that the unopened registered letter addressed to its recipient had no postal endorsement of refusal when sent but had it when it was returned to the sender, it would greatly assist the Court in raising the presumption that the addressee had refused to accept its delivery. No general rule of presumption could possibly be laid down about raising or refusing it; each case has to be decided on its own facts: A.I.R. 1975 Guj. 54: (1975) 15 Guj.L.R. 655 (F.B.).

Where the presumption arising from the endorsement of the postman on the back of the registered notice stands rebutted by the statement on oath of the tenant and that statement has not been controverted by the production of the postman, held, that the notice has not been proved to have been served: (1972) 74 Punj.L.R. 930.

Service of notice by post—Presumption—Postal peon's endorsement of refusal on registered letter—Effect: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 284.

Where the tender of notice through the registered letters was sufficiently proved, held, the refusal as endorsed by the serving postal peon on those letters must be treated as valid service: A.I.R. 1974 Cal. 261 (D.B.).

Where a notice is sent by registered post and it is alleged that it has been returned with the postal endorsement has to be proved by calling in evidence the postman who tendered the registered letter to the addressee. Unless it is so proved the endorsement is not admissible in evidence in proof of the allegation: A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Bh. 151.

Mere denial of receipt of notice served by post will not be sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under S. 114, Illus. (e) of the Evidence Act when there is an endorsement of refusal by the postal authorities: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 135: 1966 All.L.J. 421: A.I.R. 1966 All. 519.

The legal position as to when the presumption of "due service" under Illus. (e) of S. 114, can be raised, or is available, is well settled. It is a rebuttable presumption. If the evidence relating to refusal of notice—sent by registered post—by the addressee is acceptable, the presumption of "due service" under Illus. (e) of S. 114 is available and in such cases it can be raised. On the contrary, if the evidence on the point is not acceptable, the question of raising the presumption does not arise, as in such a case, there will not be a proof of an attempt made by the postman to serve the registered notice on the addressee and refusal of the same by the addressee. It is not always necessary to examine the postman who tried to effect service. The denial by the addressee that he has refused to receive the notice sent by registered post, may even be found to be unacceptable on the other evidence on record. Some times, it may even be possible to reject the evidence of the addressee that he had not refused to receive the notice from his admissions or conduct or other evidence on record. Hence, as a rule, it cannot be laid down that the presumption available under Illus. (e) of S. 114 is rebutted on the addressee entering the witness-box and stating on oath that he had never refused to receive the notice. It depends upon the total effect of the evidence on record: (1985) 1 Karn.L.J. 174: I.L.R. (1985) Karn. 901.

Refusal to take notice sent by registered post—Presumption of delivery of notice is not conclusive but can be rebutted even by denial on oath if it is believed by Court—Held, on facts, that the denial of service by addressee was incorrect and, hence, the presumption had not been dislodged: 1979 Rajdhani L.R. 493 (Del.).

Refusal to accept the notice will not in any way be in the interest of the defendant-tenant. No sane person will act against his own interest. Therefore, the simple denial by the tenant to the effect that he has never refused to accept the service of notice should be held sufficient to rebut the presumption arising on account of the endorsement of "refusal" on the registered article: (1984-1) 25 Guj.L.R. 631: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 110.

There may be a presumption of service of notice by denial on endorsement by the postman to that effect even without producing the postman. However, such presumption is not conclusive but rebuttable. It is also settled law that if such a presumption has been rebutted, the burden again shifts upon the plaintiffs to prove by his further evidence the service of the notice upon the tenant and in such situation production of the postman as a witness would become material. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 869; 1979 (U.P.) R.C.C. 5; A.I.R. 1979 All. 366; 1970 All.L.J. 455, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 All. 17: (1984) 10 All.L.R. 672.

If a notice sent by registered post is returned to the sender with an endorsement of refusal made by the postman, mere proof of posting and production of the registered letter itself bearing the endorsement of refusal without examination of the postman is prima facie good and sufficient evidence of service. When the posting of a registered letter is proved, the statutory presumption under the General Clauses Act, carries the proof up to due service. Although there may be no evidence of tender and refusal, that gap may be filled, when the endorsement is there, by invoking Illus. (f) to S. 114, that is to say, by presuming that the common course of business was followed and the postman did tender the letter to the addressee and did write the endorsement on refusal by the addressee to accept delivery. If the refusal does not come within the ambit of "common course of business", surely the tender does and that itself is sufficient to constitute service, or it may even be said that the writing of the endorsement comes within "the common course of business" of the postman and, therefore, involves the presumption that it was properly written after a refusal by the addressee. The fact that the letter came back does not in itself rebut the presumption that it was tendered and, therefore, served: (1947-48) 52 Cal.W.N. 659.

Sending of letter by registered post raises presumption of delivery of letter—Presumption is rebuttable—Statement on oath by addressee that such letter was not tendered to him—Presumption stands rebutted: (1968) 70 Bom.L.R. 253: 1968 Mah.L.J. 490: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 387.

The presumption of delivery in case of the endorsement of "refused" on the registered letter is rebuttable; thus, both A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 387 and (1947-48) 52 Cal.W.N. 659, though apparently contradictory, lay down the correct law; in the Bombay case, the presumption stood rebutted by the addressee's denial on oath but in Calcutta case, no such rebuttal was brought on record: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 869: (1976) 2 S.C.C. 409: (1976) 3 S.C.R. 551.

Where a notice of demand contained in a registered cover addressed and posted to the tenant came back with the postal endorsement of "refused", held, the presumption of "refusal" by the tenant may properly be drawn even if the postman is not examined to prove tender of the registered cover to, and its refusal, by the tenant; the presumption indeed is of fact and rebuttable; however, a mere denial on oath by the tenant is not sufficient to rebut it unless the Court believes the tenant. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 822; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 869, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1979 Ori. 11.

Where defendant tenant denied any service of notice on him and his testimony was not challenged by the plaintiff in the cross-examination and the plaintiff did not produce the postman or any other evidence to show that the defendant was not deposing the truth and that notice had, in fact, been served on him, held, presumption of service of notice stood rebutted. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 869; A.I.R. 1970 All. 446 (F.B.), Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 All. 208.

Ordinarily, a statement of the addressee on oath that the postal cover, said to have been refused by him, was never tendered to him would be sufficient to dislodge the presumption and shift the onus on the other side to establish by evidence that the service had been duly effected. It is, therefore, not possible to accept the contention that the bare statement on oath of the addressee in such a case would not, as a matter of law, be sufficient to dislodge the presumption that may be raised either under S. 114 of the Evidence Act or under S. 27 of the General Clauses Act. A statement on oath of a party to the proceedings is a piece of oral evidence like statement of any other witness and there is no rule of law that such a statement should not be accepted merely because it is made by a person who is interested in the proceedings nor is there any requirement of law that the statement on oath of a party to the proceedings must always be corroborated by any independent evidence before it could be accepted by a Court of Law. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule of law with regard to sufficiency of evidence. If a statement of a party on oath inspires confidence, the Court is entitled to accept it and base its conclusion on it: A.I.R. 1976 Del. 111: (1976) 12 Del.L.T. 127.

Where in an eviction proceeding a notice to the tenant was served and the same was received back with an endorsement of refusal and the defendant tenant clearly gave out that the postman never came to him to offer the notice nor he refused to take it, held, the presumption of service in the circumstances of the case was amply rebutted by solitary statement of the tenant and the suit was bad for want of a notice. [A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 869; A.I.R. 1976 Del. 111; A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 387, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1980 All. 280: (1980) 6 All.L.R. 457.

In A.I.R. 1980 All. 280 and A.I.R. 1976 Del. 111—the question considered was to the statement on oath by the tenant denying the tender and refusal to accept delivery. It was held that the bare statement of the tenant was sufficient to rebut the presumption of service. But there could be no hard and fast rule on that aspect. Unchallenged testimony of a tenant in certain cases may be sufficient to rebut the presumption but if the testimony of the tenant itself is inherently unreliable, the position may be different. It is always a question of fact in each case whether there was sufficient evidence from the tenant to discharge the initial burden: A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1215: (1990-2) 11 Guj.L.H. 77.

Where the notice informing date of hearing sent by the registered cover was received back with the endorsement "refused" but the party concerned filed an affidavit that such endorsement of "refusal" was false and fraudulent, held, in such a case, it was the duty of the Court to go more deeply into the facts of the case and not to accept implicitly the report of the postman as gospel truth without even calling upon the adversely affected party to examine such postman: A.I.R. 1979 All. 366.

Where the quit notice, sent by registered post, was returned back with the endorsement "refused" and the sender examined the postman in Court who testified that the addressee refused to accept the registered packet, held, a mere denial by the addressee, would not rebut the presumption arising under S. 114: A.I.R. 1989 Bom. 410: (1989) 3 Bom.C.R. 467: 1990 Mah.L.J. 79; (1990) 1 An.W.R. 342: (1992) 1 An.L.T. 555.

Where there was positive evidence to the effect that the registered envelope carrying the notice was actually tendered by the postman to the appellant but the latter refused to accept, held, there was due service effected upon the appellant by refusal and he must be imputed with the knowledge of the contents of said document which he refused to accept. [A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 247, Overruled; A.I.R. 1964 All. 52; 1972 All.L.J. 499; A.I.R. 1970 All. 446 (F.B.), Approved]: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1284: 1981 All.L.J. 504: (1981) 2 S.C.C. 535.

Registered letter containing notice sent to tenant in arrears—Letter refused—Presumption of receipt of notice by tenant will be raised: 1963 All.L.J. 25: A.I.R. 1963 All. 250.

Registered envelope returned back with endorsement of refusal—Presumption can be raised that notice was duly served—Denial of service by addressee—Lower Appellate Court on consideration of evidence concluding that presumption had not been rebutted—Finding is question of fact and cannot be interfered with in second appeal: 1979 (U.P.) R.C.C. 397 (All.).

There is a presumption in favour of the endorsement "refusal" to be correct. The burden is on the tenant who disputed the said endorsement and it is not correct to say that the landlady should have produced the postman to prove the endorsement. Thus, where the landlady produced a witness who deposed that notice was sent in an envelope which contained the endorsement of refusal, held, this was sufficient proof of service of notice and the burden lay on the tenant to disprove it as the presumption was rebuttable: (1974) 10 Del.L.T. 349.

Where of the two registered notices by the landlord to the tenant, detained in jail, one addressed to him in jail was returned as refused and the other addressed to the tenant's home address was redirected to the jail and acknowledged by its Superintendent, held, the presumption was that initials under the refusal were those of the postman and the notice acknowledged by the Superintendent of Jail had been served on the tenant; the presumptions not having been rebutted by the tenant, the notice had been properly served on him: A.I.R. 1973 All. 24: 1972 All.W.R. (H.C.) 628.

Proceedings before Rent Controller—Service of notice—Notice sent by post refused by the tenant—Effect—Rent Controller's order vitiated for want of service of notice: 1962 An.W.R. 148.

Where the tenant deposed on oath that he had not "refused" the notice and was not in fact in town and the postman deposing "refused" also admitted that he did not know the tenant nor any attempt was made in the Court to enable the Postman to identify the tenant, held, the notice could not be deemed to have been served; the evidence of refusal must be very clear and convincing as the consequences of deemed service are very drastic; it is not unknown or unusual for such endorsements made without proper care or even deliberately; it is, thus, the Court's duty to insist on very clear and convincing evidence; on facts, service not proper. [(1985) 5 Guj.L.H. 361, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1988 Guj. 5: (1987-1) 7 Guj.L.H. 274: (1987-2) 28 Guj.L.R. 473.

Where the postman deposed in an eviction suit that the addressee of the registered letter (endorsed as "refused") was not met at the address and his brother refused to give the addressee's outstation address where he had said to have gone, held, no presumption of service could be drawn: A.I.R. 1974 All. 354: 1974 All.L.J. 597.

Where notices determining tenancy were served by the landlord to the three co-tenants and notices sent to the two co-tenants returned with an endorsement refused while the notice sent to the third co-tenant returned with an endorsement that the addressee was out of station, held, a presumption of service of notice could be raised under S. 114. [A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 468; A.I.R. 1970 All. 446 (F.B.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1977 All. 476.

A decree for eviction having been passed by the Courts below against the tenant-appellant on the grounds specified under S. 12 of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, and his defence against eviction was struck out, the only ground of contention was that the tenancy was not properly determined by a quit notice.

First of all a notice was sent by registered post and it was returned with an endorsement that the house was locked. The respondent, then sent two notices under two registered covers, one to Korba, where the appellant was reported to have gone and another to his Bilaspur address. Both these envelopes came back with the endorsement "refused" made and signed by the postman. It was not disputed that the registered envelope which bore the appellant's address of Bilaspur was correctly addressed. Held, that the presumption arises that the notice was tendered to the addressee at Bilaspur and was refused by him. It was not necessary to examine the postman to prove refusal: 1969 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 65.

The landlord on 2nd January, 1965 sent a notice to the tenant determining his tenancy under S. 106, T. P. Act by registered post. It appeared that a postman from the delivery post office took it to the residence of the tenant for delivery to him on 4th January, 1965. Admittedly, the notice was not delivered. It bore an endorsement "Inkari Wapas Hai". The tenant's son deposed that no notice was offered to his father and that it was wrong to say that he refused any notice. From his own evidence it was also clear that he was not in a position to depose about the same. Held, that under these circumstances, it could properly be presumed under S. 114, Illus. (e) and (f) and S. 16, Illus. (a) and (b) of the Evidence Act, that the notice was tendered to the tenant and that he refused to receive it. The notice was, therefore, held as having been served on the tenant. Held further, there was no rebuttal of evidence worth the name.

Rr. 35 and 36 of the Post Office Guide, Part I, were also considered in this connection. Under these rules, no registered article can be delivered to any one except the addressee or his authorised agent. If the addressee refuses to receive it, the postman will have no option than to bring back the registered article and lodge it in the post office. The endorsement, held, confirmed the view that the addressee refused it: 1968 All.L.J. 707: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 507.

Where in an eviction petition the landlord produced as evidence a postcard addressed to the tenant's brother together with a postal acknowledgment bearing some postal stamps and endorsement of "refused" but neither the concerned postman nor the postcard's writer were examined as witnesses when the tenant had categorically denied the acknowledgment, held, no presumption could be raised of due service on the tenant of the notice to quit under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882: A.I.R. 1971 J.&K. 20.

Notice of ejectment—Notice served on tenant by registered post returned with postal peon's endorsement "refused by tenant"—Due service of notice can be presumed to have been served on tenant under S. 27, General Clauses Act, 1897: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 282.

Where a notice to quit, after being properly addressed prepaid and posted by registered post, is returned with an endorsement "refused", two different presumptions are of assistance to the plaintiff. One is the presumption as mentioned in Illus. (f) of S. 114 of the Evidence Act, namely, that "the Court may presume that the common course of business has been followed, in particular case." As soon as the Court presumes that the common course of business has been followed, it is entitled to hold that the postal peon did go to the address and the return of the cover was due to one of two reasons, either that the man was not found or that though found, he has refused. These circumstances entitle the Court to hold, unless the contrary is proved, that the endorsement "refused" was made by the peon himself and that it was correctly made.

Apart from this, the presumption mentioned in Illus. (e) of S. 114 of the Evidence Act is also of great assistance to the plaintiff. All that happens in the post office from the moment of posting of a letter to the point of delivery to the addressee or its return to the sender are official acts. As the law entitles the Court to presume that official acts have been regularly performed, the Court is entitled to hold that the endorsement was made by the peon and it was correctly made.

Even if, there is no other evidence on record to support the decision that the endorsement was actually made by the proper person and not by somebody else, the presumption that the Court may make under Illus. (e) and (f) of S. 114 entitles the Court to hold, in the first place, that the endorsement has been made actually by that person and that the endorsement "refused" that has been made is a correct statement of fact. If the Court chooses to make a presumption under S. 114, it is entitled to hold that it is correct statement provided that if there is evidence to the contrary and that evidence is believed by the Court, the presumption must be held to be rebutted: (1957-58) 62 Cal.W.N. 193: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 251.

Where a notice to quit was sent by a registered post and the tenant in his written statement did not dispute the service of notice on him; but stated that the notice sent by landlord was fictitious and did not satisfy the requirements of S. 106 of Transfer of Property Act, held, such a bald denial was insufficient to rebut the presumption of service of notice: A.I.R. 1985 All. 178: (1985) 1[illegible] All.L.R. 213.

Where in an eviction proceeding, the notice dated 4-10-1969 was sent by post but was returned unserved with the remark that the addressee was out of station and similarly the second notice also received back with the endorsement "refused 18-11-1969", held, the fact of presentation to the proper addressee and the making of a true endorsement could be presumed under Illus. (e) and (f) of S. 114. [A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 251; A.I.R. 1970 All. 446 (F.B.); (1934-35) 39 Cal.W.N. 934; (1871) 16 Suth W.R. 223; A.I.R. 1961 Cal. 439; A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 284, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1977 Pat. 155: 1977 Pat.L.J.R. 295: 1977 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 685: 1976 B.L.J.R. 657.

Notice demanding rent from tenant sent by landlord by registered post—Court finding that notice was refused by tenant not on the basis of presumption drawn from endorsement on acknowledgment receipt only —Conclusion drawn by the Court on the strength of the evidence of the landlord which was believed by it stating that he accompanied the postman and that the notice was refused by the tenant in his presence—Held, the finding was binding in second appeal: A.I.R. 1964 All. 416.

Where in a proceeding for approval of the dismissal of a workman under S. 33(2) (b) of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the Labour Court found the dismissal order sent by the employer to the workman under registered post and returned with the postal endorsement of "refused" as not having been served, held, the finding could not be sustained; a presumption of due service ought to have been drawn on the facts and circumstances of the case: (1992-1) 40 B.L.J.R. 528.

The presumption that arises is a statutory rebuttable presumption of fact. In view of the provisions of S. 27 of the General Clauses Act, the presumption with regard to the delivery of the registered article arises and when there is an endorsement of "refusal" on the registered article, a further presumption under S. 114 of the Evidence Act as to the knowledge of the contents of the notice also arises. But these presumptions are rebuttable presumptions: (1984-1) 25 Guj.L.R. 631: (1984) 4 Guj.L.H. 110.

Where the envelope containing the summons despatched to the addressee on his address given in the suit as well as the application for setting aside the ex parte decree was returned with the postal endorsement of "refused", held, there was a presumption of service of the summons under S. 114. [A.I.R. 1975 Guj. 54, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 235: (1981) 22 Guj.L.R. 1229: (1981) 1 Guj.L.H. 228.

Where a notice calling upon the debtor to pay a certain sum served upon the debtor both by registered post with acknowledgment due and also under certificate of posting but the registered cover came back with the endorsement "refused", held, it could be presumed that there was valid service of notice. [A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 251; A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 284; A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 544, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 Cal. 29.

Notice of demand—Word "refused" endorsed in notice—Defendant not proving any exceptional circumstance to conclude that regular course of practice was not followed in the case—His bare denial could not be believed so as to rebut the presumption: 1965 All.L.J. 839.

The admissibility of the "refusal" endorsed by the postman on the registered cover containing notice of demand on the money due on the pronote is admissible in evidence even if the postman has not been examined; the endorsement is made by the postman in the discharge of his official duties and has to be presumed to be a valid act; the burden lies on the party challenging the endorsement to show that it was not correct. [A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 884, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Andh. Pra. 72.

Where notice sent by the defendant was received back with the endorsement "refused" and it could not be suggested that the defendant got the endorsement manipulated with the connivance of the postal authorities, held, it was proper to presume that the endorsement of refusal was true and that the plaintiff out of ulterior motives refused to receive the notice: A.I.R. 1976 Andh. Pra. 243: (1976) 1 A.P.L.J. (H.C.) 97 (D.B.).

Where the detenu refused to receive the order of detention, grounds of detention and the copies of the documents in spite of best efforts made by the officials, held, the order of detention must be deemed to have been served on the date of refusal: 1991 Cr.L.J. 315 (Karn.).

(c). Notice to quit.—Where the service of notice to quit is effected by registered post and the acknowledgment came back with a signature, purporting to be that of the defendant, the plaintiff is entitled to the presumption, arising from the fact of service (despatch) of the notice by registered post and the notice must be held to have been duly served upon the defendant: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 841: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 479.

Though for drawing the presumption of due service of the notice to quit sent by registered post, the postal peon need not be examined but where the Court's below found that the defendant's signature on the postal acknowledgment was a forgery, no presumption of due service could be drawn; the presumption stood rebutted: 1979 All.W.C. 85.

The presumption of service of notice does not necessarily imply that the tenant himself received the notice and he was actually residing there. The presumption of service has a limited role. In the first place, the presumption is raised in favour of the sender of the notice. It cannot be raised for the benefit of the tenant. He has to prove the positive fact that he was residing in the premises during the crucial period. Secondly, the presumption is a rebuttable presumption. It is not a conclusive presumption. Nor is it a rule of law: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 110: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 423: (1980) 17 Del.L.T. 395.

Where the notice to quit under S. 13(6) of the W.B. Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 sent under registered post with acknowledgment due was correctly addressed and the acknowledgment receipt contained the signature not of the tenant himself but of some one else who signed on his behalf, held, merely because the landlord did not prove that the said person had authority to receive notice on behalf of the tenant, it could not displace the presumption of due service. [A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 102, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 162 (D.B.).

Where a notice to quit was sent by registered post and which was duly received by treasurer and secretary of tenant company but the tenant company denied having received any notice, held, though the onus of proof of producing its register of letters received and issued did not lie on the tenant company, an adverse inference could be drawn against the tenant company for not producing the same.[A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 6; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 127: (1981-82) 86 Cal. W.N. 456.

Notice to quit—Service by registered post—Notice received by addressee's husband—Presumption of due delivery to addressee: (1960-61) 65 Cal.W.N. 690.

Notice to quit—Service by post—Presumption of service. See A.I.R. 1958 All. 369. See also 1979 Jab.L.J. (Note) 50; 1974 Mah.L.J. 239: (1974) 76 Bom.L.R. 35.

Notice of termination of tenancy—Notice sent under certificate of posting—Presumption arises that the notice has been duly delivered to addressee. [A.I.R. 1968 Cal. 49, Rel. on]: (1969) 2 Mys.L.J. 179: 19 Law Rep. 435: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 77.

Where a notice to quit under S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 is sent to correct address, presumption of due service is not rebutted by the tenant's mere denial of its tender; he has to further deny his non-presence at the place on the purported date of refusal by him in his evidence: A.I.R. 1972 All. 539. See also 1965 All.L.J. 839; 1966 All.L.J. 421; A.I.R. 1989 Bom. 410.

It is true that when a notice is sent by post a presumption arises in law that the notice has reached the addressee. But when the postal cover itself comes back such presumption goes. Similarly, when the addressee refutes that he received any notice sent in a postal cover, then also there cannot be any such presumption, and it is for the sender to prove service of notice. Where landlord sent a notice in a postal cover but it was returned by the postman after six days with an endorsement "not found" made on each of the six days, held, a presumption as to valid service of notice of termination on the tenant could not arise: (1990-1) 105 Mad.L.W. 529.

Service of notice of ejectment—Service by registered post—Returned with remark "left"—Service held bad—Personal service was also bad—Presumption available for service under certificate of posting should not be given effect to, in the context: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 109.

Where a notice sent to a tenant at the tenancy premises came back with the postal endorsement of "left" when the tenant had left India without leaving behind her foreign address or empowering any one to receive communications on her behalf and a copy of the notice sought to be personally served on her was also affixed on the door of the premises in the presence of the witnesses, held, the notice may be taken as having been duly served; even without the presumption under the General Clauses Act, the presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act is available. [Case law discussed]: A.I.R. 1991 Cal. 152 (D.B.).

Where the service of notice to quit is a precondition for seeking eviction of a tenant under any of the grounds mentioned in S. 11 of the J.&K. Houses and Shops Rent Control Act, 1966, and on the notice sent under registered cover on being refused by the tenant, it is affixed on the door of the demised premises, held, it is sufficient compliance of the requirements of S. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882; the presumption under S. 114(e), Evidence Act is also attracted: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 335: 1977 Kash.L.J. 57.

Where the notice to quit served to the tenants by registered post with acknowledgment due come back undelivered and endorsements on the envelope read as "not claimed" and "mis-sent" as post peon visited the suit premises twice, held, considering the first endorsement being "not claimed", a presumption of due service of the notice arose. [(1960-61) 65 Cal.W.N. 1239, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Cal. 202: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N. 739 (D.B.).

Where the notice to quit sent to a tenant by registered post at the demised premises came back undelivered with the postal endorsement, "premises found locked", held, the endorsement by itself was sufficient to rebut the presumption; it could not be taken to be a due service: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 5: (1979) 1 M.L.J. 346.

Where the registered notice of eviction sent by the lessor returned unserved with the endorsement that on some dates the addressee was absent and that on the last date he refused to receive the same and while the lessee enters the witness-box and states that he never refused any notice and the postman who tendered the notice was not examined, the presumption available to the lessor under S. 114, Evidence Act stood rebutted. It was only on the date when the lessee refused that he could be imputed with notice: 1970 Ren.C.R. 107: (1969) 2 Mys.L.J. 481.

Where a notice to quit was sent through registered post which was refused by the tenant, and the postman could not identify the tenant who was produced before him in the Court, due to lapse of time, held, an adverse inference could not be drawn to nullify the effect of endorsement made on the letter as the postman never stated that he had not gone to the place of addressee or that letter had not been refused by the addressee. [1969 All.L.J. 849, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 All. 5.

Where in a suit for eviction, notice was sent to tenant through registered post as well as through a certificate of posting and the tenant admitted that the address on the envelope containing the notice was correct, held, there was clear presumption that notice was duly served. [A.I.R. 1973 Del. 39; 1974 Ren.C.R. 578 (Del.), Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Del. 169: (1981) 19 Del.L.T. 170: 1981 Rajdhani L.R. 191.

(d). Certificate of posting.—Letter sent under certificate of posting—Presumption is that it must have been received by addressee unless addressee by positive evidence shows that he did not receive it: (1963) 65 Bom.L.R. 434: 1963 Mah.L.J. 670: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 583; (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 113; (1980) 1 M.P.W.N. 144; (1985-86) 90 Cal.W.N. 413.

In law, a certificate of posting raises only a presumption to the effect that a parcel containing some communication was received by the postal authorities for dispatch under that certificate on the date on which it purports to have been received by them. It may also be presumed that in the due course of business, the postal authorities had or might have had dispatched the same for delivery to the addressee on the address noted on the postal article. It may be further presumed that in the course of business, the postal authorities had or might have had caused the postal article to be delivered to the addressee. But, the law does not raise an unrebuttable presumption that such a postal article was, in due course, received by the petitioner. In the circumstances of a particular case, it may be possible even to presume that such a postal article must have been received by the addressee, if subsequent conduct of the parties could enable the Court to presume so: A.I.R. 1995 Bom. 91.

Presumptions arising from postal seals on letters and certificate of posting are rebuttable: (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 407.

Where the evidence about certificate of posting was unsatisfactory and there was also absence of any evidence about enclosing of the notice in the letter and posting the selfsame letter in the Post Office, held, in the absence of evidence no presumption could be made about service by certificate of posting. [A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 102; (1870) 1 W.N. 119; (1962-63) 67 Cal.W.N. 819; A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 328, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Cal. 123: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N. 629 (D.B.).

Where the addressee of a letter sent under a certificate of posting had denied its receipt and the other party relied on the certificate as proof of despatch, held, it is extremely difficult to hold merely on such a certificate that the original of the letter was actually sent to the addressee on the purported date; the certificate does not disclose whether the article posted was an envelope, an inland letter or a postcard; in the absence of positive evidence as against the halting and vacillating statement the witness purportedly proving the posting, that the original of the letter was actually enclosed in an envelope which was actually posted in the concerned Post Office, not even a rebuttable presumption can be drawn. Cheque sent by post under certificate of posting—Presumption, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that it was duly delivered to addressee, would be fair: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 306.

Certificates of posting of letters obtained—Certificates given by postal authorities in ordinary course of business—Presumption about their genuineness and truth about their contents—Further, presumption under the section—That letters were posted and were received by the addressee—Mere denial of receipt of letters does not rebut presumption. [(1962-63) 67 Cal.W.N. 819, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 328.

Notice sent by post and correctly addressed as evidenced by certificate of posting—Presumption arises that there was proper service of notice: A.I.R. 1966 Cal. 615.

Where a certificate of posting is put in evidence the presumption is that letter was posted and that it reached its destination unless something is shown to the contrary. It is entirely wrong for the Court to work on the presumption that the certificate of posting is a forgery: 190 I.C. 533: A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 227. Letter sent under certificate of posting—Presumption—Entries in Minutes of meetings and in Register of letters sent by Corporation. See I.L.R. (1952) 2 Cal. 321: A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 467.

A certificate of posting is easy to procure and does not inspire confidence: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 678.

There is a presumption that a letter sent by post under certificate of posting was delivered to the addressee unless there are circumstances in a particular case to show that the common course of business was not followed and that something extraordinary happened which prevented the common course of business being followed. Where the addressee has not placed any material to show that anything happened which prevented the letter written by the sender under certificate of posting, it could be presumed that the addressee has received the letter: (1988) 1 Raj.L.R. 873 (Raj.).

Where a quit notice was sent under certificate of posting and the certificate of posting was produced on record, held, a presumption could be raised that the notice must have reached the addressee in due course and this presumption could be rebutted only by adducing positive evidence; a mere denial was not potent enough to rebut this presumption: A.I.R. 1989 Bom. 410: (1989) 3 Bom.C.R. 467.

Where in an eviction proceedings, the landlord sent a notice to quit under certificate of posting and the evidence of actual posting of letter was also produced, held, a presumption arose under S. 114 that the notice was duly served. [A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 102; I.L.R. (1972) 2 Cal. 480, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Pat. 256: 1978 B.L.J.R. 666: 1978 Pat.L.J.R. 634 (D.B.).

Where the respondents in their return to the writ petition denied the receipt of the petitioner's letter revoking his resignation said to have been sent under a certificate of posting, and the denial was supported by an affidavit sworn by the Divisional Superintendent of Education and there was no reason to disbelieve him, held, no presumption of the delivery of the letter in the circumstances could be raised: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 21: 1974 M.P.L.J. 512 (D.B.).

Where a detenu impugned his detention under S. 3(1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 on the ground that he had retracted his statement on which his detention was based by letter sent under certificate of posting even before the passing of the detention order, and he had also made a representation to that effect accompanied by a photostat copy of the certificate of posting but not of the retraction letter which was not found, despite thorough search, by the detaining authority, held, no presumption of the delivery of the letter could be raised: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1191: 1981 Cr.L.J. 889: (1981) 3 S.C.C. 317.

(e). Money order.—Normally the presumption is that where money is remitted by money order, the postal authorities acted in the normal course of their duties; the postman tendered the money to the payee assuming, of course, that his correct address was shown on the money order form. At one point of the time the lower two-third portion of the money order form was returned to the remitter when the money order was returned as unclaimed but since 1969, under R. 285(3) of the P.&T. Manual, only the coupon portion of the money order form is given to the remitter and the acknowledgment portion is retained by the paying office and, after detachment it is filed with the office copy of the money order paid list. Thus, in the absence of an endorsement on the money order coupon received by the remitter as "not claimed", it cannot mean that the money order was not refused. The burden to show that the money order was sent on the correct address is on the person so contending but that burden can be discharged by putting on record the circumstances which would lead to that conclusion, in the absence of direct evidence to show the address on which the money order was sent: 1981 Mah.L.J. 646: 59 F.J.R. 130.

Where the tenant appears in the witness-box and states that on the date mentioned, the amount demanded by the landlord was sent by money order and in support of it he produces the receipt, it cannot be said that the sending of money order or its tendering is not established. It is true that the receipt by itself does not prove that the amount sent was the arrears of rent but the receipt alongwith statement do not leave any room for doubt that the amount sent was towards arrears of rent: A.I.R. 1982 All. 44: 1981 All.W.C. 612: 1981 All.C.J. 518: 1981 All. Ren. Cas. 680: (1982) 8 All.L.R. 70.

In the case of remittance by money order, where the remitter and the addressee reside in the same place, a small town, the presumption is that it will ordinarily not take more than a few days (in the instant case four days) of remitting it. This presumption is rebuttable. When the money order is returned with the endorsement "refused", if the sender proves that he remitted the amount by money order and that it was returned to him by the Post Office with the endorsement "refused", a presumption arises that the postal authorities followed the ordinary course and tendered the amount to the addressee who refused it. This presumption also is rebuttable but the onus is on the addressee to prove by reliable evidence that he did not receive the amount. A bare denial by him will not necessarily rebut the presumption: 1966 All.L.J. 424: 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 420.

Where a money order is remitted for delivery to an addressee residing in the same town, the Court should presume, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that it was tendered in the ordinary course—at any rate, not later than 10 days: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 504: A.I.R. 1966 All. 214.

The object of S. 4 of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1955, a pivotal provision, is that the tenants must be protected from eviction as well as they must be compelled to continue to pay rent. Thus, where a tenant shows tender of rent, he is not in default and he cannot be evicted. Therefore, unless the landlord intimates in his demand notice his address for remittance of the arrears, a money order sent to him at his residential or business address is good and sufficient tender; that is the surest and safest mode of tender and payment. His handing over of the arrears to the Post Office for transmission to the landlord is the strongest evidence of his bona fides; the money goes out of his hands and he cannot take it back. The endorsement of "refused" by the postman is presumptive proof of tender of rent unless the contrary is established by reliable evidence adduced by the landlord: A.I.R. 1973 Madh. Pra. 268: 1973 M.P.L.J. 510.

Where in an ejectment proceedings on the grounds of arrears of rent, the tenant asserted that the rent was remitted through money order and the remittance was proved although the acknowledgment receipt was not delivered to the tenant, held, a presumption under S. 114, Illus. (f) could be raised that the amount must have been tendered to the addressee and received by him. However, such presumption was rebuttable. [A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 102; A.I.R. 1968 Ori. 234; A.I.R. 1970 Cal. 328, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1977 All. 534: (1977) 2 Ren.C.J. 459.

In a suit for eviction on non-payment of the arrears of rent the tenant admitted the receipt of the notice of demand and showed that he had remitted the arrears by money order about one week before the expiry of the last date for payment to the landlady, both parties residing in the same building, held, presumption may be raised that the normal course of postal business was followed and the amount had been tendered to the landlady or her agent within the permitted time. [1966 All.L.J. 424 and 1964 All.L.J. 148, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1971 All. 22: 1970 All.W.R. (H.C.) 586.

Where the money order, remitted to the addressee residing in the same town at his correct address, was received back with the endorsement "refused", held, it could be presumed, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the money order was tendered in the ordinary course to the addressee and he did not accept the same: A.I.R. 1975 Raj. 196: 1974 Raj.L.W. 251. See also 1980 Jab.L.J. 423.

Remittance of rent by money order—Money order returned with endorsement "refused"—Presumption is that addressee landlord was found but refused the money order—A slight inaccuracy in the name will not affect raising of such presumption—Tenant cannot be said to be in "arrears of rent": 1966 All.W.R. (H.C.) 185.

Money order acknowledgment form with endorsement "refused"—Presumption as to delivery is not displaced on addressee's statement on oath denying its receipt: 1963 All.W.R. (H.C.) 472.

Where the landlord in an eviction case denied on oath that he had not refused to accept the money order, held, the postal endorsement of "refusal" could not by itself and without the Postman's evidence lead to a presumption that the money was tendered to the landlord and he refused to accept it: A.I.R. 1984 Sikkim 1.

The rent and taxes deposited by the tenant in the Court of the Registrar Presidency Small Cause Court, acting as the thika controller to the credit of the landlord, were alleged to be duly forwarded to the landlord by postal money orders under S. 20(1) of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949 by the thika controller. But the landlord denied receipt of some of such money orders and filed an application for withdrawal of said amounts. There was no evidence to show that the amounts which were sent to the plaintiffs by postal money orders reached the plaintiff and the acknowledgment receipts had not been produced by the defendant. The defendant had not also examined any witness nor produced any record to show that the amounts sent by money orders were not sent back by the postal authorities. Held, in the circumstances, it might be presumed that in the normal course of business the postal authorities returned the amounts to the sender, namely, the thika controller and as the defendant failed to rebut that presumption, the plaintiffs were entitled to withdraw the said amount from the thika controller, or in other words the defendant was liable to pay the amount to the plaintiffs: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 262.

(f). Illustrative cases.—Where Court notice of the award having been filed, sent by registered post at the firm's correct address, was received by some person on behalf of the firm and the only partner who appeared in the Court did not disclose the names of the firm's employee, held, a presumption could properly be drawn against the partners from their conduct that the notice was duly served on the firm: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 89 (Him. Pra.).

Where a notice issued under O. 37, C.P.Code, was received by someone on the defendant's behalf and the acknowledgment due was received by the Registry of the Court, held, there was presumption that the notice was delivered to the defendant on the date shown on the acknowledgment due: A.I.R. 1989 J.&K. 25: 1988 Kash.L.J. 493.

When there is nothing to indicate that the Court had not satisfied itself of the service of notice, it must be presumed that the Court was so satisfied: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 506; A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 406.

S. 13 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 read with R. 9-A of the Rules framed under that Act provided that the report of public analyst should be sent by registered post to person concerned and, thus, when the report was sent by registered post with acknowledgment due but no such acknowledgment was brought on record and it was contended that provisions of Act had not been complied with, held, as the requirement of law was to send the letter only by registered post and not that it should be sent with acknowledgment due, if any excess had been done beyond the requirement of law that will not affect the legal position as stood under the law. Accordingly, as the provisions of law had been sufficiently complied with, a presumption as to service of report could be raised: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1512 (Madh. Pra.).

Where summons were directed to be served on the defendant by ordinary process as well as by registered post and the postal acknowledgment is received, held, it tantamounts to complete service; the Court need not await the report by ordinary service: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 335 (Del.).

Where summons were served by registered post and the postal acknowledgment was received which was signed by somebody but the addressee made a bald statement that no one on his behalf had singed the postal acknowledgment, held, presumption as to service of summons arose. [A.I.R. 1916 Cal. 181; A.I.R. 1975 Raj. 121, Disting.; A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 159; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 869, Approved]: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 96: 1980 Raj.L.W. 407.

Where an ex parte decree was set aside on the mere averment of non-service of summons because the postal peon had not been examined to prove service, held, the Court had not acted properly; case remitted for proper disposal in accordance with law: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 9 (Cal.).

Where of the two notices from the Court, sent by registered post on the same day, one requiring the defendant to show cause why the ad interim injunction should not be made absolute was admittedly received by him but he denied receipt of the other notice whereby the ad interim injunction was served on him and the defendant, after obtaining some time from the Court to show cause, executed the sale deed a day before the hearing, held, it could be presumed in the contempt proceedings for breach of the ad interim injunction that he had received both the notices in the normal course of business: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 240: 1976 B.B.C.J. 305 (D.B.).

Where stay order was passed and sent on the same day, held, the presumption is that it must have been received within a couple of days: (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 274.

Where a pre-paid correctly addressed letter posted under a certificate of posting was shown to have contained documents, held, a presumption could be raised under S.114(f) that the letter was received by the addressee at proper time as per the regular course of Post Office business; the presumption, though rebuttable, is not rebutted by the testimony of an official of the addressee who did not invariably receive or saw the post received and no record of the post received was maintained in any register. [A.I.R. 1975

Madh. Pra. 21 no longer good law in view of A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1284]: A.I.R. 1982 Madh. Pra. 75: 1982 Jab.L.J. 82.

The mere fact that a cover insured for a certain amount is sent, raises a presumption in law that that cover contains the necessary amount of Government currency notes: 21 All.L.J. 865: A.I.R. 1924 All. 205.

Postal letters—Letters in the handwriting of B received by A—There is a presumption under S. 114 that the letters were sent by B to A: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 882: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 204.

Common course of business—Postal business—Insurance policy sent to appellant by post at his proper address—Law presumes that it must have reached him: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 578.

Delivery of postal articles—Presumption that registered letter would be deemed to have been delivered to addressee in due course can be rebutted—Acknowledgment due of registered letter not bearing signature of addressee—Held, presumption stood clearly rebutted: 1968 All.L.J. 289: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 357.

Postal business—Presumption—Sales tax —U.P. Sales Tax Rules, 1948, Rr. 45, 77—Copies of assessment orders sent by registered post—Copies received by person other than addressee—Presumption: (1968) 21 S.T.C. 445 (All.).

Posting of valid income-tax return within time allowed, under certificate of posting, in the absence of proof to the contrary is sufficient evidence of return having been filed within time: 1983 Tax. L.R. 1134: (1984) 146 I.T.R. 577.

Before presumption could be drawn there must be proof that the letter had been actually posted—Certificate of posting and conduct of receipt thereafter would be relevant factors—On receiving notice of award under S. 12(2) of Land Acquisition Act on 24th February, 1964 party applying for reference under S. 18 by posting application addressed to Land Acquisition Officer under certificate of posting on 12th March, 1964 and also sending registered communication referring to application made on 2nd March, 1964 on 1st January, 1965—Department not specifically denying receipt of letter but stating that application was belated—Department on receipt of registered letter ascertaining from postmaster whether letters were posted under certificate of posting on 12th March, 1964—Postmaster confirming that letters were posted—Held, in view of these facts and in the context of land acquisition proceedings that preceded immediately before, presumption that party made applications duly and in time could be drawn: (1968) 2 M.L.J. 302.

Official acts—Disqualification pleaded under S. 50(1) (hh) of Madras Act (V of 1920) must be established—Presumption under the provision cannot be invoked to make good the want of evidence of proper service of notice: (1968) 1 M.L.J. 403.

Order of Government communicated by telegram—Neither expressed in the name of the Governor nor authenticated by proper authority—Averment as to existence of such order however very clear—Order must be presumed to have been validly passed: A.I.R. 1967 Assam 22.

Where the question was on what date a telegram sent by the plaintiff was received by the defendant, the defendant alleging that it was received on a particular date after the business hours, the receipt of the telegram having been admitted, the defendant is the best person to produce the telegram and show that it was received on the day and at the time alleged by him. If he fails to produce it, the Court can draw an inference against him: 1960 Raj.L.W. 29: I.L.R. (1959) 9 Raj. 938.

Where a notice was served to the respondents through telegram but the appellants failed to summon the postal and telegraph department to produce the records for the purpose of ascertaining the date and time of the service of the telegram, held, in view of default of the appellant to produce the necessary document, presumption regarding due service of the telegram could not be drawn: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 750.

S. 140 of the Railways Act, 1890 prescribes the mode of service of notices and other documents on the Railway administrations; Cl. (c) of that section which relates to the service of notice through the agency of postal department has two ingredients. Firstly, the notice should be enclosed in a prepaid envelop and secondly, it should be registered. S. 142 of that Act deals with the presumption in case the notice is sent by post and provides that a notice would be deemed to be served if it was sent by post under registered cover and addressed properly. Ss. 140 and 142 of said Act apply in case of preference of a claim under S. 78-B of that Act as well. Thus, where a notice for claim under S. 78-B was forwarded by post but not under registered cover and it even did not bear the correct address of the addressee, held, no presumption of its due service could be raised: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 41; A.I.R. 1974 Punj. 190: (1974) 76 Punj.L.R. 10 (D.B.).

Where a bank draft was purchased by a party in one town for payment of money to another party in another town 38 miles apart, held, the normal presumption is that the draft was to be sent by post; posting of the draft to the payee or his agent would, thus, be taken to be the point of delivery; the Post Office thereafter acts as the payee's agent: A.I.R. 1976 Bom. 185: 1976 Mah.L.J. 66 (D.B.).

Where a tenant owed certain sum on two promissory notes and his wife wrote several letter under certificate of posting to the landlord for adjustment of said amount against the rent due and the landlord did not question the correctness of the address given in all such letters and further the respondent failed to place any material to show that anything happened which prevented said letters reaching him, held, it could be presumed that the respondent landlord received all the letters written by the wife of the petitioner-tenant: A.I.R. 1981 Mad. 277: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 404: (1981) 2 M.L.J. 288.

Where the dispute was regarding the date as to when the copy of arbitration award of the arbitrator was received by a party, and stenographer of the arbitrator deposed to the effect that he had received the acknowledgment receipt of the registered letter from that party within ten days from the date of despatch and he had handed over the same to the arbitrator, held, a presumption arises that the registered cover must have been received within a reasonable time: A.I.R. 1993 S.C. 1245: (1993) 1 S.C.C. 572.

Where arbitration notices were sent to appellant-partner of a firm and her father, guarantor, through registered A.D. and a letter under certificate of posting at the same address and the A.D. receipt showed that the letter was received but even then only the father appeared before arbitrator, held, there was an unrebuttable presumption that she was served by the arbitrator: A.I.R. 1981 Del. 106: (1981) 19 Del.L.T. 41 (S.N.) (D.B.).

Allegation of petitioner of having sent medical certificate under certificate of posting—Presumption is only with regard to posting the cover—Contents of cover are to be proved by sender: (1983) 2 Serv.L.J. 648.

Where notice of dissolution of the firm was issued by publication in a newspaper and a letter was sent under the certificate of posting but the addressee denied having seen them as he was then abroad, held, no presumption of its service could be raised against the addressee: A.I.R. 1976 J.&K. 37: 1975 Kash.L.J. 397.

Where notice issued in respect of the proceedings under S. 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was not served as provided for in the Cr.P.Code, but it was sent by registered post to the petitioner-husband and it was not returned, held, the issue of notice by registered post was wholly unwarranted and, thus, the question as to whether the notice actually reached the husband-addressee or whether any presumption could be drawn with reference to S. 114, Evidence Act that the notice had reached him, would not arise for consideration at all: 1993 Cr.L.J. 418 (Karn.). See also (1981) 1 Karn.L.J. 353; (1992) 2 Karn.L.J. 254.

Where respondent-Municipal Committee sent notices to appellant-assessee as provided in S. 215(1) and (2) of the Punjab Municipal Act, 1911 but the notices were returned unserved and the assessee also failed to prove non-compliance of S. 215 of the said Act by the respondent-Municipal Committee, held, a presumption as to valid service of notice arose: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 46: (1981) 20 Del.L.T. 141.

Contract for sale of plots—Auction—Failure by bidder to perform his part—Rescission of contract by Government—Communication by letter—Legal presumption arises in favour of official act done—Burden is on plaintiff to prove that it was not received: 1979 Kash.L.J. 334 (D.B.).

Where it is shown that the Railway Administration had sent intimation of the arrival of the goods to the booking station, it is presumed that the booking station received the intimation: (1958) 71 Mad.L.W. 70: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 175.

Call towards unsubscribed share capital—Resolution discriminating as regards call amount between ordinary shareholders and Directors; no time fixed for payment nor notice of demand provided for—No provision in the articles of the company for making difference in call amount between share holders—Resolution held bad in law—Notice of demand not served—No assumption of service of notice without proof—Call made pursuant to resolution is invalid—However, Directors who were party to resolution are estopped from raising objections as to validity of resolution: (1961) 31 Comp. Cas. 573 (Punj.).

Illustration (f)

46. General.—Under S. 114 there is a presumption not only that official acts are regularly performed but also that ordinarily business acts are normally carried out. Therefore, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary the Court can presume that a power-of-attorney which was stamped was in fact stamped by the proper officer in the Financial Commissioner's office: (1941) 43 Punj.L.R. 499: A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 345.

Illus. (f) applies to the course of business followed in public offices as well as in private offices. The effect of sending a letter to the Post Office will, in general, be regarded as presumptively proved if the letter is shown to have been left with the person whose duty it was in the ordinary course of business to carry it to the Post Office: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 440.

47. Presumption regarding post.—The presumption of due delivery under Illus. (f) to S. 114 hardly arises if there is no evidence of posting the letter: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 644.

Where the question was whether certain letter meant to be despatched by post to the plaintiff by the office of an insurance company was in fact posted, in the absence of any evidence to establish that the letter in question was in fact delivered to the Post Office or other evidence to connect that letter with the Post Office, no presumption can be drawn to the effect that it was in fact posted as provided in S. 114 and that the letter had reached the plaintiff: 1959 B.L.J.R. 425: A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 540.

When a notice issued by an officer of a company purports to have been issued by order of the Board of Directors, there is a presumption that it was issued pursuant to such an order, and unless the presumption is displaced, the Court must act on that presumption: (1956) 58 Bom.L.R. 660: I.L.R. (1956) Bom. 619: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 537.

The entry of the despatch number in a despatch register should ordinarily be presumed to be correct in the absence of any evidence to the contrary: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 107: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 184.

Entry in a despatch register maintained in the office of a disciplinary authority does not support the allegation of actual posting of the letter containing the final order: (1973) 2 Cut.W.R. 1218 (D.B.).

Entry in peon book of firm showing date of despatch of letter—Date of its receipt—Presumption. See A.I.R. 1952 Cal. 455.

Partnership Act, 1932, S. 68—Notice of change in constitution of firm—Entry made in Register of Firm—Evidentiary value. See A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 209.

Despatch register of Transport authority and affidavit of Regional Transport Officer produced in support of assertion that order of the Regional Transport Authority was despatched on a particular date—Presumption can be drawn in such circumstances of the letter having been duly posted and, therefore, to have reached the addressee: (1973) 2 Cut.W.R. 1586 (D.B.).

When a member of the Bar writes a letter purporting to be instructed by a client, there is a presumption, until the contrary is proved, that the letter is written under instructions: 144 I.C. 996: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 147.

S. 114 relates to presumptions of facts and such presumptions may be drawn, in the language of the section "in their relation to the facts of the particular case". Only upon proof that a letter had been actually posted, can a presumption arise of the letter having reached its destination in due course. Where two names including the name of the addressee on the letter in question were noted on a certificate of posting, not by the postal authorities but by some one on behalf of the party and the postal stamp was below those entries, held, in the circumstances of the case, that the certificate had no evidentiary value and the Court was justified in brushing it aside: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 331.

Compromise decree for restitution of conjugal rights—As per terms of compromise husband sending letter to wife to remain ready to accompany him to return home—Wife refusing to accept the letter—Adverse inference that wife was in no mood to return should be drawn: (1965) 67 Punj.L.R. 56: 1965 Cur. L.J. 72.

48. Illustration (f)—Others.—Statutory presumption — Resolution of company signed by its Chairman—Resolution must be presumed to be correct: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 68.

When a notice issued by an officer of a company purports to have been issued by order of the board of directors, there is a presumption that it was issued pursuant to such an order, and unless the presumption is displaced, the Court must act on that presumption: (1956) 58 Bom.L.R. 660: I.L.R. (1956) Bom. 619: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 537.

Statutory presumption of correctness attaches to the entries in books regularly maintained by limited company. It is for the person alleging the contrary to prove it: A.I.R. 1956 Pepsu 89.

Where an immovable property of the Electricity Board was purchased by a Company and the consideration therefor in the form of a cheque was accepted by the Board's Superintending Engineer who later on communicated to the Company that it worked out to be full price and the possession was delivered by the Board's Assistant Engineer, held, since sale of its immovable property was not a normal business of the Board and neither of the Board's two officers who completed the transaction had any ostensible or real authority to do so, the purchaser should have enquired whether any resolution of the Board had empowered them to enter into the transaction; since S. 13 of the Electricity (Supply) Act, 1948 provides that all orders and decisions of the Board should be authenticated by the Chairman or any other Member of the Board and other instruments by authorised members and officers under their respective signatures, it could not be presumed that the sale was effected in the normal course of the Board's business and was valid: A.I.R. 1973 Madh. Where the Counsel of the accused puts defamatory questions imputing unchastity to the complainant who is a young woman, the Court has to start with the presumption that the questions were put on instructions and it is only when the contrary is proved that the Court can come to a finding that the questions were put without instructions: 1954 Cr.L.J. 1239: A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 741.

It frequently happens that when two persons go together to any shop where refreshments are provided, any one of the two persons gives the order and it is not possible to conclude that the person who gave the order must be presumed to be the person who handed over the money: 1957 Cr.L.J. 117 (All.).

Where an Assistant Manager of a branch of the Insurance Company, deposed that he was familiar with procedure followed by the Company for export cargo insurance and that the company used to prepare several carbon copies of the policy together with annexures attached thereto and one complete carbon copy thereof was kept as office record and he produced a copy of the policy together with a carbon copy of marine debit note, issued before he had joined the Branch, held, the copy of the marine debit note so produced attracted the presumption available under S. 114(f); it may be presumed that the copy was prepared and attached when the policy was initially issued: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 44: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 821: 1971 Cr.L.J. 5: (1983) 13 E.L.T. 1413.

On the imposition of gallonage fee under the Hyderabad Denatured Spirit Rules and the A.P. Denatured Spirit Rules having been struck in a writ petition, held, refund of the gallonage fee could not be allowed; that would tantamount to unjust enrichment; it can be reasonably presumed that the dealers must have included the gallonage component in the price at which he was selling the denatured spirit; the burden to plead and prove the loss and absence of unjust enrichment would lie on the party claiming refund: A.I.R. 1986 Andh. Pra. 361: (1986) 2 An.L.T. 206 (D.B.).

Where the assessee's claim of not having worked his brick kiln after 3-7-1967 was negatived by the Sales Tax Authorities on the ground that he had purchased coal on 12-10-1967 and on 16-2-1968 and the kilns normally commence their operations after Dashahra, held, the adverse inferences drawn by the Sales Tax Authorities against him were not unwarranted; it is not necessary that there should be direct evidence of every fact; it can be established by circumstantial evidence and probabilities: 1979 U.P.T.C. 840.

Where the power-of-attorney executed by a Yugoslav in Yugoslavia was authenticated by a Judge there and transmitted through the Yugoslav Foreign Office to the Indian Embassy where the signatures thereon were attested by an Embassy official and the power-of-attorney was sent to the plaintiff in India who filed it in the Court, held, the power-of-attorney would be presumed to be authentic as the common course of business had been followed: A.I.R. 1984 Del. 20.

True, there is no presumption in law that a father or a son can never sub-let, assign or part with possession of tenanted premises in favour of the other within the meaning of S. 14(1)(b) of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958, yet it will be disastrous to hold that because the tenant's parent or progeny lives or carries on business in the tenanted premises, it must be presumed that there is some kind of parting with possession; such an approach is not permissible in law, unless facts proved on record unequivocally compel to do so; the accepted way of life is that a father and son are normally expected to live together, earn together and spend their separate earnings for each other and the family; cogent and strong facts are required to displace this life style; on facts, held, sub-letting not proved. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 280, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Del. 14: (1983) 24 Del.L.T. 316: (1984) 86 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 39: (1984) 1 Ren.L.R. 107.

Illustration (g)

49. Scope of Illustration (g).—As to scope of illustration, see I.L.R. 61 Cal. 711: A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 39; I.L.R. 21 Pat. 735: A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 69.

The adverse inference contemplated under S. 114(g) is not a rule, much less a routine exercise of the Court's power; it has no independent existence of its own; while drawing such a presumption, the Court is required to have regard to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business in relation to facts of the particular case. The use of the words "may presume" emphasises the Court's "total discretion"; the settled law is that presumptions are necessarily be made against parties who having knowledge of fails in dispute will not subject themselves to examination when a prima facie case is made against them but by their own evidence, they might have answered it; no adverse inference may be drawn if the evidence of the witness held back would not have improved the party's case: (1994) 3 An.L.T. 491.

The language of section as well as that of Illus. (g) is not imperative, i.e., the Court is not bound to raise adverse presumption even if the requirements of the section are fulfilled: (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. 861: (1986-2) 27 Guj.L.R. 1303. See also (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 334.

The object of raising a presumption under Illus. (g) is to fill the gaps left in the evidence; a presumption is, however, no substitute for evidence; thus, there must be some evidence on record on the basis whereof the Court could raise the requisite presumption: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 304 (Cal.).

There is no element of compulsion under S. 73 on a party or any witness; the only consequence of non-compliance of a direction under S. 73 is that it is open to the Court to draw a presumption under S. 114 about the disputed writings which may go against the person or party. [A.I.R. 1975 Andh. Pra. 88;

(1968) 34 Cut.L.T. (Note) 319, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 218: (1985) 60 Cut.L.T. 591.

Illus. (g) to S. 114 refers to "evidence which could be and is not produced" and it is the non-production of this evidence which could be and is not produced that would give rise to the presumption under the section that if produced it would be unfavourable to the person who "withholds" it. The illustration, therefore, postulates two things: first, that the evidence could be produced and secondly, that that evidence is withheld. Obviously, the illustration refers to evidence which is under the control of the party concerned and if the evidence be not under his control there is no question of raising any presumption under S. 114. Held, that there was no satisfactory evidence that any general diary entry relating to the incident was at all made and even if an entry was made the prosecution having been started on a petition of complaint, it could not be said that the complainant was in possession of that police document and could, if he would, have produced it. So far as the petition of complaint that was earlier filed was concerned, the same was with the police record and was also not under the control of the complainant. The two documents, therefore, not being documents under the control of the complainant and not being within his power to produce, there was no question of his having withheld them. In this view, a presumption under S. 114(g) was not liable to be drawn against the prosecution for non-production of the documents: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 781.

Failure to obtain evidence—Adverse inference can be drawn only if there is withholding of evidence and not merely on account of failure to obtain evidence: 1967 Mah.L.J. 747: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 595: 1967 S.C.D. 1050: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 450.

In order to entitle the Court under S. 114, Illus. (g) to draw inferences unfavourable to the person withholding evidence, the opposite party must satisfy the Court that such evidence was in existence and could be produced:(1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 657: A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 87: 64 M.L.J. 413 (P.C.); 61 I.A. 177: I.L.R. 57 Mad. 443: (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 669: 67 M.L.J. 1 (P.C.).

A presumption of fact under S. 114(g) is a question of fact and not a question of law: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 168: (1984) 2 Cal.H.N. 160 (D.B.).

The permissive presumption under S. 114(g) may be raised only in case of deliberate withholding of material evidence; thus, where in a suit for recovery of money on hundies, the plaintiff at the relevant times had neither a bank-account nor books of account and did not produce any document to show that she had sufficient source to lend the money, held, there being nothing on the record to show that she could adduce better evidence, the presumption under S. 114 could not be raised: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 59 (D.B.).

50. Withholding of best evidence.—It is the duty of the party concerned to place before the Court all relevant material with reference to a matter which the Court is called upon to decide and the Court is justified in raising a presumption against such party for non-production of any relevant material asserted to exist. To withhold the best evidence which a party has in his possession and then to rely upon a set of facts is against sound legal principles when that evidence would throw considerable light on the matter in issue: 1961 M.P.L.J. 287.

It is against sound legal principles for those relying upon a set facts to withhold from the Court the best evidence in their possession which would throw light on the matter to be investigated by it. It is, therefore, not unreasonable for the Court to draw an adverse inference from the failure of a party to produce the best evidence in its possession to prove a fact the initial burden in regard to the proof of which has been discharged by the other party: I.L.R. (1954) 1 All. 582: A.I.R. 1954 All. 393. See also I.L.R. (1953) Trav.-Co. 537: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 481; I.L.R. 36 Pat. 786: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 329.

Non-production by party of best evidence, gives rise to presumption against the party: A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 361.

Best evidence not produced though available raises adverse presumption. Inconsistent pleas and not proving pleas raised indicate falsity of defence: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 430: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 95: 57 M.L.J. 565 (P.C.).

Best evidence rule which governs the production of evidence in Courts, requires that the best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible should always be presented. When better evidence is withheld it is only fair to presume that the petitioner had some motive for not producing it and that, if offered, his design would be frustrated: A.I.R. 1978 Del. 199.

A very strong presumption must be raised against a party who withholds a document, which was the best evidence and abstains himself from appearing in the witness-box, especially when the version given against him by the opposite party is supported and corroborated by the scribe: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 573: (1960-61) 18 F.J.R. 428.

If a party to a case does not produce a document which is the best evidence in support of his contention, an inference can be drawn that, if proved it would be against his contention. It is only in the case of non-production of documents irrelevant to the case that such an inference cannot be drawn unless the party is asked to produce the document and he fails to do so: 21 Cut.L.T. 322: A.I.R. 1955 Ori. 60; (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 78; A.I.R. 1958 Madh. Pra. 129.

If a party to an action is in possession of the best evidence, which one way or other is decisive on the fact in issue then there is a heavy duty cast upon him to assist the Court with the same and that notwithstanding what the abstract doctrine of the onus of proof may suggest about it. And in case he fails to produce it without any reasonable justification, whether called upon to do so or not then in law it is open to the Court to draw an adverse inference against him for that reason: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 223; A.I.R. 1988 Del. 332. But see infra. A presumption can only arise if a relevant document in the possession of the opposite party is not produced in spite of notice to produce it. But where the opposite party gives an explanation for the non-production, which is plausible, there is no ground for raising any adverse inference: 1959 Raj.L.W. 19: A.I.R. 1959 Raj. 391. It is for the suitor to decide which would be the best evidence to prove his case, and, for failure to produce one piece of evidence, an adverse inference should not be drawn against the party who has chosen not to file it, unless the other side had called for that evidence: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 111.

A party in possession of best evidence which would throw light on the issue in controversy withholding it—Court ought to draw an adverse inference against him notwithstanding that onus of proof does not lie on him—Party cannot rely on abstract doctrine of onus of proof or on the fact that he was not called upon to produce it: (1968) 3 S.C.R. 862: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413.

Whether or not an adverse inference from the non-production of the best evidence by a person on whom the burden of proving a fact lies should be drawn is not, however, a matter of an inflexible rule but is dependent upon the circumstances of each individual case. Inferring the existence or non-existence of a certain fact from the omission of a party to produce a particular evidence the Court follows the same mental process which is followed and is implicit in all inferences. The question always is whether the existence of a fact or a state of thing makes the existence of another fact or state of things so likely that it may be presumed to exist; and even in deciding whether an inference adverse to a party should be drawn from the non-production of a particular evidence or type of evidence, the Court really answers the above question. Naturally the answer must vary according to the circumstances. The nature of the fact required to be proved and its importance in the controversy the usual and commonly recognised mode of proving it; the nature, quality and cogency of the evidence which has not been produced and its accessibility to the party concerned have all to be taken into account. And it is only when all these matters have been duly considered that an adverse inference may be drawn. But the proposition that the Court is never justified in drawing an adverse inference from the non-production of a particular type of evidence is manifestly untenable: I.L.R. (1965) 1 All. 483: A.I.R. 1966 All. 570.

A case has to be decided on the evidence led by the parties, and not on evidence which might have been led if the parties were better advised, unless it be that a party deliberately withholds the best evidence which has shown to be in its possession, in which case an adverse inference may be drawn against that party. But for drawing that adverse inference the Court has to be satisfied that the evidence was available and has been withheld.

A municipal employee had prepared a survey map of a road with reference to a fixed point (Railway gate) which was also shown as the fixed point in the survey sheet of the year, 1901. The survey map tallied with the survey sheet of the year 1901 which was a public document. The employee appeared as a witness on behalf of the State which was the plaintiff in the instant case. His evidence had remained unshaken in cross-examination.

Held, that the witness was a public servant and had no personal interest in the subject-matter of the litigation. His evidence could not be discarded on ground that the defendant did not admit the correctness of the survey sheet or that the Court was of the opinion that better evidence could have possibly been led. This is more so when the survey by the Commissioner appointed by the Court would not have made any difference: 1983 All.L.J. 1155.

Where the long delay of the plaintiffs in bringing the suit has prejudiced the defendants and has prevented them from bringing the best evidence that would otherwise have been available to them, the tendency of the Court must invariably be to make an inference against the plaintiff unless good cause is shown and the Court should attach great importance to such presumption in testing the credibility of the evidence actually given: 118 I.C. 154: A.I.R. 1929 All. 561.

Plaintiff not producing best evidence in support of adoption as disclosed in plaint itself—Plaintiff applying for time not being fortified with necessary evidence—Time not allowed—Plaintiff, therefore, constrained to be ready with whatever evidence was available—Details of documents upon which plaintiff wanted to rely in support of adoption given in plaint—Held, if those documents contained recitals against the story of adoption, it was open to defendant to file them—In the circumstances, no adverse inference could be drawn against the plaintiff: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 422: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 45.

Party claiming that houses were impressed with character of joint family property as their purchase alleged from sale-proceeds of land belonging to joint family—Party not producing sale-deed of land nor producing extracts from land records to show existence of land but offering oral evidence—Non-production of document suggests for adverse inference and oral evidence cannot be accepted: I.L.R. (1965) 1 All. 483: A.I.R. 1966 All. 570.

State deliberately withholding certain evidence from Court—Every possible presumption could be raised against State in that respect: A.I.R. 1968 Punj. 72; (1992) 2 Cal.L.J. 247 [Where respondent State Government withheld list of the persons for whom certain posts were created, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the State that the writ petitioner was one of those persons.]

Where the Government withholds relevant documents in its possession, the Court will draw an inference adverse to it: I.L.R. 50 Cal. 276: A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 233. But see A.I.R. 1929 Mad 399 [Where the Government failed to produce original settlement record but no adverse inference was drawn.] Although S. 114 permits a Court to presume that evidence, which could be and is not produced, would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it, it does not allow any such presumption to be made in the case of documents about which there is no certainty that they would even have been relevant evidence in the case: I.L.R. (1944) All. 9: A.I.R. 1944 All. 5.

Under S. 114 (g), the Government stands on no higher footing than a private party except in cases where the function of the Court in this behalf is taken away by specific statutory provisions, which while vesting the Government with statutory powers on the basis of certain objective facts relegates the question of existence of such objective facts not to a quasi judicial determination thereof but to the satisfaction of the authority concerned: I.L.R. (1952) Cut. 529: A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 121.

Where though both the plaintiff and the defendant were traders and maintaining their respective accounts books, but both failed to produce them, held, adverse inference could not be drawn only against the plaintiff: A.I.R. 1979 N.O.C. 196 (Andh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Neither party producing any evidence even though any of them can produce it, if available—Absence of evidence is inconclusive and does not help either party: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 153: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134.

Relevant piece of documentary evidence (birth and death register) available to both parties but none of them producing it—No adverse inference can be drawn from the non-production against plaintiff—At most adverse inference held could be drawn against defendants who set up a specific case to prove which they failed to take steps to produce the document which it was possible for them to do: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 131.

51. Non-production of witness by prosecution.—Law does not require that all the eye-witnesses to an occurrence must be produced and examined in a criminal case to prove a charge. S. 134 of the Indian Evidence Act lays down that no particular number of witnesses shall in any case be required for the proof of any fact. Evidence has to be weighed and not counted. When four of the eye-witnesses to the occurrence have been examined and their evidence may be legally relied upon, non-examination of the other eye-witnesses would not in any way affect the prosecution case: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1552 (Gau.) (D.B.).

The correct law as to the proper effect of the non-production of the witness cannot be decided in the abstract. In the final analysis, it is a question of fact to be determined on a consideration of the circumstances of the individual cases, in which inter alia the following factors should receive due consideration. (i) Whether the witness is in a position to give relevant and material evidence. (ii) Whether the witness is within easy reach of the prosecution or not, or, whether there are circumstances justifying the withholding of a witness, viz., the witness is likely to be hostile to the prosecution. (iii) The nature and intensity of the controversy raised by the defence on a particular issue on which the witness is expected to give evidence. (iv) Presumptiveness of the evidence which is on the record: I.L.R. (1971) 21 Raj. 209.

No particular number of witnesses is required to prove a fact. Before raising an inference adverse to the prosecution under S. 114(g) it has to be shown that the prosecution has withheld a witness, who has to unfold the story for the prosecution. Thus, where there were already sufficient number of witnesses for the prosecution and the examination of other possible witnesses would only have added to the repetition of the same story over again by those witnesses, entailing a protracted trial, held, an adverse inference against the prosecution could not be drawn: 1983 M.P.L.J. 411.

The material witnesses considered necessary by the prosecution for unfolding the prosecution story alone need be produced and not all witnesses said to have seen the occurrence and no adverse inference can be drawn against the prosecution for the non-production of a non-material witness. [(1936) 37 Cr.L.J. 963: A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 289; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2156, Rel. on]: 1973 Cr.L.J. 806 (Raj.).

By introducing S. 207-A in the Cr.P.Code the Legislature has considerably altered the law relating to the procedure to be adopted in commitment proceedings instituted on a police report. Cl. (4) of S. 207-A gives to the prosecution absolute discretion in the matter of production of witnesses of the actual commission of the offence. It further empowers the Magistrate to take evidence of any one or more of other witnesses for the prosecution, if he considers it necessary in the interest of justice. If, in the exercise of its discretion, the prosecution did not produce all the identification witnesses in the committal proceedings, and the Magistrate, too, did not consider it necessary to take the evidence of any of the other witnesses for the prosecution, no inference adverse to the prosecution can justifiably be drawn from such non-production of witnesses before the committing Magistrate: I.L.R. (1962) 1 All. 169: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 411.

It is not the number of the witnesses which is material, but it is the quality and nature of the evidence produced which is relevant. However, in specified circumstances, the Court may draw adverse inferences, where the material evidence is stated to have been withheld. Where there was non-production of witnesses, from the statements of whom the Court could ascertain the circumstances under which the prosecutrix was, allegedly, supposed to have been subjected to sexual intercourse against her consent and the prosecution failed to satisfy the Court or even give a suggestion regarding the circumstances which prevented it from producing the said witnesses in the Court, held, non-production of material witnesses was definitely a factor required to be taken note of alongwith other circumstances of the case: 1994 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 327 (J.&K.).

Non-examination of some witnesses—Presumption—Duty of Court: See A.I.R. 1956 Bhopal 6.

Criminal trial—Evidence—Appreciation of—Non-examination of material witness—Effect: I.L.R. (1963) Andh. Pra. 349: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 77: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 78; (1994) 5 S.C.C. 188: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 1391.

The prosecution is not bound to produce all witnesses if they are not considered necessary. Non-production of a witness, therefore, is not always sufficient to throw any doubt on the prosecution version: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 742; 1982 M.P.W.N. 486 [No adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for non-examination of a witness whose evidence is not material.]

Non-examination of prosecution witness —Inference. See A.I.R. 1954 Andhra 46: 1955 An.W.R. 183.

Duty of prosecution to call as witnesses all persons. See I.L.R. (1953) Mys. 625: A.I.R. 1954 Mys. 81.

Duty of prosecution to call all material witnesses—Failure to examine—Effect: 1967 Cur.L.J. 51 (Punj.).

There is always a duty cast on the prosecution to examine the material witnesses, who unravel the prosecution story. If a material witness is deliberately or unfairly withheld a serious reflection is cast on the propriety of the trial. But it is not as though the prosecution is bound to call all the witnesses, who might be aware of the occurrence, and duplicate the evidence: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1630: A.I.R. 1968 Tripura 57.

All eye-witnesses, selected fairly and honestly and not with a view to suppress inconvenient witness from witness box, are to be examined: 1981 Cr.L.J. 536 (Gau.).

A prosecution is not bound to call witnesses irrespective of considerations of number and of reliability, nor is a prosecution bound to discharge the functions both of prosecution and defence. It is only those witnesses who are essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based who must be called by the prosecution, whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the case of the prosecution.

It is no part of the duty of the prosecution to supply ammunition to the defence for the purpose of blowing up the prosecution's case: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1042: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 545; 1981 Jab.L.J. 407.

The non-production of witnesses cited by prosecution when their evidence was unnecessary cannot justify adverse inference when there is nothing else on record to justify it: 120 I.C. 606: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 163.

Where a serious offence like murder is committed and large number of accused persons are tried, attempts are made either to terrorise or win over prosecution witnesses and if prosecution honestly and bona fide believes that some of the witnesses have been won over, it would be unreasonable to insist that they must be tendered before the Court. But it is also settled law that material witnesses considered necessary by the prosecution for unfolding the prosecution story need be produced; such witnesses cannot deliberately be kept back: 1979 Cr.L.R. 88 (Raj.).

In a criminal trial for an incident due to village faction, held, no adverse presumption against prosecution may be drawn for non-examination of a particular witness, since people avoid to invite displeasure of one side or the other side when there is a village faction: 1983 All.L.J. 232 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 880: 1985 Cr. L.J. 902: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 61; 1994 (Supp.) 1 S.C.C. 74: 1994 S.C.C. (Cr.) 239.

The prosecution is not bound to produce each and every eye-witness irrespective of the fact whether he would or would not support its case. If the prosecution comes to the conclusion that a particular witness is not a truthful witness, there is no obligation on it to call him: 1977 Cr.L.R. 251 (Raj.); (1986) 1 Crimes 201 (S.C.).

The prosecution cannot be compelled to examine one witness or the other and if a material witness is withheld, the utmost that would follow would be to draw an adverse inference against the prosecution. But, before such adverse inference can be drawn, it must be proved to the Court that material witnesses had actually seen the occurrence, but had been deliberately withheld from the witness box by the prosecution: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 2004: 1989 Cr. L.J. 2167; A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2304: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 369.

For non-examination of witnesses found to have been won over by the accused, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution. [1977 Cr.L.J. 273 (S.C.), Rel. on]: 1984 Cr.L.J. 29 (D.B.).

Where the prosecution had given up two witnesses, not essential for unfolding of its case, on the ground of their having been won over by the defence, held, no adverse inference could be drawn for their non-examination by the prosecution; suborned witnesses as they were, the prosecution would have discredited by cross-examining them; in the absence of any other convincing reason having been put forth by the defence, their non-production has no effect: 1977 Raj.L.W. 100 (D.B.).

Where the prosecution dropped a witness on the ground that he was won over and the defence at no point of time questioned the prosecution's stand in this regard, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for its failure to examine the said witness and his non-examination could not reflect on the credibility of other prosecution witnesses: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 214.

In the Court of Session the Public Prosecutor gave up certain witness as having been won over by the accused. The witness was present in the Court of Session but was not examined by the accused. Held, that the non-production of the witness by the prosecution did not adversely affect the prosecution case: (1954) 56 Punj.L.R. 43: A.I.R. 1954 Punj. 126.

Prosecution requesting to drop witness K as accused has bribed him and he is not expected to state truth—Prosecution also bringing to notice of Magistrate that K is present within precincts of Court—Held, no adverse inference could be drawn against prosecution by trial Court on account of non-production of K as witness: 1967 Cur.L.J. 682: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 935.

Person mentioned in dying declaration not produced by prosecution on ground of his being won over—Effect. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 904: 1958 M.L.J. (Cr.) 38.

Where material on record indicated that some of the prosecution witnesses had succumbed to the threats and pressure of defence to stay away from the witness box and were given up by the prosecution as having been won over, held, that by itself would not detract from the probative value of the testimony of other prosecution witnesses examined in the Court: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1456: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1466: (1989) 3 S.C.C. 5.

Where three examined witnesses had testified and proved the facts and two other witnesses, who could prove some of those facts, were not examined in the case of a raid under S. 21 of the Prevention of Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1988, held, for non-examination of the two witnesses, no adverse inference could be raised against the prosecution: 1991 Cr.L.J. 134 (Del.).

Where in a criminal case, the High Court had found that the testimony of two eye-witnesses was absolutely credible and truthful, held, it could not have rejected the prosecution case on the ground that other eye-witnesses named in the F.I.R. had not been examined by it; the Court in such cases is concerned not with non-examination of other independent witnesses; it has to decide whether the evidence actually on record is reliable or not: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1116; (1981) 19 Del.L.T. 437.

Non-examination of some prosecution witnesses—A mere consideration that the witnesses might have given a further description of how things happened would not justify the conclusion that the omission to examine them was for an oblique motive and would go to benefit the accused: (1962) 32 Comp. Cas. 699: A.I.R 1962 S.C. 1821: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 253.

A number of eye-witnesses to the incident of rioting mentioned in first information report—Only three examined and two of them though produced for cross-examination not so examined by accused—Held, that simply because two other eye-witnesses were not produced, the evidence of those who were produced could not be disregarded: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1232: A.I.R. 1958 Raj. 226: I.L.R. (1957) 7 Raj. 997. See also (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 95.

Criminal trial—Some eye-witnesses not called—No inference favourable to accused can be drawn: 10 O.L.J. 68: A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 217; A.I.R. 1955 Bhopal 17: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1559.

Where prosecution failed to examine certain post occurrence witnesses, held, no adverse presumption could be drawn against the prosecution under S. 114, Illus. (g) more so when the evidence led by the prosecution was trust-worthy and reliable: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1835 (Cal.) (D.B.).

The abuse and insult hurled on the daughter-in-law usually are not expected to be made public so that the neighbours may have occasions to criticise the improper conduct of the accused and hold them with disrespect and contempt. Thus, no adverse inference could be drawn from the mere fact of non-examination of the neighbours and tenant of the accused family in case of a prosecution for death of a newly wedded lady, when there is sufficient evidence of close relatives of the deceased: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 1418: 1994 Cr.L.J. 2104.

Where out of three injured prosecution witnesses, the prosecution produced two, held, no adverse inference against the prosecution for non-examination of the third witness could be drawn as the evidence of third witness would have simply multiplied the evidence and was not likely to unfold the prosecution case any further: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1555 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

Where in a murder case evidence given by witnesses including injured ones was reliable but the prosecution failed to examine some witnesses, held, presumption could not be drawn against prosecution: 1991 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 14 (Karn.) (D.B.).

It is well settled that evidence is to be weighed not counted; where a witness was given up by the prosecution on the ground that his testimony would be no more than pure duplication of what had been deposed to by the injured witnesses, held, his non-production would not in the least detract from the prosecution case: 1981 Cr.L.J. 190 (P.&H.) (D.B.); 1980 Cr.L.J. 951 (P.&H.).

Broadly speaking, the principle is that the prosecution has some discretion in the examination of witnesses, but should not without giving very good reasons refuse to examine witnesses essential for the unfolding of the prosecution story. On the other hand, if the same set of incidents is deposed to by a number of witnesses, the public prosecutor need not waste public time and burden the record by getting witness after witness to repeat the same story. If the witness is unwilling and shows patent indications of unwillingness there is no point in compelling him unless he is likely to bring material that is absolutely necessary, and is such that it cannot be obtained by the examination of any other witness. Where the witness is essential for the unfolding of the prosecution story and where he is a public servant (such as a village chowkidar or a village patel) and has in fact given the first information report and is further willing and ready to give evidence having been listed and summoned, the prosecution can have no justification in giving him up. A prosecution at the instance of Government is really not a proceeding aimed at necessarily punishing the person sent up by the police, but one for a fair inquiry to find out the real course of events whether or not it is going to damn or exonerate the persons on trial.

Where after the riot took place between the two communities of a village, the village chowkidar who gave the first information report, and the village patel, had gone to the scene of attack immediately after the incident and though they were public servants and listed as P.Ws. both of them were given up because the Public Prosecutor formed his own notions of their impartiality and varacity, held, that there was certainly the oblique purpose of eliminating everything which did not support the preconceived theory. The proper course for the Public Prosecutor would have been to call the witnesses and put questions and after hearing the answers move the Court if there was justification for declaring them hostile and seek leave to cross-examine them: 1963 Jab.L.J. 932: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 185: A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 182.

Where the prosecution had actually examined some eye-witnesses to the occurrence which had taken place in a thickly populated area, the mere fact that the prosecution failed to examine more witnesses will not necessarily lead to an adverse inference against the prosecution. In order to draw an inference adverse to the prosecution it has to be established that there was competent evidence which was deliberately withheld. The mere fact that there were people close by would not be a sufficient ground for asking the Court to draw an adverse inference. The presence of a large number of people near about may be presumed; but such presumption does not assist the conclusion that they or any of them had actually seen anything or the occurrence; and unless it is established that the persons not called were competent to prove an essential part of the narrative upon which the prosecution depended and whose evidence would be normally expected it can never be said that an adverse inference arises: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 79: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 348.

Though as a general rule, all prosecution witnesses should be called to testify at the hearing of a prosecution, there is no obligation compelling the prosecution to call all witnesses, who speak to the same facts. Ultimately it is a matter for the discretion of the prosecution and though a Court ought and no doubt, will take into consideration the absence of witnesses whose testimony would be accepted, it must judge the evidence as a whole and arrive at its conclusion accordingly, taking into consideration the persuasiveness of the testimony given in the light of such criticism as may be levelled, in the absence of possible witnesses. The prosecution has a discretion as to what witnesses should be called and the Court will not interfere with the exercise of that discretion, unless it can be shown that the prosecution has been influenced by some oblique motive. A mere consideration that the witnesses might have given a further description of how things happened would not justify the conclusion that the omission to examine them was for oblique motive.

Thus, where offence of murder was alleged to have been committed in residential area at midnight when only near relations of the deceased and of the accused were the eye-witnesses, failure to examine independent witnesses would not be sufficient to raise adverse inference: 1969 Cr.L.J. 1002: I.L.R. (1969) 19 Raj. 273: A.I.R. 1969 Raj. 219.

Where though the prosecution produced only some of the eye-witnesses, their evidence sufficiently unfolded the prosecution's case, held, non-production of other eye-witnesses would not entail an adverse inference against the prosecution: 1984 Cr.L.J. 221 (Ker.) (D.B.). See also 1984 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 161 (Gau.).

Where the murder had taken place near the house of a prosecution's witness who was near relative of the deceased and it was not shown that any other resident of the locality was present at the time of occurrence except the said witness, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for non-examining any other resident of the locality: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 2004: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2167.

Where in a trial for robbery the persons robbed could not be examined as there was evidence to show that they had left the country, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for non-examination of those witnesses: 1990 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 80: (1989) 38 Del.L.T. 249; (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 338 (D.B.) [Where despite sincere efforts of the prosecution to serve a witness, he could not be traced, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for his non-production.]

Where the charge against the accused, a Revenue Inspector, was that though he received Rs. 946 from an excise contractor, but he deposited only Rs. 810 in the treasury and misappropriated the balance and there were receipts showing receiving of said amount, held, as the case depended upon the documentary evidence, even if for some reason the said excise contractor could not be examined, that fact would not introduce an infirmity in the prosecution case: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 506: 1973 Cr.L.J. 3: (1972) 3 S.C.C. 681.

Where the prosecution gave reasonable explanation for not examining certain witnesses stated to be material witnesses and there was nothing to show that the accused filed any application before the trial Court or even before the High Court for examining these witnesses as the Court witnesses nor did they choose to examine them as the defence witnesses but there were two independent prosecution witnesses whose evidence was fully corroborated by the medical evidence and evidence of recovery of weapons at the instance of accused, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for non-examination of those witnesses. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 51; A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 618, Disting.; A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 484; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 202, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 472: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 158: (1977) 1 S.C.R. 280: 1977 Cr.L.J. 273.

Non-examination of persons who were not eye-witnesses, held, does not affect the prosecution's case: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1173: 1979 Cr.L.J. 700: (1979) 4 S.C.C. 332.

Non-production of some of the witnesses: See A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 461: 56 Cr.L.J. 1174; A.I.R. 1954 Tripura 11; 1957 Cr.L.J. 263 (All.). Inference to be drawn from non-examination of prosecution witness—Direction to jury: See A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 305: (1952-53) 57 Cal.W.N. 962.

Where the prosecution does not call all available eye-witnesses, the Court may draw an inference adverse to the prosecution. See

I.L.R. 42 Cal. 422: 27 I.C. 554; 51 I.C. 679: 20 Cr.L.J. 519; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 62; (1978) 1 M.P.W.N. 58, but see contra 74 I.C. 434: A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 217. On this point, see also 34 I.C. 987: 12 P.R. 1916 (Cr.); I.L.R. 60 Cal. 1361: (1932-33) 37 Cal.W.N. 1098: A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 600.

Where the prosecution filed alongwith chalan a list of witnesses and did not examine them, held, that the non-production of such witnesses raised a presumption that the evidence, if given by those witnesses, would be unfavourable to the prosecution: A.I.R. 1951 Simla 14. But see infra. It cannot be said that because a party does not examine all the persons named as witnesses, it should be presumed under S. 114 that the party's case must be false or that the allegations of the other side must be true: 1945 A.M.L.J. 77.

It is not incumbent on the prosecution to examine each and every witness so as to multiply witnesses and burden the record, this rule, however, does not apply where the evidence of the eye-witnesses suffers from various infirmities and could be relied upon only if properly corroborated. Thus, where all the eye-witnesses examined by the prosecution had serious animous against the accused and they were interested in implicating the accused and the Police could neither recover any weapon nor explain how the accused got hold of the guns and the F.I.R. was also antetimed, held, in view of the special circumstances it was incumbent on the prosecution to examine the two witnesses at least to corroborate the evidence and if they were not examined an adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 59: (1977) 4 S.C.C. 420: 1978 Cr.L.J. 177.

A party asking the Court to draw against the other party an adverse inference of the nature indicated in Illus. (g) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act by reason of the non-examination of a witness by that party must, whether the proceeding be a civil or a criminal one, lay the foundation for it by eliciting evidence which would show that the witness in question was available to the other party for the purpose of giving evidence at the time of the hearing. That evidence may be elicited either in the course of the cross-examination of the witnesses examined by the other side (e.g., the investigating officer in a criminal case), or by leading evidence to that effect. Unless that foundation is laid, no question of drawing an adverse inference as indicated in Illus (g) to S. 114 arises at all.

Even if an adverse inference were to be drawn, it would be for the Court to weigh the evidence of such of the witnesses as have been examined before it as against that adverse inference and, if those witnesses are found to be reliable, the Court would be perfectly justified in convicting the accused persons: (1969) 71 Bom.L.R. 536: I.L.R. (1969) Bom. 1191: A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 166: 1969 Mah.L.J. 433: 1970 Cr.L.J. 660.

The test to determine whether a witness is material is not whether he would have given evidence in support of the defence; the test is whether he is a witness essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based; whether a witness is so essential or not would depend on whether he could speak to any part of the prosecution case or whether the evidence led disclosed that he was so situated that he would have been able to give evidence of the facts on which the prosecution relied; if a material witness has been deliberately or unfairly kept back then a serious reflection is cast on the propriety of the trial itself and the validity of the conviction resulting from it may be open to challenge. Where in a prosecution of the accused for alleged refusal to give inspection and causing obstruction to search punishable under S. 25(1)(f) and (h) of the Orissa Sales Tax Act, 1947, the charge was based on the statement given by the accused to the Inspecting Officer, and attested by two witnesses and the prosecution failed to produce the attesting witnesses, held, that an adverse inference could be drawn from the fact of non-production of the attesting witnesses to the accused's statement since they were both material witnesses: (1961) 3 Ori.J.D. 416: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 835.

Per Shiv Dayal, J.—It is true that the prosecution has the choice to produce such witnesses as it likes, but the ultimate aim of the prosecution must be to give its best assistance to the Court in ascertaining the truth and for that purpose to place before it all materials available. Where although the prosecution, in a murder charge, had produced as many as six witnesses to prove the prosecution case but had withheld three important and seemingly impartial and independent witnesses, the prosecution exposes itself to serious comment because of this conduct and it creates an impression that the prosecution was not keen and conscientious in rendering its best assistance to the Court in the administration of justice: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 672 (Madh. Pra.).

It is the bounden duty of the prosecution to examine a material witness, particularly, when no allegation has been made then, if produced, he would not speak the truth. Non-production of such a witness raises an adverse inference against the prosecution in view of S. 114 (g), Evidence Act and the circumstance of his being withheld from the Court also casts a serious reflection on the fairness of the trial: 1968 Cr.L.J. 925: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 63; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 51.

Where a material witness for the prosecution has not been examined and no explanation is forthcoming for his non-examination, an adverse inference against the prosecution may be drawn: 1956 Cr.L.J. 906: I.L.R. (1956) Mys. 118: (S.) A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 51; (1978) 1 Karn.L.J. 452; (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 259; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 96; 1982 M.P.W.N. 521; 1982 M.P.W.N. 452; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 185.

The Court will not appreciate the liability to get at a witness by the Police saying the whereabouts are not known. They should secure the important witnesses which can be done under the provisions of law available: (1957) 23 Cut.L.T. 449.

The failure to examine a material witness justifies the inference that the witness, if examined, would have deposed against the prosecution: (1927) 29 Punj.L.R. 14: A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125. See also A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 615; I.L.R. 15 Lah. 407; 159 I.C. 808: A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 130; (1983) 23 Del.L.T. 410; (1980) 1 M.P.W.N. 62.

The fact that a person was relative of the complainant or that a person was informing that he would not support the prosecution case, held, is no good ground for not examining them: 1979 All.Cr.R. 1: 1979 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 74 (D.B.).

Duty of prosecution to examine material witnesses—Non-examination of some witnesses—Adverse inference when can be drawn: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1655: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1402; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 73; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 235.

Where out of several persons who had witnessed the occurrence only one witness was examined by the prosecution, held, such testimony has little evidentiary value: A.I.R. 1954 Him. Pra. 33.

Non-examination of interested witnesses by prosecution—Adverse presumption: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 814: A.I.R. 1965 Tripura 45.

It is duty of prosecution to call and examine—Test to see whether it is essential to unfold prosecution narrative—Non-examination of material witness—Adverse inference against prosecution case and fairness of trial can be drawn: (1965) 1 Cr.L.J. 173: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 44.

Where all the four partisan witnesses deposed that an independent witness was present at the occurrence but he was not examined by the prosecution, when it was duty bound to produce him, held, non-production of such an independent witness who could have given the true version was fatal to the prosecution, especially when no allegation was made that he would not have spoken the truth. [A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 289; A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 545, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Raj. 68: 1971 Cr.L.J. 498 (D.B.).

Where the evidence of witnesses examined in Court is in any manner discrepant or doubtful, then the circumstance that some of the eye-witnesses had not been examined would assume importance: (1970) 2 Mys.L.J. 402.

Where the murder was committed in a busy locality and none of the persons therefrom including those named to be present at the spot were examined by the prosecution without assigning any reason therefor, held, it casts a serious reflection on the trial's fairness; an adverse inference has to be drawn against the prosecution; conviction set aside: 1977 Raj.L.W. 107: 1977 Cr.L.R. 154 (D.B.); 1980 Cr.L.R. 546 (Raj.); 1991 Cr.L.R. 388 (Raj.).

Where the prosecutrix had alleged that at the time she was raped she and her husband were sleeping together in the same room and that she informed her husband as to what happened immediately after the occurrence, held, for failure of the prosecution to examine her husband, an adverse inference could be drawn: 1993 Cr.L.J. 2364 (Mad.).

Where in a case of conspiracy and consequential defraud of public money, the doctors were alleged to have issued false prescriptions and essentiality certificates as a part of the offence but were neither arraigned as culprits nor examined as prosecution witnesses, held, they were material witnesses; their testimony would have shown whether the prescriptions and the arraigned as culprits nor examined as prosecution witnesses, held, they were material witnesses; their testimony would have shown whether the prescriptions and the certificates were genuine or not; their non-examination as witnesses was, thus, fatal to the prosecution: 1983 Raj.L.W. 226.

Where in a prosecution for false entries, the defence raises a question that the entries, were made under the direction or authority of some members of the complainant firm and the money was also said to have been advanced under his direction, it is duty of the prosecution to call that particular partner of the firm as a witness to give a positive denial of the allegation which the accused put forward. But when even after citing the proprietors of the firm as witnesses, the prosecution fails to produce them without assigning any reason, the Court is justified in drawing adverse inference against the prosecution: 1957 All.L.J. 60: A.I.R. 1957 All. 342.

Where in a murder trial, though a prosecution witness deposed that the accused had kept the ornaments of the deceased with one T but said T was not examined by the prosecution, held, failure of the prosecution to examine him would make the Court to draw an adverse inference against the prosecution: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 501: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1296: (1972) 3 S.C.C. 393: (1972) 3 S.C.R. 622.

Where the alleged articles were recovered from the land of the applicant but no resident of the colony of the applicant were examined to prove the possession of the accused-applicant over the recovered articles, held, mere recovery of the articles did not lead to conclusive proof that the accused applicant was in possession of those articles. [A.I.R. 1933 All. 437, Appl.]: 1991 Cr.L.J. 3065 (All.).

Where in a murder trial, an important witness, who according to the prosecution case was also in the verandah at the time of the occurrence was not produced at the trial, held, the benefit of optional presumption under S. 114, Illus. (g) could be given to the accused and to infer that, if she had been produced, it would have damaged the prosecution case against the appellant: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 778: 1974 Cr.L.J. 664: (1974) 4 S.C.C. 193.

Adverse inference against prosecution for non-examination of seizure witness. See (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 162.

Where admittedly the Medical Officer accompanied the Food Inspector at the time he took sample of the milk, held, in a prosecution under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, it was the bounden duty of the prosecution to produce the Medical Officer also as a witness; non-examination of him would certainly give rise to a presumption that had he been produced, he would have deposed against the prosecution: (1974) 2 Chand. L.R. 63.

Where it was in evidence that something was written in the presence of the Amin which was signed by a party but the prosecution neither produced it nor examined the Amin and, thus, withheld the best evidence, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution: (1975) 41 Cut.L.T. 904 (D.B.).

52. Non-examination of Investigation Officer.—The non-production of material witnesses like the Investigation Officers is a serious omission which cannot but throw suspicion on the whole prosecution case: 71 I.C. 219; A.I.R. 1955 Madh. Bh. 119: 1955 Cr.L.J. 1559 (F.B.).

Murder case—Absence of Investigating Officer—Presumption. See A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 92. See also A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 213; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 125; A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 651; 168 I.C. 1: A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 152 (P.C.).

Where inspite of best efforts, the prosecution could not produce the Investigating Officer, no adverse inference could be drawn: 1994 (Supp.) 3 S.C.C. 729.

Non-examination of Investigating Officer —Effect: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1469 (1): A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 358.

The non-examination of the investigating Police Officer, specially in a serious case, may very often cause material prejudice to an accused. But the question ultimately depends on whether, taking all the circumstances into consideration, a Court can reasonably hold that prejudice has been caused. The investigating Police Officer is generally examined by the prosecution for two purposes, firstly, to prove the statements made before him by some of the prosecution witnesses during investigation under S. 162, Cr.P.Code, after their attention has been drawn to the same during their cross-examination, and secondly to prove the facts noticed by him during his local inspection of the place of occurrence.

Where no material contradiction between statements of the prosecution witnesses in Court and their statements before the Police was brought out during their cross-examination, and the facts which the S.I. might have noticed at the spot during local inspection were not of any material significance, the non-examination of the S. I. would not materially affect the case: I.L.R. (1956) Cut. 241: A.I.R. 1956 Ori. 212: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1421.

Where the prosecution failed to examine an Inspector who by no means could be called a material witness but the prosecution nonetheless offered him for cross-examination and kept him ready in Court but the Counsel of the accused failed to take advantage of the offer made by the prosecution, held, it was not open to the accused to comment upon the so-called failure of the prosecution to examine Inspector as a witness nor adverse inference against the prosecution could be drawn: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1092: 1985 Cr.L.J. 1357: (1985) 3 S.C.C. 45: (1985-2) 26 Guj.L.R. 988.

Adverse inference against prosecution can be drawn only if it withholds certain evidence and not merely on account of its failure to obtain certain evidence: (1967) 1 Mys. L.J. 548: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 501: A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 210.

Where the recovery memo which was alleged to have been drawn on the spot was not produced in the Court and the sub-Inspector who was alleged to have prepared recovery memo was also withheld and no public witness was picked up while conducting search, held, the presumption was that such evidence, if advanced, would have been unfavourable to prosecution: 1985 All.W.C. 786: 1985 All.Cr.R. 409: 1985 All.L.J. 950. See also (1984) 3 Crimes 254 (All.) [Prosecution is bound to prove the accuracy of site plan]; (1984) 2 Crimes 59: 1985 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 50: (1984) 1 Ori.L.R. 438 [Where the prosecution failed to file in the Court the earlier first information report filed by the complainant in Court, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution that if the report would have been produced and proved, it would have gone against the prosecution.]

53. Non-production of evidence by prosecution.—The conduct of the prosecution in withholding the relevant record gives rise to the inference that the record does not support its plea of the resignation having been accepted.

Where the prosecution has chosen not to place on record the full file relating to the service of the petitioner, though it produced the petitioner's letter of resignation, it has to be held that the relevant correspondence on the subject has been held back: (1976) 78 Punj.L.R. (Del.) 105.

Suppression of best evidence by the prosecution—Effect. See (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 73.

In a prosecution under S. 373, I.P.Code the prosecution failed to produce a register maintained at the Police chowki which showed the names of prostitutes to show that the accused was a prostitute. Held, that withholding such an important documentary evidence raises a presumption against the prosecution: 1959 Jab.L.J. 614: 1960 M.P.C. 52: 1960 M.P.L.J. 177.

Where accused alleged that the original F.I.R. was destroyed and another one was substituted in its place and the Sub-Inspector failed to produce the relevant F.I.R. book or general diary notwithstanding the directions of the Court, held, an inference could be drawn that the original F.I.R. was suppressed and in its place some other document was substituted: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1230: 1981 Cr.L.J. 736.

Failure of prosecution to take samples in prohibition case and have them sent to Chemical Analyser for his opinion—Presumption is that prosecution withheld evidence as it was not likely to support their case: (1966) 68 Bom.L.R. 389: 1966 Mah.L.J. 565: I.L.R. (1966) Bom. 407.

Adverse inference from non-production of evidence. See A.I.R. 1967 Ori. 169; 1972 Raj.L.W. 384: I.L.R. (1972) 22 Raj. 632.

Where the sodium bicarbonate solution turned pink after a trap laid to catch the receiver of illegal gratification but the prosecution failed to preserve the solution and did not adduce any evidence thereof, held, it was open to the Court to draw an adverse inference against the prosecution:

Where though the disputed signatures were got to be examined by an expert, neither the expert was examined nor his report was produced, held, an adverse inference may be drawn against the prosecution: (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 46.

Withholding evidence—Presumption—Murder trial—Prosecution evidence proving accused guilty beyond reasonable doubt—Non-production of evidence relating to finger prints by prosecution—Adverse inference cannot be drawn: (1970) 1 M.L.J. 149.

Where copies of the khasra and khatauni in possession of the Investigating Officer were not produced in evidence whereby it could be shown that the deceased was in cultivating possession of the land, the subject matter of the dispute which resulted in his death, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution that the deceased was not in cultivating possession: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2273: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1745: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 590.

Where accused was alleged to have administered poison to his wife and the uncle of the deceased deposed that he had written letter to the deceased's father to the effect that there was threat to life of the deceased from the side of the accused-husband and further the prosecution failed to place the said letter which was in possession of Police, held, adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for non-production of the letter: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 1164: (1977) 2 S.C.C. 124: 1977 Cr.L.J. 955.

When a fact is alleged it needs proof and failure in respect of it would injure the case of the prosecution. Non-production of documentary evidence when it could be and was bound to be available would give rise to an adverse presumption that if it was produced, it would have been derogatory for the case of prosecution. Where the prosecution failed to furnish the copy of the earlier proceedings under S. 107 of the Cr.P.Code to show enmity between the accused and the deceased, held, although ancillary in nature but its production was required for proof of fact, i.e., enmity; so non-production of the report would give rise to an adverse presumption against the prosecution: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2815 (All.) (D.B.).

Where though a shirt with a dot of blood on it as well as the weapon of murder were seized, they were not produced before the High Court despite direction, held, an adverse presumption arose against the prosecution: 1982 Cr.L.J. 2289 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

54. Non-explanation of injuries on accused.—It is not the law or invariable rule that whenever the accused sustains an injury in the same occurrence, the prosecution has to explain the injuries, failure of which will mean that the prosecution has suppressed the truth and also the origin and genesis of the occurrence. If the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution are believed by the Court in proof of the guilt of the accused beyond any reasonable doubt, the question of the obligation of the prosecution to explain the injuries sustained by the accused will not arise. When the prosecution comes with a definite case that the offence has been committed by the accused and proves its case beyond reasonable doubt, it becomes hardly necessary for the prosecution to again explain how and in what circumstances the injuries have been inflicted on the person of the accused. It, therefore, follows that simply because the accused has received injuries in the same occurrence, it cannot be taken for granted that the deceased or the injured person was the aggressor and consequently, he had to defend himself by inflicting injury on the deceased or the injured person: (1988) 36 B.L.J.R. 774 (D.B.); 1982 Cr.L.J. 1585 (Ori.).

Existence of injuries on accused not explained by prosecution—Inference can be drawn that the prosecution has suppressed the genesis or the origin of the occurrence and has, thus, not given the true version of the case: 1979 M.L.J. (Cr.) 692.

But where injuries on both sides are not claimed to have been suffered in the same transaction on account of different versions of occurrence, the prosecution need not explain injuries to opposite party: (1985) 1 Crimes 168 (All.).

Where in a murder case the prosecution evidence consists of interested or inimical witnesses or the defence version completes in probability with the prosecution's case and the prosecution fails to explain injuries, neither minor nor superficial but substantial, on the accused sustained during the occurrence, held, the Court may draw the following inferences: (1) the prosecution has suppressed the origins of the occurrence and suppressed the true version; (2) the prosecution witnesses denying such injuries are lying on a most material point and their evidence is unreliable; and (3) the defence version explaining the injuries, if probable, throws doubt on the prosecution case. The accused deserve to be acquitted: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2263: 1976 Cr.L.J. 1736: (1976) 4 S.C.C. 394.

Where as a result of violent dispute over diversion of irrigation water, the Investigating Officer arrested accused persons without investigating into their version of the incident and there was no evidence explaining the injuries sustained by the accused persons in the course of altercation which were neither of minor nature nor self-inflicted, held, a presumption arose that the prosecution failed to present the true version on account of suppression of genesis and origin of occurrence. [1988 Cr.L.J. 836 (S.C.); 1976 Cr.L.J. 1736 (S.C.); 1987 Cr.L.J. 1058 (S.C.), Rel. on; 1987 Cr.L.J. 693 (Madh. Pra.), Disting.]: 1989 Cr.L.J. 2205 (Madh. Pra.); 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 1 (Raj.).

Where in a murder case the prosecution did not explain all the injuries on the person of the accused and the accused did not show his injuries to the Investigating Officer, and no counter information was lodged with the Police nor any counter case was filed, held, in such a case before an adverse inference could be drawn against the prosecution for its alleged suppressions of injuries it must be reasonably shown that in all probabilities the injuries were caused to him in the same occurrence or as a part of the same transaction in which the victims on the side of prosecution were injured. [1972 Cr.L.J. 1552 (Assam), Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 2252: 1977 Cr.L.J. 1930: 1977 U.J. (S.C.) 725: (1977) 4 S.C.C. 396.

55. Non-production of defence evidence.—Where a person hit by a gun shot fired by the accused was the most material witness to prove the defence version that the gun shot came to be fired accidentally and yet she was not examined without any explanation therefor, held, her non-examination as a defence witness is the strongest possible circumstance to discredit the defence version; an adverse inference had to be raised against the same: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1703: 1975 Cr.L.J. 1494: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 241.

Failure to examine material witness by defence—Failure must lead to inference that witness was deliberately withheld as he was not likely to support defence: 1965 Mah.L.J. 565: 1967 Cr.L.J. 21: A.I.R. 1967 Bom. 1.

The omission on the part of the accused to produce all important evidence in support of his plea of alibi which could easily have been produced raises the presumption against him under Illus. (g) to S. 114, Evidence Act, that it would, if produced, have been unfavourable to him: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1266: A.I.R. 1958 All. 746.

No adverse inference can be drawn against accused for not disclosing his defence in the preliminary enquiry stage: 8 Pat.L.T. 656: A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 292.

Murder case—Explanation by accused before trial Court but not before committing Magistrate that there was assault by deceased's party and that under apprehension of grievous hurt or death, he had fired pistol-shot at deceased—If entire material in case should spell out case of private defence, Court would acquit accused notwithstanding accused said nothing in defence, adduced no evidence and did not even put forward plea of self-defence—But when accused wants Court to believe a positive case set up by him such as alibi or a general exception, his failure to set up that case when opportunity to do so was afforded earlier is certainly a piece of conduct which can be taken into account in deciding whether his case is true or is only an afterthought: I.L.R. (1967) 1 Ker. 640.

In a prosecution for an offence under S. 406, I.P.Code, in respect of certain documents entrusted to the accused, the defence of the latter was that he had returned them to the complainant. The complainant had sent a written notice to the accused to return the document, but the accused sent no reply at all and gave no explanation of his conduct in that behalf. Held, that the Court was justified in drawing an inference adverse to the accused: 49 Cr.L.J. 690: A.I.R. 1948 Pat. 406.

As an accused cannot be compelled to produce documents in his possession for comparison of his handwriting, no presumption of any kind can be drawn against him by his voluntary non-production thereof. It is open to the Court to issue a search warrant for the seizure of those documents: 1960 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 67.

56. Non-appearance of party as witness.—The failure of plaintiffs to go into witness-box goes strongly against them: I.L.R. 11 Lah. 142: A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1.

No adverse inference can be drawn against the plaintiff for mere non-examination of himself as a witness: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 95: 1973 Pat.L.J.R. 509 (D.B.).

Though there is no rule of law that the plaintiff must examine himself as a witness in order to establish his case, but a Court of law is entitled to draw an inference adverse to the plaintiff if he does not have the courage to depose what he has claimed to prove facts mentioned in the plaint. A Court would be fully justified in not accepting the averments in the plaint unless there is other coercive evidence in support of it: A.I.R. 1978 Pat. 48 (D.B.).

Party not giving evidence in support of his pleading—Effect—Practice: (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 611.

Facts within personal knowledge of party—Non-appearance of party as witness—Presumption: 1966 All.L.J. 904.

Witnesses do not carry conviction with a Court or tribunal when the party himself keeps away and is not ready to stand the test of cross-examination: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 110: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 423: (1980) 17 Del.L.T. 395.

When a material fact is within the knowledge of a party and he does not go into the witness box without any plausible reason, an adverse inference must be drawn against him. A presumption must be drawn against a party who having knowledge of the fact in dispute does not go into the witness box particularly when a prima facie case has been made out against him. [A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 230, Foll.; A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 713, Rel. on]: 1970 Jab.L.J. 207: 1970 M.P.W.R. 284: 1970 M.P.L.J. 586: A.I.R. 1970 Madh. Pra. 225.

It is the bounden duty of a party personally knowing the facts and circumstances of the case to give evidence and to submit to cross-examination. Courts have rightly drawn a presumption against the party avoiding the witness-box, and not submitting himself to cross-examination. The party who does not enter the witness-box, runs a great risk of a presumption being drawn against him. In the case of a party on whom burden of proving a certain issue lies, the risk run by withholding himself from the witness-box may be very great. This presumption, however, is permissive. S. 114 of the Evidence Act does not in all cases, make it obligatory on Courts to act on such a presumption: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 190 [Reversed on another point in A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 1279].

Failure of party coming forward with a case to give evidence on matters within his knowledge, ought to be a weighty factor when the value of the case put forward on his behalf is appraised: (1934) 36 Punj.L.R. 280: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 398; 148 I.C. 45: A.I.R.1934 Lah. 63 (2).

Facts specially within knowledge of party—Non-examination of party. See A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 280; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 186. It is the bounden duty of a party personally knowing the whole circumstance to give evidence. Non-appearance as witness would be the strongest possible circumstance to discredit the truth of the case: A.I.R. 1949 Him.Pra. 7 and 11.

Suit to set aside document on ground that sale effected thereby was under undue influence—Person who accompanied executant not examined by plaintiff—Adverse inference against plaintiff can be drawn: (1969-70) 74 Cal.W.N. 680.

It is the bounden duty of a party personally knowing the whole circumstances of the case to give evidence on his own behalf and submit to cross-examination and if he fails to do so, an adverse inference should be drawn against him. Where the persons who claimed to have obtained the right of Trusteeship under impugned document were the best witnesses to speak about the state of health of the executant and the execution of documents by her refrained from entering the witness box, held, an adverse inference should be drawn against them for their failure to examine themselves as witnesses eventhough the burden to prove undue influence was upon the opposite party. [53 M.L.J. 392; A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413; A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2128, Rel. on]: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 489.

Where the plaintiff has not gone into the witness box in spite of the fact that factual allegations were made against him and were supported by defendant's evidence, this would be the strongest possible circumstance to discredit the truth of his case: A.I.R. 1953 Bhopal 26.

Absence of party from witness-box—Effect: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 713.

Adverse inference can be drawn in the case of a party ordered to appear for further cross-examination not so appearing. See I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 203: A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 129.

It is the duty of parties to place the best evidence before the Court. The practice of refusing to enter the witness-box when called upon to do so and requiring the plaintiff to call the defendant as his own witness has been deprecated. It is clear, therefore, that where a party is shy of giving evidence in Court, the Court would be justified in drawing an inference against him: I.L.R. (1962) Bom. 186: (1961) 63 Bom.L.R. 678: A.I.R. 1962 Bom. 92.

When a party is ordered by a Court to reappear and submit to examination and cross-examination but he never cares to enter into the witness-box and deliberately keeps away, the Court is justified in drawing an inference unfavourable to his case. A party runs a great risk if he does not enter into the witness-box and himself give evidence in his case which is directly in his knowledge and which relates to the matters in controversy: A.I.R. 1949 Him. Pra. 4.

The explanation of any admission or conduct on the part of a party must, if the party is alive and capable of giving evidence, come from him and the Court would not imagine an explanation which a party himself has not chosen to give. Further, an acceptable explanation does not appear to be conceivable. But when such a party fails to enter into the witness box, an adverse inference can be drawn against such a party: A.I.R. 1971 All. 29 (D.B.).

Where the question is whether one of the parties to the suit is a "displaced person" the party itself should come into the witness-box. Best evidence must always be produced and a party who has personal knowledge of relevant facts in issue must put himself in the witness box in support of his own case and submit himself to the cross-examination by his adversary. Failure of the party, coming forward with a case, to give evidence on matter within his knowledge, ought to be a weighty factor, when the value of the case put forward on his behalf is appraised: (1959) 61 Punj.L.R. 757: I.L.R. (1959) Punj. 1565: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 91.

True it is that non-appearance of a party (personally knowing the whole of the circumstance) as a witness discredits the truth of his case. That is a salutary principle resting on Illus. (g) to S. 114. But where in a suit for damages for non-delivery against a Railway by the endorsee of a railway receipt, the question is whether consideration passed for endorsement and a trusted karmachari of the plaintiff firm (endorsee) knowing all the circumstances of the payment of consideration for endorsement of the railway receipt, is examined as a witness, the non-examination of the partners of the plaintiff firm who in fact knew nothing about the matter is not sufficient to raise the presumption of non-payment of consideration: (1962-63) 67 Cal.W.N. 279: A.I.R. 1963 Cal. 399.

Although non-appearance of the Director of the plaintiff-company personally knowing the whole of the circumstances and verifying the plaint as a director of the plaintiff company as a witness would discredit the truth of the case, where a trusted employee of the company knowing all about the relevant facts and circumstances, was examined; it will be wrong to make a presumption adverse to the plaintiff company only because the Director was not examined. What S. 114 prescribes is that the Court may presume, not that the Court must: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 209.

A defendant's deliberate avoidance of the witness-box raises a presumption against his contention: A.I.R. 1957 All. 346; A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 264: 1957 Raj.L.W. 267.

Generally speaking there is a good deal to be said for the contention that a suit should succeed on the ground that the defendant had not cared to enter the witness-box and testify as to the truth of his case. But if a defendant is of opinion after the plaintiff's case had been completed that the evidence was so discrepant and doubtful as to make it impossible for any Court to believe it, then if he so liked to take the risk, he is justified in not giving evidence: 1940 A.M.L.J. 93.

The words "may presume" in S. 114 leave it to the Court to make or not to make the presumption, according to the circumstances of the case. Thus, no adverse presumption need be drawn against the defendant who fails to depose in a suit filed against him when there is other evidence both documentary and oral: A.I.R. 1956 Him. Pra. 4. See also 1982 M.P.W.N. 31.

The defendant's failure to go into the witness-box raises a strong presumption against the truth of her case. The fact of her being a pardanashin lady is not sufficient excuse for her not getting herself examined even on commission: 1937 O.W.N. 1022.

When a defendant fails to appear in the witness-box to support his case, an inference can be raised that in case he would have entered the witness-box, he would not have supported his own case: (1995-2) 43 B.L.J.R. 1010 (D.B.).

Where the defendant failed to enter into the witness-box, held, a presumption could be raised that she deliberately withheld herself from the witness-box to avoid some vexing questions in cross-examination: A.I.R. 1973 Gau. 90.

The common principle of law is that if the opposite party can by cross-examination discredit the plaintiff's witness and shows that there is no case left for the opposite party to answer, held, the opposite party need not enter the witness-box; it is not open for the plaintiff in such a case to seek an adverse inference against the opposite party for not examining itself: A.I.R. 1986 Cal. 61: (1984-85) 89 Cal.W.N. 1021.

Where the mother of the child had proved certain letters stating that they were written and signed by its father, the omission on the part of the father to appear in the witness-box must lead to adverse inference against him: 29 Cut.L.T. 584; 30 Cut.L.T. 315: I.L.R. (1963) Cut. 415.

Where the question was whether the story of adoption of defendant was true and defendant who must have been not less than 13 or 14 years old at the time of adoption does not examine himself although he was in position to tender evidence as to the adoption, his absence from the witness-box must tell against his case: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 22.

Suit for breach of contract—Defendants denying any knowledge of contract—Defendants not going into witness-box—Inference need not be adverse to defendants: 149 I.C. 1119: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 59.

Where the successful candidate did not examine himself as a witness to controvert the facts testified to by the witnesses of the election petitioner when no onus to prove those facts lay upon the successful candidate, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against him for his not entering the witness-box: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 1178: 1975 U.J. (S.C.) 333.

Debts—Orissa Money-lenders Act (III of 1939), S. 8—Defendant asserting that plaintiff had advanced money to number of persons—Plaintiff though present in Court not coming forward to deny assertions—Presumption: I.L.R. (1965) Cut. 419: 31 Cut.L.T. 586.

Where a karta taking advantage of his brothers minority had got recorded in the Survey Settlement Record of Rights their respective shares in the ancestral land as $^3/_4$th and $^1/_4$th, and he also chose neither to enter the witness box nor to produce any deed of settlement in support of the recorded shares, held, the presumption under the Hindu law was that they took the land equally and not as recorded: A.I.R. 1991 Pat. 186: (1991) 2 Hindu L.R. 702.

Granting of licence to members of his family by the tenant for love and affection to run business in a part of the demised premises does not constitute transfer contemplated under S. 13(1)(a) of the W.B. Premises Tenancy Act, 1956; merely because the tenant was 90 years old residing in Punjab and did not examine himself would not justify the inference under S. 114(g). [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 280, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Cal. 145: (1984) 1 Cal.H.N. 175.

Where a landlady comfortably residing with her sons in their house sued for eviction of her tenant from her own house on the ground of her bona fide requirement under S. 14(1)(e) of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958, held, her need not being apparently bona fide, it is incumbent upon her to come into the witness-box; upon her failure to do so, an adverse inference may be drawn against her: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 220 (Del.).

Where in eviction proceedings on ground of bona fide requirement, the landlady was not examined in support of her own case, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the landlady as she was the best person to testify about her bona fide requirement. [A.I.R. 1981 Bom. 1, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 183: (1982) 54 Cut.L.T. 159 (D.B.). But see A.I.R. 1987 Raj. 16: 1986 Raj.L.W. 523 [It cannot be laid down as a very general proposition that if the landlord or landlady does not examine himself/herself, an adverse inference has to be necessarily drawn. Ordinarily, a person for whom there is need for getting the suit premises vacated, should appear as a witness and make himself available for cross-examination by the other side. But the bona fide need can be proved by other evidence, both oral and documentary and even by circumstances and it is not correct to state that in every case the plaintiff must enter the witness-box and depose about the requirement. Thus, where landlady's general power-of-attorney holder had been examined, held, non examination of her did not affect her case. (1979) 1 Ren.L.R. 743 (Del.), Dissent. from].

Where though the landlady, a pardanashin lady, did not appear in the witness-box, but her husband looking after the house entered the witness-box and stated all relevant facts, held, no adverse inference could be drawn: (1980) 2 M.P.W.N. 108. See also (1981) 19 Del.L.T. 407 [Where evidence of the landlady's husband, who was also her general attorney, was held to be sufficient to entitle her to an order of eviction, though she herself had not appeared as witness.]

Where in an eviction case on the ground of the landlady's bona fide requirement of the demised premises for her personal use she did not appear as a witness in the Court on the ground of her ailing health but the trial Court drew an adverse inference against her as the medical evidence of her poor health was incomplete and lacking in details, held, the Court was not justified; whether she was in poor health or not could not be decided on the hair splitting appraisal of evidence; it was on record that she had appeared as a witness in two other cases; no adverse inference of her not being in poor health could be drawn; there was no reason other than her poor health which prevented her from appearing as a witness; eviction ordered in all the three cases: (1989-1) 37 B.L.J.R. 563.

Where the property attached before judgment under O. 38, R. 5 of the C.P.Code in a suit for recovery in possession of its pledgee was sold with the Court's permission under S. 176 of the Contract Act, 1872 for satisfaction of the pledge and was held by the Courts below that it was not available for satisfaction of the decree passed in the suit and the High Court in the Letters Patent appeal reversed the concurrent findings on the ground that an adverse inference ought to have been drawn against the pledgee and the purchaser from him for their failure to enter the witness-box, held, such inference could not be drawn as there was a clear admission in the agreement between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor that the latter owed money to the pledgee as also to others; since attachment before judgment was a object to the pledgee's lien, the non-examination of the pledgee and the purchaser was of no effect; the lower appellate Court's order restored: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2235: (1982) 2 Bom.C.R. 88.

Where a mortgage by the father was impeached as not for legal necessity but the mortgagor's sons chose not to enter the witness-box to testify as to the family needs when the loan was raised or the manner of its utilization, held, it is legitimate to draw the presumption that their evidence would have favoured the other party seeking to sustain the mortgage: A.I.R. 1974 P.&H. 7 (D.B.).

Where the distinct charge in the evidence of reputation from the witness-box was (1) that the defendant was a prostitute and carried on prostitution and (2) that she took the house on rent to run a brothel there that is the prima facie case. Where she does not come herself nor calls any witness to delay those serious allegations of fact, whether the Judge should believe one witness or another or one case or another in such a context of fact is not then a question of prima facie case. It is then a question of the weight of evidence and its credibility. The very fact that the defendant neither came to the box herself nor called any witness to contradict evidence given on oath against her shows that these facts cannot be denied. What was prima facie against her became conclusive proof by her failure to deny: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 713.

Where in a motor accident claim case the insurance company contended that non-production of the owner of the vehicle and his driver for examination raised an inference that the vehicle at the time of causing the accident was being driven rashly by an unauthorised person, held, the owner had no obligation to examine himself or his driver. If the Tribunal thought that the request to examine those two persons should be allowed after evidence had been closed, a reasonable opportunity should have been extended to the claimants before any adverse inference could be drawn for non-examination: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 51 (D.B.).

Where in a case where the tractor involved in accident was not insured and neither the driver nor the owner of the vehicle chose to come into the witness-box or adduce any other evidence to contest the claim of claimants, held, there was presumption that the vehicle was being driven by the driver for and on behalf of its owner; owner as well as the driver were liable to pay compensation. [1967 Acc.C.J. 150, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 425.

Where accused driver negligently caused an accident and, thus, killed a boy who was on footpath and the driver failed to appear in the witness-box to prove circumstances which would prove that he was not negligent, held, an adverse inference could be drawn for his non-appearance: (1978) 2 Karn.L.J. 197: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 261 (D.B.).

Suit for damages resulting from rash and negligent driving—Driver absconding—No inference can be raised from his non-examination: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 532: A.I.R. 1953 Mad. 981: I.L.R. (1954) Mad. 226.

Where a motor cyclist entering the main road from the side lane and the car going on the main road collided and resulted in the death of the motor cyclist and it required to be determined as to which of the two vehicles was being driven negligently, held, the non-examination of the car driver, though available, by the car owner would justify an adverse inference against the car owner: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 224: (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 1129: (1976) 2 Cut.W.R. 551 (D.B.).

Where a cyclist knocked down by a bus died in the accident and the bus owner did not examine the driver in the motor accident claim case, held, an adverse inference can be drawn against the bus owner: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 213: (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 119 (D.B.).

Where in a case of motor accident claim the nature of the injuries on the claimant was such that the driver would have been the best person to explain how the claimant sustained the injuries but the driver of the vehicle was not examined for explaining the cause of accident, held, it could be safely concluded that on account of negligent driving of the vehicle the claimant sustained the injuries and he was entitled to compensation: A.I.R. 1988 Ori. 229.

Where the deceased, the sole earning member of his family, travelling with wife in the car died in the car's collision with a truck, at Aligarh and the car driver disappeared, held, his non-examination by the claimants residents of Hazaribagh in Bihar, as a witness in the claims case could not justify adverse inference against the claimants; non-production of the car driver was not deliberate but attributable to the severe handicap under which the claimants were functioning: A.I.R. 1983 All. 409 (D.B.).

Where in a motor vehicle accident the car driver died and the bus owner, though contending that the collision was occasioned by the car driver's negligence, did not examine the bus driver without offering any explanation therefor, held, the Court would be justified in drawing an adverse inference against him: A.I.R. 1977 Gau. 31 (F.B.).

Suit for specific performance of contract—Want of notice—Burden initially lies on subsequent purchaser—Burden is light and mere denial is sufficient to discharge burden—Both parties giving evidence—Question is one of appreciation of evidence—Husband of subsequent purchaser deposing about wife's want of knowledge about agreement—This portion not challenged in cross-examination—Initial burden, held, discharged—Importance to her avoidance of witness-box not attached: 1968 B.L.J.R. 28.

S. 16(c) of the Specific Relief Act, 1963 is prohibitory; there can be no specific performance of a contract in favour of a party unless it enters the witness-box to give formal evidence of its being ready and willing to perform his part of the contract and be cross-examined; if he fails to do so, an adverse inference has to be drawn against it: A.I.R. 1983 Mad. 169: (1983) 96 Mad.L.W. 88: (1983) 1 M.L.J. 467 (D.B.).

Where the defendant called upon the plaintiff to pay the amount due on the promissory notes and neither the plaintiff nor his accountant were present at the time of execution of the document and the plaintiff neither examined himself nor his accountant but produced another person who was a witness to the execution of impugned documents, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the plaintiff for his failure to produce himself or his accountant before the Court: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 465.

Non-examination of woman alleged to be married—Inference must be that had she been examined, she could not have supported the plea of her marriage: 1961 M.P.L.J. 244: 1961 Jab.L.J. 547: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 93; A.I.R. 1971 Ori. 49 [Where the plaintiff, first-wife, challenged relationship of another lady and her husband as husband and wife, failed to appear in the Court without any explanation, held, fact of marriage of that lady with her husband was established.]

Since the ground for nullifying a marriage under S. 12(1)(b) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 is the insanity of a spouse at the time of marriage, held, no adverse inference against the wife can be drawn merely because of her failure to come to the Court. Insanity may be curable; but what is crucial is insanity at the time of marriage; her non-appearance in the Court may be a relevant factor but not an indication that she was insane at the time of marriage. [A.I.R. 1970 Bom. 312, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 109: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 448 (D.B.).

57. Non-production of witness.—The question of believing or disbelieving a witness would arise only after examination and a party cannot decline to produce a witness merely on the presumption that the witness, if produced, would be treated as interested: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 192: 1981 Hindu L.R. 362 (D.B.).

Undoubtedly, if a fact (genuineness of a land grant) is satisfactorily proved from evidence on record, held, that fact cannot be taken as disproved merely because other witnesses were not produced; but in the absence of satisfactory proof, the withholding of the most important witness for no valid reason, adverse inference has to be drawn. [A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 2235, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1986 Sikkim 18.

Where a party fails to call as his witness the principal person involved in the transaction who is in a position to give a first-hand account of the matter in controversy and throw light on them and who can refute all the allegations of the other side, it is legitimate to draw adverse inference against the party who has not produced such principal witness: 83 Cal.L.J. 388: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 457.

Failure to call most important witness by party—Adverse inference against party will be drawn: (1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 164: (1966) 1 Comp.L.J. 10: 37 Com. Cas. 256: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 75.

Non-examination of witnesses—Court "may presume" and not "must presume" adversely: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 51; A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 293.

Non-production of witnesses—Presumption: 1957 Cr.L.J. 263 (All.).

Non-examination of witness—Reasons unconvincing—Adverse inference has to be drawn: (1966) 1 An.L.T. 21: (1966) 1 An.W.R. 209. See also (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 102 [Where though the material witness was not examined but his non-examination was explained.]

Non-production of witness who could not have thrown any light upon incidence—No adverse inference can be drawn against party: I.L.R. (1952) Nag. 700: A.I.R. 1953 Nag. 154.

Failure to examine witness—Inference from—A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 18, reversed on another point in A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1034.

No adverse inference could be drawn for non-examination of witness closely related to the opponent: 1982 M.P.W.N. 68; 1982 Jab.L.J. (Note) 2.

Non-examination of material evidence by defendant, held, is to give rise to adverse presumption against the veracity of the case set up by defendant: 1979 Jab.L.J. (Note) 62; (1980) 2 M.P.W.N. 70 [Where the material witness was in the employment of the defendant-State and, thus, could have been conveniently examined by the defendant rather than by the claimants, held, adverse inference could be drawn against the State.]

Where the plaintiffs incurred additional expenses as they were asked to bring sand from other querries by the defendant than that was agreed upon between the parties and the plaintiffs pleaded that the defendant's Executive Engineer assured them that additional cost so incurred by the plaintiffs would be paid but when plaintiffs were not paid said cost they filed a suit for recovery of same and inspite of categoric evidence by the plaintiff, the defendant failed to examine the concerned Executive Engineer, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the defendant: (1993) 2 M.L.J. 228 (D.B.).

Where in a suit for recovery of money, the defendant admitted that the promissory notes were on his letter-pads, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the plaintiff for non-examination of the defendant's accountant who had introduced the parties; in fact such an adverse inference could be drawn against the defendant for not examining the introducer as he was his accountant: (1991-2) 11 Guj.L.H. 65.

Where by an application a party obtained the Court's permission to examine certain witness on commission by answering to interrogatories which it duly filed in the Court but did not get them served, held, the mere fact that she did not get them served and they were not examined is no ground to draw an adverse inference against the party; it is for the party to chose the witnesses it desires to examine: A.I.R. 1972 All. 219 (D.B.).

Where the caveator denied the testamentary capacity of the executor, an 80 years old ailing lady under medical treatment as well as the due execution of the Will and the propounder neither produced doctors then treating her to prove her testamentary capacity and one of the attesting witnesses, his pairokar impleaded as a defendant; an adverse inference under S. 114(g) may well be drawn against the propounder of the Will: A.I.R. 1971 All. 304.

The important requirement of S. 114 (g) is that it should be shown that the party is deliberately withholding the evidence. Thus, where there was nothing on the record to show that the doctor who had treated the petitioner for the injuries she received on account of cruel treatment of the husband and another witness who had informed her father, were available to the petitioner and yet she had not examined them, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against her on this ground alone: (1986) 6 Guj.L.H. 861: (1986-2) 27 Guj.L.R. 1303.

Where in his suit for divorce on the ground of cruelty, the husband failed to examine any of his family members said to have seen the incidents of the wife's cruelty; an adverse inference against him could be properly drawn: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 474 (D.B.).

The party on whom the burden is placed for proving an issue must produce the best evidence. If the best evidence is not produced every presumption can be raised against him from withholding the best evidence. Where husband filed a petition for divorce on the ground of unsoundness of mind of the wife but in support of his case he did not examine any doctor and no doctor from whom the wife was allegedly treated at dispensary nor any doctor who might have treated her at the mental hospital was at all examined and further no prescription either which was prescribed for her treatment was produced or got produced, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the husband: 1980 Hindu L.R. 528 (Del.).

Where the husband seeks divorce on the ground of wife's mental disorder but he neither examines his own parents in support of his allegations nor produced doctors who treated her, in support of his case, held, the Court is entitled to presume everything against the spouse alleging mental disorder of the other: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 486: A.I.R. 1991 Cal. 123: (1991) 1 Cal.H.N. 244: (1991) 1 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 447 (D.B.).

Where a husband filed a petitioner for divorce on the ground that the wife was of unsound mind but he failed to give any definite evidence regarding unsoundness of mind of his wife, held, all adverse presumptions could be drawn against husband's allegation: (1987) 1 Hindu L.R. 19 (P.&H.).

Where the husband sought the declaration of marriage as nullity on the ground that his wife was a lunatic but the father of respondent-wife failed to examine a psychiatrist who opined that she was not suffering from any unsoundness of mind, held, merely because, the respondents did not get the psychiatrist examined, it could not be said that adverse inference against the mental soundness of the respondent wife should be made by the Court: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 545 (D.B.).

Where the divorce was sought on the ground that the wife was suffering from incurable schizophrenia, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the wife for non-examination of her mother; husband has to prove his own case and he cannot succeed on the weakness of the wife's case: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 138: (1982) 2 Cal.L.J. 462: (1981-82) 86 Cal.W.N. 167 (D.B.).

Where a husband seeking dissolution of marriage under S. 13(1)(b) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 on the allegation that the wife had walked out of the matrimonial home in the presence of the husband's Counsel, who was not examined as a witness, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the husband that the wife did not desert but was pushed out of the matrimonial home: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 117: 1984 B.L.J.R. 182 (D.B.).

Where in a matrimonial case filed by the husband for judicial separation on the ground of desertion by the wife, the question was whether the wife left the matrimonial house with the consent or knowledge of the husband's parents and whether an inference adverse to the petitioner could be drawn from his not calling his mother as a witness, (the petitioner's father being away at Tokyo): Held (Per Majority; Subha Rao, J., contra) that when the evidence supporting the story of consent adduced by the wife was rejected, it was not incumbent on the petitioner to adduce the negative evidence of his mother, etc., at the risk of an adverse inference being drawn against him in the event of his not doing so.

Per Subha Rao, J., contra:—When the respondent and her father depose that they took the consent of the petitioner's parents and if the parents of the husband did not choose to come to the witness box to deny it, a Court ordinarily should accept the evidence of the father and the daughter unless their evidence was ex facie unnatural or inherently improbable (which was not, in the instant case): (1964) 66 Bom. L.R. 297: (1965) 1 S.C.A. 310: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 40.

Suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession of land by tenant—Description of land made in plaint different from that in other records—Question whether rent-receipts produced to evince tenancy were in respect of other land not in dispute—Rent receipt-book bearing signatures of various members of defendant's family—None of them coming forward to deny statement of tenant that rent paid was in respect of suit land—Adverse inference must be drawn: 32 Cut.L.T. 478: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 284.

Where in an eviction petition under S. 13(2) (i) of the East Punjab Rent Restriction Act, 1949 on the ground of non-payment of the arrears of rent, the tenant pleaded payment of rent to the landlord's mother supported by receipts issued and thumb-marked by her and attested by the marginal witness examined in defence but the landlord, despite having availed the opportunity to adduce evidence in rebuttal did not examine his mother or the scribe of the receipts, held, the landlord's failure to examine them raised a strong presumption in favour of the receipts being genuine: A.I.R. 1979 P.&H. 154.

In the case of an alienation by a Hindu widow which is impeached, the vendor widow is the best person to depose to the fact if any enquiry was at all made. The vendor not having been examined, adverse inference is bound to be drawn against the defendant: I.L.R. (1958) Cut. 469.

Where seller was not examined to rebut the legal necessity established by the purchaser, held, an adverse inference could be drawn: 1982 M.P.W.N. 68.

Where an agreement sought to be specifically enforced was attested by two witnesses and registered, it was the duty of its propounder to adduce their evidence in Court; on non-examination of the attesting witnesses and the scribe, when they were available, presumption may be raised that if examined they would have gone against the propounder: (1988-2) 102 Mad.L.W. 292 (D.B.).

Where the defendant (vendee) in a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale did not produce two material witnesses named in his list and who could clarify why earnest money of Rs. 500 and two other agreements were not mentioned in the sale deed during their cross-examination on behalf of the plaintiff, held, it can, under the circumstances, be presumed that had the two witnesses been produced, they would not have supported the defendant's version: A.I.R. 1973 Madh. Pra. 224: 1973 M.P.L.J. 830: 1973 Jab.L.J. 559.

Where the vendor of the property to which the declaration of title was sought was not examined as a witness with no explanation therefor, and it was found that no such person could be found at his purported address given in the sale deed and his affidavit, held, the vendor was a fictitious person; no value could be attached to his affidavit: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 294: (1982) 1 Cal.L.J. 256: (1982) 1 Cal.H.N. 206 (D.B.).

Where vendors sold a plot to the plaintiff and another to the defendant vide registered sale deed and the defendant encroached upon the plaintiff's plot and constructed a house whereupon the plaintiff sued him but the defendant contended that the plaintiff had been seeing the construction being raised on the spot and consequently, with full knowledge of this fact he had purchased the plot in dispute, held, the best persons who could depose on the point of estoppel were the vendors and as no efforts were made to summon and examine either of them, an irresistible presumption under S. 114, Illus. (g) could conveniently be raised against defendant to the effect that those persons would not have supported him had any one

Where the plaintiff filed a suit for possession of properties on the ground that the deed of surrender executed by her in favour of her husband's brother was invalid as she was a minor on the date of execution of said document and there were discrepancies and erasures in the documents on which reliance was placed by the plaintiff but the plaintiff failed to examine her father who was an identifying witness to the Deed of Surrender and brother who was conducting and looking after the litigation on her behalf and, further, an application made by her brother went to support the birth extract relied upon by the defendant, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the plaintiff for her said failure: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 658: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 100.

Where land belonging to a temple, too old and to which the public in general had access for worship and performing other religion ceremonies is a public temple even if there is no evidence about the person who had actually endowed it and on the shebait's suit against the unauthorised sale of temple land, neither the executor of the sale deed was produced as witness and the sale deed was registered after 13 years' delay with no explanation therefor, held, adverse inference against non-production of the executor of the sale deed as a witness could be drawn; sale justly set aside: A.I.R. 1983 All. 202.

Where though the donor knew that the donee was claiming title through him, but he did not object to it, held, no adverse inference could be drawn for donor's non-examination: A.I.R. 1979 N.O.C. 65 (Cal.).

Suit by members to set aside compromise entered into by manager of joint Hindu family—Manager though material witness not examined—Adverse inference against plaintiffs can be drawn: 31 Cut.L.T. 1074: A.I.R. 1965 Ori. 13.

Claim of R that he was adopted son of S—R asserting that ceremony of tying turban on him was performed by G—Opponents admitting G was alive but not producing him in evidence—Adverse inference can be drawn: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 529: 1964 Raj.L.W. 168.

Consignment found broken—Inference from non-examination of person booking the consignment not to be drawn: 1966 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 150.

Misconduct proceedings—Failure to examine witness—Adverse inference. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 425: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 254.

If the judgment-debtor who has within his special knowledge certain facts and who is in exclusive possession of the documents, failed to examine himself and withholds the document in his possession, he cannot turn round and say that the decree-holder has not discharged his burden. Thus, where the petitioner judgment-debtor who owned certain immovable properties claimed protection under the T.N. Debt Relief Act, 1980 but he neither disclosed the rents realised from said house properties nor examined himself, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against him and he was not entitled to the benefits under the said Act: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 392.

Where an otherwise not compulsorily registerable document sought to be specifically enforced was claimed to have been executed and registered on a particular date as the panchayat held at that time had directed the executor to do so, a point hotly contested by the opposite party and neither the scribe nor the attesting witnesses were examined by the executing party, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against it for withholding the best evidence: (1986) 2 M.L.J. 470 (D.B.).

Prosecution under S. 583, Calcutta Municipal Act (XXXIII of 1951)—Contention that adverse presumption should be drawn from non-examination by prosecution of officers of Corporation who inspected premises immediately before launching of prosecution—Held, presumption available to Court could not be extended to such limit when Corporation had already examined no less than 8 witnesses from locality including acting Sanitary Officer, doctor, practising Advocate and Officer-in-charge of surrounding properties: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 32 .

58. Non-production of documents.—See A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 335; A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 390. Court will not draw a presumption under S. 114 (g) against a person, for his non-production of a document, where it is not shown that he had withheld this evidence or had any concern in doing away or suppressing the evidence: A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 296: (1958) 60 Bom. L.R. 776: I.L.R. (1959) Bom. 229; (1981) 1 M.P.W.N. 102.

Failure of party to produce document likely to throw light on point of controversy though document in possession of party—Inference is that if he had produced it, it would have gone against his own contention: 1966 B.L.J.R. 808: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 434; 1973 Sim.L.J. 163.

All relevant documents admitted to have been in existence not placed before Court by party concerned—Adverse inference has to be drawn against party: (1964) 1 S.C.A. 593: (1964) 2 S.C.R. 933: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136; 1982 M.P.W.N. 187; 1981 M.P.W.N. 171.

Non-production of important document in possession of party and non-examination of important witness under its control—It is a circumstance against the party: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 158.

Non-production of material document—Adverse presumption: (1956-57) 61 Cal.W.N. 78.

A party to a suit desiring to rely upon certain state of facts should not, relying upon the abstract doctrine of proof, withhold from the Court the written evidence in his possession which would throw light upon the proposition. The opposite party would be entitled to the benefit of adverse presumption arising from such non-production of relevant documents: A.I.R. 1962 Ori. 202.

Documents withheld—Natural inference will be adverse to the case of the party withholding them: 1957 B.L.J.R. 608: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 633.

Relevant document admitted to be in existence not produced—Adverse inference has to be drawn against party: 1969 Raj.L.W. 107: I.L.R. (1968) 18 Raj. 1212; 1978 Jab.L.J. (Note) 78 [Non-filing of sale deed or copy thereof.]

Where a party fails to produce a document in his possession it may be presumed that the recital therein is against him: 1962 Jab.L.J. 220: 1961 M.P.L.J. 410.

The presumption that the Court is expected to make under S. 114 is a permissive presumption in the sense that the Court may in a proper case presume and normally it will do so if it is established that there is a relevant document and that it has been actually withheld without any reason: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 479; I.L.R. (1987) Ker. 3867 [Drawing inference for non-production of relevant document is optional and not obligatory.]

Non-production of documentary evidence in possession of a party to a litigation raises an adverse inference against him, more particularly when the onus of proof of the extent of loss is on such a party: 1965 B.L.J.R. 679: A.I.R. 1965 Pat. 179.

The non-production of certain material documents by the plaintiffs in whose possession these documents are, raises a strong presumption against the plaintiffs: 25 Cut.L.T. 345.

When the burden is on the plaintiff to prove a contract, if any, and he fails to obtain production of the documentary evidence of the contract, no adverse inference can be drawn against defendant on the assumption that he must be possessing a copy of the same: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 645.

The note to Illus. (g) in S. 114 also shows that no presumption should be drawn if a man refuses to produce a document which would bear on a contract of small importance on which he sued but which might also injure the feelings and reputation of his family. The note gives the clue as to how the presumption should be applied, i.e., regard should be had to the facts and circumstances of each case. It is not necessary to follow the procedure of giving a notice for the production of documents under O. 11, C.P. Code or to summon the documents under O. 16, C.P.Code the only important condition is that the party should prove that the document is in existence and is in the possession or custody of the party against whom the adverse inference is sought to be drawn: (1959) 2 An. W.R. 458: A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 101.

It is perfectly open to a party to refrain from producing any document which he considers irrelevant; and if the opposite party is dissatisfied, it is for him to apply for an affidavit of documents and he can so obtain inspection and production of all that appear to him to be relevant and proper. If he fails to do so, neither he nor the Court at his suggestion, is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of such documents: I.L.R. 24 Pat. 541; 25 Cut.L.T. 189: I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 167; A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 331.

Material document not produced by party—Adverse inference can be drawn against him even if initial onus of proof did not lie on him: 1962 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 290.

Plaintiff not filing all documents relevant to case but only some from his possession—

Defendant not calling upon plaintiff to produce documents whose existence was admitted by witnesses of plaintiff—No adverse inference against plaintiff for such non-production of documents can be drawn—But Court can take into consideration in weighing the evidence or any direct inferences from established facts that the documents might have favoured the defendant's case: 1967 S.C.D. 6: 1966 (Supp.) S.C.R. 436: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 256.

Non-production of documents asked for by the Authority—Authority would be entitled to draw inferences as it might think justified: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1815; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 237 [Document not produced inspite of notice to produce.]

Adverse inference may be drawn against a party for its failure to produce the documents in its possession but there must be some evidence on the point which a party wants to prove though it may be open to that party to lend support to that evidence by asking the Court to draw an adverse inference against the party who being in possession of the document does not produce it. In case of non-compliance of the notice to produce the documents, it may be permissible for the party giving notice to adduce secondary evidence of the contents of the same. But in complete absence of such evidence, nothing can be presumed as to the contents of the document: 1974 Raj.L.W. 13.

Where in a suit for the recovery of certain amount, the defendant-State was directed to produce original documents which were in its possession but it failed to produce them even after the lapse of a period of five years, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the defendant on account of the non-production of the original documents which were admittedly important and relevant in the suit: A.I.R. 1994 Raj. 114.

There is no duty on a litigant to produce documents in respect of which parties are not at issue and adverse inference is drawable only where a relevant document which would throw light on a point of controversy is withheld: (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 410.

Party failing to produce documents—Opposite party not calling for the same, nor themselves producing—No adverse inference can be drawn: 93 Cal.L.J. 36: A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 480.

Non-production of relevant documents by person on whom no burden of proof lies—No adverse inference against him: I.L.R. (1969) Cut. 796.

Court is not to draw adverse inference for failure to call for documents in possession of a person not a party to the litigation. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Disting.]: (1971) 2 Cut.W.R. 292.

Even if the burden of proof does not lie on a party but if being in possession of important documents which throw light on the facts in issue and constitutes best evidence, it does not produce them in the Court, held, an adverse inference can be drawn against it; it cannot be allowed to seek shelter behind the abstract doctrine of the burden of proof. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 Mad. 321: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. 248 (D.B.).

It is not possible to draw an adverse inference against a party for non-production of document about whose existence there is no positive finding: (1959) 2 An.W.R. 339: 1959 An.L.T. 799.

Non-production of important document—Presumption—Absence of evidence to show that document was with the party or within its power and that it was withheld from Court—No adverse inference can be drawn: 33 Cut.L.T. 621.

Where the evidence on record did not show that documents not produced in the Court were within the possession or power of a party, held, no adverse inference for their non-production can be raised against that party. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1277, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1972 Pat. 186.

It is well settled that an adverse inference can only be drawn where a document in the possession of a party is not produced before an Authority, but such adverse inference cannot be drawn if the document does not exist or is not in the possession of the party from whom it has been called: 1977 Lab.I.C. 803: 51 F.J.R. 371 (Pat.) (D.B.).

When the Court is of the view that the document in question is not traceable in the office of the company, no presumption can be drawn against the company for its non-production: 1973 Jab.L.J. 1056: 1972 M.P.L.J. 1053.

The mere inability of a party to produce a document when there is a positive explanation that it was lost during the turbulent conditions prevailing in the village where the party was residing, does not give rise to any presumption of fact against him, i.e., the presumption that if produced it would be unfavourable to him: I.L.R. (1951) Hyd. 570: A.I.R. 1952 Hyd. 22.

It does not behove the State Government to keep back even any such document, the production of which may possibly not be in its own interest, yet necessary for a just decision of the case. Withholding of documentary evidence for a litigant, professed and held to be a virtuous, can hardly be said to be desirable. Thus, where the plaintiff instituted a suit for declaration that he was entitled to the salary of a trained graduate teacher from June, 1963, as he had acquired the requisite qualification at that time and he referred to a memo issued by the State Government and addressed to the Accountant General, informing him that graduates, who have passed C.T. examination, would be treated as trained graduate teachers entitled to a certain scale of pay but the State-defendant failed to produce said document and pleaded it to be a "privileged document," held, if there was such a communication, as claimed by the plaintiff and not denied by the State, the document must be in possession of the State. There was no reason or rhyme in claiming any privilege regarding such a document, which merely informed the Accountant General about the scale of pay, which was made payable to a trained graduate teacher. Thus, an adverse inference could be drawn against the State for non-production of said document. [A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 130; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1144, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1987 Madh. Pra. 156.

Non-production of material documents—Defendant not producing receipts which he had taken from plaintiff at the time of each payment—Adverse presumption against defendant justified: A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 148.

In a suit for possession of bakasht lands admittedly belonging to the plaintiff, the defendant setting up raiyati rights in derogation of the rights of landlord to possess must prove it. In such a case it is not possible to raise any adverse presumption against the plaintiff by reason of the non-production of documents such as village papers which if produced would have thrown some light on the question of possession before the date of notification: 1959 B.L.J.R. 107.

Where there is a dispute as to the area actually settled with the defendants, and the receipts given by the plaintiff for the nazarana paid, which would enable the ascertainment of the actual area settled, are not produced by the defendants, it goes to show that the defendants are deliberately keeping them back as they went against them: 1940 R.D. 608: 1941 All.W.R. (Rev.) 95.

Where the fact of A being competent to sell the land to the defendants is specifically denied and put into issue, the defendants are bound to produce the alleged power-of-attorney or to cause it to be produced, and where it is neither produced nor proved, the finding must be that A was not competent to sell the land. But non-production of the power-of-attorney does not necessarily imply that the transfer was fraudulent or collusive.

It may at the most raise a suspicion but suspicion is not enough. Illus. (g) to S. 114 only supports the presumption that A had no power to sell the land and not that the sale deed was fraudulent: A.I.R. 1957 Manipur 25.

Where the certified copy of a Will executed and registered in 1941 in Burma was produced by a party in the Court in India and the question arose as to who had kept back the original, held, it could not be the propounder of the Will who had produced the certified copy, for non-production of the original could not be to her advantage; it could have been kept back only by a party which had been bequeathed the testator's property in Burma and which may get a share in the testator's property left in India if the testator is shown to have died, if the Will is not proved, intestate; an adverse inference, therefore, could be drawn against that party which would benefit from the Will remaining unproved: A.I,R, 1973 Mad. 421: (1972) 2 M.L.J. 508: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 122 (D.B.).

Where the assignees of certain Government land under a patta alleged that it was issued to them before certain year but did not produce the patta in support of their contention, the non-production of pattas which is the best evidence in regard to the year in which the assignment was made, must entail an adverse inference that if these documents had been produced, they would have contradicted the version as given by the plaintiffs: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 450.

Whether or not a permanent tenancy was granted is question of construction of the sanad. Only the sanad could show what interest was granted by it to the defendants. And if the defendants deliberately withhold this document, the Court should make every presumption against them to their disadvantage consistent with the facts. The document if produced would have shown that the tenancy is not permanent: (1966) 1 S.C.A. 323: 1966 S.C.D. 903: (1966) 2 An.L.T. 291: (1966) 1 S.C.W.R. 309: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 629.

Application by landlord under S. 14 of the Delhi Rent Control Act (LIX of 1958) for ejectment of tenant—Plea in appeal by tenant that original notice of demand did not bear signature of person giving such notice on behalf of landlord—Plea not taken in written statement—Original notice in possession of tenant but not produced at the hearing of the case before Rent Controller—Held, the Court will be justified in presuming that had it been produced it would have gone against the contention of the tenant—The mere fact that the main onus to prove the case was on the landlord was immaterial—The appellant-tenant by suppressing the notice in spite of being in possession of the same, cannot be allowed to take advantage of abstract doctrine of the onus of proof: (1963) 65 Punj.L.R. 1019: I.L.R. (1964) 1 Punj. 28.

Where the plaintiff claiming authorisation by other members of the managing committee to give demand notice to tenant did not produce the document, held, adverse inference could be drawn against him: 1979 M.P.L.J. 266: 1979 Jab.L.J. 164.

The landlord sought to evict the company as a tenant and though the tenancy was created in the name of its Managing Director personally but he was not impleaded in the petition. The documents showing that the company was the tenant were not produced by the company. There was no evidence as to the point of time when the tenancy of the managing director was determined or surrendered to the company and the company was not proved to be the tenant when the eviction petition was instituted. Held, no presumption under S. 114(g) could be raised against the company or against the managing director who was not impleaded as a party; the company could not be presumed to be the tenant for keeping back the documents: (1989) 38 Del.L.T. 94.

Where in a proceeding under the Bihar Public Land Encroachment Act, 1956 the alleged encraocher's plea that she was settled on the public land and put in possession by a rent receipt in 1944 was not denied by the State, directly or indirectly, and the receipts were on record, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the alleged encroacher for not having brought on record the deed of settlement: (1990-2) 38 B.L.J.R. 1092.

Where a question arose as to the amount of compensation to be awarded on account of land acquisition by State and the Land Acquisition Officer deposed that he had received a list of tenants from the owners of the disputed shops and that the list contained the rent which was being paid by the tenants but no such document was produced by the State, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the State for non-production of said document: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 81 (D.B.).

Where the mortgagor had pleaded payment of the mortgage money without particulars of the date or time or name of the person having made the payment which, according to the mortgagor was recorded on the back of the mortgage deed, the proof whereof, however, was only hearsay, but the mortgagee did not produce the deed and testified on oath that the deed had been lost and emphatically denied having received the payment, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the mortgagee for non-production of the mortgage deed. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 All. 503.

Where the pre-emptors had, even before the decree, disposed of their co-sharers rights in the lands they desired to pre-empt but alleged that even they had co-ownership rights to sustain the suit but they did not produce the sale deed, held, it was rightly presumed that if the deed was produced, it would have gone against the pre-emptors: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2367.

Where the plaintiff contended that he had the means to pay the consideration stipulated in the agreement to sell and for that purpose he had deposited the required sum in the bank but the defendant did not enquire from the plaintiff either the name of the bank in which he had deposited the amount or whether he had any passbook in respect of the said bank account, nor was the plaintiff called upon to produce the passbook either by the defendant or by the Court, held, in such circumstances no adverse inference could be drawn against the plaintiff for not producing the passbook. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1074.

P alleging existence of contract for payment of goodwill money between him and D—When D possessed account books, he could have produced them to refuse P's plea—D cannot be heard to say, relying on abstract doctrine of onus of proof that it was no part of his duty to produce them unless he was called upon to do so: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 278.

Question whether deceased was regular worker—Non-production of rolls of employees goes against employer: A.I.R. 1961 Ori. 214.

Direction by company Judge to company to produce certain documents—Documents produced and inspection of documents desired by petitioner allowed—Company objecting to further inspection of documents produced—No adverse inference against company can be drawn: (1964) 1 Comp. L.J. 117: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 189.

Winding up of banking company—Settlement of claims of depositors—Question of implied authority by depositor—Onus of proof—Non-production of documents by depositor—Adverse inference: I.L.R. (1962) Cut. 554: A.I.R. 1963 Ori. 42.

In an action for negligence the defendant deliberately failed to produce, in spite of an order of the Court, reports and documents kept by the defendant in its canal office which would have thrown light on the question of negligence of the defendant. Held (Per Sarker and Mudholkar, JJ.), that in the circumstances an adverse inference that the defendant was negligent in the management of the canal arose from the non-production of documents: (1964) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 185: (1964) 8 S.C.R. 273: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 17.

Where plaintiff lodged complaints with Delhi Electric Supply Undertaking that a loose wire was hanging on his staircase and current was running through it but no one paid attention nor the hanging wire was removed and on the fateful day plaintiff's son was electrocuted on coming in contact with said wire and though defendant's own witness admitted that DESU maintained separate complaint register regarding the complaint of a naked hanging wire but neither the said register nor copy of the plaintiff's complaint was produced, held, for the non-production of those material documents an adverse inference could be drawn against the defendants that had those documents, namely, complaint register of hanging wire and the original complaint lodged by the plaintiff, been produced, it would have gone against the defendants and would have falsified defendant's defence that deceased fiddled with electric wire illegally and unauthorisedly: A.I.R. 1995 Del. 164.

Inquiry by management regarding misconduct of workman—Certain document not called for by workman nor any question put to the witness examined on behalf of management as to why the document was not produced—Labour Court was not legally entitled to draw inference against management on account of its non-production: I.L.R. 40 Pat. 163: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 232.

Where the plaintiff had made an unsuccessful attempt to produce an important document at a late stage of the suit, he cannot be said to have suppressed it so as to support an adverse inference against him. Further, it is not obligatory on the Court to draw any such inference if there is other evidence on the basis of which it could come to a decision on the question at issue: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 260.

Where the party desiring to prove due publication of certain notification failed to produce documentary evidence in that regard, held, it could be presumed that such evidence if produced would have been unfavourable to the person withholding it under S. 114, Illus. (g): A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 284: (1981) 83 Bom.L.R. 586: 1982 Mah.L.J. 229.

Where the election of a Sarpanch under the A.P. Gram Panchayats Act, 1964 was impugned on the ground of electors having cast votes in the election of the Sarpanch of another Panchayat and the petitioner, besides not producing any details or evidence of such double voting, merely sent a copy of the election petition to the Block Development Officer of the other Panchayat through Court but the used ballots of the other Panchayat was not sent to the Election Tribunal, held, this furnished no ground to draw any adverse inference against the petitioner under S. 114(g): (1983) 1 An.W.R. 147.

59. Non-production of accounts.—Entries in account books by themselves are not evidence unless acceptable proof thereof is forthcoming. Account books kept in the regular course of business of a transaction is merely a compilation of all the day-to-day dealings, written up in books, vouchers, etc. Hence account books by themselves do not stand on any better footing than a bill or voucher issued in the regular course of business. While books of accounts and bills are distinct and separate they both suffer from the same infirmity that by themselves they do not prove the transaction unless acceptable proof aliunde is forthcoming.

S. 114 of the Evidence Act is a rule of guidance and the presumption arising therein being only a permissive presumption, it is not absolutely obligatory on the part of the Court to draw such a presumption in every case. It gives an option to the Court whether to draw any presumption or not having regard to the other circumstances of the case. Where a suit transaction is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by acceptable evidence of bill books or vouchers, the mere non-production of the account books relating to those transactions cannot compel the Court to draw any adverse inference against the party failing to produce the account books: (1967) 2 M.L.J. 475: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 402: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 203.

In a suit for accounts the non-production of account books by the party who has the custody of them justifies the presumption under S. 114, Illus. (g) of the Evidence Act, that they have been withheld, because, if produced, they would be unfavourable to his case. If he is the plaintiff and is claiming accounts though withholding them, his suit is liable to be dismissed. This principle also applies to a suit for administration. If the defendant in such suit, who is liable to render accounts, withholds the accounts, every presumption should be made against him: A.I.R. 1951 Trav.-Co. 87: 1950 Ker.L.T. 348.

If a defendant either suppresses his accounts or has falsified them, the Court will presume every thing most unfavourable to him consistent with the established facts: A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 152: 65 M.L.J. 558; 11 O.W.N. 880: A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 171; A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 397; A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 816: (1937) 2 M.L.J. 559.

An adverse inference should ordinarily be drawn against a person who does not produce his books irrespective of the burden of proof provided the books are relevant to the question in issue. But where according to the plaintiff's case his books are not relevant, no inference can be drawn against him for non-production of his books. If the defendant thinks that there are entries in them which would help him, it is his duty to call upon the plaintiff to produce the books for his inspection and thereafter to put the entries in evidence: I.L.R. (1951) Nag. 909: 1951 Nag.L.J. 544: A.I.R. 1951 Nag. 347.

Where the non-production of accounts on either side is plausibly explained no inference can be drawn against either one side or the other from that circumstance: 10 O.W.N. 827: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 412. See also I.L.R. (1936) Nag. 142: A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 130 [Non-production of evidence which is not relevant and necessary—Prosecution under S. 408, I.P. Code.]

Accounts and their non-production—Party failing to produce accounts but only giving oral evidence—No attempt made by opposite party to call for accounts would be best evidence, at the most oral evidence may not be acceptable but no adverse inference can be drawn from non-production of accounts: (1967) 1 S.C.R. 153: A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134.

Where the defendant did not produce the account papers which had no bearing with regard to the alleged transaction of agreement of sale with the plaintiff and moreover, the plaintiff did not call for the production of those account papers, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the defendant. [A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1978 Cal. 4 (D.B.).

The failure to produce the books of account entitles the Court in the case sub-judice to raise a presumption that the entries therein relating to partnership were contrary to the plea that the firm was a joint family firm: (1958) 60 Punj.L.R. 235: A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 159: I.L.R. (1958) Punj. 1115.

Party not producing relevant account books, which it is in its power to produce, to falsify other account books alleged by the party to be false is a circumstance that would be taken against it: 1959 B.L.J.R. 769: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 271.

The inference from the non-production of accounts can only be drawn in the light of the other circumstances appearing in the case: 21 Cut.L.T. 322: A.I.R. 1955 Ori. 60.

It cannot be said that the Supreme Court in A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1134 has laid down an invariable or inflexible rule that no adverse inference can be drawn without prior calling for of the evidence either documentary or oral from the custody of the defendant. It has to be decided in each case on its facts to find out whether the evidence is really in the custody of the defendant and in the facts and circumstances there is a clear obligation on the part of the defendant to produce it. Where there exists such an obligation, non-production can very well justify the Court to raise an adverse inference even though such evidence had not been specifically called for by the plaintiff from the defendant: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 200 (D.B.).

Party not producing accounts which he claims to have maintained—Adverse inference could be drawn: (1969) 19 Law Rep. 344 (Mys.); (1971) 2 Mys.L.J. 168; (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 93 [Despite repeated demands party not producing stock register—Held, adverse inference to be drawn.]

If the books of accounts are expected to be in the custody of a person and if that person does not produce those accounts or does not offer an explanation for not producing such accounts, it could be inferred that such accounts, if produced, would not support his case: (1972) 1 M.L.J. 141: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 857 (D.B.).

Non-production of register or account book—Adverse inference: 1957 Pat.L.R. 259.

Non-production of his own accounts by party when called upon to do so—Adverse inference may be drawn against the party: A.I.R. 1965 Ker. 156.

It is not obligatory on the part of the party to produce the documents or account books unless it is directed to do so by the Court at the instance of the other party and it is always optional and not obligatory upon the party to produce the entire evidence in its possession. Further, the consideration of the entirety of the facts and circumstances is a determinative factor though there is no presumption under S. 114(g). Where one of the parties is directed to produce the documents or account books in its possession, held, withholding of or evasion of production of such documents leads to the adverse inference and presumption under S. 114(g). If the party is satisfied that it could non-suit the other party by the very documents or evidence in possession of the other party itself, it is for the party to move in the matter and initiate steps for calling upon the party to produce such documents or account books: (1987) 1 An.L.T. 722.

Where defendants are under a duty to produce their books when summoned or to account for their failure to do so and, if they have done neither, a presumption arises under S. 114, Illus. (g), Evidence Act that the books if produced would have been unfavourable to their case: A.I.R. 1955 Vindh. Pra. 6; I.L.R. (1953) Cut. 343: A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 315; I.L.R. (1957) Punj. 430: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 108.

Where defendant was guilty of withholding of the best evidence on the point in controversy, held, an adverse inference should be drawn by the Court that if the account books and correspondence between the parties had been produced by the defendant, the same would have gone against him. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1988 Del. 332.

Where defendant did not produce books of account in his possession, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against him, though he had not been expressly called upon to do so. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1413, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 N.O.C. 142 (Cal.) (D.B.).

Unless evidence shows that the account books called for but not produced had primary entries relating to the suit transaction, held, no adverse inference can be drawn for their non-production: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 407.

Where a defendant fails to produce his account books before the Court in time, and they are rejected by the Court when produced as having been produced too late, the penalty for this conduct of the defendant is only to deprive the defendant of the benefit of the evidence afforded thereby. But it is not open to the plaintiff who has opposed their production to contend that an adverse inference ought to be drawn against the defendant from their non-production: 1939 Mad.W.N. 841: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 273, followed in A.I.R. 1960 Andh. Pra. 331.

It is a principle of law that if no books of account at all are kept or if they are so kept as to be unintelligible, or if they are destroyed or wrongfully withheld, and an account is directed by a Court, every presumption will be made against the party to whose negligence or misconduct the non-production of proper account is due. If a party has books of accounts in his possession and will not produce them, an account may, nevertheless be arrived at by presuming everything against him: I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 429: A.I.R. 1944 Sind 73.

Where in the course of a trial, the Court is satisfied that a document having an important bearing on the dispute which is pending trial is withheld by a party, an inference adverse to the party withholding the document, that if produced, the document would not support that party's case, may properly arise. But where there is no evidence on the record to show that the document was with the plaintiffs or within their power and that it was withheld from the Court, the Court would refuse to raise an adverse inference against the plaintiffs: (1961) 3 S.C.R. 396: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1277.

Defendant asking plaintiff to produce account books maintained by father of plaintiff, for particular year—Defendant must first establish affirmatively that plaintiff's father maintained accounts in that year—In the absence of such proof no adverse inference can be drawn against plaintiff for their non-production: I.L.R. (1961) Cut. 635.

A pre-requisite to the drawing an adverse inference from the non-production of the account-books is its being established that the plaintiff was maintaining accounts and yet failed to produce them into Court: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 630.

Where there was no evidence that the defendant was in fact in possession of the books of account at the relevant time and that he was suppressing the same with the intention that the plaintiff's case might not find corroboration, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the defendant for non-production of the account books: A.I.R. 1973 Guj. 57.

An adverse inference under S. 114 can be drawn against a party only when such party being in possession of account books suppresses them.

Thus, where plaintiff who was not maintaining any books of account filed a suit on pro-note, held, an adverse inference could not be raised against the plaintiff for his failure to produce the account books: 1982 M.P.L.J. (N.O.C.) 2.

Though the Court can raise an adverse inference against a party withholding evidence available with him but it was necessary to prove that the relevant books were in existence and could be produced. Where plaintiff contended that impugned theatre owed its origin to the joint family resources and an adverse inference should be drawn against the defendant for non-production of account books which would go to establish plaintiff's case, held, if really the plaintiff considered that there were account books or other files which would go to establish his case, it was he who should have taken action and called upon the defendant to produce that relevant document: 1981 Hindu L.R. 686 (Mad.) (D.B.).

Where the Court accepts the reasons given by the plaintiff for non-production of the accounts, the Court cannot draw any adverse inference against the plaintiff for non-production of those documents. Moreover, the presumption is only a piece of evidence but by itself it cannot be relied to defeat the claim of the plaintiff. Where there is positive evidence on the record coupled with the admission by the defendants of the passing of the consideration, no adverse inference can be drawn against the plaintiff for non-production of the documents: I.L.R. (1963) 15 Assam 104: A.I.R. 1963 Assam 41.

Presumption under — Rebuttal — Presumption not rebutted simply because plaintiff suing on negotiable instrument does not produce his account books suo motu: 1963 Ker.L.T. 122.

Where plaintiff who kept account books regularly in the regular course of business, though withheld bill book but produced his rokad, held, no adverse inference could be drawn: (1979) 2 M.P.W.N. 216.

Non-production of accounts admitted to be in his possession by karta of H.U.F.—Does not amount to suppression of accounts—No adverse inference can be drawn on that basis against the karta: A.I.R. 1967 Andh. Pra. 247.

As to presumption from non-production of account books by a company when no explanation for such non-production is given, see (1929) 31 Bom.L.R. 1310: I.L.R. 53 Bom. 192: A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 84; A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 816: (1937) 2 M.L.J. 559; I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 543: 1942 Nag.L.J. 121: A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 39; A.I.R. 1942 Rang. 52; 1946 Pat.W.N. 66: A.I.R. 1946 Pat. 66.

As to presumption from non-production of old account books, see 1936 All.W.R. 547.

For a case in which an unfavourable presumption was drawn for non-production of books, see A.I.R. 1954 Cal. 179. Where the plaintiff failed to produce account books in their possession in order to show whether particular debts were discharged or not, held, that a presumption should be raised against them for non-production of such account books: 1956 Raj.L.W. 366: A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 256.

Where a person fails to produce the accounts in his possession showing the amount of expenses he has incurred which fact is proved by other evidence, one would be justified in presuming from the non-production of such accounts that he was exaggerating the expenses incurred by him; but simply because of this non-production one could not be justified in coming to the conclusion that no expenses had been proved: A.I.R. 1934 All. 71. See also 1936 All.W.R. 547; A.I.R. 1942 Rang. 52; I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 543: A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 39.

Where the defendants alienees had not specifically denied the allegations in the plaint in respect of the extent of the income from the properties, held, that no question of drawing an adverse inference against the plaintiff on account of the non-production of the account books arose in the suit for the relief that the debts incurred by his father were not binding on him: 1956 Nag.L.J. 98: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 744: A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 76. See also A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 194.

Law is well settled that no adverse inference is to be drawn against a party under S. 144, Illus. (g) of the Evidence Act unless in fact the party is in possession of a document and fails to produce it. But in view of the statutory provisions in S. 7(a) of the Orissa Money-lenders Act and R. 11 of the Rules thereunder this contention is not available to a registered money-lender.

Thus, in a suit by registered money-lender on promissory note, the account book would be the best evidence to show whether cash was paid or not and when it is not produced the Court of fact would be entitled to draw an adverse inference under S. 114, Illus. (g) of the Evidence Act, that the account books if produced, would not show an entry regarding the advance of cash under the promissory note in the suit, though the onus of proof regarding non-passing of consideration is on the defendant, and the defendant had not in fact called upon the plaintiff to produce his account books. A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 96, held, overruled by subsequent decisions of P.C. and S.C. decisions: I.L.R. (1965) Cut. 445: 32 Cut.L.T. 194: A.I.R. 1966 Ori. 66.

Suit under Money-lenders Act—Non-production of account books by money-lender in Court—Effect—Suit decreed—Illegal exercise of jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 85.

Where in a suit by a money-lender upon a promissory note, the defendant does not allege any payments towards the loan, but contends that the plaintiff was not his creditor, held, no adverse inference can be drawn against the plaintiff for non-production of account-books, since that would not be of any help to the defendant: I.L.R. (1958) Cut. 45: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 111.

Non-production of the books of account required to be maintained under S. 7, Orissa Money-lenders Act, 1939—A Court is competent to draw adverse inference though it is not mandatory for a Court to do so—Even if an adverse inference was drawable that presumption would be rebutted by the presumption under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 949.

Where a professional money-lender suing on a negotiable instrument pleaded and testified that he had entered the amount advanced in his account books which he could produce within four hours but when his books were summoned, he adopted delaying tactics and did not produce them, held, the plaintiff's case of having advanced the money stood rebutted by the inference drawn against him for deliberate non-production of the account books; rebuttal need not be by direct evidence; it may as well be based on presumptions of law: A.I.R. 1992 Mad. 132: (1991-2) 108 Mad.L.W. 487: (1991) 2 M.L.J. 183.

Where in a money-lender's suit on mortgage, the defendant produced the deed and pleaded discharge but the plaintiff contended that the defendant had fraudulently taken away the deed, but the plaintiff, despite challenge, did not produce his books of account, held, the presumption that the mortgage stood discharged, even if so endorsed by the defendant himself, an adverse inference for non-production of account books was rightly drawn: (1982) 1 Karn.L.J. 45.

Non-production of account books by a registered money-lender in a suit based on promissory note—Defendant completely disowning the transaction—In view of the defence case no prejudice can be said to have been caused by the non-production of the books of accounts—Plaintiff cannot be made to suffer: (1971) 1 Cut.W.R. 949.

Where a suit based on hand-notes was decreed on copious documentary evidence and the presumption under S. 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 as to passing of consideration was available, held, the Court is not bound to draw an adverse inference against the plaintiff for non-production of account books; not being a question of law, it cannot be interfered with in the second appeal: A.I.R. 1986 Pat. 154: 1985 Pat.L.J.R. 126.

In a suit on a promissory note, on proof that the plaintiff-promisee has an account in respect of that transaction and on being called upon to produce it, if he does not produce the same, then only an adverse inference against him can be drawn and not otherwise: 32 Cut.L.T. 994: I.L.R. (1966) Cut. 598.

Suit on pro-note—Allegation by creditor, of payment by debtor— Failure to produce tippan book in which all payments were admitted by creditor to have been entered, would raise adverse presumption against him: A.I.R. 1960 Mys. 220.

Where defendants alleged that hundi was executed fictitiously in order to help the plaintiff but they failed to produce the account books, held, a presumption could be raised against the defendants that if they had been produced, an entry of said loan would have been found in the account books: A.I.R. 1983 All. 54.

Where the defendant stated that with respect to the hundis which he had pledged with the bank, he had maintained account showing the amount lent to various persons who had executed hundies and the amount received from them, but he failed to produce the account books, held, in order to show that he had not collected any amount from the drawers of the hundies pledged with the bank, the best evidence would have been to produce the account books or to examine the drawers. From the fact that he had withheld the account books, the only inference that could be drawn was that if he had produced the account books they would have gone against his interest: A.I.R. 1971 Mys. 156: (1970) 2 Mys.L.J. 577 (D.B.).

A plaintiff who says that he had sold certain goods to the defendant and that a promissory note was executed as consideration for the goods and that he is in possession of the relevant account books to show that he was in possession of the goods sold and that the sale was effected for a particular consideration, held, should produce the said account books, for he is in possession of the same and when such a relevant evidence is withheld by the plaintiff, S. 114 enables the Court to draw a presumption to the effect that, if produced, the said accounts would be unfavourable to the plaintiff: (1987) 100 Mad. L.W. 925.

In a suit for money due on sale of goods, the Court is justified in not drawing an adverse inference under S. 114 against the plaintiff for non-production of account-books when it finds that the bill books produced by the plaintiff in evidence are genuine and not got up for the occasion and they have the proved dealings and transactions in question. S. 114, being a rule of guidance, the presumption arising therein being a permissive presumption, it is not absolutely obligatory on the part of the Court to draw such presumption in every case where account-books are not produced. When other evidence which is equivalent to or which can be characterised as substitute for account-books is available for the Court to come to a reasonable conclusion thereat, it could do so.

Books of account and bills are distinct and both suffer the same infirmity, namely, they do not prove by themselves.

When the plaintiff has admitted in his evidence that he has account-books but has not produced them and the defendant in his cross-examination does not put to him a specific question to the effect that the account books if produced would not find the suit transactions, neither he nor the Court at his suggestion is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of the account books: (1967) 2 M.L.J. 475: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 402: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 203.

Where serious allegations of collusion between the Medical Officer and the plaintiff claiming price for the heavy spurt of drugs supplied by it to the State in utter disregard of departmental circulars, the plaintiff assessed to income and sales tax and maintaining regular account books did not produce the same in the Court and the suit was decreed on the basis of indents, part payments, acknowledgments and extracts from accounts, held, the trial Court should have drawn an adverse inference against the plaintiff; decree set aside and the suit remanded: (1993) 2 Kam.L.J. 164 (D.B.).

Mere payment by cheque is not a prima facie evidence of advancing loan because the cheque is deemed to have been issued on consideration. However, it is necessary to remember that it is not an irrebuttable presumption of law. It is permissible in law to show by other evidence that the cheque issued was not to extinguish the existing debt but it was for the money lent. Thus, where the defendant admitted receipt of money under cheques but pleaded that payment through the cheques was towards the contract work done by him to the plaintiff which was specifically denied by the plaintiff and as the defendant failed to produce the accounts and a copy of the bills pertaining to the contract work claimed to have been maintained by him, held, the presumption stood rebutted and an adverse inference had to be drawn against the defendant that if the defendant had produced the records as averred by him, the same would have gone against him: A.I.R. 1992 Karn. 347: (1992) 2 Karn.L.J. 659.

Suit for damages for wrongful dishonour of cheque—Bank withholding account books and other record—Inference that the documents if produced would go against bank and would show that the drawer had sufficient funds would be proper—Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, S. 31: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 306.

In a suit for partition the plaintiff had not relied at the trial stage on certain account books in the possession of defendant for showing that the business was joint family business. Nor had he taken any steps for their production by the defendant. In an appeal against the dismissal of his suit it was contended by the plaintiff that an adverse inference should be drawn against the defendant for his failure to produce the document at the trial stage.

Held, that it was not open to the plaintiff to make use of the position arising out of non-production of the books particularly when they were irrelevant to the case: 25 Cut.L.T. 189: I.L.R. (1959) Cut. 167.

Whenever there is the best evidence available, oral evidence cannot be a substitute for the same. Where in a suit for eviction, the petitioner, partners of a firm, contended that as their jewellery business had diminished due to promulgation of Gold Control Order they required the impugned premises for starting a new business but no account books were placed before the Court to substantiate said claim, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against them for withholding the best evidence available to them: A.I.R. 1971 Mys. 227: (1971) 1 Mys.L.J. 322.

In a suit for eviction on the ground of subletting, the tenant and the alleged sub-tenant failed to produce their account books and ledgers despite a notice by the landlady, held, an adverse inference could be drawn as to had the account books and ledgers been produced, they would have shown that rent was received by the tenants from the sub-tenant: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 865: (1989) 1 S.C.C. 556.

Where in a case for recovery of rent from sub-lessee, the plaintiff lessee failed to produce account books for previous years but he contended that he maintained accounts wherein entries regarding payment of rent were made and he categorically said that he could produce the account books, held, an adverse inference could only be drawn against a person who did not produce or offer to produce. So it was the defendant's duty to call upon the plaintiff to produce when he offered to do so. No inference could be drawn against the plaintiff for non-production of his account books: A.I.R. 1989 Del. 184: 1989 Rajdhani L.R. 83.

Where in a suit for realisation of the arrears of rent, the tenant contended that the impugned payment of Rs. 400 was partly towards the consideration and partly towards interest and though the defendant was maintaining regular books of accounts he failed to produce them before the Court, held, such account books being the best evidence, an adverse inference could be drawn for non production of such books: A.I.R. 1977 Ori. 76: I.L.R. (1977) Cut. 263.

Where in a suit for compensation on account of requisition of the property of the appellant, though the appellant maintained account books in respect of construction and repairs to the building but he failed to produce the same, held, an adverse inference could be drawn for non-production of such account books. [A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 39, Foll.; A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 352, Affirmed]: A.I.R. 1977 S.C. 638: (1977) 1 S.C.C. 592.

The plaintiff had placed an order with the defendant for supply of certain goods. In a suit for damages suffered by the plaintiff as a result of inferior quality of the goods supplied, the defendant repudiated his liability on the ground that he was merely acting as a commission agent and as such was not liable. The defendant, however, did not produce the order for supply of goods or his account books in evidence which would have clearly shown the capacity in which he had entered into the contract. Held, that in the circumstances, an adverse inference that the defendant was acting as the vendor and not as a commission agent could be drawn: I.L.R. 40 Pat. 950: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 407.

The Forest Department had executed a contract to sell forest produce and the contractor paid consideration thereunder in instalments. But subsequently, he sued for recovery of said amount minus the profits earned by him on the plea of the contract being invalid for non-compliance of the requirements of Art. 299(1) of the Constitution of India but to prove the profits earned by him, he did not produce the primary evidence of the katcha account books maintained by him but produced pucca books to which the katcha accounts had been transferred, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against him for non-production of katcha account books: A.I.R. 1973 Madh. Pra. 274: 1973 M.P.L.J. 286: 1973 Jab.L.J. 479 (D.B.).

Where the surveyor had deposed that the land was a forest but kept back his survey report without any reason or explanation therefor, held, an adverse inference for concealment of the document could be drawn against the party putting him into the witness box: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 389 (D.B.).

Where the respondent claimed ownership of certain land on the basis of a gift deed which was registered on 23-8-1951 though it was executed on 2-1-1951 and the petition-writer who scribed the gift deed did not produce his register of documents required to be maintained by him under the rules, held, the register of the petition-writer was not a document maintained or in the possession of the plaintiffs; they were not responsible for its non-production, so no presumption could be raised against them for failure of its production by the petition-writer; at best non-production could affect the value of evidence of the petition-writer: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2177.

Where the question is whether a particular person at a particular place where he was alleged to have made a certain statement and the account books of that person are relevant only to show that he was at that place, then a failure on the part of such person to produce them may entitle the Court to draw an adverse inference that he was at that place when the statement was alleged to have been made by him, but it would not justify an inference that he made the statement attributed to him. That must be proved by other evidence: I.L.R. (1954) Nag. 126: 1954 Nag. L.J. 262: A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 236.

Where the plaintiff contended that he withdrew money from the bank and advanced to deceased promissor but he failed to produce his pass book in support of his stand, held, an adverse inference under S. 114, Illus. (g) could be drawn against the plaintiff for non-production of pass book: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 702.

Accused charged under S. 408, I.P.Code—Contention that period during which the offence was alleged to be committed exceeded one year—Complainant not producing account books and papers relating to the offence though in his possession—Held, it was a legitimate inference that if they had been produced, they would not have supported the allegation made in complaint that defalcations covered a period of only one year: A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 132: 35 Cr.L.J. 693: 15 Pat.L.T. 647: 148 I.C. 519.

Defendant not producing accounts—Court can draw inference that if produced they would go against defendant—Documents from Registers of temple property—Tops of documents containing title of register appearing to be deliberately torn—Inference adverse to defendant held could reasonably be drawn from surrounding circumstances: (1970) 2 S.C.A. 143: (1970) 2 S.C.R. 275: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 2025.

Material documentary evidence (Bahikhata) deliberately withheld by party from Court in spite of opportunity to produce same—It may well be presumed that entries contained therein are against that party: A.I.R. 1964 Him. Pra. 5.

Ledger account opened at instance of defendant—Prima facie relevant to ascertain liability of defendant—Non-production of credit memo book by plaintiff: A.I.R. 1965 Assam 10.

Where the insurer neither pleaded its liability to be limited by statute nor did it produce the copy of the insurance policy to substantiate its contention, held, the Tribunal could properly draw an adverse inference against the insurer and direct it to pay the entire compensation awarded to the claimant in respect of the accident: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 54 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Where Official Liquidator sought to recover certain amount on behalf of a company from respondents and it was claimed that account of the respondent to whom appellant company owed certain sum was adjusted against the account of his father, who in turn owed money to the company and, thus, no amount was due in favour of the company but the respondents did not summon the books of the company and though respondent son had accounts with the company he failed to produce pass books in support of his argument, held, plea of discharge pleaded by respondents was unacceptable. [A.I.R. 1948 Mad. 171 and A.I.R. 1958 Ker. 124, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 245: (1981) 1 Karn.L.J. 35.

Where other documentary evidence like attendance registers of employees and servants for several years was produced but not for 1970 when admittedly such a register existed, held, the non-production of that register being not of material assistance in the facts and circumstances of the case, it was not incumbent on the Court to raise adverse presumption against party in possession of the register; there is no compulsive element in S. 114(g) to draw an adverse inference against the party whenever or wherever it fails to produce the document; the discretion to draw or not to draw the inference lies with the Court: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 98 (D.B.).

Where a claim for bonus is being investigated by the Industrial Tribunal and the workmen upon whom the onus lies to establish their claim do not give any evidence in support of their claim, the mere non-production of the balance-sheet by the company even though called upon to do so, would not justify the raising of presumption under S. 114, Illus. (g), Evidence Act. Even if the company has stated that there was no financial inability to pay the claim that does not necessarily mean that it had an available surplus or that the available surplus amounted to whatever was claimed: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 500.

Where Hindu sons bring a suit to declare that certain alienations effected by their father of family properties, and certain decrees obtained by creditors against him are not binding on themselves or on the joint family properties, alleging that there was enormous income from the properties held by their father and that there was no necessity for incurring loans for the family, they ought to produce the account books to prove the income and expenditure. But when they deliberately suppress the account books whose existence is proved by their own witnesses, the Court is justified in concluding that those account books, if produced in Court, would not support the case of the plaintiffs. Though the onus of proving the binding nature of the alienations and of the decrees is on the alienees and the creditor, the onus shifts on to the plaintiffs on account of the presumption arising against them on account of omission to produce the accounts in their possession. No party should be allowed to take advantage of an abstract doctrine, viz., burden of proof, and conceal from the Court the evidence which is shown to be in his possession and which would assist the Court in arriving at a correct decision: I.L.R. (1946) Nag. 844: 1947 Nag.L.J. 86: A.I.R. 1947 Nag. 129.

Where in a suit for damages for infringement of copyright, even after a notice, the defendant fails to produce his account books, there is a fair presumption that the account books have been deliberately suppressed by the defendants in order to conceal the actual profits realised by the sale of the books and the Court is entitled to assume that the entire stock of copies of books published had been sold by the defendants and the sale proceeds appropriated by them: I.L.R. 55 All. 564: 1933 All.L.J. 791: A.I.R. 1933 All. 474.

60. Non-production of other evidence.— When the plaintiffs have failed to produce evidence they may not be permitted to rely on a presumption under S. 114 in place of the evidence that they could produce: I.L.R. (1957) 9 Assam 1: A.I.R. 1959 Assam 98; (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 5; (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 157.

Drawing an adverse presumption for non-production of available evidence, held, is not obligatory; it is always optional, depending upon the entirety of the facts and circumstances in each case: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2299.

Non-production of a record by the parties or for affective adjudication and the averments since not traversed, the Court can draw an adverse inference against the party who had duty to produce: (1991) 1 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 354; (1978) 2 M.P.W.N. 324 [Non-filing of khasra entries]; 1979 Jab.L.J (Note) 41 [Villager not filing prescription of his treatment taken during his illness.]

Non-production of evidence—Held, that in the absence of any reliable proof that a notice was actually issued to the District Magistrate no adverse inference could be drawn against him on the ground of non-production of such notice: 25 Cut.L.T. 169.

Where the defendant did not deliberately withheld the plans submitted by it to the Municipality from the Court, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the defendant: A.I.R. 1976 Cal. 182 (D.B.).

If a party in whose possession best evidence is available fails, despite the Court's direction or demand from the opposite party to produce the same, the Court may conclude that had such evidence been produced it would have gone against the person who had suppressed it and an adverse inference can be drawn against that person. But where there was only a casual statement by the landlord that he had made entries in diary in respect of rent and the diary was not the basis of the suit and neither there was any order to produce the diary nor the tenant had demanded the same, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the landlord for non-production of said diary: A.I.R. 1991 All. 226: 1991 All.L.J. 549: (1991) 17 All.L.R. 463: 1991 All.W.C. 436.

Where a question arose regarding the rate of rent and the landlady failed to produce a rent-note which was in her possession tho-ugh there was sufficient evidence on record about rate of rent, held, presumption under S. 114, Illus. (g) could not be attracted: A.I.R. 1985 All. 178: (1985) 11 All.L.R. 213.

Where tenant alleged the existence of an oral agreement between him and the landlady and brother of landlady stated that he instructed the tenant to remit the amount by money order and the tenant did not state in the money order coupon that the amount sent therein related to the negotiations and the receipt was not produced, held, non-production of money order coupon could not lead to drawing of an adverse inference about existence of oral lease between the parties: A.I.R. 1991 Andh. Pra. 47: (1990) 2 An.W.R. 300.

Where the tenant's liability to be evicted under S. 3(1)(c) of the U.P (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 depended upon whether the ice candy plant was installed in the demised premises before or after a particular date and the tenant admittedly in possession of the receipts for purchase of the plant did not produce those receipts, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the tenant that the receipts, if produced, would have gone in favour of the landlord. [A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 136, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 All. 582.

Where in a suit for eviction, the plaintiff landlord contended that the defendants had caused permanent damage to the pillars in the premises in occupation of the defendants as they had reduced thickness of the pillars and that an adverse inference could be drawn against the defendants for their failure to get a carpenter and have the show cases removed to make it possible for the Commissioner to find out the extent of the damage which had resulted from the chopping off of two inches of thickness of the wooden pillars in the walls, held, the plaintiff had no personal knowledge about the cutting of the pillars. There was no other evidence of any person whatsoever to show that the pillars had been cut. In the absence of any evidence of the pillars having been cut, the alleged refusal on the part of the defendants could not have been made the basis for drawing any adverse inference against the defendants: (1984) 1 Bom.C.R. 546: 1984 Mah.L.J. 228.

Where an "unauthorised occupant" sought to be evicted from public land for a public purpose was served a show cause notice under S. 3(1) of the U.P. Land (Eviction and Recovery of Rent and Damages) Act but in the consequent eviction proceedings he contended that the grounds mentioned therein did not comply with the requirements set out in S. 3(2)(a) of that Act but without producing the notice, held, it could properly be presumed that the grounds specified in the notice were in accord with the requirement of law: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1303: 1979 All.L.J. 714.

It is being well established that the findings of a criminal Court are of no assistance in civil Courts; thus, where the insurer, in a motor accident compensation case, contended that the driver had no licence to drive the vehicle and relied upon a finding in the criminal Court judgment in respect of the same accident, held, the burden of proof was not discharged; it was for the insurer to take appropriate steps to compel the driver to produce his driving licence; and, upon his failure to comply, the Court could draw an adverse inference against the opposite parties: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 320.

Where workman of a bank claimed to have worked for more than 240 days in a period of 12 months but the bank failed to produce record, held, inference had to be drawn that workman's case was true: 1985 Lab.I.C. 1733 (S.C.).

Omission to produce evidence—Adverse inference not decided by trial Court—Appellate Court's power to decide: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 92.

Where purchaser rejected goods of the supplier on the ground that on inspection the impugned goods were found defective by the Textile Committee but he did not produce the official record of Textile Committee, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the purchaser for his alleged failure to produce the record: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 151 (Del.).

When best evidence is available to prove the case of a party in a suit, if such a party fails to produce such evidence without sufficient reasons then an adverse inference has to be drawn against them. Thus, where the party failed to place a copy of the marriage register maintained by the temple to support its plea of valid marriage, held, non-production of the copy without sufficient explanation enabled the Court to draw an adverse inference against them: (1989-2) 104 Mad.L.W. 197 (D.B.).

Where a husband sued for divorce on the ground of his wife's cruelty had testified that the milk bottles were several times found broken including once in 1976 and was asked in cross-examination as to why did he remember the incident of 1976 which was disallowed on his Advocate's objection, held, it must be taken as the husband's own refusal or failure to give the reply: it tantamount to failure to produce evidence meriting an adverse inference against the husband under S.114 (g); since remanding the case to the trial Court for recording the husband's reply would be of no use—he might meanwhile cook up a harmless reply, the drawing of the adverse inference is the only alternative left: (1989) 1 Bom. C.R. 156.

Where a question arose as to whether the plaintiffs were the owners of that portion of land upon which the defendants had constructed the hotel building, and witness for plaintiff admitted that the plaintiff had got record of the property of the private estate and all the properties of the private estate were mentioned in that record but the plaintiff failed to produce such record, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the plaintiff that had such record been produced it would not have supported the plaintiff's case: A.I.R. 1994 Sikkim 6 (D.B.).

A presumption as to coparcenary property can be raised only if the land is found standing jointly in the name of the two brothers in the first settlement because no previous record is available. No such presumption can be raised from the entries in the subsequent settlement or the jamabandi. Where the respondent contended that the suit property was coparcenary property and in support of said claim the entries in jamabandi were relied upon although more than fifty years record prior thereto was in existence which could positively show whether the disputed land had devolved on the two brothers from their father or not, held, non-production of the earlier record itself gave rise to the strong presumption against the ancestral nature of the property: 1983 Rev.L.R. 482 (P.&H.).

Where the sale of a house built on the allotted land of the vendor was impugned by his surviving family members on the ground that the land was allotted not merely to the allottee but also to his family members who had also contributed funds for the construction, held, it was for the vendee who did not cross-examine the vendor's witnesses on these points to prove the patta and the allotment order to show the conditions of allotment which the vendee, claiming to be a purchaser from the late vendor for valuable consideration, as he must have received all such documents: A.I.R. 1994 Gau. 99.

Where in a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family challenging an alienation made by the manager for the discharge of certain alleged debts, proof about the non-existence and the non-payment of those debts is in possession of the joint family of which the plaintiff is a member, he cannot be allowed to take advantage of the abstract doctrine as to the onus of proof and conceal from the Court the evidence which should have been in his possession and which would assist the Court in arriving at a correct decision: A.I.R. 1950 East Punj. 272.

Where to support the minority of the appellant on material date scholar's register, opinion of civil surgeon and statement on oath supported by evidence of his elder brother were produced but horoscope or kutumb register were not shown, held, an adverse inference under S. 114, Illus. (g) could be drawn only if it was established that the appellant was in possession of those documents and he deliberately failed to produce them. [A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1277, Rel. on]: A.I.R 1977 All. 319: (1977) 3 All.L.R. 272: 1977 All.W.C. 217.

Non-production of a file by the authority having custody thereof raises an inference that if produced it would have spoken against the Government: 1975 Lab.I.C. 774 (J.&K.).

The confidential reports submitted by the Life Insurance Corporation's medical examiners in respect of the health of the insured are accepted as true; the ordinary presumption is that they had examined the proposers carefully and thoroughly in accordance with the questionnaire unless the Corporation establishes that the medical examiner had prepared a false record or the insured had fraudulently suppressed the material facts about his health of which he was aware: A.I.R. 1971 Andh. Pra. 41 (D.B.).

A statutory notice under S. 34(1)(a) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 presupposes that the Income-tax Officer had reason to believe, which could only be based on sufficient material before him, and not a mere vague feeling, and that reason could be presumed to exist; but where despite the assessee's demand during assessment as well as the writ proceedings, the Income-tax Officer's report to the Central Board of Revenue was not produced and in the writ proceedings the Department stated on affidavit that the report was missing from the Board's file and no explanation was offered for non-production of its copy in the Income-tax Officer's file, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against the Department. [(1969) 2 I.T.J. 238 (Del.), Affirmed; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 730; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2451, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 478: (1974) 3 S.C.C. 581: (1974) 3 S.C.R. 102.

Claim for damages for non-delivery of goods—Starting point of limitation—Onus—Non-production of evidence—Presumption under S. 114(g), Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 362.

Goods carried at owner's risk—Damages to goods in transit—Suit for damages—Evidence to show how goods are dealt with in course of transit—Burden of proof: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 147.

Breach of contract—Date when damages became due—Suit for damages for non-delivery of cotton seed produced in one season in defendant's mill—Date of performance of contract postponed till date of breach by defendant's own conduct—Plaintiff held entitled to damages on the basis of price on date of each—Total production of cotton seed in that season—Court held entitled to accept plaintiff's estimate and draw adverse presumption against defendant for his failure to produce best evidence—Clause in agreement inserted after its execution—No proof of acceptance by party put in disadvantage—Effect: 1964 M.P.L.J. 848: 1962 Jab.L.J. 646: A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 197.

R's claim that he was adopted son of S—Question if tying turban ceremony was done on R—Claim of opponents that "Thikana", record should have been produced—Practice of noting down in "Thikana", name of person on whose head turban is tied, not shown—Adverse inference is not justified: I.L.R. (1965) 15 Raj. 529: 1965 Raj.L.W. 168.

61. Refusal to submit to medical examination.—Where a party refuses to submit to a medical examination in a case where the whole case depends on the state of his mind and body, it is open to the Court to draw an adverse inference or presumption against the recalcitrant party. Thus, where in a divorce petition on the ground of unsoundness of mind of the husband, he failed to go to the Mental Hospital for his examination, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against him for such refusal. [A I R 1963 Guj. 250, Rel. on]: A.I.R 1972 P.&H. 270.

Where the wife in a petition for divorce on the ground of insanity under S. 13(1)(iii) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 did not have money for her medical examination to ascertain the extent and magnitude of her mental disorder and the husband did not carry out his obligation to bear the expenses therefor, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against her for her failure or inability to adduce medical evidence: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 330 (Madh. Pra.).

Where in a divorce petition under S. 13 (1) (iii) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 on the ground that the wife was suffering from schizophrenia, though she had already been medically examined twice but the husband contended that as the wife was reluctant for another medical examination an adverse inference could be drawn against her, held, the Hindu Marriage Act does not compel the wife to subject herself to repeated medical examination, so there was no question of drawing any adverse inference. [A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 1 (S.B.), Disting.]: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 138 (D.B).

Where defendant-husband contended that the marriage between him and the plaintiff was really consummated and, therefore, the latter could not claim dissolution of marriage under the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act, 1939 and the defendant filed a petition for the examination of the plaintiff by a doctor to ascertain whether she was virgo intacta but she refused to submit herself to such an examination, held, merely because the plaintiff did not agree to a medical examination by a doctor adverse inference could not be drawn as the result of such an examination would not be sufficient to unerringly establish that she was not a virgo intacta.[A.I.R. 1950 Lah. 45, Rel. on]: (1988) 2 Hindu L.R. 775 (Ker.).

Where in a divorce case under S.19 (1) of the Divorce Act, 1869 on the ground of the wife's impotency, the husband testified that the wife had persistently exhibited an invincible repugnance to consumate the marriage and the wife refused to be examined by a Court-appointed medical expert, held, an unfavourable inference against the wife could be properly drawn; the husband's positive evidence of her impotency could be taken as true. [A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 459, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 1: (1970-71) 75 Cal.W.N. 168 (S.B.).

Impotency of wife—Ground of complaint in a suit—Prior examination by a medical practitioner—Refusal to be re-examined pending suit—Adverse inference—Permissible. See A.I.R. 1952 Sau. 44.

Where the party against whom charges of impotency were made refused to submit to a requisite medical examination, held, an adverse inference against that party could be drawn. [A.I.R. 1977 P.&H. 97; A.I.R. 1966 All. 150, Rel. on]: 1994 Mah.L.J. 1513 (D.B.); (1991) 2 Hindu L.R. 233 (P.&H.).

Where in a petition for nullity of marriage by husband on the ground of impotency of wife, the wife refused to submit herself to cross-examination when asked to at the end of cross-examination and the husband failed to make any application and obtaining an order to get the wife medically examined, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the wife for her alleged refusal to submit herself to medical examination: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 252 (Ker.). See also note 92, infra.

62. Income.—(See also S. 106, Note 15). Where in a suit for maintenance, inspite of the order of the Court, the defendant-husband failed to produce documents regarding his income and further he also failed to file an affidavit that he was not in possession of any such documents, held, an adverse inference could be drawn against him to the effect that if the said documents were produced, they would go against him: A.I.R. 1985 Guj. 187: (1985-1) 26 Guj.L.R. 374: (1985) 2 Hindu L.R. 29; A.I.R. 1987 Raj. 159: (1987) 1 Raj.L.R. 481: 1987 Raj.L.W. 363: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 267.

63. Election record.—Corrupt practice—Publication or distribution of certain leaflets—Non-production of leaflets—No adverse inference can be drawn against production: I.L.R. 38 Pat. 1007: A.I.R. 1961 Pat. 41.

Where in an election petition respondent denied that he or his party had printed a certain pamphlet containing false allegations against the petitioner and distributed them at meeting and his witnesses admitted in their evidence that the party and its officers maintained proceedings of work done such as printing and publishing of leaflets, holding of meetings, etc., held, the respondent in view of the evidence of his witnesses should have proved his denial by producing the proceeding in evidence. When the respondent failed to produce them the Election Tribunal was justified in drawing an adverse inference against him: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 228.

Where in an election petition a witness testified that he had printed the offending leaflet against another candidate as per the returned candidate's letter received through the returned candidate's election agent and though there was a ring of truth in that testimony, the returned candidate chose not to contradict it by the evidence of his election agent, held, it could be presumed that the election agent, if examined, would not have supported the returned candidate: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 2169.

Where a handbill purportedly got printed at a press mentioned therein by one Aziz was denied immediately by the press as having been printed by it and no steps were taken during the trial of an election petition to summon the original matter from the printer or the printer itself, held, the repudiation by the press did not explain the want of proper steps at the right time and negligence or wilful default at the trial by the election petitioner; the adverse inference must be drawn against the petitioner for non-production of evidence: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 960: (1984) 3 S.C.C. 346.

Where the appellant-election petitioner could not contest the election as his nomination papers were rejected by the returning officer on the ground of late presentation of nomination papers whereas the appellant contended that his nomination papers were presented within time but he failed to produce, serial number of the nomination paper, the name of the candidate, the name of the constituency, the date and time of presentation of the nomination paper and the date and time fixed for its scrutiny held, non-production of that receipt by the appellant could be taken as a circumstance against him and it could be concluded that the nomination papers were filed after the expiry of the time prescribed for them: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 701: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 713: (1980) 2 S.C.R. 501.

Where the election petition alleged that voters were threatened with divine displeasure at a meeting but neither the material witness nor the notes of the meeting were produced in the trial Court, held, adverse inference was rightly drawn against the petitioner: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1957: (1972) 1 S.C.C. 826: (1972) 3 S.C.R. 955.

Where in an election petition, the petitioner placed reliance on record-of-rights for proof of his caste and religion but did not produce the same, though it was with him, held, the record-of-rights undoubtedly was an important document to prove his caste and religion, but the same had been withheld from the Court for which adverse inference had to be drawn against him: A.I.R. 1986 Ori. 255.

Where in an election petition against the successful Sarpanch of a gram panchayat, a party summoned "used ballot papers" from the Block Development Officer who only remitted the counterfoils and not the used ballot papers, held, no adverse inference against the party summoning the used ballot papers could be drawn for their non-production; it was for the Court to enforce their production if it found them to be necessary: (1983) 1 An.W. R. 147.

64. Non-production of evidence by Railways.—The initial burden lies on the Railway Administration to show that it took the requisite care as a bailee of the goods under S. 151 of the Indian Contract Act. Where, therefore, in a case relating to compensation arising out of loss of two consignment of cotton due to fire in the wagon, the Railway Administration produced witnesses to show that every effort was made to quell fire but did not produce primary evidence in the form of records maintained by the Railway Administration which would have thrown sufficient light on the question involved, held, primary evidence having thus been withheld, it is open to the Court to draw a presumption adversely against the Railways under S. 114 (g): A.I.R. 1971 All. 531: 1971 All.L.J. 116 (D.B.)

Where Railways did not produce tranship-ment register despite demand and the manner of handling consignment during transit was also not furnished, held, adverse inference may be dawn against Railways: (1981) 2 M.P. W.N. 55.

When goods are carried at the Railway risk, the special facts and circumstances under which the consignment was handled are only known to the Railway Administration, and, therefore, it is for them to place that material before the Court for forming its opinion on the question whether it had taken as much care of the goods as is required of them. Non-production of record by Railway Administration justifies the raising of an adverse inference against them: A.I.R. 1971 Madh. Pra. 131. See A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 59.

Where in a suit against a Railway for compensation for non-delivery, the unloading register maintained by the Railways and which would throw light on the question whether the goods were not received by the Railways, is not produced by the Railways an adverse inference has to be drawn against the Railways: I.L.R. (1955) Mys. 444: A.I.R. 1955 Mys. 123.

Consignments delivered to a Railway, may have to travel on Railways of two or three different Administrations. There are numerous cases in which goods are lost or damaged. There are cases also in which goods go astray. They may deviate from the course and may not be traced for years. In these circumstances, it is not safe to presume that a particular consignment was received intact, first by the E.I. Railway, then it was handed over intact by the E.I. Railway to the East Bengal Railway, and then brought by the East Bengal Railway to the Assam Railway: I.L.R. (1957) 9 Assam 1: A.I.R. 1959 Assam 98.

Goods accepted for carriage—Nature of duty of the Railways—Proof of care taken by it—Mere fact that rain water entered the wagon and caused damage—Held would not fix liability on Railways. [A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 59; A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 157; A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 173, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1970 Madh. Pra. 55.

Loss of goods consigned to Railways—Presumption. See I.L.R. (1957) 9 Assam 1: A.I.R. 1959 Assam 98.

Where S.W. pipes consigned at Railways risk rates delivered at the destination were found to be partly damaged but the Railways denied their liability to pay damages in view of S. 77-C of the Railways Act, 1890, held, that defence was not available to the Railways as it had not adduced the documentary evidence as to how the goods under their control were dealt with; an adverse inference has to be drawn against the Railways for suppression of material evidence: A.I.R. 1980 Andh. Pra. 78.

Damage or deterioration of goods in transit—Goods sent at owner's risk rate—Still in order to prove negligence or misconduct of Railways the plaintiff may call upon Railway Administration to produce evidence and if it does not produce it Court may infer that if evidence was produced it would have gone against the defendant: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 133.

Suit for compensation for non-delivery of part of goods consigned and delivery of the rest in damaged condition—Railways, in spite of Courts direction not producing relevant papers and correspondence which would be of assistance in deciding the question whether the Railway Administration had knowledge of the claim for damages within the period of limitation—Held, that the presumption was against the Railways and that it was to be assumed that the claim came to their knowledge within the period of limitation: A.I.R. 1955 Assam 221.

Consignment booked at owner's risk rate—Damages to goods in transit—Responsibility of Railways—Negligence on the part of Railway Administration or its servant must be proved—Disclosure as to how consignment was dealt with in course of transit—Railways not bound to disclose where Cls. (a) and (b) of S. 74-D are not applicable—No disclosure sought for by plaintiff—Adverse inference cannot be drawn against Railways: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 182: 1969 Pat.L.J.R. 399: 1969 B.L.J.R. 871.

Consignment sent under risk note Z—Non-delivery—Suit for damages—Duty of Railway to disclose how consignment was dealt with in transit—Extent of—Failure to make full disclosure—Effect of—Plaintiff when required to prove misconduct: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1755.

Suit for damages for loss of goods against delivery by Railway—Burden is on plaintiff to prove loss on its lines—Request for production of documents relating to the goods in possession of defendant-Railways—Non-production—Presumption under S. 114 (g), Evidence Act arise—For ends of justice case remanded for such production: 1963 Ker.L.T. 444.

Suit for damages for non-delivery of part of consignment—Consignor alleging negligence on part of Railways and calling for handbooks of Watch and Ward Department at certain stations—Handbooks not produced in spite of Court's notice—Held, that though the non-production of the handbooks, was susceptible in law to an adverse inference against the Railway Administration on the facts of the case there was no scope for drawing that inference: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 147.

Goods booked under Railway risk—Liability of Railway Administration—Loss of goods—Onus of proof. See A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 190. Risk note B—Non-disclosure of information contemplated by risk note prior to filing of suit—Presumption—If can be raised: See 1956 An.W.R. 994.

Where silver bars consigned through the Railways after declaration of the contents and their value were not delivered at the destination and the risk note exempted the Railways from liability for loss, destruction or deterioration of the consignment, held, the Railways was bound under the law to disclose how the consignment was dealt with at different stages, being within its special knowledge: on its failure to make such disclosure, an adverse inference could be drawn against the Railways as the Railways had pleaded that the consignment had been delivered through the misconduct of its servants to a third party without production of the railway receipt; Railways is liable for the loss: A.I.R. 1975 Cal. 203 (D.B.)

Where cotton unloaded on the platform was not removed to the shed and was damaged by fire within the transit period and the Railways denied negligence by ascribing it to sheer accident and pleaded having taken fire-extinguishing measures when fire had almost spread to all the bales, held, the three essential ingredients of the maxim res ipsa loquitur were satisfied, and read with S.114 (g), the Railways were liable for the loss: for the liability rested on them to prove that they were not negligent: the facts being within their special knowledge, the burden of proof lay upon them: (1977) 90 Mad. L.W. 438.

Where the newly cleared goods of the consignee was stacked on the platform outside the shed with his consent due to non-availability of the space inside the shed as the consignee's other goods were already lying there and the consignee had posted his own watchman to guard his goods and the consignee had been asked more than once to take delivery of the goods, held, for any damage caused to such goods by fire, the railway could not be made liable: A.I.R. 1981 Mad. 162: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 7.

Where goods in the course of transshipment from the narrow to the broadguage by the Railways caught fire and were destroyed and the Railways did neither produce the departmental enquiry held by it to ascertain the cause of fire nor any witness to depose that it had exercised all reasonable care and caution in dealing with the goods, the onus whereof lay on it, held, not having discharged the onus, the Railways was liable to compensate for the loss of goods: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 53: (1970) 83 Mad. L.W. 251: (1970) 2 M.L.J. 212 (D.B.)

Where the consignment of fresh plantains took four days to arrive at the destination as against the normal time of three days, held, it is for the Railways to prove, that being within its special knowledge, as to how and in what circumstances the consignment took one extra day; upon the Railways' failure to do so, the Court could properly raise an adverse inference against the Railways.[A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 147, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Del. 236: I.L.R. (1976) 1 Del. 436:1976 Rajdhani L.R. 278.

Where a consignment of mangoes took 13 days instead of the usual 5/6 days to arrive at the destination and the mangoes were thereby damaged, and the Railways attributed the delay to the guards strike but the evidence showed that the strike was no cause of delay and the Railways had no explanation for delay, held, the damage was occasioned by the Railway's negligence. [A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 337; A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 190, Foll.; A.I.R. 1951 Assam 173, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 347.

65. Illustration (g)—Illustrative cases.—Discretionary and mandatory part of statute—Obligation to summon witness under mandatory part—Court if can rely on presumption under S. 114, Illus. (g), Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1958 All. 439: 1958 Cr.L.J. 716.

As it is a well established rule of evidence that a party should put to each of its opponent's witness so much of his case as concerns that particular witness, held, if no such questions are put, the Courts presume that the witness account has been accepted: A.I.R. 1992 P.&H. 252.

Adverse inference—Parties filing affidavits but not obtaining orders for discovery of documents against each other—Adverse inference against both parties would destroy inference against each—No adverse inference drawn: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 279.

Affidavit filed in support of application—Duty of other party to challenge correctness of allegations in affidavit—Other party merely stating that allegations were untrue—Not sufficient—Allegations not contested—Presumption: 1962 All.L.J. 495: A.I.R. 1962 All. 407.

The presumption of adverse inference cannot displace the contrary inference supported by adequate evidence: (1962) 1 M.L.J. 193: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 219.

Adverse inference—Duty of Court or quasi judicial body to produce record called for—Failure to comply entitles Court to draw adverse inference: 1970 Lab.I.C. 506 (J.&K.).

Where the High Court had drawn adverse inference against the appellants for non-examination of material witness and for non-production of some documents (which might and ought to have been produced by them) and for the absence of any attempt on their part in that behalf and this was done by it notwithstanding the fact that the Tribunal chose not to do so, being of the opinion that it was unnecessary, held, that what the High Court had done was amply justified in the circumstances of the case: A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 92: 20 E.L.R. 325.

Machines alleged identical or deceptively similar—Alleger not allowing inspection of machines—Adverse inference can be correctly drawn: (1964-65) 69 Cal.W.N. 947: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 417.

Official maps generally unobtainable—Government producing most of the maps relied upon—Maps directed to be kept on record for inspection of parties—No suppression of evidence and no adverse inference can be drawn: A.I.R. 1965 Cal. 282.

Determination of paternity between parties—Party refusing to give blood—Adverse inference cannot be drawn: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 388.

Allegations of insolvency denied by company—Company failing to disclose assets and liabilities—Presumption of commercial insolvency if can be raised: (1967) 1 Comp.L.J. 172 (Cal.).

Where a Vigilance Inspector employed in the Railways sued for recovery of rent deducted from his pay being illegal on the ground that as per Railway Board letter quarters allotted to the anti-corruption staff were rent free but neither the letter nor proof of its contents nor any other material on record showed that the plaintiff's post was equivalent to the posts covered under the Board letter, held, no presumption could be raised in respect of any of these points: 1974 Lab.I.C. 604.

Export of moist iron ore—Unilateral assessment after delay of two years—Levy of duty—Analysis report of Government though obtained by Custom Authorities, no copies thereof submitted to the exporter—Non-supply of copy amounts to violation of principles of natural justice—Refusal of Custom Authorities to produce report in Court—Adverse inference is to be drawn against Authority that, if produced, it would be against Authorities: 1983 Tax. L.R. 2164 (Goa).

Where a party failed to prove that he had the necessary funds to purchase the property benami, the burden of proof necessarily lay upon him, he cannot ask the Court to draw an adverse inference against the benamidar on the latter's failure to appear in the witness box to prove the source of the consideration paid for the property; in a litigation it is only when there is a necessary prevarication or statutory obligation to give evidence that a party is expected to do so: A.I.R. 1975 Mad.95: (1975) 1 M.L.J. 47 (D.B.).

Where mortgagee who continued in possession of the impugned property contended that he had purchased the property at an auction sale conducted by the Collector and thereby he became the owner but the best evidence, namely, the notification to conduct sale for arrears, the sale proceedings and the certificate of sale were not placed on record, held, an adverse inference could be drawn that the mortgagee was not the owner of the property in question: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 2009.

Where the respondent-wife failed to file reply to the application made by the appellant-husband for recission of the decree or judicial separation granted in her favour, but the parties led their evidence and, therefore, had full opportunity, held, no adverse inference could be drawn against the wife for her alleged failure to file reply to the petition made by her husband: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 160 (Madh. Pra.).

Where a complaint against an Ex-Chief Minister alleging corruption was quashed by the High Court in writ petition filed by the accused on the ground that no written statement was filed by the State Government in reply to the writ petition, held, no adverse inference could be drawn on the mere non-filing of a written statement by the State when the matter related to serious disputed facts, yet to be investigated. [(1990) 8 Punj.L.R. & S. 62, Reversed]: A.I.R 1992 S.C. 604: 1992 Cr. L.J. 527.

Where S. 102 (2) of the Punjab Gram Panchayat Act, 1953 admittedly provided for only one enquiry into embezzlement charges against the Sarpanch but a second enquiry was instituted after the first enquiry officer had exonerated him on the basis of evidence, and the Sarpanch further contended that he was not furnished copy of the exonerating order, despite application, and the Government also choose to keep back that order from the writ Court, held, a presumption could properly be raised that the order, if produced, would have gone against the Government; second enquiry struck down as incompetent. [1971 Punj.L.J. 456; 1972 Punj.L.J. 353, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1991 P.&H. 23.

Where the accused charged with bribery alleged that complainant thrust the currency notes into his pocket against his will but against which he had not protested or preferred any complaint about such assault and further without offering any explanation of facts and circumstances appearing against him merely remained content with false denials, such a conduct of the accused could not be taken to indicate his innocence. More so, when the accused was not an ignorant or helpless man, but a Government servant possessing considerable self-confidence and intelligence.

False denials of an accused person can be considered in arriving at an adverse inference against him, although by themselves and individually, like mere silence of an accused person, they cannot have a very damaging effect. However, it is not correct to say that silence of the accused cannot at all be taken as a corroborative circumstance. The decree of weight to be attached to the silence of the accused depends on the nature of each case: 1968 Cr.L.J. 391 (All.).

Where the trial Court and the High Court in appeal concurrently found that the cheque book, out of which a cheque for Rs. 50,000 had been encashed, was neither entrusted to, nor stolen by, the accused which left the only possible alternative of the cheque having been drawn and signed and given by the complainant himself to the accused, held, the High Court could not have set aside his acquittal and convict him under S. 471 of the Indian Penal Code even if the explanation offered by the accused was not convincing; no adverse inference against the accused could be drawn; conviction set aside: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1506.

Board of Directors empowered to make loans by means of resolution—Whether there was such resolution—Burden is on company and not on lender—Non-production of book of resolution—Inference is against company: A.I.R. 1967 Cal. 75.

Land acquisition proceedings—Affidavits—Proposed acquisition impugned as in colourable exercise of power—Respondent is required to disclose relevant material: (1966-67) 71 Cal.W.N. 499.

Income or capital—Burden of proof and shifting of onus—It is for the Revenue in the first instance to establish that particular receipt is income liable to tax—Burden shifts on to assessee when sufficient evidence either direct or circumstantial is disclosed by Revenue—Assessee failing to put before Department material in his exclusive possession—Adverse inference can be drawn against assessee: (1966) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 134: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1325.

66. Refusal to answer.—Presumption from refusal to take oath. See 2 C.L.R. 476; I.L.R. 22 Bom. 680. Persons accused of an offence may not have a very satisfactory explanation to offer for the circumstance in which they were found and they may prefer to say nothing. One cannot in all cases draw an adverse inference from the fact that the persons accused refused to give their account of what happened: A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 516.

Illustration* (i)

67. Document in obligor's possession.—Where the mortgagor has produced the mortgage-deed with the stamps punched in the ordinary way, such production would raise a presumption that it had been paid up, but it would not help to prove that it had been paid before a particular date: 144 I.C. 175: A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 61 (2). [I.L.R. 29 Cal. 344 (P.C.), Rel. on]. Presumption of discharge of mortgage arising from the mortgagor's possession of the mortgage bond when rebutted: A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 561: 53 M.L.J. 205 (P.C.); 103 I.C. 481; 121 I.C. 730. Strength of presumption: 29 Nag.L.R. 298: A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 379.

Where the mortgagee sued for possession of the mortgaged property in a mortgage with conditional sale proving for redemption within 1 year and where despite averment to the contrary in the deed, the possession remained with the mortgagor who had also the original deed with him, held, the mortgagee's remedy was not a suit for possession but for redemption; presumption under S. 114 (i) is available to the mortgagor; the suit for possession would lie only after the suit for redemption has been decreed: A.I.R. 1988 Guj. 110. See also 1978 Jab.L.J. (Note) 63.

Though the Court may presume that when a document creating an obligation in the hands of the obligor is produced by him into the Court, the obligation has been discharged; but the Court at the same time can have regard to the other facts to find out whether the said maxim applies or not; the Court is not bound to draw the presumption straightway; if it finds that the document has come into the possession of the obligor, in suspicious circumstances or he might have stolen it, the Court may refuse to draw the presumption. The initial burden of proof of discharge is on the defendant; it can be discharged by proof of payment. Where the evidence of both the sides is not satisfactory, the Court may resort to the presumption, but where the evidence of the plaintiff is more convincing than that of the defendants, the Court must decide on its appraisal, and not on the presumption: (1973) 2 An.W.R. 21.

Where the mortgagee of a registered mortgage deed endorsed on its back that he had received the principal but given up the interest accrued and delivered the deed to the mortgagor, held, the endorsement on the back of the deed, unregistered, was inadmissible both for want of registration as well as under S. 92, proviso (4). S. 114 is also of no help; the deed being in possession of the mortgagor merely raises a presumption which may be rebutted; it does not prove that the deed had been fully satisfied. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 153, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 794; A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 636; A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 170; A.I.R. 1930 All. 721 (F.B.) held not good law in view of A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 153]: A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 298: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 248: (1977) 1 M.L.J. 528.

Presumption in other cases

68. Accident.—(See also Note 56, supra and Note 93, infra). Rash and negligent driving in accident—Presumption of negligence: A.I.R. 1968 Madh. Pra. 47.

Maximum—Res ipsa loquitur—Principle underlying the maxim: I.L.R. (1962) Bom. 797: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 144.

Direct nexus between death of person and rash and negligent act of accused is essential—Evidence on record showing that accused had been seen driving for about six months to a year and that he had driven jeep to various places a day previous to occurrence accused having only a learner's licence—Held, on the basis of facts found accused could not have been held guilty under S. 304-A—There was no presumption in law that a person who possessed only a learner's licence or possessed no licence at all did not know driving: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1013: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 829; 1971 Ker.L.T. 761.

The general rule under the Act is that the burden of proving negligence in a case of accident lies on the party who alleges it but that party is certainly entitled to take advantage of presumptions to lighten that burden. Such presumptions as laid down in S. 4 are of three types: (i) permissive presumptions or presumptions of fact; (ii) compelling presumptions or presumptions of law (rebuttable); and (iii) irrebuttable presumptions of law or "conclusive proof" "Presumptions of facts" are inferences of certain fact patterns drawn from common experience and observation, constitution of human mind, springs of human action, usages and habits of society and ordinary course of human affairs. S. 114, a general section, deals with presumptions of this kind. The Court is not bound to draw a presumption of facts; it has to exercise its discretion in each case. Thus, even in an action in torts, if the defendant adduces no rebutting evidence but offers reasonable explanation, equally consistent with the presence as well as absence of negligence, the presumptions or inferences based on res ipsa loquitur will cease to exist; the burden of proving the affirmative, will still lie with the plaintiff; and it will be for the Court to determine at the time of judgment whether the proven or undisputed facts, as a whole, disclosed negligence: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 1848: (1979) 2 Karn. L.J.(S.N.) 73.

When a Motor Vehicle Accident Claim Tribunal is confronted with the vexed controversy of apportioning blame, amongst the two vehicles involved in the accident, it is clearly the duty of both parties to place before it the best evidence available. A party may refrain from doing so, but only on peril of an adverse inference being drawn against it. [A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 224, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 347.

Neither the high speed nor the non-blowing of horn on a road where it is prohibited by traffic rules nor the knocking down or causing the death by accident by themselves, held, justify raising presumption of rashness and negligence on the part of the vehicle driver; there must be acceptable evidence of rash and negligent driving but also that it was the proximate and direct cause of death in a prosecution under S. 304-A of the Indian Penal Code. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 829, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Bom. 164: (1970) 72 Bom. L.R. 492: 1970 Mah. L.J. 763.

Where a motor accident was not occasioned by the collision of two vehicles but involved only a single vehicle and the plea of sudden failure of lights in the foggy weather was not established, held, the maxim res ipsa loquitur was attracted; the negligence of the driver can be presumed; the judgment may be based thereupon: A.I.R. 1994 N.O.C. 308 (Him. Pra.) (D.B.).

When an accident was caused because of a fit of epilepsy suffered by the driver of a Himachal Road Transport Corporation bus and the defence "res ipsa loquitur" and "inevitable accident" was set up by the Corporation and it was found that the driver was employed hardly about 19 or 20 days earlier on production of medical fitness certificate issued by the Chief Medical Officer and, thus, the Corporation could not be attributed the knowledge of the driver's ailment prior to his employment though he was subsequently terminated for that illness, held, the Corporation's defence was not established; it neither placed on record the driver's driving license nor his medical fitness certificate; the burden upon the Corporation being heavy it was under an obligation to bring on record of its having taken all due care, as a prudent employer, to ensure that it was entrusting the bus carrying passengers to a person who was capable in all respects to drive it, especially when the driver had attributed the accident to his being over-worked and disclaimed being an epileptic: A.I.R. 1991 Him. Pra. 73.

Where a claim petition under S. 110-A of the Motor Vehicles Act did not disclose the full facts and circumstances resulting in the accident and the injuries, held, such intentional non-disclosure would enable the Court to draw an adverse inference against the petitioner: A.I.R. 1982 Him. Pra. 50: 1982 Sim.L.C. 24.

Where the vehicle involved in the accident was driven by the driver in employment of the vehicle owners and there was no evidence to show that he had taken the vehicle in an unauthorised manner, held, the driver would be presumed to be driving the vehicle in the course of his employment: A.I.R. 1982 Him. Pra. 89: 1982 Sim.L.C. 185.

Where an insurer in a motor accident claim case insists that its liability is limited to the statutory limits set out in S. 95 (2)(b) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, held, it is for the insurer to produce the policy and show that its liability is not unlimited. [(1988) 1 S.C.C. 626, Rel. on]: (1989-1) 37 B.L.J.R. 230; A.I.R. 1987 Ori. 18: (1986) 1 Ori.L.R. 554 [Non-production of the policy has always been held to be a circumstance to draw adverse inference against the insurer.]

Where in a claim case arising out of a motor accident neither the owner of the vehicle nor his Counsel was asked in writing to produce the permit, held, no adverse inference against the owner could be drawn for non-production of such permit: A.I.R. 1995 Andh. Pra. 268.

69. Accounts.—(See also Note 17, Ss. 101-104, supra). The words of S. 114 are general and there is no reason why a Court should not invoke the aid of that section in proper cases and raise a presumption as to the genuineness of old accounts even when they are unsigned if they come from proper custody and appear to have been kept regularly regard being had to the common course of private business: (1943) 45 Punj.L.R. 441: A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 58.

Where the entry in account books supports rather than rebuts the contention of the party producing the books that the payment of the amount was made on the date of the entry and not on the previous night, there is no reason why in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the Court should assume the payment to have been made on a previous night and entered next morning under that date. The payment must be held to have been made on the date on which it was entered: I.L.R. (1958) Andh. Pra. 844: A.I.R. 1959 Andh. Pra. 103: (1958) 2 An.W.R. 556.

Entries made in the regularly maintained account books of a nationalised company which have also been proved by its accountant, held, are perfectly reliable evidence: A.I.R. 1985 Ker. 262 (D.B.).

Regularity of accounts—Money-lender's accounts—No presumption that they are fabricated: (1958) 1 M.L.J. 93.

Question of fact—Relevancy and sufficiency of evidence—Account book, entries in—Absence of evidence regarding account books being kept in course of business and the entries being made at the time of transaction—Rejection of evidence in first appeal—Finding cannot be interfered with in second appeal: I.L.R. (1963) 13 Raj. 1137: A.I.R. 1964 Raj. 88.

Where the claim of being in exclusive possession of a property was based on entries in the revenue records but none of the witnesses had accepted the responsibility of testifying to the correctness of the account books of the joint family and no other important documents were produced in support of the account books, held, the account books were liable to be rejected: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1269: (1989) 2 S.C.C. 630: (1989-2) 30 Guj. L.R. 1051.

Where in a suit for recovery on an agreement of sale, the Court found several discrepancies in the evidence and account books and several erasures and over-writings in the purchase register produced by the defendant but not connected with suit transaction, held, the suit could not be decreed on such suspicious circumstances; the plaintiff must discharge the primary burden of proving his case: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 280 (Cal.).

70. Adoption.—(See also Note 19, Ss. 101-104, supra). Proof of adoption—Onus—Lapse of long period—Presumption arises as to its regularity: 1960 M.P.L.J. 424.

A registered adoption deed raises a presumption of valid adoption. This presumption is rebuttable, no doubt, but not by mere conjectures or discrepancies in evidence of little or no consequence; it is the totality of the circumstances and the evidence on record that must be taken into account and weighed in deciding whether such presumption stands rebutted: A.I.R. 1990 P.&H. 220: (1989) 2 Rev.L.R. 270: (1989) 2 Hindu L.R. 199.

The presumption of the validity of the adoption of a Hindu made long back where the family had recognised him as the adopted son may be raised but where the adoption is not old and its validity is challenged on the ground of the adopting father and the natural mother being within prohibited degree, no such presumption is permissible; on facts, the adoption of the brother's daughter's son is not invalid; the bar of the rule extends only to the adoption of (i) the daughter's son (ii) the sister's son and (iii) the mother's sister's son. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 351; A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 356; A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 693; I.L.R. 32 Bom. 619, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 233; A.I.R. 1963 All. 509, no longer good law]: A.I.R. 1985 Raj. 55.

After a long lapse of years, it is likely that eye witness evidence of adoption may not be available and become difficult to find, thus, if the party alleging adoption adduces some evidence of the factum of adoption it may be regarded as sufficient to shift the burden on the opposite party; in cases of old adoption, a presumption of validity of the adoption is naturally drawn from the status of the adopted son in the adopting family and its recognition by the family members over the years: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 40: 1976 Raj. L.W. 14: 1975 W.L.N. 931.

S. 6 of the Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956 enacts a special provision that the Court shall presume, whenever a registered document purportedly recording an adoption and signed by the persons giving and taking the child in adoption, is produced before it that the adoption has been made in compliance with the Act unless and until it is disproved. On the proof of the three basic conditions, the mandatory presumption must be raised; and it would relate to the factum and validity of the adoption: 1982 Hindu L.R. 36 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

Adoption—Recognition of adopted person by members of family for over fifty years—Strong presumption arises in favour of its validity: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1359.

Adoption ceremonies—Persons enjoying status of adopted son for nearly 50 years—Presumption: I.L.R. (1938) Lah. 173: A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 626.

Adoption—Recitals in unregistered document 30 years old executed by S containing statement that he went in adoption—Document coming from proper custody—Must be presumed to have been executed by S: A.I.R. 1968 Andh. Pra. 276.

If a custom of adopting a married male having children in the community of "khateeka" is proved to prevail for a period of 20 to 30 years, it follows that it was ancient, certain and reasonable and it is for the other side who challenges its existence to lead evidence to the contrary. Thus, the evidence of instances of the duration of 18 to 35 years of adoptions of married males having children in the community of "khateeka" in a certain place is sufficient to prove that this custom was ancient and was also in existence when the adoption in question took place. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 605, Foll.]: 1981 Raj. L.W. 61.

Where it was not established that the plaintiff was given and taken in adoption and the deed of adoption was also not signed by the plaintiff's father, held, no presumption in respect of registered documents relating to adoption under S. 16 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act, 1956 could be raised: A.I.R. 1984 All. 44: 1983 All. W.C. 995; 1979 All. W.C. 564.

71. Adultery.—(See also Note 20, Ss. 101-104, supra). Where the charge of adultery was founded upon abortion undergone by the wife when the spouses were living together but the husband pleaded no sexual intercourse between them at the relevant time, held, there being access and ample opportunity for intercourse, a strong inference of cohabitation between them would arise which a mere denial by the husband could not dispel: A.I.R. 1984 P.&H. 99: 1983 Hindu L.R. 513.

Appreciation of evidence—A man and a married woman, both villagers, found talking in field—Inference of illicit connection when can be drawn: 1967 All.W.R. (H.C.) 352.

Adultery—Proof of: (1958) 2 W.L.R. 110.

Accusation of adultery—Establishment of—Evidence by spouse—Corroboration necessary—Statements of adulteress recorded in Government Maternity Home and Rescue Home registers can be used for corroboration: (1964) 2 Cr.L.J. 685: A.I.R. 1964 Mys. 280.

Where in divorce proceedings, the husband alleged adultery against his wife and stated that the wife was caught while having sexual intercourse with respondent on April 4, 1985 in his parents' house and that parents of the wife were called and apprised of the alleged misdeeds of the wife and they assured that if given a chance, she would mend her ways and the parties lived happily till the middle of May, 1985 when the wife left for her parents' house, held, the fact that the parties lived together gave rise to a strong presumption of condonation by the husband A.I.R. 1993 P.&H. 33.

Where a suit is filed under S. 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by the wife, generally the opposite party puts in a show cause stating his ground for his refusal to maintain the wife. Even if it is assumed that the opposite party does not take a particular ground viz., that of adultery in his show cause, he should at least in his cross-examination elicit or give out what his defence is so that the other side is not taken by surprise when adducing witnesses to prove that the wife is living in adultery. Thus, where in the cross-examination of the witnesses, there was not even a suggestion that the wife was living in adultery but the defence witnesses were examined to prove that the wife used to live in adultery held, as this came as a surprise to the wife, no reliance could be placed on such vague and cryptic allegation of adultery: 1984 Hindu L.R. 790 (Cal.).

72. Adverse possession.—(See also Note 22, Ss. 101-104, supra). Law is firmly established that a person basing his title on adverse possession must show by clear and unequivocal evidence that his possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to the denial of his title; the animus of the pro-pounder of the adverse possession is the most crucial factor: A.I.R. 1986 Mad. 106: (1985) 98 Mad. L.W. 606 (D.B.)

The classical requirements of adverse possession must be nec vi clam nec precario; that is, such possession must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent; it must be overt and without any attempt at concealment so that the real owner with due diligence may know as to what was happening: A.I.R. 1986 Mad. 106: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. 606 (D.B.).

Adverse possession, though commenced in the wrong and aimed against the right, is not shameful; the plea is permitted with the laudable intention of giving quietus to long possession; that is the reason that the Code of Civil Procedure requires a party suing for eviction or possession to prima facie show the suit to be in time: A.I.R. 1986 Mad. 106: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. 606 (D.B.).

Permissive possession does not become hostile till its assertion is brought to the knowledge of the owner; the permissive possession need not be proved by direct evidence but can be inferred from attendant circumstances; where possession is permissive in its inception it cannot become hostile to its grantor: A.I.R. 1986 Mad. 106: (1985)98 Mad. L.W. 606 (D.B.).

There is an essential distinction between adverse possession qua a stranger and a co-owner; in the case of a stranger, adverse possession is open, visible and notorious and an owner failing to notice it does so at his own peril; on the other hand the possession of a co-owner is presumed to be on behalf of all co-owners due to the unity of their title and possession, the proof of the co-owner's adverse possession should be more than his mere exclusive possession and receipt of income; besides exclusive possession he must also establish the other co-owner's ouster besides a hostile and open denial and repudiation of the latter's right to his knowledge; however, in both the cases it is not necessary to show that such adverse possession was actually brought to the knowledge of the ousted owner or co-owner: (1972) 85 Mad. L.W. 596: A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 467 (D.B.).

Where there was uninterrupted possession and enjoyment of the suit premises by the defendant and there was absence of any protest or demand by the plaintiff for a long time extending over a period of more than fifty years, held, there arose a presumption of title in favour of the occupiers: A.I.R. 1981 J.&K. 57.

A plea of benami and adverse possession in the alternative is not permissible; plea of adverse possession would lack the animus possidendi: A.I.R. 1992 Karn. 270: (1991) 3 Karn. L.J. 258.

Possession—Adverse possession—Elements—Possession for over statutory period—Evidence and proof—Presumptions and probabilities cannot be substituted: (1962) 1 An.L.T. 494: A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 518.

Where evidence of adverse possession over a bund was a stray instance of the sale of two neem trees about 25 years ago but no evidence worth the name as to who constructed the bund, held, it could not be deemed a reasonably proximate period backwards to justify the presumption of adverse possession. [A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 605, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 Mys. 339.

73. Age.—(See also Note 39, supra). Matriculation Certificate—No presumption about correctness of age, there is no presumption in law about the correctness of the age mentioned in the Matriculation Certificate in preference to other relevant records: 1969 All.Cr.R. 41: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 41.

74. Assessment.—Every Court or judicial Tribunal may presume the existence of facts having regard to normal course of human conduct and public and private business. S. 114 of the Evidence Act recognises this principle. Although the Evidence Act does not apply to proceedings in Income-tax Act, the rule enunciated is of universal application, and the Tribunal can raise such presumptions as are normal in the circumstances.

Where the explanation of the assessee has been found not only to be not proved but to be an after thought, unsatisfactory and unreasonable, held, it is open to draw the conclusion that the receipt is from undisclosed source: (1972) 2 I.T.J. 212 (All.) (D.B.).

Though rule of estoppel is not applicable to the assessment proceedings, but the fact that the assessee included the income of certain premises in his returns for several years, held, is a circumstance, in the absence of any satisfactory explanation, which the taxing authorities are entitled to take into consideration: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2439: 1971 U.J. (S.C.) 872.

Question whether particular payment is revenue expenditure or not is mixed question of law and fact—No question of law is raised by refusal to draw inference: (1966) 1 I.T.J. 195 (All.).

Proof as to income—Inference from expenditure of tenant: A.I.R. 1968 J.&K. 59.

Claim for depreciation—Dispute as to—Burden of proof—Company must prove by legal evidence amount claimed—Presumption of accuracy attaching to balance-sheet and profit and loss account not applicable to auditor's certificate—Mere production of auditor's certificate not conclusive—Employee should be given adequate opportunity to verify figures in certificate by cross-examination of employer and his witness: 1969 Lab. I.C. 995: A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 612.

Absence of evidence to show that reserves were non-existent or they were being utilised for purposes other than business of company—Presumption is that they were being utilized as working capital of company: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 1222.

Where the assessee filed voluntary returns for the assessment before the end of four years from the end of the relevant assessment year and the I.T.O. levied interest up to the date of the filing of the returns, held, it must be presumed that the Income-tax Officer had extended the time for filing the returns after satisfying himself that it was a case for extension of time. The presumption was founded on the principle that an Officer entrusted with a judicial or quasi judicial duty must be presumed to have discharged his duties in a proper and bona fide manner; thus, no penalty under S. 271(1)(a) of the Income-tax Act, 1961 could be levied: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 114: (1985) 1 S.C.C. 283: (1985) 2 S.C.R. 215.

Imposition of tax by statutory authority—Presumption that it has followed prescribed procedure can be raised—Presumption not weakened by long acquiescence in imposition—Imposition of tax not in accordance with law—Effect of: 1964 All.L.J. 479: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 370.

Presumption of sale under S. 28-B of U.P. Sales Tax Act (1948) is irrebuttable: 1983 Tax. L.R. 2888: 52 S.T.C. 440 (All.).

75. Benami.—The presumption which ordinarily attaches to the production of the original document by one who claims that it is farzi and a benami document would vanish, if there is evidence to show that the document was originally in the custody of the intended beneficiary: 1954 B.L.J.R. 82: A.I.R. 1954 Pat. 280.

Where there is a clear picture as to source or passing of consideration in a transaction, long and continued possession of the parties trying to set up benami, though an important element for consideration, does not raise any presumption in favour of benami. Where the plaintiffs sold the disputed property for consideration but they continued to possess the property forcibly for a number of years, held, the impugned document of conveyance could not be held as a benami document. [A.I.R. 1916 Cal. 367, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Cal. 345.

Where ostensible purchaser did not have sufficient money and capacity to purchase the suit property and the real transferee continued to remain in possession of the suit properly even after the execution of the sale deed, held, transaction embodied in the sale deed was a benami transaction: A.I.R. 1981 Bom. 406.

Where in a benami transaction the father of the minor children had paid the consideration, held, it should be presumed unless the contrary intention is proved, that the father had acquired the properties for his own benefit and not for his minor sons: A.I.R. 1988 Cal. 375 (D.B.).

It is now well settled that the English rule as to presumption of advancement has not been adopted in the Indian law of trust; thus where it was found that the husband had provided consideration for the property purchased in the name of the wife, in the absence of the presumption of advancement, she will have to prove that the consideration was provided by the husband for her benefit; that is to be proved by positive evidence; the issue cannot be framed so as to put the onus on the husband to prove that he did not, by paying the consideration, intend to benefit the wife. [A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 8, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1975 Mad.141: (1974) 2 M.L.J. 442: (1974) 87 Mad.L.W. 119 (S.N.) (D.B.).

Benami—Benami between husband and wife—Presumption as to possession: A.I.R. 1966 All. 278.

Where a person makes a purchase in the name of his wife or unmarried daughter, a statutory presumption arises under S. 3(2) of the Benami Transactions (Prohibition) Act, 1988 that such a transaction has been entered into for their benefit. However, the presumption is only a rebuttable one: (1990-1) 38 B.L.J.R. 601.

76. Citizenship/domicile.—Though passport may not be conclusive on the point of citizenship, but it raises a presumption, though rebuttable, for it is legitimate to assume that before the passport was issued to him some enquiry must have been made by the Police or other competent authority on the subject of his Indian citizenship: A.I.R. 1972 Gau. 56.

Person holding certificate of citizenship—Service of notice under S. 3, Foreigners Act—Validity—Writ petition to quash notice—State claiming that certificate was obtained by misrepresentation and fraud or was not granted by proper authority—If valid defence: A.I.R. 1963 Assam 55.

Acquisition of citizenship—Person entering India on passport of Pakistan—Presumption: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 109.

Domicile—Presumption—Husband and wife—Law of husband's domicile at time of marriage—Rebuttal of presumption: (1956) 2 All E.R. 817.

77. Co-owners.—Co-owners—Co-heirs—Possession of one when adverse to other co-heirs—Presumption. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 314: (1957) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 46.

Where there were deposits in the joint names of A and B, both salaried persons and there was no evidence to show that money deposited belonged to A, the only reasonable conclusion that can be drawn from the joint nature of the deposits is that it belonged equally to both of them: 1959 M.P.L.J. 841: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 359.

Notice signed by one joint owner on behalf of all—Presumption: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 753.

Transfer of entire property by co-owner in possession—Acts of adverse possession by transfer to the knowledge of other co-owner—Husband of co-sharer having knowledge of acts of adverse possession—Co-sharer is presumed to have knowledge: A.I.R. 1964 All. 425.

Co-owner's adverse possession—Ouster—Inference of ouster or exclusion: A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 222.

Claim for apportionment of compensation—Dispute regarding eight annas share acquired by purchase of equity of redemption in property at Court auction—No indication or evidence as to extent of share of each of claimants—Presumption would be that they share equally—Hence, compensation should be distributed equally: (1964) 77 Mad.L.W. 644.

Where bank locker stood jointly in names of wife and husband, held, it could be presumed that the valuables kept in the locker belonged to both and not to one alone: A.I.R. 1992 Pat. 173: (1991-2)39 B.L.J.R. 990.

78. Corruption cases.—Presumption under Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 4—Nature and quantum of proof required to raise and rebut presumption—Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act is different: 1968 Cr.L.J. 391 (All.).

Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947—Effect—Presumption under Act and under Evidence Act—Distinction: A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 110: 1957 Cr.L.J. 659; A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 575; 1977 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 71 (Goa).

Presumption under Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, S. 4—Nature of—Rebuttal—Presumption arises as soon as it is shown that accused had received the stated amount and such amount was not the legal remuneration—Word "gratification"—Meaning—It is not necessary that before presumption arises prosecution must prove that money was paid as a bribe: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1484: 1968 Lab.I.C. 1412: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1292.

Accused shown to have accepted money which was not legal remuneration—Presumption can be raised—Rebuttal must be by explanation which must be true and not merely plausible—Presumption under S. 4(1) and Evidence Act, S. 114, distinction between—Whether presumption is rebutted is question of fact—Supreme Court will not interfere: 1964 M.L.J. (Cr.) 65: A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 575.

Where there was no evidence regarding payment of bribe to the accused and the accused gave a satisfactory explanation for the money which was recovered from him, held, a presumption could not be drawn against the accused for accepting bribe: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1258 (Mad.).

Fact that Investigating Officer had offered his personal search before effecting search of accused not mentioned in his detailed report—Inference that legal formality of search was not observed before recovery of incriminating notes from person of accused—If justified: 1981 Cr.L.J. 1691 (Punj.).

It is not necessary that the passing of money should be proved by direct evidence. It may also be proved by circumstantial evidence. Thus, where the accused, who had put the money in his right side pocket, threw it across the partition wall in the adjoining room, on seeing the raiding party, and the notes so thrown were found to be the same notes which had been treated with phenolphthalein powder and the handkerchief which was taken from the accused's right side pocket and his rightside pocket itself were subjected to a test which showed that they too had come into contact with phenolphthalein powder, held, it could be presumed that the accused had obtained the money as bribe: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 873: (1980)2 S.C.C. 390: 1980 Cr. L.J. 564.

Merely because the prosecution witnesses and the complainant, in a bribery case, came from the same village, held, it cannot be said that they were mutually related and their evidence be discarded on that ground: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1441: 1987 Cr. L.J. 1180: (1987) 2 S.C.C. 486.

79. Criminal cases.—In prosecution of a criminal offence, the onus is upon the prosecution to prove the different ingredients of the offence and unless it discharges that onus, the prosecution cannot succeed. The Court may, of course presume, as mentioned in S. 114, the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, their relation to the facts of a particular case. The illustrations to that section are merely examples of circumstances in which certain presumptions may be made. Other presumptions of a similar kind in similar circumstances can be made under the provisions of section itself whether or not a presumption can be drawn under the section in a particular case depends ultimately upon the facts and circumstances of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. Human behaviour is so complex that room must be left for play in the joints. It is not possible to formulate a series of exact propositions and confine human behaviour within straight jacket. The raw material here is far too complex to be susceptible of precise and exact propositions for exactness here is a fake: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2773: (1973) 2 S.C.C. 808: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1.

S. 114 enables the Courts to presume only that which accords with the ordinary course of events and human nature and not what would be an aberration from such a course. The degree which proof must reach before a Court trying a criminal case will convict is no doubt that which a prudent man will employ in reading a conclusion beyond reasonable doubt whereas an accused need not prove his case to the same extent in order to succeed. But the standards employed in judging each version are those of a reasonable and prudent man. Such a man can only adopt what is natural to expect and what accords with commonsense and ordinary experience but not what is extraordinary and unexpected as a reliable test of credibility of witnesses: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 460: 1972 Cr.L.J. 1286: (1972) 3 S.C.C. 418.

Our jurisprudential enthusiasm for presumed innocence must be moderated by the pragmatic need to make criminal justice potent and realistic. A balance has to be struck between chasing chance possibilities as good enough to set the delinquent free and chopping the logic of preponderant probability to punish marginal innocents: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 2622: (1973) 2 S.C.C. 793: 1973 Cr.L.J. 1783.

The Court shall presume the absence of circumstances which would bring the case of the accused within the general exceptions provided in Chapter IV of the Penal Code or elsewhere in the said Code or any other law and which would demonstrate his innocence; or when S. 114 authorises the Court to presume the accused to be a thief or receiver of stolen property solely on the ground of his possession of the stolen goods, unless the accused satisfactorily accounts for such possession. The relevant provisions of various legislations relating to statutory or economic offences and also the recent amendments introduced in the Evidence Act in the last decade, e.g., S. 114-A, etc., are so inconsistent or incompatible with the so-called presumption as to render the same almost to a ritualistic chanting: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N 688: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 48: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2912.

If the incriminating facts or circumstances are established by the prosecution and if the accused fails to offer an explanation or gives a false statement, the Court would be entitled to draw an adverse inference against him. [A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 211, Rel. on]: 1971 Cr.L.J. 1804 (Madh. Pra.) (D.B.).

A callous and inordinately prolonged delay (which does not arise from the default of the accused or is otherwise not occasioned by any extraordinary or exceptional reason) in the investigation and original trials of pending cases for capital offences punishable with death would plainly violate the constitutional guarantee of a speedy public trial under Art. 21. But the essence of the rule is one of presumptive prejudice arising from the passage of the prescribed period of time as an outer limit but plainly rebuttable for justifiable causes or by the defaults of the accused himself: A.I.R. 1987 Pat. 219: 1987 Pat.L.J.R. (H.C.) 394: 1987 B.L.J.R. 555 (F.B.).

Criminal conviction can be based solely on legal presumption unrebutted. It is because conviction on circumstantial evidence is legal and valid. And circumstantial evidence is in effect presumptions and suppositions and inferences from circumstances.

Facts which lead to a conclusion necessary to prove or disprove a fact in issue may be established directly or by inference and "evidence of facts which inferentially lead to such a conclusion is described as presumptive or circumstantial." But a conviction for bigamy cannot be sustained or on such presumption alone and must fail unless the observance of the requisite form and performance of the necessary ceremonies are affirmatively proved. For bigamy (unless any of the marriages is under the Special Marriage Act) would entirely depend on the positive proof of observance and performance of forms and ceremonies required to constitute a valid marriage: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1502: (1991) 2 Cal.L.J. 71: (1991) 1 Cal.H.N 110: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 472.

Evidence in criminal trial—Onus of proving case on prosecution—No question of presumption arises in respect of facts which the prosecution has to prove—Existence of facts cannot be presumed unless case comes under S. 114, Evidence Act: 1965 Kash.L.J. 125: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 640: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 105.

The true rule is that the circumstances alleged must be established by satisfactory evidence as in the case of other evidence. While it is true that there should be no missing links, it is not the law that every one of the link must appear on the surface of the evidence. Some of them may be inferred from facts: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 41: (1962) 2 Cr.L.J. 81: A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 138; A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1224: (1985) 2 Crimes 465.

Proof of guilt of accused — Burden is on prosecution — Prosecution cannot take advantage of weakness in defence version: 1967 Cr.L.J. 191: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 18.

From the mere fact that the deceased had hundred per cent. burn injuries of second and third degree, held, it could not be presumed that the deceased was not physically and mentally fit to give dying declaration. [1987 Cr.L.J. 775 (S.C.), Foll.]: 1995 Cr.L.J. 1904 (Raj.) (D.B.).

Criminal intention—Proof of—Whether there was criminal intention is a question of fact—Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act—When can arise: 1966 All.Cr.R. 260.

Intention is not capable of direct proof as fact — Intention is to be gathered from surrounding circumstance and conduct of accused: 1967 Cr.L.J. 184: A.I.R. 1967 Goa 11(F.B.).

Intention—Proof of—No presumption—Burden to prove intention—Extent of. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 605; A.I.R. 1964 S.C. 1563, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1; 1961 A.C. 290, Expl.]: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 60.

Intention to intimidate—Presumption: (1966) 32 Cut.L.T. 266.

Thumb-impression of accused taken forcibly—Determination of guilt of accused—Such thumb-impression should not be taken into consideration: 1968 All. Cr. R. 375: 1968 All.W.R. (H.C.) 590.

There is no presumption of absolute truthfulness of prosecution witnesses: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 321.

Human conduct—Discovery on information—When a man points out unknown matters to others, one may presume under S. 114 that he is connected with the crime unless he can give some satisfactory explanation as to how he comes by that knowledge: I.L.R. 47 Bom. 74: A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 183.

(Per Agarwala, J.).—Holding out of a threat of doing injury to another furnishes ground to presume that he who threatened the act was the perpetrator or instigator: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443: 1955 All.L.J. 468.

Proof as to place where offence committed—Onus: (1962) 3 Guj.L.R. 409: (1963) 2 Cr.L.J. 273: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 234.

Immunity from prosecution not assured: 1968 Cr.L.J. 493: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 117.

Appreciation of evidence—Eye-witnesses normally do not see causing of every injury that is caused to a victim and hence causing of injuries is inferred from circumstantial evidence against accused—Where witnesses had seen only causing of injuries and assailant is only one, inference is that other injuries were caused by same assailant: (1966) 2 An.W.R. 338.

Innocence of accused—Presumption as to: 1969 Cr. L.J. 504: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 75.

(Per Desai, J.).—The accused did not say that he was not bound to open his lips or to help the prosecution in proving his guilt; he did not refuse to offer an explanation. On the other hand, he denied the circumstantial evidence altogether, suggesting that there was nothing which he had to explain. Held, that in such a case it was not open to the Court to assume that he had refused to offer an explanation on the ground that he had a right to keep silent: 1955 All.L.J. 468: A.I.R. 1955 All. 443.

The fact that the accused did not give a detailed statement at the spot when he was accused of a crime could hardly be a circumstance from which a presumption of guilt can be drawn. He might want to give a considered statement and if he did not give a detailed statement immediately after the accusation was levelled against him, it is not possible to draw any inference adverse to him, from his silence: 1957 Cr.L.J. 117 (All.).

Extra-judicial confession—Admissibility of—Statements of suspects recorded by person in authority—Circumstances corroborating statements, present—Statements held were admissible—Acquittal of one accused would not exonerate the other: 1964 M.P.L.J. 750.

Accused not to be compelled to produce incriminating evidence—Evidence of compulsion—No presumption. See A.I.R. 1955 All. 367: 56 Cr.L.J. 898.

No presumption as to guilt can be raised from the fact that the accused has absconded: 21 I.C. 473: 14 Cr.L.J. 601. See also I.L.R. 49 All. 57: A.I.R. 1927 All. 737.

Murder—Absconding of accused—Effect of: 1963 All.L.J. 977; I.L.R. (1974) 1 Del. 277.

Absence of motive for committing murder—Inference: 1963 All.L.J. 977.

Where the accused falsely denied the relevant facts which had been conclusively established by the prosecution, held, an adverse inference was to be drawn: 1978 M.P.L.J. (Note) 60.

Where in a murder charge, the accused falsely denied several relevant facts which had been conclusively established, the Court would be justified in drawing an adverse inference from this against the accused: 1957 Cr.L.J. 328: A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 211.

The mere knowledge of the place of concealment does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that the person having such knowledge participated in the act of concealment, if the place is not his own: (1941) 43 Punj.L.R. 600: A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 471. But see infra. In considering what inference can properly be drawn from the possession by the accused of an incriminating article, when no explanation is forthcoming from him as to how he came by it, the Court is not bound by any rule of law, but is merely considering a matter of reasonable inference and common sense. Where the accused charged with the possession of counterfeit currency notes under S. 489-C, I. P. Code, leads the Police Officer and takes him to a place not his own or in his exclusive possession but to which he could have access without difficulty, digs the earth and takes out a bundle of currency notes from the pit and hands over the same to the Police Officer, the notes being counterfeit, it would be perfectly reasonable, in the absence of any explanation by him as to how he came to be in the know of the place where from they have been recovered, to raise a presumption against the accused, that he was in possession of the notes and had secreted them, intending to use them as genuine or that they may be used as genuine within the meaning of S. 489-C, I.P.Code: A.I.R. 1951 Mys. 34: I.L.R. (1951) Mys. 210.

Possession of accused incriminatory—False explanation—Effect. See A.I.R. 1954 Manipur 13.

Though from the accused's knowledge of concealing of certain evidence pertaining to the offence alleged, the offence may be presumed, it is not the mere possession of such facts and objects, but the totality of facts and circumstances and the conduct of the accused in relation to the incriminating evidence, of which he is shown to have knowledge, that would raise the presumption of the guilt of the accused, under S. 114 of the Evidence Act. [1970 All.W.R. 885; A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 27, Foll.; A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 39, Disting.]: 1971 All.L.J. 529: 1971 All.W.R. 327.

Where certain silver pieces of the size of a rupee were found along with counterfeit rupees all bearing the same year and it was shown that all the coins were concealed under bhusa in a locked room of which the accused had the key, held, that S. 114, created a presumption of guilt against the accused and that he was liable to be convicted under S. 243, I.P. Code: 9 O.W.N. 1198: A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 85. See also 32 I.C. 160: 17 Cr.L.J. 32; 18 I.C. 684: 11 All.L.J. 94; 46 I.C. 158: (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 597; 21 I.C. 156: (1912-13) 17 Cal.W.N. 1077; 53 I.C. 819; 19 Cr.L.J. 189: 43 I.C. 605; 13 I.C. 828: 1912 M.W.N. 97; 12 I.C. 652: 21 M.L.J. 1071; 53 I.C. 481: 20 Cr.L.J. 753 (N).

Where key of the almirah from which an unlicensed arm was recovered was produced by the accused, held, inference of accused's possession could be drawn: 1973 B.B.C.J. 478.

Where a Pipe gun alongwith three live cartridge and some clothes were recovered from a tin box from one of the rooms of the house of petitioners but no evidence was produced that the petitioner had occupied that room or was living in that room and the key of the box was supplied by petitioner's mother and it was also not established that the clothes belonged to the petitioner, held, no presumption could arise that the room was under the petitioner's control or that the petitioner had knowledge that the arms were kept in that tin box. [A.I.R. 1947 Pat. 236, Rel. on]: (1990-1) 38 B.L.J.R. 690.

Where the only evidence of record was that the accused had the custody of a forged withdrawal slip by which he withdrew Rs. 6,000 from the bank and misappropriated the same, held, it could be presumed that it was the accused who committed the offence under S. 467 read with S.109 of the Indian Penal Code; acquittal set aside: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 821: 1987 Cr.L.J. 722: (1987) 1 S.C.C. 577: (1987)1 U.J. (S.C.) 344.

Accused delivering certain cheques for paying balance amount for goods supplied by dealers—Cheques dishonoured—No attempt made by accused to pay amount for encashment of cheques—Accused would be presumed to have committed offence under S. 420, I.P.Code: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1482: (1982) 22 Del.L.T. 32: (1982) 84 Punj.L.R. 125 (Del.).

The essential ingredient of an offence under S. 408, I. P. Code, is dishonest misappropriation. The onus of the general issue, i.e., dishonest misappropriation lies on the prosecution, and, in the absence of any evidence of dishonesty, the accused is entitled to acquittal. Where the accused has come forward with a plea which relates to settlement of accounts and where the prosecution has not produced any evidence of any dishonest misappropriation, the accused cannot be convicted merely on the basis of any presumption: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 535: (1957) 2 An.W.R. 333.

The Evidence Act is expressed in terms which allow full effect to be given to circumstances or conditions of probability or improbability so that where forgery comes in question in a civil suit, the presumption against misconduct is not without its due weight as a circumstance of improbability, though the standard of proof to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case may not be applicable: 1968 B.L.J.R. 409.

Possession implies dominion and consciousness in the mind of the person having dominion over an object that he has it and that he can exercise it. The difficulty arises when prohibited articles are recovered from places under joint family possession. It is now, however, well settled that in such a case the head of the family is presumed to be in possession of any illicit article found in the house. The presumption is rebuttable. It can be easily rebutted by showing that the room or receptacle in question was in the particular and exclusive possession of one member of the joint family. Similarly, where two or more persons are charged with joint illegal possession, it is incumbent on the State to prove (a) that each of the accused had either physical or constructive possession of the property, or (b) that one or more of them had possession thereof either physical or constructive on behalf of themselves and the other accused to the knowledge of the latter. In all criminal charges the onus of proving the guilt of the accused rests on the prosecution and it never shifts on the accused by reason of S. 106: (1961) 1 Cr.L.J. 533: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 162.

Possession of instrument of offence—Recovery from house of joint family—Presumption: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 421: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 758.

In a house kept by the father and an adult son, there is no presumption that the contraband articles found in the house should necessarily be in the possession of the father. They may as well be in the possession of the son or they may be in the possession of both. Held, that in the instant case the evidence did not establish beyond doubt that the father was in exclusive possession of the contraband articles: 1957 M.L.J. (Cr.) 66: (1957) 1 M.L.J. 152.

Merely because a bag of jira is found stored in a room adjoining a shop, it cannot be presumed that it is for sale.

A presumption can of course be drawn if the entire evidence on record justifies the same. Before drawing such a presumption and utilising the same against the accused, the Court should carefully examine the evidence on record to see if there is anything therein on which the said presumption is rebutted: (1971) 37 Cut.L.T. 1210.

If a man approached somebody at about 6 p.m. in the evening for getting payment of his outstanding dues, and he suddenly found that he was dragged inside the house and kept tied there, it would naturally be expected of him to shout for help and to resist such wrongful confinement in all possible manner attracting the attention of the people in the neighbourhood. That would be the most natural reaction of a person placed in the above circumstances and such inference drawn on the above set of facts cannot be said to be either illegal or unwarranted: 1969 Cr.L.J. 578 (Ori.).

Presumption in criminal cases—Incident taking place in month of Sawan, busiest for cultivation—Eye-witnesses to occurrence claiming to have been in their house on day of incident—Neighbours, however, found gone to fields—No question put to witnesses in cross-examination as to why they remained in their houses—It will not be fair to draw an inference against prosecution in this respect and to hold presence of those witnesses at their houses that day as unnatural: 1968 Raj.L.W. 601: I.L.R. (1969) 19 Raj. 641.

Where in a dacoity case the prosecution contended that there was evidence that at the time of commission of the dacoity the female inmates were preparing meal and were arranging for dinner for the male members of the house and from this it could safely be presumed that there was light in the house as nobody would prepare dinner in the darkness but there was no evidence to hold that there was any light in the room where valuables were kept, held, in the absence of any evidence it could not be presumed that there was enough light in the house in which inmates of the house could identify the appellants: 1988 Cr.L.J. 1408 (Pat.) (D.B.).

Where in a rape case it was argued that as vagina admitted even one finger with difficulty there could not be any penetration though there was profuse bleeding and hymen was absent with the edges torn, held, it could not be inferred that there was no penetration as the muscles must have contracted by then: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 702: 1989 Cr.L.J. 841: (1989)1 S.C.C. 432: (1989)1 Crimes 384.

Merely because a person died in Police custody, held, an immediate inference of murder cannot be drawn against the Police personal: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1872 (Mad.) (D.B.).

The fact that clothes with blood stains are discovered in the house of the accused in a murder trial does not entitle the Court to make any presumption against the accused as to his guilt or as to the stains being of human blood, though the clothes admittedly belonged to the deceased. If the prosecution proves that any stain of human blood is found on the clothes, the accused might be called on to explain the fact, but when the prosecution failed and there was no evidence to prove that the stains were of human blood, the Court is wrong in making a presumption: 11 O.W.N. 969: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 373; 11 O.W.N. 950: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 388.

Where an accused had murdered his brother and the prosecution had established by cogent and convincing proof his motive, his guilty conduct immediately before and after the occurrence, his refusal to participate in the identification parade and his refusal to give specimen of his footprints, held, it raised a clear presumption of the accused having committed the murder: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1723: 1974 Cr.L.J. 1171.

Where the only surviving person of an assault at some odd hours deposed that he had seen all the four accused at the spot of the incident and out of them accused No. 1 and 2 assaulted him and thereafter he became unconscious and no overt act was attributed to the accused No. 4 and the accused No. 4 did not offer any plausible explanation for his presence at the spot, held, his presence at the spot led to an irresistible inference that though he was not assailant as per the testimony of the surviving victim, he was one of the participants in the mission with accused Nos. 1 to 3: 1993 Cr.L.J. 1608 (Bom.) (D.B.).

Where in a murder case, the witnesses had stated that there was a lantern burning in the house in the light of which they saw the accused but at the time when the lantern was seized from the house of the deceased and was produced in the Court, the wick and chimney were missing, however, all the witnesses spoke about the recovery of the lantern together with its chimney and wick and that when it was sent to the Court the same were intact, held, the only inference that was possible was that the chimney should have got broken and the wick lost when the lantern was kept in the property room of the Court: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 1543: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1785: (1989) 2 S.C.C. 425.

Appreciation of evidence—Father murdered by his wife and son by strangulation—Shrieks uttered by father deposed to by witnesses—Deposition of one of witnesses not referring to names of accused wife and son—That witness in his first information report also not mentioning names of accused—That witness resident of house opposite to that of deceased—Exact stage at which that witness got aroused and came down on street indeterminable—That witness stated to have been on street at time of incident—Depositions of other witnesses however specifically referring to names of accused—All witnesses respectable and natural witnesses with no animus against accused—In such context, no inference against prosecution case can be raised merely from the fact that what particular witness heard did not specifically name any of accused—It only shows spontaneous nature of first information report—Mere absence of names of accused in the shrieks deposed to by that witness is by itself not a circumstance going to root of case: (1969) 71 Punj.L.R. 280.

There is no irrebuttable presumption that a doctor is always a witness of truth; his evidence is to be appreciated like that of any other witness: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 66: (1982) 2 S.C.C. 396: 1982 Cr.L.J. 1972.

Recovery of allopathic medicines from the dispensary of a homeopathic doctor did not necessarily show that he was a man of shaky character when recovery of allopathic medicines had no connection or relation to the commission of the offence for which he had been charged: A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 1842: 1991 Cr.L.J. 2666: (1991) 3 S.C.C. 609.

Where a doctor administered an injection of Menstrogen Forte to bring about the termination of pregnancy occasioned by illicit relations, despite specific warnings embodied in the literature attached indicated that it should not be used during pregnancy or for its diagnosis and she died, held, it could be presumed that the doctor injected the medicine with the knowledge of its adverse effects revealed from the literature; he was guilty of the offence of voluntary causing miscarriage under S. 312 of the Indian Penal Code: 1992 Cr.L.J. 2029 (Madh. Pra.).

Presumption in criminal cases—Offence of cow slaughter—Accused completely denying prosecution case—Accused, however, not explaining how they came with dead body and were dealing with carcass, when raid was made—Held, on facts, assuming that there was no actual evidence of killing of cow, there was sufficient evidence to warrant presumption under S. 114 that accused had slaughtered cow: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 847: 1969 All.Cr.R. 541.

Accused caught while cutting the flesh of slaughtered cow—Blood still dripping—Presumption that it was slaughtered by accused: 1959 All.L.J. 598: A.I.R. 1958 All. 198: 1958 Cr.L.J. 316; 1975 All.W.C. 157.

Eight accused found cutting meat of a cow slaughtered about an hour before—It is not known which of them took part in cow slaughter—It is not proper to infer that all the eight accused participated in cow slaughter: 1970 All.Cr.R. 20: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 915.

Prostitution—Nature of evidence required to prove the offence. 1967 Cr.L.J. 1140: A.I.R. 1967 Guj. 211.

Charge against accused under S. 66(1)(b), Bombay Prohibition Act (XXV of 1949)—Prosecution cannot resort to S. 114, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1970 Guj. 131: 1970 Cr.L.J. 956: (1970) 11 Guj.L.R. 208.

Trial for offence under Madras Prohibition Act—Accused challenging nature of contents of bottles—Magistrate opening bottles in open Court—Presumption drawn from smell of contents and visual examination of bottles—Validity—Contents ordered to be destroyed immediately—Magistrate held acted in contravention of R. 375 of Criminal Rules of Practice: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 415: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 95.

The possession of full bottles of wine in a person's house when the number of bottles is less than that allowed by law does not raise the presumption that the bottles were for sale: 14 I.C. 968: 13 Cr.L.J. 424.

Finding regarding expediency—Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act—Omission to record is mere irregularity and does not vitiate complaint: I.L.R. (1962) 1 All. 292: (1962) 1 Cr.L.J. 555: A.I.R. 1962 All. 251.

The mere fact that the accused was found in possession of a number of poisonous substances would not by itself raise a presumption against him in every case to the effect that his possession of the same was for sale. Whether a presumption of that nature should arise under S. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act or not should depend upon the circumstances of each case. Where it is established that the poisonous substances belonged to accused's brother who was a licence holder and that he died leaving the said substances, and that the same were not acquired by the accused by adopting any illicit or improper means, no inference of guilt can be drawn at all against the accused: A.I.R. 1957 All. 705: 1957 Cr.L.J. 1191.

Presumption under Public Gambling Act, 1857, S. 6—Special rule of evidence: 1956 All.L.J. 935.

In a trial for the offences under Ss. 292 and 293 of the Indian Penal Code a certificate granted under S. 6 of the Cinematograph Act by the Board of Censors does not provide an irrebuttable defence to accused who have been granted such a certificate, but it is certainly a relevant fact of some weight to be taken into consideration by the criminal Court in deciding whether the offence charged is established: A.I.R. 1980 S.C. 258: 1980 Cr. L.J. 202: (1980) 1 S.C.C. 43: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 222: (1980) 1 S.C.R. 1081.

Illegitimate child found dead—No automatic presumption arises that it was killed by its mother—Such presumption, if permitted, will destroy the presumption of innocence to which every accused is entitled: 1964 Ker.L.J. 76: 1964 Ker.L.T. 127: A.I.R. 1964 Ker. 241.

80. Customary right.—Where a village with a population of only 500 had two public cremation grounds and a large tract of land on the bank of the village tank was also claimed by them as a public cremation ground when it had been brought under plough by the land owners, held, the custom pleaded in support of the claim was not reasonable and could not be sustained; the custom must be reasonable not only at its inception but also in the changed circumstances: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 246: (1984) 1 Cal.L.J. 408: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 864.

A customary right is available to a fluctuating body of persons such as a body of villagers, but a customary right which is in the nature of a public right and arises out of the custom of the locality, is a part of the law of the locality and is not a private right dependent upon grant, dedication or prescription. It has to be proved by showing that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent been submitted to as established governing rule of a particular locality. The customary right claimed should also be reasonable.

Therefore, in a case where a customary right of pasturage was claimed on the basis of an entry in mutation papers describing the disputed land as Bagayat and there being no evidence except the bare statement of witnesses that they have been seeing the grazing by cattle for the past several years and there being no evidence to prove that the custom has become part of the law of the locality, it was held that these could not justify a presumption that the land was Gochar or even communal in character. Further, it was held that since the exercise of right of pasturage would completely deprive the right of the owner to grow fruit bearing trees on the land it must also be held unreasonable: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 1077.

Where there was no evidence that cremation of strangers to the family's private cremation ground was as of right or with the belief that the Hindu inhabitants were entitled to do so, held, such occasional user by strangers could not be as of right but with the family's leave and license; it could not be taken as the other villagers customary right: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 246: (1984) 1 Cal.L.J. 408: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 864.

81. Customs Act.—Presumption under S. 178-A, cannot be raised when article seized is not covered by S. 178-A(2) of the Sea Customs Act: (1961) 1 M.L.J. 374: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 368: 1961 M.L.J. (Cr.) 274.

Smuggled goods in packets—Knowledge about their being smuggled goods—Prosecution unable to lead any direct evidence for importing the knowledge of accused about the goods being smuggled—Presumption will depend on circumstances of each particular case: 1979 All.W.C. 237: 1979 All.Cr.R. 98.

Foreign markings on goods can be taken as a circumstance to infer that they were of foreign origin: (1988) 34 E.L.T. 571(Ker.) (D.B.).

Chief Customs Authority—Appeal to—Powers to pass orders in—Confiscation of goods—Commutation of penalty—Condition to be fulfilled for commutation—Presumption as to—Record or proof offered must show that condition was fulfilled: (1962) 1 S.C.R. 896: A.I.R. 1961 S.C. 1549.

82. Death.—Even independently of S.108, presumption of death of a person can be drawn by the Court under S.114, if circumstances and evidence justify such inference: A.I.R. 1988 N.O.C. 76: (1988) 1 Ker.L.T. 45.

Where a wife alleging that her husband is dead, fails to produce such evidence as she ought to know, a presumption arises against her: 117 I.C. 209: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 127.

There is no presumption that when two persons die in the same accident or incident, the elder predeceases the younger; such a presumption has been created under S. 21 of the Hindu Succession Act. Where a father and son are killed in a Railway accident the presumption is that the father died prior to the son; the mother in such a case would be entitled to compensation as a widowed mother under S. 2(d)(i) and not under S. 2(d)(iii) which applies only to a mother other than a widowed mother: 1981 All.C.J. 523: (1981) 43 Fac.L.R. 359: 1982 All.L.J. 6 (D.B.).

Where one set of people went under the water and their bodies could not then be recovered and another set of people had been struggling and keeping themselves above water and had been netted and brought ashore and of whom one actually recovered, it is permissible to draw the presumption that deaths, occurred in the order of seniority and the younger was the survivor and that he died later than others: A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 269.

Where a mother and daughter met their death in the Quetta earthquake and there is no reliable evidence to show which of the two died first, there can be no presumption in law that the elder died before the younger: I.L.R. (1939) Kar. 509: A.I.R. 1939 Sind 234.

83. Dedication to public.—User as of right by the public justifies the inference of an intention to dedicate the land as a passage but it is always a question of fact whether such intention can be inferred or not. Such dedication may be made by an express grant or it may be presumed from a long and continued user on the part of the public. Where a dedication is by the express terms of a grant or by implication from long and continued user by the public, such user being only a piece of evidence warranting a rebuttable presumption and no more. In order to raise a presumption of dedication, the weight of evidence of public user depends upon several factors. Where though the ownership of the suit passage was with the plaintiff but the entire public was using it from a long time, held, a presumption as to its dedication in favour of public could be drawn: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 181: 1978 M.P.L.J. 194.

Public user—Dedication when can be presumed—Nature of evidence: A.I.R. 1954 Hyd. 82: I.L.R. (1954) Hyd. 46.

84. Delegation of powers.—There is no presumption by which delegation of powers could be presumed: 1958 Cr.L.J. 1394: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 661.

Powers of Karnavan—He can renounce his office but cannot transfer or delegate it—He can, however, delegate his power of management subject to power of resumption—Karnavan's duties in connection with management of Tarwad can also be delegated: A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 128.

85. Drugs.—Mere possession of medicines even of large quantity is not sufficient to presume, in absence of affirmative evidence, that it was for sale: 1984 Cr.L.J. 931 (Cal.).

Where the accused was arrested with four packets of narcotic drug which were not proved to be for personal consumption, held, it was reasonable to presume that the same were for sale: (1989)1 Bom.C.R. 574 (D.B.).

Drug shop—Date-expired penicillin ointment kept—Presumption of stocking for sale: A.I.R. 1956 All. 703: 1956 Cr.L.J. 1380.

Where the accused were charged with knowingly receiving, concealing and transporting heroin and cocaine which he knew had been illegally imported and knowingly purchasing, dispensing and distributing heroin and cocaine, because all or nearly all heroin consumed in the United States is illegally imported, in the absence of explanation as to possession, the Jury can properly infer that the heroin in the possession of the accused had been illegally imported and that he had knowledge of illegal importation. Evidence of the possession by the accused of a great quantity of heroin is sufficient to support conviction for distributing such heroin. Drawing of such an inference does not violate the accused's right to be convicted only on a finding of guilt beyond reasonable doubt. Drawing of inference "unless the defendant explains the possession satisfactorily" does not place impermissible pressure on the accused to testify in his own defence.

As regards charge of possession of cocaine, however, no presumption of illegal importation can be drawn, since it is lawfully produced in greater quantities in the United States than is illegally imported: (1969) 24 Law Ed. 2nd 610: A.I.R. 1970 U.S.S.C. 82.

Merely because certain amount is also recovered from the place from where heroin was recovered in a raid, held, in absence of any evidence to prima facie link said amount with the sale proceeds of heroin, no presumption could be raised that the said amount was sale proceeds of any drug: 1993 Cr. L.J. 21 (Del.).

Opium Act, 1878, Ss. 9 and 10—Presumption—Representative sample tested by Chemical Examiner and report submitted—Accused cannot claim re-examination of the remaining opium on the ground that he has to rebut the presumption raised: (1966) 68 Punj.L.R. 657.

Where the house from which the opium was recovered was a dilapidated and deserted one and was open and accessible to all and sundry and the recovery of opium at the instance of the accused from the house was inconsistent with the explanation of the witness having only seen somebody putting the opium there. Held, that such a recovery was not sufficient to establish the possession of the accused over the property recovered: I.L.R. (1964) 14 Raj. 715: 1964 Raj.L.W. 171.

Possession of opium—Opium to the extent of 23 Kg. recovered from premises owned by accused, head of his family—Held, that a presumption as to possession of opium could arise: 1982 Cr.L.J. 696 (Raj.).

86. Easement.—Where a certain piece of open land is surrounded on all sides by houses and the open piece of land is used for common purposes, e.g., on the occasion of marriages, deaths and other festivities and also used for passage, presumption may reasonably be drawn that the open piece of land is either the joint property of the owners of the houses surrounding it in the same way as they own the sites of their houses, or if they be not the owners of the sites that land has been left for their own use by the owners thereof and that the owners of the houses have rights over the land in the nature of easements. The presumption is no doubt rebuttable: 1953 All.L.J. 696: A.I.R. 1954 All. 215.

Right of way—User must be as of right—Presumption: A.I.R. 1958 Ori. 248.

Where a plaintiff claimed an easement of the right of way over the defendants' property, inter alia by prescription as well as by necessity and the defendants categorically pleaded that they had not consented to the plaintiff's user of the way over their property, held, the user not having originated from consent, it must be taken as of right and perfected by prescription if its user for more than 20 years is established by evidence: A.I.R. 1986 Ker. 75: I.L.R. (1986) 1 Ker. 526: 1986 Ker.L.T. 203.

Customary easements—User of—Presumption and burden of proof: (1964) 2 An.W.R. 39.

Easements Act, 1882, Ss. 13, 15—Lost grant—User from immemorial time—Pleadings—New plea after remand—C.P. Code, 1908, O. 6, R. 2 and O. 41, R. 23. Lost grant—Presumption: 1968 B.L.J.R. 515: I.L.R. 46 Pat. 977.

87. Election—General.—(See also Note 38, supra). Improper rejection of nomination paper—Presumption. See A.I.R. 1957 S.C. 242; A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 12.

Just because the successful candidate in an election was unable to explain the circumstances under which a certain person came to be suspended and transferred to another place after a register had been obtained from the said person by the Commissioner appointed by the Court and after it came to be known that that person might be examined as a witness in the election petition, held, there is no justification whatsoever to draw any adverse inference against the elected candidate. [A.I.R. 1985 P.&H. 6, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 887: (1985) 2 S.C.C. 425.

Election—Candidate, an Advocate President of Bar Association and influential member of several organisations—His formal acquaintance with Returning Officer—No presumption of latter's partiality towards the candidate: 1965 Punj.L.R. (Supp.) 674: A.I.R. 1966 Punj. 66.

Where the returned candidate was found to be present on the spot and his agents or supporters indulged in assaulting voters and hurling bombs on them without the candidate stopping them, held, a conclusive inference could be drawn that such acts were committed with his or his agent's knowledge and consent: A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 24: (1984) 4 S.C.C. 649: (1985) 1 S.C.R. 1089.

As every election petition is required under S. 81(3) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 to be presented along with as many copies, attested as true under the petitioner's signatures, as the number of respondents and no defect was found therein, held, presumption being in favour of the regular performance of the official acts, the burden to prove that such copies were not presented with the petition lies on the respondent seeking rejection of the petition on that ground; his failure to examine the Registrar, the Stamp Reporter and the peon justifies drawing of an adverse inference against him. [A.I.R. 1964 Madh. Pra. 137, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Ori. 85.

Office-bearers of Municipal Council candidates for election—Office-bearers providing necessary civil amenities to public just before election—No presumption that all benevolent and public utility acts on the eve of election are done with corrupt motive: A.I.R 1966 Madh. Pra. 255.

88. Execution of documents.—(See also Ss. 101-104, Note 47, supra). Normally, when execution of a document is either admitted or proved and when no disabling factor or vitiating circumstance is alleged or proved, admission or proof of signature with the necessary formalities will be proof of execution with knowledge of the contents, atleast prima facie, for the purpose of shifting the burden of proof: (1990) 2 Ker.L.T. (S.N.) 35 .

There is initial presumption that a document is executed on the day mentioned in the document as the date of execution and it is for the party who contends that the document was executed on a different date to show that it was so. [(1968) 2 W.L.R. 55, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Ker. 121: 1973 Ker.L.J. 595 (D.B.).

In case of documents executed by an illiterate person, the normal presumption as to due execution cannot be raised. [A.I.R. 1939 Nag. 78; A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 274; (1869) 3 C.P. 704, Rel. on]: (1974) 1 Cut.W.R. 630.

Execution of document—Person admitting signature on document pleading that he signed it in blank—Presumption and onus of proof—Both parties leading evidence—Question of onus immaterial: I.L.R. (1961) 11 Raj. 103: A.I.R. 1962 Raj. 231.

Ordinarily, when a man sui juris and of understanding signs a document, such as a promissory note, after it is written up, and the same is produced from proper custody, it is reasonable to apply the presumption under S. 114, in favour of the person relying upon it and to call upon the person who impugns it to prove the special circumstances which invalidate it. When there is no plea of fraud or undue influence in the matter of the signature to the document, and his only plea of denial of execution is found against it, it must be held that the instrument is not only duly signed but also duly executed by him: 53 Mys.H.C.R. 1.

If the defendant pleads that he has left a blank signed stamp paper with the plaintiff, he has a duty to explain satisfactorily before the Court what prompted him to do such an act which is not a normal human conduct: (1990) 1 Ker.L.T. 456: (1990) 1 Ker.L.J. 332.

When a signature on a document has been proved, it is for the person signing to prove that it was affixed by him otherwise than voluntarily: I.L.R. 50 All. 145: 25 All.L.J. 883: A.I.R. 1928 All. 16.

Deed—Execution—Letters containin signature—Presumption of execution. See 1956 An.W.R. 1004: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 584.

Admission of execution of deed before Registrar—Presumption that the deed is valid: A.I.R. 1930 All. 605. When it is held that the document was executed with full knowledge of its nature and contents, the presumption is that it has come into effect: I.L.R. (1956) Trav.-Co. 606: A.I.R. 1956 Trav.-Co. 196.

Where there was no endorsement of the Sub-Registrar who registered a gift deed to the effect that he read it out to the executant, and the Sub-Registrar was not examined as a witness, held, it could not be presumed that he read it out to her. [A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 567, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1973 Mys. 338 (D.B.).

Where a widow sold a property and the deed was signed by the reversioners as attesting witnesses, held, that by itself was no proof that the reversioners had consented to the alienation; no presumption of legal necessity could be raised against them: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 138 (Cal.).

The normal presumption with regard to an alteration in a deed is that the alteration was made prior to the execution of the deed: I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 224: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 116.

89. Gift.—Gift by paternal uncle—Benefit to tarwad of donee—Presumption under Malabar Law—If applies: (S.) A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 77.

Persons setting up conditional gift failing to prove same—Held, gift must be presumed to be absolute: I.L.R. 36 Cal. 237 (P.C.).

Under the Aliyasanthana system of Law, where a gift or disposition is made in favour of all the members of a Kavaru, the law presumes that it is a gift or disposition in favour of that Kavaru and that the named persons will inherit the properties with the incidents of Aliyasanthana law or Marumakkathayam law: A.I.R. 1992 Karn. 290.

90. Husband and wife.—There is no presumption that a husband as such has his wife's authority to sell her property; he cannot even enter into contract on her behalf. The conditions which entitle a husband to act as an implied agent of his wife are that he could not communicate with his wife before executing the agreement and the course he took was necessary in the sense that it was in the circumstances the only reasonable and prudent course to take and he acts bona fide in the wife's interest; the implied authority does not however, extend, to acts which are outside the ordinary course of business and are neither necessary nor incidental to the authority. The wife living with her husband is presumed to have her husband's authority to pledge his credit for necessaries suitable to their style of living which is founded on the husband's implied duty to maintain the wife. This presumed authority is confined to buying of drinks, food, clothes, etc., belonging to the household department usually entrusted to the wife's management; the authority extends to household provisions and all other things incidental thereto. The presumption, however, does not extend to articles of luxury nor to extravagancy: A.I.R. 1971 All. 494.

Marriage by itself raises no presumption that the husband has a beneficial interest in the property standing in the wife's name; there must be some evidence that such property belonged to the husband and not to the wife: 140 I.C. 678: A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 829.

There is no presumption that the property owned or held by a woman necessarily belongs to her husband or that the funds for its acquisition were supplied to her by her husband or somebody else: A.I.R. 1957 All. 215: 1957 All.W.R. (H.C.) 179.

The possession of property by the husband or the wife, held, is to be presumed to be that of the spouse having the legal title thereto: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 291 (Ker.) (D.B.).

91. Idiocy/insanity, etc.—(See also Note 57, supra). There is ample authority that mere proof of idiocy at a point of time does not establish congenital idiocy; it is a fact required to be proved like any other fact and cannot be presumed; rather it is the sanity which is to be presumed unless congenital idiocy is established; thus, a person born in 1941 cannot be presumed to be a congenital idiot on proof that he was an idiot 23 years thereafter or from some years after his birth. [A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 364 and A.I.R. 1974 Mys. 61, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1982 Andh. Pra. 163 (D.B.).

Evidence—Appreciation of—Insanity—Proof: I.L.R. (1963) 1 Ker. 76.

Petition for dissolution of marriage on ground that respondent is incurable of unsound mind—It is for petitioner to establish such unsoundness of mind—There is no provision in law compelling respondent to undergo medical examination—Adverse inference can, however, be drawn against respondent for refusing to submit to medical examination: (1963) 4 Guj.L.R. 890: A.I.R. 1963 Guj. 250.

Presumption as to sound mind: 1959 Cr.L.J. 844: A.I.R. 1959 Madh. Pra. 259.

92. Impotency.—(See also Note 61, supra). Persistent refusal to consummate marriage by husband—Incapacity to consummate may be assumed: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 129.

Petition under Divorce Act, 1869, S. 18 by husband on the ground of wife's impotency—Wife deliberately refusing to give reason for not consummating marriage—Also refusing to submit to medical examination—Subsequent offer by her to consummate marriage found not genuine—Inference of impotency, held, could be drawn: A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 103: (1969) 82 Mad.L.W. 122: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 194 (S.B.).

93. Insurance.—(See also Notes 56 and 68, supra). For transfer of ownership of a motor vehicle the procedure under S. 31 of the Motor Vehicles Act has to be followed and till any such transfer is entered in the certificate of registration it has to be presumed that the person in whose favour such certificate of registration stands, is the owner: A.I.R. 1976 Raj. 75: 1975 Raj.L.W. 366: 1975 W.L.N. 607.

The person in whose name a vehicle is registered under the Motor Vehicles Act is prima facie entitled to its possession where in a suit for delivery of the vehicle the petitioner contended that vehicle was registered in his favour by the State Transport Department and, thus, he was entitled for delivery of vehicle but the accused contended that the petitioner sold vehicle to him vide a sale deed but it was yet to be proved that said document was executed in favour of accused by petitioner, held, the registration of the tractor stood in the name of petitioner at all the relevant times. As such, prima facie petitioner was entitled to get the delivery of the tractor: 1984 Raj.L.W. 370.

It is well settled that the contract of insurance of motor vehicles is a personal contract of indemnity; it comes to an end and the policy lapses as soon as the ownership of the vehicle is transferred; transfer of ownership can raise no presumption that the insurance policy stood transferred in the name of the purchaser. [A.I.R. 1956 Cal. 555, Dissent.; A.I.R. 1951 Punj. 114; A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 208; A.I.R. 1963 Madh. Pra. 164; A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 244; A.I.R. 1968 J.&K. 2; A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 347; A.I.R. 1973 Ori. 166; A.I.R. 1973 Del. 115; A.I.R. 1977 Raj. 121, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1983 Raj. 83: 1983 Raj.L.W. 56.

On failure to produce the original policy or its office copy and other documentary evidence, a presumption against the insurance company would be raised. The insurer in order to successfully disclaim its liability beyond the statutory limit has to establish that (i) it was only an "only act" policy; (ii) no extra premium was charged; and (iii) there was no special contract which facts are within its special knowledge; if it fails to do so by producing relevant documents and cogent evidence, the benefit of the statutory liability will not be available to it; the only irresistible inference would be that the insurance policy, if produced, would have shown a special contract covering an unlimited third party risk: A.I.R. 1994 Del. 10.

Where in a motor accident case the vehicle owner did not plead that the insurer's liability under the policy was unlimited and the policy produced in the Court was incomplete in respect of certain endorsements which had no bearing on the extent of the insurer's liability, held, the insurer was not bound to produce the policy; it would, thus, be not proper to draw an adverse inference against the insurer and fasten it with the liability to pay the entire compensation granted to the claimants: A.I.R. 1994 Ori. 236 (D.B.).

Where an insurance company in a motor accident claim case pleaded immunity from liability on the ground of breach of a special condition of policy, namely, that vehicle was being driven rashly by an unauthorised person at the time of accident, held, the condition in the policy bond did not permit the vehicle to be driven by a named driver. Any driver who was licensed under the law was entitled to drive the vehicle and when such a driver drove the vehicle, it must be assumed that he had the authority of the owner to drive the vehicle. There could be no breach of the condition of the policy on that ground: A.I.R. 1982 Ori. 51(D.B.).

Insurer denying liability on the ground that the driver did not have licence to drive, held, it was for the insurer to take appropriate steps to compel the driver to produce his driving licence; on its failure, the Court could draw an adverse inference: A.I.R. 1994 Andh. Pra. 320.

Acceptance—Signing of proposal form of policy by P on behalf of X as owner of vehicle—Insurer communicating acceptance to X by post—X keeping silent and not disowning ownership of vehicle—Held, X was owner of the vehicle and vehicle was properly insured: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 578.

94. Joint family.—(See also Note 60, Ss. 101-104, supra). Joint family property—Existence of—Nucleus: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 39.

Joint Hindu family—Property held by—Presumption as to: A.I.R. 1967 Assam 99.

Under Hindu law there is no presumption that a property standing in the name of a co-sharer is a joint family property: A.I.R. 1991 Pat. 145.

A Hindu family is presumed to be joint unless the contrary is proved: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 996.

There may be presumption that there is a Hindu joint family but there can be no presumption that the joint family possesses joint family properties: A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 1171: (1984) 3 S.C.C. 447: 1984 U.J. (S.C.) 679.

Though there is a presumption of a Hindu family being joint, there is no presumption that any property held by a member of a family is joint family property; the burden lies on the party pleading a particular property to be joint family property to prove it; either by proving sufficient joint family nucleus out of which it could be acquired or if the member proves it to be self-acquired, then, that he had blended it with the joint-family property. In either case, it would belong to the joint family. [A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 335; A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1076, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 520 (D.B.).

The existence of a property in the hands of a member of the joint family property, held, cannot be taken to be derived from the Joint family asset; there is no presumption that it belonged to the joint family: 1981 Hindu L.R. 686 (Mad.) (D.B.).

It is well established that if the property stands in the name of the co-parcener of a joint family, mere proof of the existence of the joint family owning some joint family property, does not give rise to any presumption and that it must be established that there was sufficient nucleus of the joint family for purchasing the property which stands in the name of the coparcener. Where in a suit for partition the plaintiff claimed that the disputed property was purchased from nucleus of the joint family and the defendant, who contradicted it, was in possession of the account books of the joint family but he failed to produce them, an adverse inference could be drawn that if such accounts were produced, they would go to show that the property was purchased from the nucleus of the joint family. [I.L.R. (1937) Bom. 708, Rel. on]: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 857 (D.B.).

If a joint family possessed property which was admittedly joint, the presumption would be that the property continues to be joint and the burden would lie upon the member who claims it as his separate property to prove that there was a partition and that he got it on such partition. This presumption is strong in the case of brothers. But there is no presumption that a family because it is joint possesses joint property or any property. Where a joint family did not have any nucleus out of which the impugned property could have been acquired by the joint family in the name of any individual member of the family, held, no presumption in law could arise that the property acquired by an individual member still belonged to the joint family and could in no case be the self acquisition of that individual member: [A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 85; A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 335, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 43: 1981 B.L.J.R. (H.C.) 146: 1981 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 141 1981 B.L.J. 25: 1980 Pat.L.J.R. 423.

When a joint family is found to be in possession of nucleus sufficient to make the impugned acquisitions, then a presumption arises that the acquisition standing in the names of the persons who were in the management of the family properties are family acquisitions: A.I.R. 1972 S.C. 2531.

Joint family property—New acquisition by manager in own name—Manager having no independent source of income—Presumption: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 906.

Acquisition in name of junior member—Nature of property—No presumption of self-acquisition—Principles applicable to self-acquired property in Hindu law not applicable: (1966) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 85: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 411.

A member of a joint Hindu family may acquire property in his own name; but he has to establish that consideration therefor did not come from the joint family but from his own moneys; in the absence of any material to show that the purchase by the karta was out of his own funds, held, the presumption that the property was acquired by the joint family prevailed: A.I.R. 1974 Mad. 51: (1973) 1 M.L.J. 388: (1975) 88 Mad. L.W. 509.

Where a joint family was not in affluent circumstances possessing sufficient and adequate nucleus, yielding a surplus so as to enable the purchase of the disputed property for the joint family but the respondent showed that he was provided with funds by his brother-in-law for the purchase of said property, held, there was no presumption raised in favour of the joint family property. [A.I.R. 1969 S.C. 1076, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1981 Mad. 62: (1980) 1 M.L.J. 492: (1980) 93 Mad.L.W. 734 (D.B.).

Hindu Law—Joint family—Existence of family nucleus proved—Subsequent acquisition—Presumption—Proof—Self-acquired property of member impressed with character of joint-family property cannot be disposed of by Will: (1967) 2 I.T.J. 315 (Andh. Pra).

Hindu joint family—Death of father—Mutation of property in name of widow of predeceased son along with two other sons—Possession of widow for more than twelve years—Presumption of maintenance grant—If justified: A.I.R. 1956 J.&K. 36.

Hindu law—Joint family—Acquisition of separate property by member—Presumption is that it is joint family property. [A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 379, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1970 Pat. 13 (D.B.).

Hindu law—Joint family—Dayabhaga—Acquisitions by member—Presumption as to character of: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 105.

Where sons are recorded as jointly owning lands, the presumption that their father owned it cannot be raised: I.L.R. 8 Lah. 30: A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 659.

Hindu law—Joint family consisting of father and sons—Father executing deed of a gift transferring some of the joint family properties to his unmarried daughter—All the sons attesting gift deed—Ordinary rule that attestor does not know the contents of document which he signs will not apply—Sons must be deemed to have consented to the gift: A.I.R. 1964 All. 64.

Where a theatre was mortgaged by members of a joint Hindu family during the life time of their father who would normally be the karta but he did not join in the transaction as he would have if it indeed belonged to the joint family and there was nothing in the deed that any of its executants was acting as karta, held, it could not be said that the theatre was a joint family property: 1981 Hindu L.R. 686 (Mad.) (D.B.).

A coparcener's right to sever from, and cause disruption in the joint family is not defeated by the general presumption of jointness; thus, where the deceased donor, separated from the joint family of his father, executed a gift deed, and another coparcener assailed the gift claiming to be of joint property, held, the coparcener had to prove his case; he could not rely merely on the general presumption of jointness: A.I.R. 1992 Madh. Pra. 297.

Where some of the properties, not included in the partition deed, were purchased exclusively in the names of some members of joint family, held, there was no presumption that they were joint family properties: A.I.R. 1975 Ori. 97: (1974) 40 Cut.L.T. 597.

When a property stands in the name of a joint tenant, whether he is a managing member or only a junior member, presumption is that it belongs to him, whether membership is of a joint family or marumakkathayam tharwad: A.I.R. 1991 Ker. 123.

Self-acquisition—Presumption of: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 147.

Presumption under Hindu law—Character of land—No evidence to indicate that land was self-acquired—Presumption of ancestral property: A.I.R. 1956 Him. Pra. 68; A.I.R. 1958 All. 42.

In case there was sufficient surplus from the joint family property to acquire other properties in the name of individual members, held, the presumption is that they belonged to the joint family; the burden would lie on the member claiming that a particular property was his separate and self-acquired property. The presumption of the property being joint, however, would arise if the property was acquired in the name of a coparcener, that is a male member of the family; if the acquisition is in the name of a female who can never be a coparcener, no such presumption can arise: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 243: (1985)1 Ori.L.R. 186 (D.B.).

Where grandsons claimed right by birth in the joint family in the house built by their grandfather on a leasehold plot acquired by him and it was shown that he had been selling ancestral properties to acquire properties in lieu thereof and it was in evidence that before acquisition and construction of the suit house, the grandfather had received as provident fund and insurance amounts far in excess of the amount spent in acquisition, had an independent income of his own as a Government servant and drawing a monthly pension of Rs. 450, held, the house was the grandfather's self-acquired property; it did not belong to the joint family: A.I.R. 1986 Del. 121.

Presumption as to jointness of family—Grows weaker in case of cousins according to degrees of relationship to founder—Slight evidence displaces it: A.I.R. 1961 Him. Pra. 10.

Presumption of coparcenary property (land)—Can be raised only if found standing jointly in the names of two brothers—No presumption can be raised from entries in subsequent jamabandis: 1983 Rev.L.R. 482: (1984) 86 Punj.L.R. 32.

Hindu law — Partition — Presumption does not arise by mutation proceedings unless the mind of parties was directed to it: 1970 Punj.L.J. 198.

Partition admitted or proved—Presumption: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 179.

Under Hindu law there can be an oral partition and once a partition is alleged then the law will presume, unless something is proved to the contrary, that there was a complete partition between the members of the family: A.I.R. 1980 Pat. 254 (D.B.).

Where the coparcener comes forward with a case of partial partition, held, the presumption will be that the partition was complete and burden will be upon the coparcener to show that it was not so: A.I.R. 1985 All. 133: 1984 All.C.J. 647.

Where in pursuance of an amicable arrangement for the sake of conveniently enjoying joint family lands, the three brothers looked after the lands in different villages but subsequently defendant contended that there was partition amongst the three brothers about 40 years ago, held, in the absence of proof of division, by metes and bounds, the presumption was that the family continued to be joint and the presumption was stronger as they happened to be brothers: A.I.R. 1991 Ori. 66 (D.B.).

It is elementary that the normal state of every Hindu family is joint; the presumption is that unless proved to the contrary, such a family continues to be joint; even the burden to prove an old partition still lies on the party which asserts partition; but where the partition asserted is ancient (more than century old as in the instant case), such burden may not be discharged by evidence, obliterated or lost by lapse of time; but the partition may be gathered from subsequent acts and conduct of the family members like record-of-rights showing the family lands to be joint in successive settlements and their joint purchases of lands about three decades earlier; the family continued to be joint: A.I.R. 1985 N.O.C. 60 (Ori.) (D.B.).

Presumption as to old transactions—Deed of family arrangement executed in 1895—Direct evidence with regard to fact of division of properties mentioned in the deed difficult—Presumption existing with regard to recitals in ancient documents must prevail: (1963) 1 An.L.T. 389: A.I.R. 1964 Andh. Pra. 326.

There is a presumption of jointness in a Hindu family; but on partition being proved, jointness comes to an end; the presumption then arises that partition was by metes and bounds unless it is rebutted in evidence by the other party. If the plaintiff pleads partition of shares but without division by metes and bounds and proves it to its satisfaction, the Court can certainly reopen the partition. Suit dismissed for want of such plea and proof when division by metes and bound and separate possession was established by the defendants: A.I.R. 1983 Pat. 129: 1983 B.L.J. 295: 1983 B.L.J.R. 400: 1983 Pat. L.J.R. 634 (D.B.).

Where a plaintiff suing through his next friend sued for a declaration that certain joint family property alienations made by the karta were null and void and sought partition and separation of his share claiming to be a person of defective understanding, an imbecile and incapable of protecting his own interest, held, such an averment cannot lead to the presumption that the plaintiff was a congenital lunatic and had no right or interest whatsoever in the family property under S. 2 of the Hindu Inheritance (Removal of Disabilities) Act, 1928; the burden lies on the alienee to establish that though she did enter into a mortgage agreement with the plaintiff under his signatures, he was a congenital lunatic having no right in the property and was incapable to maintain the suit. [A.I.R. 1962 Mys. 18, Foll.; A.I.R. 1960 S.C. 601, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 36: (1972) 85 Mad.L.W. 611: (1972) 2 M.L.J. 34 (D.B.).

Where a business was carried on by members of joint family, held, a presumption arose that business belonged to the joint family unless contrary was proved: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 46 (Gau.) (D.B.).

Succession to non-taluqdari property—Presumption is that it is also governed by rule of devolution on single heir and not by rule of Hindu law: A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 42: (1970) 1 S.C.R. 428.

Progeny of a deceased parent, if they are Christians, take their parental estate as tenants-in-common; they do not constitute a joint family as the Hindus do. There can, therefore, be no presumption that any acquisition of property by one progeny is for the benefit of other progeny or the family. [A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 653; A.I.R. 1947 Mad. 287, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1985 Karn. 231: (1985) 2 Karn.L.J. 61: I.L.R. (1985) Karn. 1645 (D.B.).

95. Knowledge of law.—There is no presumption that a citizen, what to talk of a villager, knows the law. It would be, thus, preposterous to presume that villagers, and more so of a backward State like Bihar would know the provisions of the Bihar Consolidation of Holdings and Prevention of Fragmentation Act, 1956 and the rules and the law of presumption as contained in Chapter VIII of the Indian Evidence Act. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 621; A.I.R. 1985 S.C. 1, Rel. on]: (1991-1) 39 B.L.J.R. 570.

It might be presumed that persons who are presumed to know the law observed it and that, when two acts are done on the same day, the one necessary to be done first to give the other validity, was, in fact, done first: 12 Nag.L.J. 86: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 257.

Every person is presumed to know the law, and the natural consequence of his act; and as per S. 105 of the Evidence Act, the Court shall presume the absence of exception. In such a case, the prosecution is not bound to show that the accused at the relevant time was not insane. However, thereby the onus of prosecution to prove the prosecution case beyond the shadow of reasonable doubt would not be effected: 1994 Cr.L.J. 450 (Ker.) (D.B.).

96. Landlord and tenant.—(See also Notes 45, 56 and 58, supra). If a thing or state of things is shown to exist, an inference of its continuity within a reasonable proximate time both forwards and backwards, may sometimes be drawn. Once it was proved that tenancy existed in favour of the defendant in 1957, it could be terminated only in accordance with the provisions of law. The burden of proof lies on the alleging party to establish that this contract of tenancy came to an end: (1972) 2 Sim.L.J. 13.

Residence at a certain place is a state of things; to prove its existence, presumption by itself signifies very little. A tribunal of fact requires a degree of probability commensurate with the occasion. The question of residence or non-residence is a question of fact, not of inference but of positive proof. The landlord cannot prove the negative only by his statement; the tenant is required to prove the positive; the burden at once shifts to the tenant to show where he was residing during the relevant period: A.I.R. 1980 Del. 110: 1980 Rajdhani L.R. 423.

Rent receipts are very valuable as evidence of the relationship of landlord and tenant, but the absence of receipts cannot, by itself, lead to the conclusion that there is no such relationship, more so when the dispute relates to a period before the Orissa Land Reforms Act came into force. (1976) 42 Cut.L.T. 981.

Where landlord accepted rent from tenant after filing a suit for eviction, held, it would not amount to waiver of his right to evict the tenant: A.I.R. 1978 N.O.C. 221: (1977) 1 M.L.J. 230.

Where a tenant of a large property had purchased half of that property, held, the presumption is that he intended to keep his tenancy rights in the unpurchased property as alive and distinct from his ownership of the purchased property; a person is presumed to intend that which is to his benefit; the burden to prove that the tenant intended to merge the two rights would, therefore, lie on the party which asserts it: A.I.R. 1973 P.&H. 204: 1972 Punj.L.J. 703.

Where the landlord had let out the premises after obtaining permission under S.21 of the Delhi Rent Control Act for a limited period and thereafter on expiry of that period applied for permission for letting out the premises again for another limited period, held, no inference could be drawn that from the very beginning the premises were available for letting out indefinitely: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 1184: (1986) 3 S.C.C. 1: (1986) 30 Del.L.T. 179: 1986 Rajdhani L.R. 478.

Where a limited tenancy under S. 21 of the Delhi Rent Control Act, 1958 was created for 2 years and upon the expiry thereof the tenant refused to quit despite his statement before the Controller at the time of the grant, held, in the absence of evidence to the effect that the tenant did not understand or accept what was stated by the landlord before the Controller or that the tenant and the landlord were in collusion or that the tenant was a victim of fraud or the weaker side in the bargain, it could not be presumed that the sanction of the Controller to create the tenancy was a nullity; having obtained the benefit of the sanction, the tenant was estopped from impugning the sanction. [1985 Rajdhani L.R. 492, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 1986: (1987) 32 Del.L.T. 354: (1987) 4 S.C.C. 1.

Permanent tenancy — Presumption — Question of fact: A.I.R. 1957 All. 346.

Presumption as to duration of tenancy: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 17.

Where a plaintiff proves that he got into possession of a land by settlement from the landlord and got a receipt from him, his possession would be presumed to continue till he is dispossessed: 1956 B.L.J.R. 108: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 92.

Permanent tenancy—Land let for building purposes—No period fixed—Presumption arises in favour of permanent tenancy—Right even to lessee to surrender lease at any time—It does not affect nature of tenancy—Lessee's right to surrender—Held, on construction of lease-deed that it created permanent tenancy: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 413.

In a case of zamindari property yielding rent only its collection by a claimant ordinarily is a very stable piece of evidence to support his case of possession: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 233.

Payment of rent—Relationship of landlord and tenant—Presumption. See A.I.R. 1955 Punj. 34: I.L.R. (1955) Punj. 94.

Rent—Payment of—Payment in certain form for number of years—Presumption: A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 65.

Consent of the landlord cannot be presumed or inferred from his failure to take the earliest steps for eviction of a sub-tenant who occupied under an illegal subtenancy: A.I.R. 1977 All. 155: 1977 All.W.C. 23: 1977 All.L.J. 236.

Where it was found on evidence that the exclusive possession of a part of the demised premises was with the sub-tenant and there was no satisfactory or acceptable explanation therefor by the tenant in an eviction proceeding based on sub-letting and parting with possession, held, it was not impermissible for the Court to draw an inference having regard to the ordinary course of human conduct that the transaction between the tenant and the sub-tenant was entered into for monetary consideration: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1845.

Where in a suit for eviction the landlord established that the petitioner-tenant allowed another firm to use his premises and the occupiers were not having any relationship with the petitioner-tenant, held, it could be presumed that the occupiers were paying money for the use of disputed premises. [1965 Cur.L.J. 341 (Punj.); 1975 Ren.C.J. 651 (Punj.); A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 280; 1976 Ren.C.J. 87 (Punj.), Dist.]: A.I.R. 1978 P.&H. 186: (1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 275.

Where a suit for eviction on the ground of sub-letting was filed relying on admission of tenant's brother before the Income-tax Authorities that he had exclusive possession of demised premises but the tenant was not a party to the affidavit signed by his brother, held, the fact that tenant had other business could not lead to the conclusion that he was not in exclusive possession of the demised premises as tenant or that he sub-let the premises to his brother: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 123: (1992) 19 All.L.R. 242: (1992) 42 Del.L.T. 46: (1992)1 S.C.C. 143.

Where on the tenant's going on deputation to another place his brother-in-law lived in the suit premises but on return he himself started living in the premises, held, subsequent event of the return of the tenant to the suit premises clearly showed that he retained control over the suit premises and that his brother-in-law never had any exclusive right of enjoyment of the suit property or any portion thereof; no presumption of sub-tenancy could be drawn: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 115.

Where in a suit for eviction on the ground of unauthorised sub-letting, though the landlord contended that the lease-deed entered into between the parties contained a clause interdicting any sub-lease without the landlord's written consent, but the lease-deed was not filed in the Court, held, it could be presumed that a valid lease-deed had been executed and it contained a contract to the contrary in so far as the tenant's right to sub-lease is concerned. [(1984)1 Ren.C.R. 299 (P.&H.), Affirm.]: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 770: (1987) 1 S.C.C. 712: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 642: (1987) 1 U.J. (S.C.) 610.

The landlord was refused leave by the prescribed authority under S. 3 of the U.P. (Temporary) Control of Rent and Eviction Act, 1947 seeking eviction of the tenant for his own use because his brother, with whom he was residing, had asked him to shift. Subsequently, on the commencement of the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Act, 1972 he again sought the same permission of the building as a whole or a part thereof as he had shifted to a single room accommodation which was refused by the prescribed authority but granted by the appellate authority. Held, the refusal by the prescribed authority that it was barred under R. 18(1) framed under the new Act for having been preferred within six months of the earlier refusal was misconceived; R. 18(1) is only a rule of presumption to serve as a guideline for the authorities if the circumstances were still unchanged; it is intended to avoid multiplicity of proceedings; it could not be construed as an inexorable legal prescription for rejecting the second application in the changed circumstances: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 255: (1989) 1 S.C.C. 1.

Suit for eviction on ground of bona fide necessity—Landlord not deposing about his bona fide need of accommodation—Court—If may draw adverse presumption. See (1978) 1 Ren.C.J. 365 (Del.).

Where the landlord sought eviction of tenants on the ground of bona fide of personal necessity as his family was fast multiplying but the tenants contended that the landlord's family members, being highly qualified, would not venture to live together under the same roof, held, the presumption that highly qualified members would not live together was too ludicrous and irrelevant; it would be unnatural to presume that the landlord's claim was ill-motivated and unreasonable. The notion of reasonableness and bona fides has to be appreciated in the context of the peculiar facts of each case; mere hypothetical generalisation of a legal principle would be hazardous: A.I.R. 1990 Karn. 121: I.L.R. (1989) Karn. 2095: (1989) 2 Karn.L.J. 131.

Under S. 23-D(3) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961, the bona fide nature of the landlord's requirement for the demised premises can be presumed only if the landlord establishes the factual basis of his requirement; it is only then that the tenant is required to establish the landlord's mala fides which he can do either by direct evidence or cross-examination of the landlord and his witnesses; it is only thereafter that the burden shifts to the landlord to prove bona fides of his requirement: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 154 (Madh. Pra.).

The presumption under S. 23-D(3) of the M.P. Accommodation Control Act, 1961 is only partial and is confined to the bona fide nature of requirement and does not extend to the other ingredients involved in the ground for grant of relief of eviction. The law does not by the said presumption seek to relieve the landlords of the special category of the burden of proving by adducing evidence the ingredients except that of bona fide nature of the requirement. There is no question of shifting of onus in respect thereof merely on the pleadings as distinct from proof: A.I.R. 1990 Madh. Pra. 106.

Where a case of eviction on the ground of the bona fide need was decreed by the High Court on the basis that as the suit premises comprised only of one room, the proviso to Cl. (c) of sub-S. (1) of S. 11 of the Bihar Buildings (Lease, Rent and Eviction) Control Act, 1982 which provided for a decree of partial eviction to satisfy the landlord's need, was not attracted, held, that assumption was fallacious since it pre-supposed indivisibility of the premises comprised of one room, irrespective of its dimensions and even when the room was big enough to permit division to satisfy the needs of the landlord as well as the tenant; the matter was remitted back to the trial Court to enquire as to whether the premises could be divided and eviction of the tenant from a part of the premises could substantially satisfy the landlord's need: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 489.

Where in a suit for ejectment on the ground of arrears of rent, the tenant stated that he had deposited property tax to Nagar Mahapalika which was sufficient to discharge the liability of rent and receipts were also produced in evidence, held, it could be presumed that the procedure for recovery of tax was followed and notice was served on the tenant for payment. [The tenant was presumed to have paid the taxes on being called upon to pay the same by Nagar Mahapalika]: A.I.R. 1977 All. 435: 1977 All.W.C. 715.

A and B taking joint tenancy under the landlord—The presumption of English law that a transfer to more persons than one creates a joint tenancy with right of survivorship in absence of words of severance is not available to A—The presumption here is that of a tenancy in common—After death of B his heirs will share the tenancy in common with A and A will not become the sole tenant under the landlord· (1963-64) 68 Cal.W.N. 786: 1963 Cal.L.J. 75.

Suit for ejectment and khas possession—Defendant 2 alleged to be in occupation under an illegal and lawful transfer of suit tenancy by defendant, the tenant, without plaintiff landlord's consent—Onus to prove alleged transfer by way of sub-letting is on the plaintiff—Suit must fail where he fails to discharge the onus—No presumption of sub-tenancy or sub-letting arises under the enactment in every case in which the tenant leaves the station permanently, as under the English Act: (1960-61) 65 Cal.W.N. 1175.

Question whether occupier is licensee or tenant—Test to determine indicated—Fact that the appartment is a room in a hotel may lead to the inference that occupier is a lodger or inmate—Inference, however, is not a necessary inference of law: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 933.

Zamindar and ryot—Suit for eviction by Zamindar—Burden of proof—Zamindar's right to evict—Presumption arising in such suit—It applies to suit between persons claiming under ryot: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 342: (1962) 1 M.L.J. (S.C.) 149.

97. Lost grant.—When a person was found in possession and enjoyment of land for a considerable period of time under an assertion of title without challenge, Courts were inclined to ascribe a legal origin to such possession, and when on the facts a title by prescription could not be sustained, it was held that a presumption could be made that the possession was referable to a grant by the owner entitled to the land, but that such grant had been lost. It was presumption made for securing ancient and continued possession, which could not otherwise be reasonably accounted for. But it was not a "presumptio juris et de jure", and the Courts were not bound to raise it, if the facts in evidence went against it. So also the presumption was not made if there was any legal impediment to the making of it. There will likewise be no scope for this presumption, if there is no person capable of making a grant, or if the grant would have been illegal and beyond the powers of the grantor. It is well settled that it is beyond the powers of a manager of a religious institution to grant perpetual lease binding the institution for all times to a fixed rent, unless there is a compelling necessity or benefit therefor. Where what is pleaded is not even so much as a permanent lease, because there is neither premium paid nor rent reserved but a Lakheraj grant unsupported by any consideration, that would clearly be beyond the powers of a Mahant, and no presumption of a lost grant could be made in respect thereto: (1955) 1 S.C.R. 1168: A.I.R. 1955 S.C. 228.

The fiction of lost grant rested and still rests upon the basis of long user, and though in theory the user is merely presumptive evidence, in practice and effect it is decisive. At the present, day it is the last expedient of a claimant who finds himself unable to rely upon prescription at common law or upon the provision of the Limitation Act. The same kind of user must be shown as in the case of prescription at common law, so that if it is vi, clam, or precario, the doctrine will not be invoked by the Court. Again in accordance with general principles, it must be clear that there was some person or body of persons to whom the grant might have been made; that there was a fee simple owner capable of executing the grant; and that the right claimed was one which might have been the subject-matter of a grant. The presumption of a lost modern grant cannot be rebutted by evidence that no such grant was in fact made. The doctrine is plainly a fiction; it is a means to an end, and the end is that some technical ground may be found for upholding a right which has been openly enjoyed: 1968 Ker. L.T. 940: I.L.R. (1968) 1 Ker. 323.

In order to succeed on the strength of the presumption of lost grant, it must be established (1) that the right has been enjoyed continuously for a long number of years; (2) that the exercise of this right was as of right openly and peaceably; and (3) that it was reasonable and there was nothing inherently wrong in it. The onus to establish the ingredients which raise a presumption of lost grant lies on the person who claims it. Where it is not shown that the right claimed had been exercised from time immemorial and the evidence adduced does not take one beyond the period when survey of rights were prepared, it cannot be said that the right had been enjoyed for such a long number of years as to raise a presumption that it had a legal origin: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 571.

It is a pre-requisite of the assertion of a right based on lost grant that there should be a clear proof of long possession as well as its enjoyment under a definite claim of right: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 246: (1984)1 Cal.L.J. 408: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 864.

Presumption of lost grant—When arises: A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 45.

There can be no presumption of lost grant in favour of a fluctuating and unascertained body like inhabitants of a village: A.I.R 1984 N.O.C. 246: (1984) 1 Cal. L.J. 408: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 864.

Where the finding of the High Court in the earlier title suit and the decree of the Supreme Court established conclusively that the properties in question belong to a Math, namely, the Bodh Gaya Math, and not to any deity or deities and, thus, the true origin of the endowments and the proof of title was not only forthcoming but was actually and designedly produced on the record to convincingly prove the nature of the grant, held, that being so, the plea that the origin of the endowment was lost in antiquity had no legs to stand upon. Consequently, the principles governing the case of a lost grant were not even remotely attracted: A.I.R. 1985 Pat. 129: 1985 Pat.L.J.R. 235: 1985 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 238: 1985 B.L.J.R. 254 (F.B.).

Where the evidence on record was that the Rajus (a denomination of Hindus) had been managing a temple for the past several decades and the origins of the temple are not known, held, the presumption of lost grant cannot be raised: (1992-2)110 Mad.L.W. 190.

Ancient grants—Presumption—Original grant not available—Grant whether burdened with service—No competent witness—No inference can be drawn that the grant was burdened with service of rendering puja, from the fact that grantees rendered puja and sheba. See A.I.R. 1955 Assam 23: I.L.R. (1954) Assam 242.

Where a compromise decree merely recognised the defendants' permanent rights of occupancy in the suit lands in their and their predecessors-in-interest's possession and enjoyment from times immemorial, held, in the absence of the grant or proof of its terms and conditions, there can be no presumption as to the terms of the grant. [A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 169; A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 65; A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 84, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 Andh. Pra. 24: (1981) 2 An.W.R. 290 (D.B.).

98. Maintenance.—In a suit for maintenance, the husband is given an opportunity to bring to the notice of the Court the facts and circumstances from which the quantum is to be fixed, Court does not pass a decree which cannot be executed. Accordingly, in the absence of any other material on the facts and circumstances brought to notice of the Court, an inference may be drawn that at the time of judgment husband had means to pay the amount decreed. Further, it can be presumed that such means to pay continued: A.I.R. 1992 Ori. 199: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 100. See also Note 62, supra.

Able-bodied husband presumed to be capable of maintaining wife and children—Rebuttal: 1968 Cr.L.J. 1153: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 174.

Where the plaintiff-wife, prior to filing the suit for maintenance, had issued a notice to and served upon the husband who denied his relationship with the plaintiff as husband and wife but did not choose to reply, held, having regard to normal course of human conduct and reactions in such a situation, this was a case in which a reply could be expected from a person in the position of the defendant in view of the defendant's allegation that the plaintiff was mischievously trying to foist herself on defendant as a wife. Having regard to the facts of the case, his silence, did amount to a piece of conduct susceptible of an adverse inference against the defendant: A.I.R. 1984 Karn. 112 (D.B.).

Averment by wife that she is unable to maintain herself—Not necessary—Burden of proof to prove contrary lies on the husband: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 75: 1981 Raj.L.W. 477.

Where in a maintenance suit, the husband pleaded that the wife was in receipt of the rental income of certain premises but failed to give any evidence in that regard, held, in the absence of material produced by the husband, the wife's version that she was residing in the premises and it was not let out to anyone was acceptable. [(1978) 80 Punj.L.R. 300, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1983 Ker. 139: 1982 Ker.L.T. 417: (1983) 1 D.M.C. 432.

Where a widow was in possession of ancestral property and was residing there, held, even though there was no direct evidence that the disputed property was given to her in lieu of maintenance it would be reasonable to presume that she had acquired the property in lieu of maintenance. [A.I.R. 1974 Raj. 147, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 Raj. 267: 1982 Raj.L.W. 301.

Claim for maintenance by Muslim divorcee on her behalf and on behalf of her daughter—Plea of relinquishment of claim raised by husband—Evidence and proof—Adverse inference against wife—Tenability. See 1981 All.L.J. 785.

Maintenance of unmarried daughter—No presumption from age and health of daughter about capacity to earn and to maintain: A.I.R. 1969 Punj. 285.

Claim to maintenance by a daughter under S. 20(3) of Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956—Ability to maintain herself —No such presumption can be made against a College going girl: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 288.

99. Mala fide.—Mala fide action or malice in law are not to be easily presumed. A party alleging these has to satisfy the Court that there are such facts and circumstances on which malice or mala fides could legitimately be found. The mere non-adherence by a departmental inquiry committee to the strict procedure followed by a judicial tribunal does not amount to either acting mala fide or acting contrary to natural justice: A.I.R. 1957 All. 671.

If there was material that called for action by the concerned Congress Minister or other authority in public interests in declaring a person as disqualified proprietor under S. 10(f)(iv), Orissa Court of Wards Act, the fact that it may have synchronised with the general elections would not be enough to establish positive mala fides: I.L.R. (1952) Cut. 529: A.I.R. 1953 Ori. 121.

100. Malicious prosecution.—Suit for malicious prosecution—Absence of reasonable and probable cause—If lends to presumption of malice. See (1978) 4 All.L.R. 652. Onus and presumption: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 91: (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 835: 1970 Cr.L.J. 819 (D.B.). Absence of reasonable or probable cause and action with malice are necessary ingredients—Both must be proved—Finding as to absence of reasonable cause is one of fact—Malice cannot be presumed—Finding based on presumption of malice is vitiated: 1965 All.L.J. 317.

101. Marriage.—Continuous cohabitation for a number of years between a man and woman raises the presumption of marriage. But it is a rebuttable presumption and, if circumstances destroy that presumption the Court cannot ignore them: 1961 Jab.L.J. 547: 1961 M.P.L.J. 244: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 93.

When a man and a woman live together as husband and wife and were treated as husband and wife for sufficiently long time by friends, relatives and neighbours, there is always a presumption in favour of their marriage. If children are born to such a couple, there is a further presumption in favour of their legitimacy. The presumption in favour of marriage does not get mitigated or weakened merely because there may not be positive evidence of any marriage having taken place. Though marriage ceremony said to have taken place may not be valid, the marriage can be held to be valid by force of habit and repute and the onus of rebutting such a marriage would be on the person who denies the marriage and the presumption of law in favour of marriage and legitimacy is not to be repelled lightly by mere balance of probability. The evidence for that should be strong, satisfactory and conclusive: A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 27: 1986 Mah.L.J. 186: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 29: 1986 Mah.L.R. 864: (1986) 2 Bom.C.R. 146: I.L.R. (1986) Bom. 1281; A.I.R. 1989 Ori. 10: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 482; (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 171 (P.&H.); A.I.R. 1994 Mad. 123 (D.B.).

Presumption as to valid marriage—Man and woman having cohabitation and living together for number of years—Presumption of valid marriage.

If a man and woman who could marry and enter into a valid marriage, cohabited and lived together for a long number of years, a presumption of valid marriage between them can be drawn. Even if the connection started originally as an adulterous one, it would not stand in the way of a presumption as to the matrimonial relationship between the parties being drawn, if subsequently they became entitled under law to marry each other. Even if the evidence as to the actual marriage ceremony between such man and woman is weak and not completely reliable, the presumption of marriage between them can be drawn from their long cohabitation. If the parties are at liberty to inter-marry, their relationship can be presumed to be matrimonial and can be evidenced by habit and repute: (1969) 1 An.W.R. 480.

Legitimacy—Connection between man and woman permanent—Presumption: 62 I.C. 769: 13 Mad.L.W. 511. A presumption of marriage may be drawn from long cohabitation, but if it is known that the connection started in mere concubinage, this presumption cannot arise: 98 I.C. 887: A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 48; A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 64; I.L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 299: A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 76.

Presumption in favour of marriage and against concubinage—Applicability to Hindus: A.I.R. 1960 Raj. 251.

The law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and a woman have cohabited continually for a number of years: 56 I.A. 201: I.L.R. 10 Lah. 725: A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 135: 57 M.L.J. 366 (P.C.); (1994-2) 114 Mad.L.W. 125 (D.B.).

Legitimacy — Law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage—Acknowledgment and reputation of legitimacy both being conduct are admissible in evidence: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 316.

The presumption of a valid marriage is rebuttable and in considering the question whether there is presumption of valid marriage, the circumstances such as whether the parties had married earlier and whether the said marriage is subsisting and whether the man has treated the woman as lawfully wedded wife in company of friends, relatives and other members of the society and whether their friends and relatives have treated them as wife and husband have to be considered: (1990) 1 An.L.T. 41 (N.R.C.).

When a man and woman are cohabiting continuously for a number of years, law presumes in favour of marriage and against concubinage: 1982 M.P.W.N. 60; 1979 All.W.C. 447: 1979 All.L.J. 858; 1983 M.P.W.N. 262; A.I.R. 1984 Del. 347: 1984 Hindu L.R. 761: (1984) 26 Del.L.T. 199; (1991) 1 Ker.L.T. (S.N.) 35 (Case No. 47); (1992) 1 Ker.L.T. (S.N.) 27 (Case No. 35). However, the presumption, is a rebuttal one. Those who question the fact of marriage can rebut the presumption by showing that the woman was not married to the man at all. The initial onus lies on those who deny the marriage to prove that the woman was not a legal wife but only a concubine: 1965 Kash.L.J. 337: A.I.R. 1966 J.&K. 75; (1995-1) 115 Mad.L.W. 487 (D.B.).

Where a man and woman were living together for a long time freely and openly to the knowledge of all the relatives and even had a child which of course died to the knowledge of all the relatives, held, it would be highly improbable that they were not married: (1988-2) 102 Mad.L.W. 354: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 95.

When a woman lives for a number of years in close association with a man and bear children, who are acknowledged by the man as born to him and relations and persons of the village treat them as such, there is a presumption of legitimacy, as vice and immorality are not usually attributed to such associations between a man and a woman: A.I.R. 1956 Mys. 17: I.L.R. (1955) Mys. 578.

Continuous cohabitation of a man and a woman as husband and wife and their treatment as such for a number of years may raise the presumption of marriage. But the presumption which may be drawn from long cohabitation is rebuttable. When such presumption has arisen from evidence, mere total denial of the husband that he ever lived with her cannot rebut the presumption. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 231, Rel. on]: (1970) 2 Mys.L.J. 15: 1970 M.L.J. (Cr.) 552: A.I.R. 1970 Mys. 305.

Whenever a man and woman lived as husband and wife for a fairly long time and were so reputed, law presumes that they are living as husband and wife and not in a state of concubinage. Presumption is both with regard to factum of marriage and legality of it. It is strong presumption as it goes to the root of the structure of society and the persons who challenge it will have to rebut it by clear, cogent and satisfactory evidence. This burden is heavy on them. [A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1557; (1968) 2 M.L.J. 411; I.L.R. (1975) Kam. 1973, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Karn. 40; A.I.R. 1994 Karn. 247 (D.B.).

There is a presumption in favour of marriage and against concubinage when a man and a woman have cohabited continuously for a number of years. After the marriage laws of Nairs have been defined and settled by the enactment of the Cochin Nair Act of 1095, when a man and woman governed by that Act are found to have been continuously cohabiting for a long number of years as husband and wife, this well-recognised presumption will arise in their case also and can be applied to them. But this is only a presumption upon a matter of fact, and is, therefore, rebuttable. If there are circumstances which weaken or destroy that presumption the Court cannot ignore them. What circumstances or evidence would weaken or destroy the presumption must necessarily depend upon the facts of each case and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in regard to that matter: A.I.R. 1957 Trav.-Co. 85: 1956 Ker.L.T. 830 (F.B.).

The marriage status being the chief foundation on which the superstructure of society rests, presumption of the marriage arising from cohabitation of spouses is a very strong presumption. Where a man and a woman had lived together as man and wife, the law will presume, until the contrary is proved, that they were living together by virtue of a legal marriage and not in concubinage. This presumption of law is the strongest of legal presumptions and is not lightly to be repelled by the mere balance of probabilities and the evidence repelling that presumption must be strong, distinct and satisfactory. Every intendment is made in favour of a marriage de facto and the more distinct, the date of the marriage, the more readily is the presumption drawn, based upon cohabitation and repute. The weight of the presumption gets strengthened when it is proved that the party whose marriage is in question distinctly intended to marry and went through a form of a marriage with that intent and also subsequently lived together as man and wife and were esteemed and reputed as such by those who knew them. The presumption still exists, even when there is no positive evidence of any marriage having taken place. English and Indian case-law discussed: (1968) 2 M.L.J. 411: I.L.R. (1968) 2 Mad. 138: (1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 200.

Marriage is normal, concubinage is exception; where a man and woman cohabited as husband and wife and were so recognised by their relations and the society, there is a strong presumption of their lawful marriage. But if there is positive evidence in rebuttal that the woman to begin with was a concubine or there was any impediment which would render their lawful union improbable, the usual marital ceremonies have to be established by direct evidence; otherwise, they would be deemed to be a lawfully married couple. [A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 135; 1957 M.P.L.J. 481; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 231, Rel. on]: 1978 M.P.L.J. 505: 1978 Jab.L.J. 483.

In spite of the presumption of marriage arising from long cohabitation, the burden of proof of marriage actually lies with the person who desires to prove it: 1945 Nag.L.J. 489. Also the relationship of concubinage once found to exist is presumed under the law to continue until the contrary is proved: 98 I.C. 887.

Where the parties were living as man and wife for more than 15 years, the man also admitted the position, held, a presumption of marriage could be raised. [(1968) 81 Mad.L.W. 200; (1978) 91 Mad.L.W. 168 (S.N.) (S.C.), Rel. on]: (1986) 99 Mad.L.W. 921 (D.B.); 1983 Hindu L.R. 487: 1983 All.W.C. 272: 1983 All.L.J. 597.

Where the parties were living as husband and wife for about 25 years and were taken as such by the world at large, held, there was presumption of validity of marriage between them: A.I.R. 1973 P.&H. 124: 1972 Cur.L.J. 221.

Where there was long cohabitation for over three decades between a man and woman and as many as four children were begotten, held, a strong presumption of marriage arose in their favour and no special evidence in that regard was called for: (1993) 2 M.L.J. 385; (1987) 3 Bom.C.R. 199; 1978 M.P.W.N. 44 [Cohabitation as husband and wife for 20 years.]

There is a general presumption of marriage from cohabitation with habit and repute. Where the parties had been cohabiting for more than 30 years and were being treated as lawfully wedded by all their relatives, friends and people in general and their issues were also considered as legitimate issues, held, a presumption could be raised that the partners were actually lawfully wedded. [A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1557, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 Bom. 172: (1986) 2 D.M.C. 165: (1986) 2 Hindu L.R. 229.

A long uninterrupted cohabitation for over 30 years with children born and acknowledged as such throughout and the husband having himself managed the divorce of the wife from her previous husband, held, the presumption of the factum and validity of the marriage is clearly, therefore, justified; the term marriage inherently implies a valid marriage; a marriage which is not valid is no marriage at all: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 887: 1981 Hindu L.R. 211 (D.B.).

Remarriage of widow—Evidence showing that marriage was performed according to custom obtaining in community—Fact of marriage was known to all village people and parties were treated and received as wife and husband—Oral and documentary evidence also corroborating probability of remarriage—Held, strict observance of elaborate ceremonies could not reasonably be expected in case of widow remarriage and when it was proved that marriage was performed in fact Court would presume that necessary ceremonies had been performed—Further, evidence was also overwhelming and sufficient to raise very strong presumption in favour of remarriage of widow: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 579.

Where the parties to the alleged marriage belonged to Marar Community where P.A.T. marriage custom prevailed, and the marriage was alleged to have taken place by such custom, the plaintiff failed to prove observance of custom of P.A.T. ceremony in said community and further the parties to the alleged marriage were living as husband and wife for more than eleven years, held, the presumption of valid marriage could be raised under S. 114. [A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 231, Rel. on]: (1992) 2 Hindu L.R. 562 (Mad.).

Where a woman came to the house of a person to look after his first wife suffering from T.B. and continued to live there, after the first wife's death, for long 15 years when she gave birth to his children, remained with him as his wife and was so recognised by outside world, in bank notices, election records, ration cards and school records of her children and was described in his Will as having lived with him as a devoted, sincere and faithful wife, held, the presumption of her marriage with the deceased could be raised; merely because the origins of the marriage lay in concubinage and on occasions—once in a suit—she was described or admitted, to be a "kept concubine" would not detract from the presumption: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 58: (1987) 1 M.L.J. 149 (D.B.).

Where a man and a woman were living together for a period of ten years which was much less than the period during which they admittedly lived apart held, due to long period of unexplained separation and absence of evidence of neighbours or local residents, it was not possible to raise the presumption of marriage: (1989-2) 104 Mad.L.W. 15.

Where the marriage of a Roman catholic couple was performed not according to Christian rites but as per Hindu system as they had adopted Suyamaryadhai, held, a mere living together as husband and wife for five months did not raise the presumption of a valid marriage between the parties: 1984 Hindu L.R. 129 (Mad.).

Where the parties have lived and cohabited together for a long period and were recognised as husband and wife by relations and friends, a presumption of marriage can be raised. But the presumption is always rebuttable.

In the instant case, the cohabitation lasted for less than 2 years. The man was a potter and the girl came from a Brahmin family. No near relations were examined to show that the parties were treated or recognised as husband and wife. The man had lived an immoral life having connection with several other women. Held, that the circumstances were sufficient to rebut the presumption and showed that there was a greater probability of the man having lived with the woman as his mistress: (1961) 2 Cr.L.J. 342: A.I.R. 1961 Guj. 141.

Where a man and woman cohabited for a long time and acquired the reputation of man and wife, their marriage, despite want of its positive evidence, may be presumed; but such a presumption is not available where the party could not prove the celebration of marriage; on facts and circumstances two and a half years of cohabitation found too short a period for drawing the presumption; no specific period can be laid down; it is to be determined on the facts of each case: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. (J.S.) 40 (D.B.); (1981) 2 M.P.W.N. 36 [Where co-habitation was not for long period and the woman claiming to be wife was found to be of loose character, held, no presumption of marriage could be raised.]

Cohabitation whether raises presumption of marriage—Cohabitation with public woman—Presumption is unavailable: A.I.R. 1968 Mys. 155.

Where in a case for annulment of marriage on the ground that the husband's previous marriage with his first spouse was still subsisting but the husband contended that since the first wife had for long been cohabiting with another man and had given birth to children who were recognised to be their children and, therefore, his previous marriage may be presumed to have been dissolved, held, in the absence of sufficient evidence to prove that the previous wife was cohabiting with any particular man, no presumption of her valid marriage or divorce from the husband could be drawn: A.I.R. 1974 Madh. Pra. 52: 1973 M.P.L.J. 626: 1973 Cr.L.J. 662 (D.B.).

Where a man and a woman lived as husband and wife for about 50 years, held, a strong presumption arose in favour of the wedlock: A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1557: 1978 U.J. (S.C.) 545: (1978) 3 S.C.C. 527: 1978 Hindu L.R. 697.

Continuous living as man and wife raises a presumption of legal marriage and this presumption is greatly strengthened when they are described as man and wife in municipal papers: A.I.R. 1934 All. 884.

A presumption of a marriage arises in a case where it is established that the parties were living together as man and woman and after the death of the man the latter was allowed by his reversioners to retain his property for a period of 41 years: 1937 O.W.N. 1221.

Where the evidence was that a widow after her husband's death lived with his first cousin as man and wife, had several children by him, and two were together cultivating lands and there was nothing to show that they were outcasted or their status as man and wife was repudiated, it would not be justifiable to hold that there has not been a remarriage: 18 R.D. 417. See also I.L.R. 12 Luck. 568: A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 298.

Even though the connection between a man and a woman was at its inception adulterous, the presumption of a marriage arises in a case where it is established that the husband of the woman had divorced her and after that they continued to live together, treated each other as husband and wife and were looked upon by others as such: (1933) 35 Punj.L.R. 532: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 517.

Presumption about marriage, when can be drawn. See 1979 Hindu L.R. 96: 1979 Marriage L.J. 236 (P.&H.).

Where a couple lived for considerable time as husband and wife till her death and the husband recognised her as a legally wedded second wife and her son as his own, held, a long and weighty catena of authorities raise a strong presumption in favour of marriage and against concubinage: (1987) 2 Hindu L.R. 27: (1987) 1 Cal.L.J. 94: (1986-87) 91 Cal.W.N. 733.

In the absence of any contention that any particular ceremony is necessary in the remarriage of widow with a second husband the fact that a woman lived for a considerably long time with a person as his wife will be sufficient to establish that she was the remarried wife of the latter. There would be a presumption of re-marriage in favour of the lady: A.I.R. 1957 Tripura 27.

Where no custom of prohibition of a second marriage during the subsistence of the first marriage in 1941 was established, some form of second marriage had been performed, the couple cohabited for 15 years, begot a son and they were recognised as such by their family members, relations and society, held, a strong presumption in favour of their marriage being valid arises; existence of the first wife not sufficient to rebut the presumption. [A.I.R. 1961 Andh. Pra. 320, Dissent.]: A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 330: (1970) 2 M.L.J. 193 (D.B.).

Where there was no direct evidence regarding the marriage celebration between the parties, but there were declarations made by both of them that they were husband and wife and they were admitted to be living in the same room, there is the strongest presumption that they were husband and wife: I.L.R. (1975) Karn. 1973 (D.B.); 1982 M.P.W.N. 53 [Where besides long co-habitation, there was evidence of Natra marriage and the deceased husband had also described her as his wife in the Will, held, a presumption of marriage could be raised.]

The fact that a woman was in continuous exclusive keeping of a man gives rise to the legal presumption that they were married notwithstanding the fact that the witness who testified thereto called it a mere concubinage. Lower appellate Court's finding set aside for no weight having been given to the presumption of marriage. [A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 135; A.I.R. 1952 S.C. 231, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1972 Ori. 143: 38 Cut.L.T. 39.

It is well settled that where a marriage was in fact performed, necessary ceremonies therefor would be presumed to have been duly performed; it is for the party challenging its validity to rebut the presumption by evidence that the form of marriage in some respect or the other is invalid; the witnesses to the marriage are not required to prove all the details which taken together constitute a valid Hindu marriage. [(1911) I.L.R. 38 Cal. 700 (P.C.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1974 Ori. 107: (1973) 2 Cut.W.R. 1108.

Once the factum of marriage is proved everything necessary to validate such marriage, including the observation of essential ceremonies, shall be presumed, particularly in a case of restitution of conjugal rights where the legality and the validity of the marriage has not been impugned either in the pleadings or in the evidence on the ground of non-performance of necessary ceremonies or otherwise. The requirements of a criminal prosecution as to the positive proof of essential ceremonies cannot, therefore, be imported in a civil proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights unless the performance of those ceremonies is specifically disputed: A.I.R. 1987 Cal. 213: (1986) 2 Cal.H.N. 386: (1986-87) 91 Cal.W.N. 456: (1987) 2 D.M.C. 442.

When some sort of a marriage ceremony is undergone, there is always a presumption of a valid marriage unless the same is rebutted by cogent and satisfactory evidence; thus, where the wife stated that the couple went to a priest who recited mantras, applied tilak to her forehead, made them exchange garlands, declared them husband and wife and the marriage was consummated and there was no evidence that saptapadi was a must according to their religious rites, ceremonies and customs, held, it could not be said that the marriage was not legal and valid. [A.I.R. 1984 Bom. 229; A.I.R. 1987 Bom. 27; A.I.R. 1978 S.C. 1557, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1153; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 713; A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 848; A.I.R. 1991 S.C. 816, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1994 Bom. 43: 1993 Mah.L.J. 923: (1994) 1 D.M.C. 49: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 531.

When celebration of some form of marriage is established, held, Court is justified in raising presumption of legal marriage arising out of long cohabitation: 1983 Cr.L.J. 1440 (Cal.).

Presumption—Marriage—Plaintiff and deceased defendant living in concubinage—Plaintiff alleging that marriage took place between them after the death of deceased defendant's first wife—Evidence to show that ceremonies like saptapadi and homam performed—Held, that the presumption as to the validity of marriage had not been rebutted: (1965-66) 70 Cal.W.N. 28.

Where admitted facts clearly prove that the man and woman had deliberately gone to, as pre-planned, Tirupati only to celebrate their marriage and paid necessary fees at the Tirumala-Tirupati Devasthanam which has a separate establishment for solemnisation of Hindu marriages according to the Shastras and the custom of the parties' caste and the marriage was performed by the official purohit, held, it is difficult to believe that the purohit did not perform the essential formalities, of homa and saptapadi, essential to a Hindu marriage; presumption of validity drawn: (1977) 2 An.W.R. 32 (D.B.).

Marriage—Presumption as to performance of essential ceremony of saptapadi from mere proof of presence of priest cannot be raised: 1965 Kash.L.J. 125: (1965) 2 Cr.L.J. 640: A.I.R. 1965 J.&K. 105.

Where an uninvited priest was present at the solemnisation of a marriage in kudivaippu form though his presence was not required, held, it is impermissible to draw an inference of the invalidity of the marriage merely on that count: A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 250: 1973 Ker.L.J. 332: 1973 Ker.L.T. 963: 1973 Ker.L.R. 228.

Where the solemnisation of a marriage in kudivaippu form was testified to by relations of the parties, held, it could not be appraised as that of interested witnesses; such marriages are conducted inside the house and are mainly attended to by near relations: A.I.R. 1973 Ker. 250: 1973 Ker.L.J. 332: 1973 Ker.L.T. 963: 1973 Ker.L.R. 228.

The presumption of marriage in the absence of any evidence of marriage ceremony or even unsatisfactory evidence of marriage may justifiably be made when the person concerned lived together for some period of time, and had been treated as husband and wife by family, friends and relatives. Where in a case of claim of maintenance by wife, the marriage as was said to have taken place was not proved and respondent was living with the petitioner even before the so-called marriage took place, held, in the absence of any satisfactory reliable evidence it could not be said that the respondent was married to the petitioner and had the required legal status of wife: 1989 Cr.L.J. 1540 (Gau.).

Where there was long cohabitation between a man and woman and the woman was found to be already married to another man and there was no proof regarding dissolution of her earlier marriage or death of her previous husband, held, presumption of marriage which arose due to long cohabitation, stood rebutted: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 173: (1981) 51 Cut.L.T. 513.

Charge of second marriage during subsistence of first one—Prior marriage must be proved to have been duly solemnised—There is presumption in favour of validity of marriage: 1969 Cr.L.J. 164: A.I.R. 1969 Cal. 55.

It is not obligatory for the complainant to necessarily prove in a case under S. 494 of the Indian Penal Code that all necessary rites and ceremonies were performed in respect of the second marriage; a conviction may be entered if there is other reliable evidence to establish the charge. Thus, where the first wife had produced the second marriage certificate indicating that the husband had gone through a ceremony of the second marriage conducted by the priest who had also signed the application for registration of the marriage, the husband's conviction was in order when the evidence of the second marriage was not controverted: 1992 Cr.L.J. 601: (1992) 3 Rec.Cr.R. 57 (Bom.).

A conviction under S. 494, I.P.Code cannot be sustained on the presumption that all the rites and ceremonies for a valid marriage must have been performed unless the observance of the requisite form and performance of the necessary ceremonies are affirmatively proved. A mere letter written by the co-accused woman, the wife to the second marriage, wherein she had stated that she had already disclosed to others that she and the accused-husband were already married and that she had to suffer very much from that marriage, held, cannot be relied upon for convicting accused for the offence of bigamy: 1992 Cr.L.J. 1502: (1990-91) 95 Cal.W.N. 472: (1991) 2 Cal.L.J. 71 (D.B.).

Though a Devdasi is, like any other Hindu woman, entitled to contract a legal marriage as also to a rebuttable presumption of marriage from long co-habitation but where she had had illicit sex and children from two persons and claimed to have married a third who, however, never took her to his village or his home and there was no evidence of their repute or social acceptance as man and wife, held, the presumption of marriage stood completely destroyed; a Devdasi is so low in the social scale that no respectable person would invite the public odium by contracting a marriage with her though the public might tolerate illicit union with her: A.I.R. 1972 Mad. 200: (1972) 85 Mad. L.W. 29: (1972) 1 M.L.J. 364 (D.B.).

Presumption—Long cohabitation as husband and wife—Presumption in favour of marriage and against concubinage is rebuttable—Connection between man and a Devdasi woman proved to be illicit in its origin—Presumption of marriage held rebutted: (1962) 1 An.W.R. 51: A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 260.

Where the woman belonged to Devdasi community and there was long cohabitation between that woman and a man and further there was no prohibition in their contracting a valid marriage, held, a presumption as to marriage arose between the parties: A.I.R. 1993 Mad. 346.

Where in a suit for maintenance it was contended that the entries in the electoral roll and kutumb register could not be taken as evidence of marriage, held, as the entries in the kutumb register and the electoral roll were made by the public officers in due discharge of their duties, there was presumption about their correctness until same was displaced by good evidence: A.I.R. 1980 All. 109: 1979 All.W.C. 698.

Where oral evidence of long cohabitation as man and wife was corroborated by documentary evidence like the enumeration register of the village prepared in 1944 and the birth register of 1943 produced by a witness who was then the chaukidar of the village, held, in the absence of any reason for disbelieving the witnesses, presumption of marriage can be justly raised as also the presumption of correct recording of birth: A.I.R. 1982 Mad. 354: 1982 T.N.L.J. 301.

Where the factum of celebration of some form of marriage is established and where there is evidence as to living together for several years as man and wife, held, from such reputation in the locality and entry in voters list as wife and husband, performance of prescribed ceremonies and valid marriage can be presumed: (1990) 2 An.L.T. 251; A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 358 (D.B.) [Where the parties lived together for a considerable period, gave birth to children and the ration card, voters' list and school register corroborated the relationship, held, presumption of valid marriage between them, clearly arose.]

Where (in the absence of any law prohibiting a second marriage for a Hindu male) the respondent claiming to be second wife asked for maintenance from her husband and there was no direct evidence regarding the factum of marriage, held, on the basis of long cohabitation and documentary evidence which described the daughters of the respondent as daughters of the appellant and school certificates, etc., a presumption could be drawn that respondent was the legally wedded wife of the appellant: 1994 Cr.L.J. 1125 (Andh. Pra.).

Presumption of re-marriage—Execution of sale deed in the joint name of the lady and her cousin brother cannot justifiably raise the presumption of re-marriage when it does not specifically mention the lady to be the wife of such person: 1976 All.W.C. (Rev.) 12.

Where a blind woman staked her claim to the properties of the deceased husband as his second wife admittedly living with him but the second wife repudiating the claim contradictorily deposed that the blind woman was kept for illicit relations and on grounds of mercy and there was evidence of the performance of the second marriage, held, presumption of the second marriage being valid may be drawn: (1994) 2 An.L.T. 445.

Presumption of marriage arising out of long co-habitation as husband and wife, held, is not rebutted merely because father of the husband, while executing his Will did not mention the name of the wife or her offspring or that there was no reference to her and her children in the compromise entered between the husband and his brothers: A.I.R. 1994 S.C. 133: (1994) 1 D.M.C. 484: (1993) 2 Hindu L.R. 517; A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 756.

Where a Christian lady who got herself converted to Hinduism and married a Hindu, was accepted as such by the community, held, their long cohabitation and conduct undoubtedly attracted not only the presumption but an irresistible inference of their marriage; she was a legally wedded wife and the children from the union were legitimate; her husband's ill-advised practice of describing her after enforcement of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, for fear of being held guilty of bigamy, as "Abhimana Baryal" indeed could not alter her status of a lawfully wedded wife to that of concubine: (1991-1) 107 Mad.L.W. 163.

Presumption as to validity of marriage from long cohabitation—Parties to marriage, Indian Roman Catholics—Marriage performed by Schismatic priest followed by long cohabitation—Everything necessary for validity of marriage will be presumed in absence of decisive evidence to contrary: A.I.R. 1960 Mad. 430.

But in case of persons who cannot prima facie contract a valid marriage living together as man and woman, there is no presumption of valid marriage: A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 343. Under S. 114, Evidence Act, continued cohabitation for a number of years with habit and repute may give rise to a presumption in favour of marriage. Habit and repute should be of that particular status which can lead to a recognition of lawful marriage. Where concubinage is recognised or connived at, the presumption becomes weak. On the other hand, where concubinage is not prevalent and is looked upon with disfavour, the presumption from long cohabitation and living together as husband and wife would be strong. But the presumption of marriage from long cohabitation does not arise where it is known to have arisen from concubinage. In such a case the presumption is that the concubinage continued till marriage is proved: A.I.R. 1951 Assam 148: I.L.R. (1952) Assam 74.

Where a Muslim woman allotted a share in the partition decree died during the suit's pendency and half her share was claimed by another defendant on the plea of their having been married to each other which was opposed on the ground that she was then mentally not fit to contract the marriage, held, the documentary proof showing that she was then in a lucid interval, a valid marriage between them is presumed to have been performed: A.I.R. 1976 S.C. 224: (1976) 1 S.C.C. 359: (1976) 2 S.C.R. 858.

Where the relation of B as the wife of the deceased M, an issueless last male-holder of property, is disputed and the evidence points to the fact of B's staying with M from 1984 Sam., to 1997 Sam. when M died but having regard to the lapse of time the case does not admit of clear and direct proof of the performance of "Chadar Andazi" then under such circumstances the Court has to fall back on the presumption of marriage permissible under S. 114, and see whether the opposite party has been able to repel that presumption by clear and cogent evidence: A.I.R. 1955 Him. Pra. 37.

Where a daughter claimed as a sole surviving heir of her father who had died intestate but the opposite party pleaded her to be an illegitimate child as her parents had not been married together, held, the burden conclusively lay on the opposite party to prove that there was no valid marriage between her parents and she was illegitimate; presumption under S. 114 also supports such view. [A.I.R. 1918 Oudh 103; A.I.R. 1957 Madh. Pra. 174, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Bom. 229: 1984 Mah.L.J. 345: (1984) 2 Bom.C.R. 356.

The question was whether appellants Nos. 2 to 4 were sons of the concubine of Dasharath Singh or were sons from his married wife. Evidence showed that Dasharath Singh brought her when she was a virgin. She lived for 25 years as his wife. It was not as if she was a widow or married wife of some one else. Held, that the aforesaid circumstances raised a strong presumption in favour of marriage and against illegitimacy: 1964 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 160.

102. Mortgage/pledge.—Mortgage by deposit of title deeds—Essentials—Intention to create security by deed—Presumption: (1964) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 162: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 430.

Possession of mortgaged property repeatedly changing hands—Presumption, if any: A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 293 (F.B.).

Mortgagee in possession of land and raising crops—Presumption—Evidence of receipt of produce if necessary: A.I.R. 1958 Mys. 43.

Presumption of fact—Mortgage deed endorsed by mortgagee as fully satisfied—Presumption of satisfaction: 30 Nag.L.R. 196: A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 29.

It may well be more usual that mortgagees do not advance money in excess of the value of the property which they take as security, but no presumption as to value can be raised from the amount of the loan advanced. Loans are advanced quite frequently without any security at all: (1953) 55 Punj. L.R. 41: A.I.R. 1953 Punj. 292.

Registration of mortgage document in one district—Memorandum to be filed in other district—Unless it is proved to have been so filed notice to purchaser of mortgage will not be imputed—No presumption can arise under S. 114, Evidence Act: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 236.

In a suit for redemption of an old mortgage where the original mortgagor is dead, and there is a lack of evidence owing to lapse of time presumptions are permissible to fill in gaps in the evidence which has been obliterated by the passage of time: 171 I.C. 174: A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 43.

Non-production of mortgage deed whether justifies an inference against the mortgagee. See A.I.R. 1982 All 503, cited under Note 58, supra.

National Savings Certificates issued by the Post Offices are its property; they can, thus, be pledged only by the Post Offices. Thus, where they were pledged by a contractor in favour of an authority under the signatures of the Postmaster as earnest money by their holder, held, the presumption arises that the pledge is proper; in case of any doubt it is open to the pledgee authority to inquire from the Post Office or the contractor; having made no such enquiry, the authority is presumed to have received the earnest money: A.I.R. 1994 All. 283 (D.B.).

103. Mahomedan law.—Applicability—Presumption of: 1957 Ker.L.T. 849.

Mahomedan law—Joint family—Claim to ancestral house—Ancestors related as brothers—Presumption as to jointness of family: 1966 B.L.J.R. 761.

104. Negligence.—Normal rule is that it is for the plaintiff to prove the negligence. However, in some cases this rule causes considerable hardship to the plaintiffs because it may be that the true cause of accident lies solely within the knowledge of the defendant who caused it. This hardship is avoided to a considerable extent by the principles of res ipsa loquitur. It means that an accident may by its nature be more consistent with its being caused by negligence for which the defendant is responsible than by other causes and in such a case the mere fact of accident is prima facie evidence of negligence. Where some wagons were derailed, held, the fact of derailment itself was sufficient to raise the presumption of negligence on the part of Railways but the defendant was entitled to rebut the presumption: A.I.R. 1988 Del. 88: (1987) 32 Del.L.T. 297.

Negligence—Presumption and onus of proof: A.I.R. 1957 All. 363.

Fire explosive in a display of fire-works, falling midst of crowd and injuring an onlooker—Negligence on part of person-making and displaying it must be presumed: A.I.R. 1968 Ker. 151.

Carrier — Negligence — Consignment of mangoes reaching destination 2 days late—Delay of 2 days not being unreasonable, no presumption that damage was due to delay of 2 days can be drawn: A.I.R. 1969 Ori. 100.

Where the combustible material was being stored in the store rooms which were in exclusive control and supervision of the defendant and only its workers had access to those store rooms who were in the habit of smoking biris and cigarettes inside the premises during working hours and the articles stored in the building were not self-combustible, held, a presumption could be raised that the fire was caused because of negligent act of defendant or its employees: A.I.R. 1979 All. 35 (D.B.).

When the plaintiffs succeeded in proving that a pedestrian (the deceased) was electrocuted from a live wire hanging down from an electric post, held, there was a presumption of fact that there was lack of proper care on the part of those in the management or control of the power supply system at the particular place: A.I.R. 1987 Ker. 253: 1986 Ker.L.T. 1124: 1986 Ker.L.J. 985: I.L.R. (1987) 1 Ker. 309.

105. Negotiable instrument.—(See also Note 20, supra). A cheque drawn, presented and paid is by itself no evidence of money lent or advanced by the drawer to the payee. It may be prima facie evidence to extinguish an existing debt, not to create a new one. A mere issue of a cheque in favour of the payee by itself will not be evidence of a loan, even if the cheque is encashed by the payee. However, it is open to the drawer to show by other evidence that the cheque was in fact loaned to the payee: (1980) 2 Karn.L.J. 202; I.L.R. (1974) 1 Del. 856.

In every suit on a negotiable instrument, the Court shall presume that such instruments were made, drawn, accepted or negotiated for consideration: (1979) 92 Mad.L.W. 225.

106. Partnership.—Books of accounts of partnership firm—Presumption as to genuineness: (1961) 1 M.L.J. 358.

While it is true that in a suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts, when the partnership is not disputed, the burden lies upon the other partners to prove that, though partnership existed earlier, but later either it is dissolved by mutual consent among the partners or that one of the partners had retired from the said partnership. But, where the plaintiff admitted that her signatures were obtained on blank papers and thus, did not dispute the signatures on the letter of retirement, but disputed the authorship of the contents of the same, held, the onus of proof automatically shifted from that of the defendants to the plaintiff and she had to prove that her signatures were obtained on the blank papers and that the letter of retirement was drawn up and fabricated. Thereafter, the defendants had to adduce rebuttal evidence on that aspect: (1992) 3 An.L.T. 77.

107. Paternity.—(See also Notes under S. 112, supra). Presumption as to legitimacy of children is rebuttable and burden is on person denying legitimacy: (1989) 2 Raj.L.R. 812 (Raj.).

Presumption as to legitimacy of child—It can be displaced only by proof of non-access: 1967 M.L.J. (Cr.) 311 (Ker.).

Where the son was born to a woman during the subsistence of her marriage with her previous husband even if it was alleged to be an outcome of an illicit connection with her subsequent husband, held, there is a conclusive presumption under S. 112 of his being a legitimate child: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 887: 1981 Hindu L.R. 211 (D.B.).

If a child is in possession of filiation acknowledged by the parents and has repute in the society, legitimacy should be presumed and if anybody challenges such legitimacy of the child, the onus is upon him to prove that the child is illegitimate. [A.I.R. 1918 Oudh 103; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 733 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1929 P.C. 135; A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 520, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1979 Cal. 3 (D.B.).

Fully matured child born after 212 days of marriage—Definite inference that wife conceived baby necessarily prior to actual date of marriage cannot be drawn. Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, S. 12(1)(d): A.I.R. 1970 Mad. 211: (1969) 2 M.L.J. 607: (1970) 83 Mad.L.W. 20 (S.B.).

The first defendant and a woman had been living together in illicit intimacy from about ten days after she left her lawfully wedded husband. A child was born within seven months after she left her husband. On the question whether the first defendant was the father of the child, held, there is no evidence that it is not a natural birth after the full period of gestation of about 280 days. S. 114 of the Evidence Act can be relied upon in such a case having regard to the common course of natural events and human conduct. If it is not a case of premature delivery, the coitus leading to conception should have come two months prior to the woman joining the first defendant after leaving her husband. In the absence of a finding that the first defendant was keeping the woman as his concubine at the relevant period prior to the marriage one cannot assume that he is the father of the child: (1967) 1 M.L.J. 102: (1967) 80 Mad.L.W. 25.

Child born after period of 280 days—No presumption of illegitimacy—Application of principles of English Law—Not barred—Burden of proof: I.L.R. (1963) Bom. 77: A.I.R. 1963 Bom. 165.

Illegitimate children — Proof of their paternity—Extract from birth register—Probative value of—Information for record in birth register supplied by mother—Not binding on presumed father—Presumption of law as to paternity—Burden of proof as to paternity in such case: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 107: 1962 M.L.J. (Cr.) 427: A.I.R. 1962 Mad. 141.

Where marriage between a man and a woman was not established and a copy of birth certificate was produced to prove the paternity of child, the name of the child as well as the name of father of the man were not disclosed in the entry, and no one was examined who had informed the authorities with respect to birth of the child, held, it could not be inferred that the man was the alleged father of the child: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 113 (P.&H.).

108. Personal law.—A Hindu is governed in India by his personal law; he carries it with him wherever he goes. However, prima facie, it is the personal law of the region which governs him. The burden is, therefore, on him to prove that he had come from a different region where he was governed by a different law and or special custom prior to his migration. It is then for the other party to prove that the immigrant had renounced the law prevailing in the place of his origin and had adopted the law of the region to which he had migrated; the onus, therefore, would lie on the person so alleging: (1990) 1 Hindu L.R. 306 (S.C.).

A Hindu family, migrating from one part of India to another, is presumed to continue to observe the Shastras by which it was governed, and the presumption can only be displaced by showing that the immigrant has renounced the law of his place of origin and adopted the law of the place to which he had migrated: A.I.R. 1973 Pat. 160.

Presumption of continuance of status—Hindu law—Migrating family—Law applicable—Presumption of continuance of original law—Agarwals in Berar—Adoption by—Applicability of customary law: A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 79.

Presumption as to personal law—Halbi Koshtis of Central Provinces are not governed by Bombay School of law: A.I.R. 1957 Nag. 76.

Molesalam Garasias of Baroda Territory—No presumption that whole Hindu law applies to them: A.I.R. 1968 Guj. 229.

109. Pleader and client.—There is a presumption that a Counsel acts on the instructions of the client: A.I.R. 1976 All. 64: 1976 All.L.J. 667. See also A.I.R. 1954 Mad. 741, cited under Note 48, supra.

The statement in the notice by the Advocate that he had served it under the instructions of his client is not open to challenge and one has to proceed on the basis that the notice was in fact served by the client and not by the Counsel: 1979 All.L.J. 1348.

110. Possession — General. — Possession —Presumption. See 1963 Ker.L.J. 597.

The presumption that possession follows title cannot be called in aid by the plaintiff to prove his case of possession within twelve years before the institution of the suit in two cases: (1) when he has not adduced any evidence of possession at all, and (2) when his evidence is quite unworthy of credit, and is tantamount to his having not adduced any evidence at all. But where the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff is not altogether valueless, the probabilities of the case and the presumption can be called in aid for the purpose of holding that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving his case of possession within twelve years before suit: A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 562.

The presumption that possession goes with title is not limited to particular kinds of cases where proof of actual possession is impossible on account of the nature of land such as boundary land, forest land or submerged land. The presumption applies to all kinds of land and where the plaintiff proved his title but not any act of possession and the defendant did not prove possession except at some intervals within 12 years of the suit, the presumption that possession follows title will come into play. [(1873) 20 W.R. 25 (P.C.) ; A.I.R. 1958 S.C. 434; 1962 Ker.L.T. 577, Rel. on; 1966 Ker.L.T. 86; 1966 Ker.L.T. 93, held no longer good law]: 1970 Ker.L.J. 320: 1970 Ker.L.T. 279: A.I.R. 1970 Ker. 310.

A presumption of title on the basis of possession is permissible only if the facts on record do not disclose another party's title to the property; thus, where the plaintiff seeking ouster of the defendant proved his title on the basis of a compromise decree and the defendant was found to be an encroacher on a portion of the suit property, held, it could not be presumed that the title to that portion vested in the defendant; the suit deserves to be decreed. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1165, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1990 N.O.C. 77 (Gau.).

The presumption that an open piece of land is in its owner's possession unless the trespasser by its substantial acts of possession excites the owner's attention to his having been dispossessed, held, is applicable to a jungle land situate in a village and not to a land situate in a crowded locality of Lucknow. [(1911) 8 All.L.J. 1176 (P.C.), Expl.]: A.I.R. 1973 All. 328.

Onus to show that possession was lawful is on accused—Mode of discharge of onus: 28 Cut.L.T. 17.

Land held by occupancy tenant at the time of regular settlement—Presumption—When rebutted. See A.I.R. 1958 Punj. 333.

Property, a waste land incapable of effective enjoyment—Title thereto found vested in plaintiff—Held, presumption arose that possession followed title: I.L.R. 45 Pat. 1553: (1966) 3 S.C.R. 663: A.I.R. 1966 S.C. 1931.

Where an open field, with no crop standing, is sold by the vendors and one of them puts the vendee by saying so to him at site, held, the possession is taken to have been transferred to the vendee: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 340: (1981) 1 Guj.L.H. 967.

Where there was no direct evidence of possession of a land by the father, and the areas in the possession of his sons at the time of the first settlement were dissimilar, the periods of cultivation of the brothers were also dissimilar and they had separate houses within their respective holding, held, that it could not be presumed that the land must have been in the possession of the father: A.I.R. 1957 Him. Pra. 67.

In a case of zamindari property yielding rent only its collection by a claimant ordinarily is a very stable piece of evidence to support his case of possession: A.I.R. 1956 Pat. 233.

Oral lease not exceeding one year—Kabuliat by lessee only—Lessee going into possession—Presumption. See A.I.R. 1954 All. 475.

Whereas lessee of a wakf property prima facie proves a heritable right in the tenure at a fixed rate an assumption that the grant was originally lawful can be made. The presumption of an origin in some lawful title which the Court has so often readily made in order to support possessory rights, long and quietly enjoyed where no actual proof of title is forthcoming, is one which is not a mere branch of the law of evidence. It is resorted to because of the failure of actual evidence. The matter is one of presumption based upon the policy of law but even considered as an inference from proved facts the grant presumed is the thing which may well be regarded as likely to have happened. At the same time it is not a presumption to be capriciously made nor is it one which a certain class of possessors is entitled to de jure: I.L.R. 57 Cal. 1293: A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 103: 58 M.L.J. 641 (P.C.).

Presumption as to possession—Pakani Patrika—Name of X shown in the column of "Cultivators" for some years—Column left blank in subsequent years—Presumption is that X continued in possession in those subsequent years also—There is no warrant for assuming that the owner re-entered into possession in those years: (1979) 1 An.W.R. 58.

Where certain property was acquired by wife and children forming tavazhi by themselves, held, it could be presumed that said acquisition was on behalf of tavazhi. [A.I.R. 1975 Ker. 70 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1957 Ker. 27; 1975 Ker.L.T. 434, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1982 N.O.C. 234: I.L.R. (1982) 2 Ker. 377.

111. Pre-emption.—Where a piece of land on which was situate a gharat was sold and sought to be pre-empted by a co-sharer only in respect of land which alone was sold as per the sale deed and the pre-emptor had no claim to the gharat, held, it could not be presumed that the pre-emption sought was only in respect of a portion of the property sold when the plaintiff had sued for being substituted for the vendee in the sale deed and did not ask for deduction of consideration for the gharat: A.I.R. 1983 Him. Pra. 71: 1983 Sim.L.C. 199: I.L.R. (1983) Him. Pra. 77.

Pre-emption—Suit for, brought by minor son of one of vendors—Defence that suit was collusive at the instance of vendors—Onus on vendees to prove that suit was for vendor's benefit—Finding that vendees failed to establish it is finding of fact: 1964 Cur.L.J. 427 (Punj.).

Non-production of sale deed by the pre-emptors—Effect. See A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 2367, cited under Note 58, supra.

112. Trust.—Trusts Act, 1882, S. 82—Intention and presumption—Property purchased in name of sons—Merely on that ground no presumption can be drawn that property was purchased by sons with their own money: (1967) 69 Punj.L.R. 119.

Temple in South India, excluding Malabar and Kerala—Presumption is that it is public temple: (1966) 1 M.L.J. 109: A.I.R. 1966 Mad. 99.

The Court cannot draw adverse inference against the reigning Mahant for his failure to produce original Sanads in favour of the founding Mahant when the burden of proving that the properties of the temple were held by the reigning Mahant on trust for public purposes of a religious or charitable character was on the State Board of Religious Trust, who alleged that it was so. [A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 195, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 2057.

It is open to the Commissioner even at the stage of S. 6 of the A.P. Charitable and Hindu Religious Institutions and Endowments Act, 1987 to rely on the statutory presumption raised under S. 87(6) of that Act and proceed on the basis that an institution or an endowment is a public one: (1990) 2 An.L.T. 656: A.I.R. 1991 N.O.C. 25 (D.B.).

Where it was established that the petitioners and their ancestors had been enjoying the trusteeship for more than a century without any interruption, held, the presumption could be raised that they had been functioning as trustees from the time of its founder satisfying the definition of "hereditary trustee" in the Orissa Hindu Religious Endowment Act, 1951: A.I.R. 1984 Ori. 187.

113. Undue influence.—Undue influence—Presumption of: A.I.R. 1959 Mys. 102.

An employee merely averring that his signatures on his resignation were obtained by undue influence or coercion is not entitled to adduce evidence unless he pleads necessary particulars thereof; in the absence of such plea and proof, the Labour Court cannot draw an adverse inference which would render such resignation within the expression "otherwise terminates" within the meaning of S. 26(2) of the Bihar Shops and Establishments Act, 1953: (1989-1) 37 B.L.J.R. 555.

Where the executrix aged 75 and a patient of cancer, was living with and under the care of her close relation, that is, he was younger brother of her adopted son and was in a position to dominate her will and had obtained substantial benefit under the deed by way of agricultural land, held, whether or not he had used his influence over the executrix to obtain the advantage, could be established by the beneficiary by his own evidence; by not appearing as a witness in the suit, an adverse inference has to be drawn against him; as the deed prima facie appears to be unconscionable, the burden shifted on to him to prove that the deed was executed by the executrix without undue influence: A.I.R. 1975 Madh. Pra. 136: 1975 M.P.L.J. 156: 1975 Jab.L.J. 333 (D.B.).

Inferences arising from relationships between a testator and a legatee are certainly dependent upon the peculiarities of the society or community they belong to, their habits and customs, their values, modes and ways of thinking, their feeling, susceptibilities to particular pressures, influences and inducements; it is very difficult to reduce them to a general rule for all times and every where so as to raise the presumption of undue influence from a particular type of relationship. The only kinds of relationship raising such presumptions are those contemplated under S. 111. Other presumptions from a relationship can only be raised under S. 114; they are optional presumptions of fact based on proof of frequently recurring set of facts reasonably and naturally following therefrom, undue influence is only a matter of proof on established facts: A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 1999: (1974) 2 S.C.C. 600.

Merely because a Police Station is situated adjacent to Court hall, held, pressure or influence on accused on that account cannot be presumed: 1983 Cr.L.J. (N.O.C.) 95: 1981 Mad.L.W. (Cr.) 227: 1982 M.L.J. (Cr.) 96.

114. Will.—(See also S. 68). Will—Ancient—Execution—Evidence and proof—Probabilities—Will rational in character executed in presence of witnesses—Presumption that testator was of sound mind is justified—Absence of surname in signature of testator—Not suspicious: A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 29.

Will more than forty-five years old—Presumption as to soundness of testator's mind at time of execution—Proof of handwriting of attesting witnesses sufficient to prove soundness of mind of executor: A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 4.

Where a Will was proved by reliable and cogent evidence to have been executed, held, it could be presumed that the executor was sane and possessed of sound testamentary capacity; merely because some of the natural heirs had been deprived of their inheritance is not sufficient to negative the presumption: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 51 (P.&H.).

Where a Will was proved by examining two attesting witnesses and the third witness though summoned through the Court and personally requested to appear as a witness but he did not, held, for non-examination of the third witness, no adverse inference could be drawn against the propounder; it was not incumbent upon him to compel the third witness to appear in the Court by resorting to O. 16, R. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure: A.I.R. 1985 Cal. 349: (1984-85) 89 Cal.W.N. 832 (D.B.).

Where the testatrix was a highly educated person with rich worldly experience and had retired from Government service whereas the legatee was her sister who was also highly educated working as the head of an educational institution and living far away from the testatrix and the testatrix herself had presented the Will for registration and the Registrar also gave evidence to support the story and the testatrix died nearly 12 years after the registration of the Will, held, unless a definite case was pleaded to the contrary, the Court was not entitled to make surmises and assume anything contrary to the document, i.e., Will: (1992-2) 110 Mad.L.W. 523: (1993) 1 Hindu L.R. 406: (1993) 1 M.L.J. 95.

Where a Will has been properly executed and registered by the testator but not found at the time of death, the question whether the presumption that the testator had revoked the Will can be drawn or not will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. Even if such a presumption is drawn it is rather a weak one in view of the habits and conditions of our people. [A.I.R. 1967 Del. 128, Reversed]: A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 145.

Where the original Will was not found at the time of the death of the testatrix and there was no change in circumstances after the execution of the Will on account of which the testatrix might have revoked the Will, held, it could not be presumed that the Will was cancelled by testatrix. [A.I.R. 1979 S.C. 145, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 P.&H. 402.

Where the certified copy of a Will executed and registered in 1941 in Burma was produced by a party in the Court in India and there was ample evidence on record to show that it was the husband of a party therein who was interested in keeping back the Will but he was not produced as a witness even when he had taken keen interest in the litigation and its outcome, held, the Court may draw adverse inference against the party which failed to examine him as a witness: A.I.R. 1973 Mad. 421: (1972) 2 M.L.J. 508: (1973) 86 Mad.L.W. 122 (D.B.).

Revocation of Will—Presumption—Will in possession of testator. See A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 657.

115. Miscellaneous.—Where the title-deed, i.e., the sale deed, shows that the land is the property of a certain person, there is a presumption of fact in the absence of evidence to the contrary that the bungalow and the wells constructed thereon are his property, specially when it is not unlikely that he had some money to spare for that purpose: 1949 Nag.L.J. 261: A.I.R. 1949 Nag. 378.

Attestation—Evidence of one attesting witness falling short of proof of due attestation of document—On body of document two persons appearing to be attesting witnesses—Held, one could not presume from such signature that document was attested by other signatory also: (1967) 33 Cut.L.T. 811: I.L.R. (1967) Cut. 593.

Relinquishment of rights, in property—Person with certain rights, in property, dead—Inference that such person gave up the rights should not be lightly made: I.L.R. (1966) 2 Mad. 173: (1967) 1 M.L.J. 96: A.I.R. 1967 Mad. 404.

Plaintiff's land adjoining defendant's house—Land lying to north of defendant's house—Defendant opening door in north wall of his house with the purpose of having access to north—Plaintiff is entitled to relief for apprehended trespass against his land: A.I.R. 1963 All. 239.

Agricultural land—Presumption as to forest lands in Kerala: A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 304.

Madras Marumakkathayam Act (XXII of 1933), S. 33—Tarwad yielding appreciable income—Acquisition by manager—Presumption is that acquisition enures to tarwad: 1968 Ker.L.R. 273.

Documents entered into with pardanashin lady—Presumption: (1966) 8 Ori.J.D. 94 (See also Note 80, Ss. 101-104, supra).

The fact that a certain sum is paid towards the principal on a certain date does not justify the conclusion that the interest up to that date has been paid. In fact it is not a matter of presumption or inference at all: I.L.R. (1950) 2 Assam 137: A.I.R. 1950 Assam 216.

Presumption of a bill of lading: A.I.R. 1968 Mad. 42.

A document on plain paper unstamped and unregistered and not produced till it was filed, is presumed to be not genuine: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 78.

Recitals in documents—Presumption of correctness—Held, that the recitals in the documents should not be accepted at their face value and their truth should be scrutinized in the light of other evidence: A.I.R. 1957 Andh. Pra. 744: (1957) 1 An.W.R. 31.

Where the facts actually brought on the record clearly show that certain document does not represent the factual situation correctly, there is no occasion for raising the presumption that prima facie tenor of a document represents the correct situation: (1960) 62 Punj.L.R. 224: A.I.R. 1960 Punj. 417.

Where the defendant raised no plea of the original agreement being insufficiently stamped in the trial Court and no specific issue on that point was framed and the original document was lost from the Court's custody, held, the presumption is that the document was properly stamped; the objection regarding it being insufficiently stamped could not be raised for the first time in appeal: A.I.R. 1989 Pat. 96.

Where respondent did not file any counter-affidavit denying the correction or genuineness of the documents on which reliance was placed by the petitioner, held, it was not open to the respondent to dispute the correctness or genuineness of the statement. However, that did not lead to a presumption of facts against respondent: A.I.R. 1991 Mad. 61.

Where there was no recital regarding transfer of embankment between two field, held, presumption regarding half of embankment belonging to each field's owner may be drawn: (1981) 2 M.P.W.N.64.

In ordinary cases the absence of a receipt for the deposit of money would throw very great doubt on the case of deposit. (In this case, having regard to the relationship between the parties, the Court did not draw any adverse inference against the alleged depositor for not having a receipt from his uncle evidencing the deposit): A.I.R. 1960 Cal. 484.

Where a customer, namely, an account holder in bank, even without any express grant of an over-draft facility overdraws on his account and the cheque issued by him is honoured, the transaction amounts to a loan and the customer is bound to make good the loan to the bank with reasonable interest: A.I.R. 1985 Bom. 432: 1985 Mah.L.J. 461: I.L.R. (1985) Bom. 1856 (D.B.).

Where grants did not expressly include the river bed within their compass, held, notwithstanding ending the legal position in America or in England it is fairly settled in India, tidality is not an essential basis to determine the river bed's ownership; if, at the relevant point, the river is either tidal or navigable, the presumption is that the river bed at those points vests in the Government: A.I.R. 1973 Andh. Pra. 281: (1973) 1 An.W.R. 218 (D.B.).

Water course running on anothers land—Right to user—Presumption: 1960 Cr.L.J. 1388: A.I.R. 1960 All. 656.

Plea of D that P had transferred to him only tenancy and not goodwill of business—When business run by P and D is same and premises are located in business locality, conclusion is that goodwill must have necessarily passed: A.I.R. 1968 Raj. 278.

Infringement of patent—Defendant admitting production of same drug—Presumption of infringement against defendant: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 255.

Audit notes prepared under S. 17, Co-operative Societies Act, 1912—Presumption as to correctness of their contents—Cannot be made under section: A.I.R. 1970 Punj. 203: (1970) 72 Punj.L.R. 60.

Speed is good; haste is bad; and it is desirable that one should hasten slowly. Whether it was case of haste or speed would depend upon the objective situation found on an overall appraisal. Thus, where the petitioner, a shareholder of the respondent-company, challenged the consent of the Collector of Capital Issues granted for the issue of shares to the respondent-company on the ground that as the consent was granted within hardly a period of two months from the date of filing an application regarding such consent, it reflected undue haste and favouritism, held, the material showed that the details of the proposals had been examined and discussed and that an examination of the merits had not been a casualty due to the speed with which the application was processed, especially in view of the fact that no injury had been caused to the investors and no substantial loss to their securities had been occasioned. Hence, it was difficult to say that the period of two months taken in granting consent by the Collector was so short that an inference of haste must follow: A.I.R. 1989 S.C. 2138.

Rectification of register—Powers of directors—Doctrine of estoppel and that of indoor management—Protection under when available—Transfer of shares by member to non-member—Transferee's name registered in company's register but cancelled subsequently without notice to transferee—Transfer not ultra vires—Transferee, held, was entitled to protection: I.L.R. (1962) 2 Punj. 52: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 277.

Companies Act, 1956, Ss. 433, 434, 466—Inability to pay debts—Disputed debts—Company Court if can consider legality of debt—Procedure to be adopted in event of genuine dispute regarding a debt in winding up proceedings—Decretal debt stands on the same footing as any ordinary debt: (1967) 1 Comp.L.J. 172 (Cal.).

Succession—Presumption in favour of collateral adversely affecting female rights—Inconsistent with prevailing custom—Presumption must be deemed to be rebutted: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 806.

Failure to implead legal representative within time—Presumption of fraud: (S.) A.I.R. 1957 Raj. 154.

Question affecting limitation—Onus: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 399.

An inference of approbation of a book of an objectionable character by persons having access to the library of an individual or association possessing it is not necessarily justifiable: 16 I.C. 257: (1911-12) 16 Cal.W.N. 1105.

Cl. (da) of the Navodaya Vidyalaya Scheme does not lay down that students who had not studied in recognised rural schools in classes III, IV and V shall not be eligible for admission in the quota reserved for rural students in the Vidyalayas; it merely states that those having studied in the rural recognised schools shall be presumed to have a rural domicile; others would have to establish their rural domicile: A.I.R. 1988 All. 131: (1987) 13 All. L.R. 711 (D.B.).

Where a student had correctly answered a question in the mathematics paper but without the detailed calculations by which the correct answer was arrived at, held, may be the student had learnt the correct answer by heart, he may not be awarded any marks therefor because he did not know the detailed calculations; but it could not be presumed that he had used unfair means by copying from another examinee's answer book or from any other material: A.I.R. 1995 All. 81.

Where the settlees of a Housing Board Colony sought a mandamus to stop the Board from constructing building on the open space shown in the Colony's site plan as "reserved for other utility" and maintain it as such, held, the said description of the disputed area in the site plan alone was not sufficient to raise the presumption that the area was earmarked for the settlees' common use; the burden of proof not discharged by the settlees: A.I.R. 1982 Pat. 236: 1982 B.L.J.R. 357: 1982 B.L.J. 411 (D.B.).

Where the State Government failed to supply the information regarding Model Scheme for Carcass Utilisation at Village Panchayat level despite Court orders, held, an adverse inference could be drawn that the Scheme had remained merely on papers and it was never implemented: A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 1668: (1981) 4 S.C.C. 202.

Where the rules permit the authorities to relax the provisions relating to the quota, ordinarily a presumption should be raised that there was such relaxation when there is a deviation from the quota rule· A.I.R. 1990 S.C. 1607: 1990 Lab. I.C. 1304: (1990) 2 S.C.C. 715.

Merely because a person had heavy liability and previous undischarged decrees and was also closing his business offices at different places or that there was decline in his business, held, it could not lead to the inference that the intention of the person was to obstruct or delay the execution of decree. To draw such inference further facts and circumstances would be necessary: A.I.R. 1987 Ori. 107: (1987) 63 Cut.L.T. 5.

Charge against Railway employee that he was instrumental in forcing the shutting down of air compressor in workshop—Weight of evidence in favour of employee before Enquiry Committee—General Manager presuming that employee was not only a member of crew which approached the compressor house to secure shut down but that he was also responsible for the shut down—Held that such a presumption was against all canons of natural justice and the conclusion of the General Manager could not be sustained: (1962) 64 Punj.L.R. 620: (1962) 1 Lab.L.J. 588: A.I.R. 1962 Punj. 482.

The ordinary presumption that ghee is intended for human consumption is not a presumption of law but a supposition based on common sense when there is no assertion to the contrary: 48 Cal.L.J. 502: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 283.

Where a property purchased by a father with his own money in the name of his minor son, having no money of his own, was sold by the father to a third party without permission of the District Judge under S. 8 of the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, held, there being a presumption that the father paying consideration was the real owner and not the minor son, the sale by the father was not bad for want of permission from the District Judge: A.I.R. 1983 Ori. 36.

Hindu law—Widow—Alienation—Consent by reversioner—Inference. See A.I.R. 1958 All. 546.

Defamation—Defamatory words are presumed to be false—Rebuttal of such presumption—Onus is on defendant: 1969 M.P.L.J. 510: 1969 Jab.L.J. 544.

It cannot be said that before any initial presumption of accident can arise or be raised, the Court must consider the weight of all the facts and circumstances of the case. S. 114 does not lay down any such rule. Even some facts relating to a particular case may be sufficient to induce the Court to presume the existence of certain other facts. Any presumption under S. 114 is rebuttable and the presumption can always be rebutted by reference to certain other facts. But if the initial presumption as permitted under S. 114 can be raised only after consideration of all the facts of the case there can be no question or scope for rebutting that presumption. The section deals both with presumptions on which the Court may decide to act after consideration of the whole of the evidence as well as initial presumption. Under our law presumption is a generic term which includes presumptions juris et de jure, whose very nature is to exclude all proof against what they assume as true as well as every sort of rebuttable presumption such as rebuttable presumption of law, strong or violent presumption of fact, fixed presumption of law and fact, as well as those arising from evidence direct or presumptive which shift the burden of proof to the other party. No person shall, in the absence of criminative proof, be supposed to have committed any violation of criminal law whether malum in se or malum prohibitum and this presumption holds good in all civil and other proceedings for whatever purposes originated. Where it is established that a person died of a cause such as drowning or a fall from great height presumption against violence or suicide must be raised and in the absence of any evidence in rebuttal would be allowed to prevail. Where the question for determination is whether death was caused by accident or design, the initial presumption must be in favour of death by innocent cause. Of course, such a presumption like all other rebuttable presumptions may be dislodged by showing facts and circumstances which may be sufficient to nullify the probative value of the presumption. A presumption may be rebutted by presumptive as well as direct evidence. Presumption of the nature under consideration, when it arises, is entitled to great weight, and when there is no other evidence, is decisive in a civil case. Held that after giving careful consideration and giving utmost weight to the same, the Court was unable to regard the relative heights of the deceased and the window and the breadth of the parapet of the building as sufficient to dislodge the presumption of innocent death. This presumption was one which the policy of law and the ends of justice require to be made and it was not possible for the Court to regard it as rebutted by the mere naked facts of the relative heights of the assured and the window and the breadth of the parapet. These bare facts about dimensions and height by themselves were not sufficient to tilt the scales in favour of the insurers-defendants and particularly so when the evidence demonstrated that the assured when he met his death was young married man with four children and domestically quite happy, and that he was a wealthy businessman in very affluent circumstances and in good health and had no known reason or occasion to put an end to his life: A.I.R. 1956 Bom. 633.

Where the father of the appellant-husband gave details of the incident in which accusation was made by the wife against the husband that he had illicit relations with his brother's wife, held, there was a strong presumption that the father of the husband being an old respectable person would not depose about an incident in open Court which would disgrace and ridicule his family members unless it was true: A.I.R. 1989 P.&H. 310: (1989) 1 Hindu L.R. 565: (1989) 95 Punj.L.R. 553: (1989) 2 D.M.C. 104 (D.B.).

In the case of a young woman giving birth to her first child and entirely unattended during the process, no presumption can reasonably be made under S. 114 that the child was born alive: A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 22.

In commercial establishments, normally, allocation of duties and administrative work is not always done by orders in writing unlike in Government offices; it is a matter of arrangement amongst the top officers. Where as a custom and practice the Administrative Manager dealt with matters relating to a disciplinary action, he will be presumed to have that power; no written delegation is necessary because commercial concerns are not statutory authorities: 1981 Mah.L.J. 646: 59 F.J.R. 130.

Foreign-State owned trade enterprise, registered and incorporated in that country—Suit against such enterprise filed in India—Consulate of that country in India certifying such features of enterprise—No evidence or statement however given on such enterprise being part of or department of that foreign Government—Such enterprise must be presumed to be a legal entity—Such enterprise being part of or department of that foreign Government is not satisfactorily established in such a case: (1968-69) 73 Cal.W.N. 192.

There is every presumption in favour of the proposition that a change of sovereignty would not affect private rights to property: 1956 Nag.L.J. 418: A.I.R. 1956 Nag. 59.

Annexation of Goa territory—No presumption as to annexation: 1968 Cr.L.J. 316: A.I.R. 1968 Goa 17.

Section 114-A—Notes.

The presumption about want of consent under S. 114-A is not conclusive. Evidence may still be given to disprove it. But in the absence of any evidence of disproof, there is no option with the Court but to raise a presumption about non-consent if circumstances for raising the presumption under S. 114-A exist. It must, however, be conceded that immoral character would still not be an absolutely irrelevant circumstance. It may render the story itself as incredible. It may take away probative force of the story, told as it is by a woman with no scruples or morals. It may be difficult to believe a woman of immoral character if she says that some persons had sexual intercourse with her unless there existed satisfactory proof in support of the story of sexual intercourse. Thus, where prosecutrix alleged that accused persons raped her and it was proved that she was a woman of easy virtue and the doctor found no injuries on her private parts and she did not make any complaint about the alleged incident to any body for five days coupled with late recording of report by her after five days with false explanation for the delay, held , no presumption under S. 114-A could be raised by the Court: 1992 M.P.L.J. 35: (1992) 1 Hindu L.R. 544: (1992) 1 Rec.Cr.R. 569 (D.B.).

CHAPTER VIII
ESTOPPEL

115. Estoppel.—When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing.

Presumption under S. 114-A is attracted to cases of rape falling under sub-S. (2) of S. 376, I.P.Code, except when the case is under Cl. (f) thereof and no such presumption is attracted to cases of rape falling under S. 376(1), I.P.Code. Therefore, a charge should always be framed in cases of rape either under sub-S. (1) or sub-S. (2) of S. 376, I.P.Code and conviction should also be so distinctly recorded, instead of under S. 376, I.P.Code as such: 1993 Cr. L.J. 1825 (Madh. Pra.). See also (1993) Rec.Cr.R. 367 (P.&H.) (D.B.).

If the conditions given in S.114-A are satisfied, the Court shall presume about the absence of consent on the part of the prosecutrix but that presumption is rebuttable by contrary evidence. However, before that presumption can be drawn, there should be reliable evidence amounting to proof to hold that sexual intercourse took place between the accused and the woman concerned. If there is no satisfactory evidence on that question, it would be clearly wrong to resort to the presumption and to hold that the woman did not consent, since that would be begging the question if sexual intercourse at all took place. Therefore, where it was doubtful if any sexual intercourse took place with the prosecutrix at the time of alleged incident, held, presumption under S. 114-A was not attracted: 1993 Cr.L.J. 120: (1992) 1 Crimes 889 (Madh. Pra.).

In a prosecution for rape, absence of marks of injury on victim is not fatal in each case; nor does the absence of such physical injuries on the prosecutrix warrant the presumption of consent on her part: 1990 Cr. L.J. 1179 (Madh. Pra.). See also A.I.R. 1981 S.C. 559: 1980 Cr. L.J. 1344: (1980) 4 S.C.C. 262: (1981) 1 S.C.R. 402.

1. Scope, meaning and nature of estoppel.—Section is not exhaustive, and estoppels are not confined to this section: I.L.R. 15 Pat. 721: A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 169. See also I.L.R. 22 Pat. 554. The whole law of estoppel in pais is not laid down in S. 115. A familiar rule is that there cannot be estoppel against statute but that rule is not to be found in the four corners of the section: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 20. S. 115 is not exhaustive of the doctrine of estoppel by representation: I.L.R. 33 Cal. 915. See also (1915-16) 20 Cal.W.N. 1335; 23 Pat.L.T. 213: A.I.R 1942 Pat. 317; 23 M.L.J. 335; A.I.R. 1930 All. 330. But see I.L.R. 35 Cal. 904: (1907-08) 12 Cal.W.N. 721 (P.C.). There are three kinds of estoppel: (1) by record, see Evidence Act Ss. 40 and 44: 39 C.L.J. 40; 48 I.A. 49 (2) Estoppel by deed, see I.L.R. 12 Lah. 546. (3) Estoppel in pais or by conduct which is dealt with in Ss. 115 to 117, see (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 891 (P.C.). Estoppel is a rule of evidence and the general rule is enacted in S. 115 of the Evidence Act. This is the rule of estoppel by conduct as distinguished from an estoppel by record which constitutes the bar of res judicata: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 782: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 82. Res judicata and estoppel—Relative scope of. See A.I.R. 1958 All. 207. Estoppel is nothing more than a rule of evidence. The law of India and England is the same as regards estoppel: A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 708; A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 296: 182 I.C. 618. The law of estoppel which S. 115 enacts is the same as the English Law: 65 I.A. 75: I.L.R. (1938) Mad. 360: A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 32: (1938) 1 M.L.J. 268 (P.C.). Estoppel is both a rule of pleading and evidence and it extends to things which are matters of pleading and not proof. In India there is no room for any application of the doctrine of estoppel outside the provisions of S. 115. A party is not estopped from suing; he is estopped from making the allegations necessary to enable his suit to succeed: I.L.R. 22 Pat. 554: A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 30.

Law of estoppel is not exhausted by Ss. 115 to 117—There is scope for invoking equity or estoppel even outside area covered by these provisions: 1969 Ker.L.R. 1.

Ss. 115 and 116 are not exhaustive; there may be rules of estoppel applicable in India other than those contained in the sections; a man may be estopped not only from giving a particular evidence under the Act but also from doing any act or relying upon any particular argument or contention which the rules of justice, equity and good conscience prevent him from using as against his opponent: A.I.R. 1974 Pat. 364 (D.B.).

Ss. 115 to 117 are not exhaustive and the principle of estoppel contained in these sections may be applied by analogy to parties not mentioned therein. Where the defendant had recovered the properties in the suit from third parties after litigation prosecuted by him as the guardian of the plaintiff, and continued in possessions as guardian and manager of the plaintiff, he could not, without discharging his duties as guardian and manager by giving up possession, be heard to plead that the decree in favour of his ward was illegal, and he was entitled to retain the property as reversioner: 1961 M.P.L.J. 58: A.I.R. 1961 Madh. Pra. 27.

The rule in this section is not modified by S. 43 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act: A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 700: (1940) 1 M.L.J. 605.

Both Ss. 92 and 115 are provisions of the same Evidence Act. They have to be read together. Reading the two sections together the effect is to exclude the plea of estoppel when the proof of the oral agreement on which the estoppel is based would be contrary to the provisions of S. 92. S. 115 would apply only when the representation is in writing, but would not help when it is oral in the face of S. 92. It is wrong to suppose that S. 115 is substantive law, while S. 92 alone is procedural law. If the two are read together, both can operate. There is nothing in S. 115 to show that it overrides S. 92. There is no estoppel against a statute. It is clear, therefore, that no estoppel can be pleaded against the statutory bar of S. 92: 1979 Rajdhani L.R. 7: I.L.R. (1979) 1 Del. 84.

Estoppel is rule of evidence which prevents one party from denying the existence of a fact which he represented as existing and upon which representation another person has been induced to act to his detriment: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 41.

The law of estoppel by representation is confined to the provisions of S. 115 and apart from the provisions of this section there is nothing like what is called equitable "estoppel" evolved by the English Judges. The provisions of S. 115 are in a sense a rule of evidence. They are founded upon the well known doctrine laid in (1837) Ad. and El. 469. The object of estoppel is to prevent fraud and secure justice between the parties by promotion of honesty and good faith. Consequently, where one person makes a misrepresentation to the other about a fact he would not be shut out by the rule of estoppel if that other person knew the true state of facts and must consequently not have been misled by the misrepresentation. Further, the person setting up an estoppel against another must show that his position was altered by reason of the representation or conduct of the latter, otherwise even the general principle of estoppel cannot be invoked by him: (1965) 2 S.C.W.R. 644: A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1812.

The principle of conclusiveness of statements as to the points decided is well settled and cannot be doubted. No man is to be vexed twice over for the same cause and but for this rule there would be no end to litigation and no security for any person. This rule not only prevents a new decision but also a new investigation and inquiry in order to avoid harassment to the same persons again and again. It is also clear that a litigant cannot be permitted to assume inconsistent position in Court to the detriment of his opponent. If a party takes up a particular position at one stage of a litigation it cannot turn round and resile from that position. In other words, pleadings contrary to the earlier ones are prohibited. But before applying the principle of estoppel against a person his declaration, act or omission must be clear, unambiguous and of an unequivocal character. Estoppel can arise only from a clear and positive statement.

Held, that in the case of A.I.R. 1963 S.C. 134, wherein the appellant in the case, was intervener, the State of Bihar, the respondent in that case, had no doubt stated that Mining Boards were constituted under S. 10 of the Mines Act, 1923, but it could not be held that they admitted the validity of the constitution of those Boards. Simply because Mining Boards were constituted under S. 10, it did not mean that the constitution was valid. Moreover, even if those Boards were continuing to operate at the time of framing the Coal Mines Regulations, 1957, it would not necessarily mean that the constitution of the Boards themselves was valid and in accordance with law. There was no admission by the respondents before the Supreme Court about the validity of the Mining Boards and the principle of estoppel would not apply against them. Held further, that reference was made to the Mining Board as provided in S. 59(3) of the Mines Act, 1952 and that the Coal Mines Regulations, 1957 must be held to be valid: A.I.R. 1966 Pat. 410.

Estoppel has no operation or efficacy whatsoever except as a bar to testimony. Its sole office is either to place an obstacle in the way of a case which otherwise might succeed, or to remove an impediment out of the way of a case which might otherwise fail. It has no other function. Emphatically it is not a cause of action in itself; nor does it create one, though the application of this, as of any other rule of evidence in the course of litigation may result in a total or partial establishment or disestablishment of the case made by one or other of the parties. Estoppel merely operates as a bar to the suit; it does not extinguish the right: (1970) 72 Punj.L.R. 283: I.L.R. (1970) 1 Punj. 689: A.I.R. 1970 Punj. 462 (F.B.).

Question of estoppel is not a question of fact; it is an inference of law from facts proved; it is liable to be dealt with in a second appeal if the appellate Court below failed to consider some facts proved; thus, the High Court is not bound by its decision even if it is assumed to be finding of fact; it can be interfered in the second appeal. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 57; (1969) 2 S.C. (N) 481, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1979 P.&H. 12.

Plea of estoppel and acquiescence cannot be adjudicated upon unless it is pleaded because it is a question of fact: A.I.R. 1981 N.O.C. 235 (All.).

A question of estoppel is a mixed question of fact and law, and without definite allegations in the pleadings, a party should not be permitted to resort to the plea of estoppel: I.L.R. (1961) Mad. 134: (1962) 1 M.L.J. 258: (1960) 73 Mad.L.W. 541: A.I.R. 1961 Mad. 114; 1981 All.L.J. 602.

A plea of estoppel cannot be entertained unless it has been raised in the pleadings and an issue has been struck on same: 1978 Tax. L.R. 673 (All.) (D.B.).

Estoppel is a rule of evidence prescribed by S. 115 of the Evidence Act. Nevertheless it is necessary to establish the facts on which the plea of estoppel may be founded, and it is well settled that no amount of evidence can be looked into upon a plea which was never put forward. The Court must apply the rule to the primary facts of the case: 1979 (U.P.) R.C.C. 153: 1979 All.L.J. 118.

Estoppel is a rule of evidence which prevents one party from denying the existence of a fact which he represented as existing and upon which representation another person has been induced to act to his detriment: A.I.R. 1971 Cal. 407: (1971-72) 76 Cal.W.N. 556.

Estoppel is only a rule of evidence; one cannot found an action upon estoppel. Estoppel is only important as being one step in the progress towards relief on the hypothesis that the defendant is estopped from denying the truth of something which he has said: (1976) 1 Cut.W.R. 493 (D.B.).

The question whether the principle of estoppel would apply to a particular case depends on the facts and circumstances of that case. One of the tests is whether the person who had received certain advantages on account of the so-called misrepresen tation of the other really knew the correct state of affairs and yet continued to receive the advantages in question or not: A.I.R. 1990 Ori. 10: (1989) 67 Cut.L.T. 199 (D.B.).

An estoppel, that is to say, the language upon which the estoppel is founded must be precise and unambiguous: (1904) 6 Bom.L.R. 864 (F.B); 13 Beng.L.R. 12 (P.C.); I.L.R. 26 Bom. 499; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1052; I.L.R. 10 Luck. 361: 11 O.W.N. 1571: A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 121. See also 161 I.C. 514: A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 133.

Estoppel can arise only from a clear and definite statement. Where the act or omission is not of an unequivocal character, or where the document or the words used are ambiguous, the bar of estoppel does not come into operation: 1957 Pat.L.R. 288 (D.B.).

Estoppel is a rule of evidence by which a person is not allowed to allege and prove a thing under certain circumstances. The application of this principle in India is embodied in S. 115 of the Evidence Act. Before the plaintiff could be held bound by the rule of estoppel, it must be established that the defendants have acted on his representation, act or omission. Where the defendant's position has not altered even the least on account of any act on the part of the plaintiff, the principle does not apply: A.I.R. 1968 Pat. 487.

A person claiming the benefit of a general estoppel under S. 115 cannot be placed on exactly the same footing as a person who obtains a transfer from an ostensible owner and claims protection under S. 41, T.P. Act. S. 41, T.P. Act, no doubt deals with a branch of estoppel, but S. 115 does not impose on the person acting on the faith of a representation made to him the same duty of making inquiries into the truth of the representation as is imposed on a transferee from an ostensible owner by S. 41, T.P. Act: 11 O.W.N. 1097: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 460. See I.L.R. 20 Cal. 296 (P.C.); I.L.R. 46 All. 758: 47 M.L.J. 591 (P.C.); (1957) 2 M.L.J. 603.

A person who puts forward the plea of estoppel must prove every one of the legal requirements necessary to be established before he could avail of such a plea: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 258.

The law of estoppel will not be invoked in favour of a party who comes to Court with dirty hands; where a suit between two cotenants one of whom claims to be sole tenant is compromised and one of them subsequently goes behind it and revives the matter, the other will not be estopped from pleading the true facts: 18 R.D. 507.

Doctrine of estoppel: A.I.R. 1966 Andh. Pra. 147.

Plea open to plaintiff's as well as defendants: 3 O.W.N. 993: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 97.

Plea of estoppel—When to be raised—It has to be pleaded and proved—It cannot be raised for first time in writ petition and provide basis of decision on question of rights: 1969 All.W.R. (H.C.) 857.

A wrong decision on a question of estoppel, will also lead to a failure to exercise jurisdiction or to a wrong assumption of jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1973 Raj. 56: 1972 W.L.N. 451: 1972 Raj.L.W. 469.

The onus of establishing facts giving rise to estoppel rests on the party pleading it: A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 212: I.L.R. 46 All. 728: 47 M.L.J. 591 (P.C.).

Both S. 91 and S. 115 embody rules of evidence, the latter projects a positive state of affairs; the Courts of law are to render justice, not to encourage multiplicity of proceedings. Where a registered partition deed contains a specific reference to three earlier partition deeds and also a recital that one of the parties, having a share in an undivided pangu was being conveyed some other property in lieu thereof, held, it constitutes an admission of the earlier as well as the latest partitions; parties relying on the registered partnership deed are estopped from contending that there were no earlier partitions as mentioned in the deed: (1985) 98 Mad.L.W. 887.

Estoppel—Meaning and nature of—Assam Municipal Act (I of 1923), S. 55 (2)—Scope of — Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1866), Rules under R. 18—Proceedings in respect of encroached lands—Held, Deputy Commissioner could act under the rule—Order of removal of construction—Suit for declaring it illegal held not maintainable: I.L.R. (1963) 15 Assam 402: A.I.R. 1964 Assam 60.

2. Essentials of estoppel.—To invoke the doctrine of estoppel embodied in S. 115, Evidence Act, 1872, three conditions must be satisfied: (1) representation by a person to another; (2) the other shall have acted upon the said representation; and (3) such action shall have been detrimental to the interests of the person to whom the representation has been made. Where the first two conditions are satisfied but the third is not, there is no scope to invoke the doctrine of estoppel:

A.I.R. 1965 S.C. 1055; (1969) 35 Cut.L.T. 60: I.L.R. (1968) Cut. 859; 39 Comp. Cas. 436: A.I.R. 1969 Bom. 323; (1917-18) 22 Cal.W.N. 891 (P.C.); 57 I.C. 263; (1937) 39 Bom.L.R. 730; A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 272; (1979) 1 M.P.W.N. 39; 1979 All.W.C. 357: 1979 All.L.J. 659; A.I.R. 1982 All. 414.

To invoke the doctrine of estoppel by representation, it is essential that the party to whom it was made in acting upon it should have altered his position to his detriment. It envisages a combination of several essential elements, the representation or a statement to be acted upon, action on the faith of such statement and in the manner intended and resultant prejudice or detriment to the person acting: A.I.R. 1955 Hyd. 172: I.L.R. (1954) Hyd. 745; (1950) 2 M.L.J. 575.

In order to create estoppel the party asserting it has to show that it has been induced to act to its detriment or misled to its injury. The essence of doctrine of estoppel is that where a person does or omits to do something which influences the action of another who relies or acts thereon, equity will not permit him to controvert the same to the injury of the other party. It is, however, a shield for defence but not a weapon of attack and does not furnish a basis for action: I.L.R. (1961) 2 Punj. 391: (1961) 63 Punj.L.R. 302: A.I.R. 1961 Punj. 314.

The pre-requisites for invoking estoppel are: (1) a representation by a person or his authroised agent to another person in any form, declaration, act or omission; (2) it must be of an existing fact and not a promise de futuro or an intention, whether or not enforceable in contract; (3) it must have been made to be relied upon; (4) the other party must have believed in its truth; (5) the declaration, act or omission must have actually caused the other party to act on its faith and alter his former position to his prejudice or detriment; (6) the representation made must have been the proximate cause of the other party acting to his prejudice; (7) the person invoking estoppel must show that he had neither the means to know nor was he aware of the true state of things; and (8) only that person can invoke estoppel in his individual capacity (and not as a representative of his assignee) to whom the representation was made or for whom it was meant: A.I.R. 1982 S.C. 121: (1982) 1 S.C.C. 223: (1982) 95 Mad.L.W. (S.N.) 121.

In order to establish estoppel the party invoking it has to prove the following facts: (1) the other party had made a declaration or a representation regarding a particular facts; (2) that declaration or representation was made with intention of causing or permitting the invoker to believe that fact to be true and to act upon such belief; and (3) it was on the basis of such belief, and without the knowledge of true facts, the party to whom the representation was made has acted to his prejudice; it is only on the proof of all such facts that invoker can claim that the other party should not be allowed to resile from that position. But if the invoker knew the true state of affairs, it would not be open to him to plead estoppel; it could not ordinarily be presumed that he was actually misled by the representation or declaration made by the other party and altered his position to his prejudice because of such declaration or representation: A.I.R. 1971 Mys. 174: (1971) 1 Mys.L.J. 154.

Doctrine of estoppel is attracted (a) when a party by act or conduct represents to the other party of a certain state of facts upon which the other party acts to his detriment; (b) when a party represents to the other party in regard to a position in law which is accepted and acted upon by the other party to his detriment; (c) but where the jurisdiction of a Court or Tribunal by statute depends upon a certain state of facts or position in law, no representation as to facts or law by one party to the other can confer jurisdiction on the Court or Tribunal to adjudicate upon the controversy; (d) the Court or Tribunal will have to determine on evidence adduced before it by the parties before it as to whether it has the jurisdiction to hear and determine the controversy. [Case law exhaustively discussed]: A.I.R. 1977 Cal. 161: (1976-77) 81 Cal.W.N. 481: (1977) 1 Cal.L.J. 125.

The plea of estoppel can be availed of only if there is representation of existing fact with intent to cause some belief or induce the other side to form the belief that the representation made is true. On such representation the other side must have been led to believe the representation and must have also been induced to act on the basis of the representation. Moreover, the other side must have so acted to its detriment. Again, the plea of estoppel is not available in matters of waiver of rights. It has got to be realised that estoppel deals with questions of facts and not of rights. No one can be estopped from asserting his right, which he might have stated that he will not assert. There cannot be estoppel against statute: A.I.R. 1991 Guj. 43: (1990-2) 31 Guj.L.R. 808: (1990-2) 10 Guj.L.H. 471; 1971 All.L.J. 385.

The party asserting the estoppel must have acted on the assurance given to him, must have relied on the representation made to him, which means that the party has changed or altered the position by relying on the assurance or representation. It is essential that the promisee must have acted on the promise made to him and having so acted, must have changed or altered his or her position. Where petitioner applied for post-graduate training course and her name appeared in the selection list and she alongwith others were directed to go for an interview but subsequently government took a policy decision of not sending senior doctors for post-graduate training and, thus, petitioner who was not selected challenged said decision of the State Government on the ground of promissory estoppel, held, the process of selection or nomination was not complete so as to hold out a promise or assurance to the petitioner that she would be nominated for the course when she was asked to go for interview. Therefore, the fact that on the direction of the Government all the candidates selected by the Selection Committee including the petitioner undertook journey to appear in the interview, the expenses of which were admittedly borne by the Government, did not amount to the petitioner acting on any representation of the Government so as to make her alter her position. Thus, the petitioner was not entitled to invoke the doctrine of promissory estoppel. [A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 2414, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1994 Sikkim 1.

The doctrine of equitable estoppel applies to a case where a person is given an unequivocal assurance and on the faith thereof, he acted detrimental to his interest and he suffered an irretrievable injury in that pursuit. In such an event, having made such a promise, the maker thereof is precluded to resile therefrom and pass an order detrimental to the interest of the person who believed the promise, placed reliance thereon, acted on that basis to his detriment and he cannot adequately be compensated: A.I.R. 1986 Andh. Pra. 196.

Where one party has by his words or conduct made to the other, a promise or assurance which was intended to affect the legal relation between them and to be acted upon accordingly, then, once the other party has taken him at his words and acted on it, the party who gave the promise or assurance cannot afterwards be allowed to revert to the previous legal relationship as if no such promise or assurance had been made by him. He must accept their legal relations subject to the qualification which he himself has so introduced, even though it is not supported in point of law by any consideration but only by his word: A.I.R. 1974 Madh. Pra. 193: 1974 M.P.L.J. 329: 1974 Jab.L.J. 476 (D.B.).

There is no doubt that S. 115 incorporates an equitable doctrine which prevents a party from adopting two inconsistent positions. Nevertheless, the basis upon which equity operates against the party which makes a representation is that the party relying on the estoppel has been misled into altering its position to its disadvantage due to the representation. The party to which a representation is made must have been induced to act on the belief that the representation was true. Where all the facts are within the knowledge of both parties there is no question of one party acting on the faith of an incorrect representation: (1972) 8 Del.L.T. 17.

In order to found a plea of estoppel, there must be proof that a party suffered detriment by acting upon the representation of the other party: 1969 Ker.L.T. 378: 1969 Ker.L.R. 617: A.I.R. 1970 Ker. 21 (F.B).

The criterion in applying S. 115 of the Evidence Act in cases of estoppel is whether one party by any specific act or omission had led the other party to believe in the correctness of certain action or attitude affecting his interest materially: 1952 All.L.J. (Rev.) 61: 1952 R.D. 81. An estoppel by conduct can only come into play if by the conduct of one party the other party has changed his position in a way to his prejudice: (1946) 48 Bom.L.R. 313: A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 469.

No case of estoppel can be established by a party if it is not shown that any action of his was induced by any representation or conduct of the other party: 32 S.L.R. 340: 172 I.C. 981: A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 87 (P.C).

In order to sustain the plea of estoppel it must be proved that the defendants relying on the declaration made by the plaintiffs were misled to act to their detriment in such a manner as they would not otherwise have done: I.L.R. 14 Lah. 218: A.I.R.1933 Lah. 179. See also 38 Mad.L.W. 896: A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 471.

Before an estoppel can take place, it would be necessary for the party relying on the same to establish that he had been led to do something detrimental to his own interests owing to the action of the other person: 119 I.C. 337: A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 494. See also 1937 O.W.N. 423.

It is not open to a party to raise the plea of estoppel against another if he has not been led by any representation made by the other to change his position in any way: I.L.R. (1947) Nag. 341: A.I.R. 1948 Nag. 19: 1947 Nag.L.J. 230.

Where there is no representation, no acting on it, no change of position as a result thereof, the doctrine of estoppel is not attracted: 1968 Lab.I.C. 1546 (Del.).

What is material is that the party must have acted upon the assurance so as to alter its position: A.I.R. 1991 Raj. 45: (1989) 2 Raj.L.W. 386 (D.B.); (1991) 53 E.L.T. 545 (Cal.).

If the act of the plaintiff does not adversely affect the right of the defendant, no case of estoppel by such act can arise: I.L.R. (1973) Mys. 790.

It is well settled position that for an estoppel to be operative there must be a representation and the person to whom the representation made is to act upon that representation to his detriment and thereafter the person making the representation is precluded to resile from the representation acted against the interest of the person making representation. It is now settled law that the admission made by the party in the pleadings is inconclusive and no opportunity need be given to explain the same. If there is evidentiary admission, the only presumption is, that there is an admission made, but is a rebuttable presumption. Unless the admission amount to estoppel it cannot be used against him. The title cannot pass by a mere admission: (1984) 2 An.W.R. 40.

If, in course of legal proceeding, a party induces other party to change its position by agreement, it could not later on resile from it. 1968 Lab.I.C. 1108 (Cal.). Held, no question of res judicata or estoppel by conduct or record could arise in the case: 1968 Lab.I.C. 302 (All.).

Under S. 115, a person is estopped only when he has by his declaration or act intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief. If a person in suit claims a certain status on the strength of the interpretation put by him on a certain document, he cannot be said to have led the other party to believe a thing or act on its belief, for it was open to the latter to examine the document and to decide for himself whether the interpretation put by the opposite party was correct or not: 1940 O.W.N. 1233: 1940 R.D. 582.

Before estoppel can be invoked against a person, the party invoking it must prove that that person had so conducted himself as to induce in him a belief in the existence of some fact and thereby changed his position. But the owner of a tree with branches overhanging the land of another cannot invoke the rule of estoppel merely on the ground that the other person did not take any action. He has to prove that this inaction made him change his position. Ordinarily, the owner of a tree with branches over-hanging another's land cannot claim that the omission of the owner of the plot to protest against the over-hanging branches induced him to change his position, because there is no position to change. The case is one of trespass, and the trespasser, in the absence of special circumstances cannot rely on estoppel or acquiescence—Which is a species of estoppel against the owner of the plot: 1965 All.W.R. (H.C.) 414: 1965 All.L.J. 1068.

The law enacted in S. 115 relating to estoppel as a consequence of declaration, act or omission causing another's belief and action thereon, does not differ from the English law on that subject. The main question, in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned, is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been fraudulent, or that he should not have been under a mistake or misapprehension. Thus, the main question is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made, to act on the faith of it. The word "representation" covers declaration, act or omissions, which may be express or implied and may be made in any form.

The suit site belonged to one Rao. The super-structure had been erected by the first defendant at her own cost. Rao had not only encouraged the first defendant to build the house but had actively helped her by applying and getting a licence from the Municipality. Rao and his wife the first plaintiff had attended the "Grahapravesam" ceremony and thereafter Rao had not laid any claim to the house or site. Held, that the plaintiffs were estopped from questioning the right of the first defendant to the suit site and from seeking to evict her. Not merely had Rao and the first plaintiff stood by but Rao had actively encouraged and had even assisted the first defendant in constructing the house. In this situation the present case fell fairly and squarely within the ambit of S. 115. The conduct which would have estopped her husband Rao from claiming the site, would equally occasion estoppel against the first plaintiff, as she was a representative in estate of her deceased husband: (1964) 2 An.L.T. 299: (1965) 1 An.W.R. 112: A.I.R. 1965 Andh. Pra. 163.

It is quite unnecessary in order to create estoppel that the person whose acts or declarations induced another to act must have been under no mistake of himself, or must have acted with an intention to mislead to deceive: I.L.R. 28 Pat. 519: A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 9.

Under S. 115, Evidence Act if a person, by his declaration act or commission intentionally causes or permits another person to believe a thing to be true and act upon such belief, then the former is estopped from denying the truth of the thing.

The petitioner was claiming all the land lying within the boundaries mentioned in the settlement in question. His case was not that he should be given fresh settlement of the land found in excess of the description as to extent appearing in the settlement. Held, that his application before the Director of Settlement and Land Records to grant the excess land in its favour, did not operate as estoppel: A.I.R. 1969 Manipur 84.

Estoppel can only arise when one person has by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief.

Where a person in her application for letters of administration of a Will alleged that a certain property belonged to the testator, held, that she could be estopped from subsequently showing that the testator was not the owner only if it was established that she intentionally caused or permitted the opposite party to believe that thing to be true and to act on that belief. Where it was obvious that the other party had not acted in regard to that property on the basis of that statement no question of estoppel against the applicant could arise: I.L.R. (1962) 2 All. 683: 1962 (Supp.) 3 S.C.R. 294: (1962) 2 S.C.A. 490: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1471.

In order to bring the case within the mischief of S. 115, it is necessary that there should first be a declaration, act or omission. That declaration, act or omission must be intentional and should have caused or permitted any person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief to his detriment. Where the plaintiffs claimed that on the death of their father they being coparceners became owners of 15/16th share in the property left by him and their defendant sister was entitled to a 1/6th share according to Hindu Succession Act and they further pleaded that mutation with regard to inheritance of deceased in favour of plaintiffs and defendant in equal shares was illegal and void and the respondent contended that the appellants were estopped by their act and conduct from claiming their share over and above the shares mutated in their names because one of them was present at the time of sanction of the mutation, held, mere presence of one of the appellants before the mutation officer would not make the mutation legal as it was hit by provision of Hindu Succession Act, 1956. Therefore, the appellants were not estopped by their own act and conduct from filing the suit: (1994-2) 107 Punj.L.R. 681.

For invoking the doctrine of promissory estoppel the petitioner must show that there is an express and unequivocal promise. Secondly, it must be demonstrated that the petitioner acted to his prejudice on the said express representation. Where the petitioner himself represented to the Reserve Bank of India that he wanted to hold Ice Shows in India for a limited duration till the first round of shows in various cities in India was over and such permission was granted but when permission was refused for holding the Ice Shows for the second set of shows, the petitioner invoked principle of promissory estoppel, held, there was no express permission to hold shows in India in perpetuity. Having himself committed to certain duration and certain shows, if he had incurred any further expenditure, it had nothing to do with any representation made by the Reserve Bank of India: A.I.R. 1981 Del. 314.

Estoppel does not depend on the motive or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person should have been fraudulent or that he should have been acting with the full knowledge of circumstances and not under a mistake or misapprehension. It is not necessary that there should be a design to mislead. A representation, even when made innocently or mistakenly, may operate as an estoppel. Thus, where plaintiff widow challenged certain alienations made by her son and claimed that she was absolute owner of the properties left by her husband but she had given her express consent to the transfers made by her son, held, the plaintiff having consented to the transfers, disentitled herself to claim the property. [I.L.R. 20 Cal. 296 (P.C.), Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Madh. Pra. 106: 1975 M.P.L.J. 857: 1976 Hindu L.R. 49.

3. "Representative"—Meaning of.—The term "representative" in S. 115 is not limited to a gratuitous transferee or to subsequent transferee for value with notice. It includes a bona fide assignee for value without notice of the circumstances creating an estoppel: A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 302: 66 M.L.J. 563.

Anything done by a person in his representative character cannot create an estoppel on what is a personal claim by himself by a perfectly different arrangement: 7 Cal.W.N. 940: 32 Mad.L.W. 412: A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 249 (P.C.).

A party deriving interest from a person bound by an estoppel before the date on which the estoppel arises is not bound by the estoppel as his representative because an estoppel cannot affect the interests which had been acquired before the date on which the estoppel arose: 23 Pat.L.T. 213: A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 317.

Where the suit is one on behalf of the community and the plaintiff does not claim any title or set up any personal right in him, no estoppel can be pleaded against him in his representative capacity by reason of any individual act he might have committed: 1959 Ker.L.J. 932.

There is no principle of law, short of estoppel, by which a party who is at once the representative of two different persons (A and B) is precluded from holding up as a shield against the claims of another (C) his rights as representative of one of these two persons (B) merely because the other person (A) whom also he represents did something in disregard of his right as a representative of the first (B): A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 106.

An estoppel binds the representator and his privies. Thus, where A represents that a van belonging to B is his and B is a privy to that representation being made, B is bound by it. It would also appear that anyone whose title is obtained from the representator as a volunteer is a privy for this purpose. But it is very doubtful whether a purchaser for value without notice is bound by the estoppel. This part of the doctrine of estoppel has been worked out by Courts of equity and chiefly in relation to the sale of land. There is no trace of its application to contracts for the sale of goods: (1957) 2 All E.R. 525.

4. "Thing"—Meaning of.—A representation that the interests of a deceased had devolved upon the persons making the representation is a "thing" within the meaning of S. 115 as it is not a question of law but is mixed question of law and fact: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 819: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 873. See also A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 110: 173 I.C. 991.

Opinions on the legal effect of an adoption is not a "thing" within S. 115: 46 P.R. 1912: 13 I.C. 482.

5. Applicability of estoppel.—Rules of estoppel cannot be applied in case of change of conditions of service of the Government employees under Art. 309 of the Constitution or of the teachers in aided schools under the Kerala Education Act, 1959. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1971 S.C. 1997: 1971 Lab.I.C. 1178: 1971 Ker.L.T. 422.

The person or authority on whom the power of revision is conferred cannot be assimilated to the position of a party to a suit or a proceeding within the meaning of the expression as occurring in S. 115 of the Evidence Act so as to attract the applicability of the principle of estoppel as envisaged therein. In the first place, there cannot be any estoppel against any statute, and in the second place the principle of estoppel cannot be pressed into service against the exercise of statutory powers. Thus, where the petitioner applied before the Assistant Settlement Officer for the grant of ryotwari patta under S. 11(9) of the Andhra Pradesh (Andhra Area) Estates Abolition and Conversion into Ryotwari Act, 1948 which was duly granted and no revision was filed but subsequently, the Director of Settlements exercising revisional jurisdiction under S. 5(2) of the said Act cancelled the order of the Assistant Settlement Officer on the ground that the impugned land belonged to the Government and did not form part of an estate and Assistant Settlement Officer wrongly treated as estate and granted patta, held, the doctrine of estoppel could not be invoked by the petitioner: (1978) 2 An.W.R. 11. See also 1985 Cr.L.J. 1517: 1985 Ker.L.J. 718.

A statutory body (Institute of Chartered Accountants) charged with the duty of regulating professional conduct cannot be estopped from reviewing its earlier decision: (1974) 2 Kam.L.J. 229.

Estoppel—Applicability to writ proceedings: A.I.R. 1967 Ker. 259.

Where proceedings initiated under the Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants Act, 1971 were dropped as a result of agreement entered into between parties and when subsequently landlord again initiated eviction proceedings, the aggrieved tenant in a writ petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution pleaded promissory estoppel, held, the question whether tenant was lawful occupant or not was a question of fact which was to be decided by competent authority, namely, Estate Officer. Therefore, though a plea of promissory estoppel could be raised in a petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution but in instant case it would be better and more appropriate that such a plea was raised before the authority which was competent to determine questions of fact and law: A.I.R. 1987 Del. 231: (1987) 1 Ren.L.R. 561: (1987) 1 Ren.C.R. 684.

Estoppel is a rule of civil action. There is no estoppel in criminal law: I.L.R. 40 All. 393: 45 I.C. 519.

Estoppel—Effect on reality of transaction (1957) 2 All E.R. 525.

If a party persuades a Court to believe a certain false statement that cannot operate as an estoppel between the parties to that proceeding in a different suit. The party concerned may be liable to other penalties civil or criminal but the statement cannot operate as estoppel: 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 578. As to conditions of applicability, see 1932 All.L.J. 605: A.I.R. 1932 All. 643. See also (1943) 2 M.L.J. 508: A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 62.

A suit for specific performance of a contract entered into between a proposed co-operative society instituted by someone on its behalf, held, is incompetent; a contract with a non-existing person is a nullity; no estoppel can, therefore, be pleaded against a non-person: A.I.R. 1979 Guj. 134: (1979) 20 Guj.L.R. 801 (D.B.).

There is no basis for application of rule of estoppel to matter arising under S. 5-A of Bihar Private Irrigation Works Act: (1963) 1 S.C.R. 98: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 1964.

S. 45-B of Bihar Land Reforms (Fixation of Ceiling Areas and Acquisition of Surplus Land) Act, 1961 being a special provision conferring wide special powers upon the State Government and the Collector, it completely nullifies any plea of res judicata, estoppel or review by permitting re-opening of any disposed of case and its disposal afresh. [I.L.R. (1979) 58 Pat. 989; A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 57; 1983 B.L.J. 33, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 337 (D.B.).

A Corporation cannot indirectly do by placing itself under the disability of estoppel, what it could not have directly done by reason of statute or prohibition. There is a fundamental distinction between the capacity of a natural person and of an artificial person which has been created by statute or charter. To a natural person whatever is not expressly forbidden by the law is permitted by the law. In the case of an artificial person, e.g., a Corporation, which can be created either by charter or by statute the rule applicable to a natural person is reversed. Whatever is not permitted expressly or by necessary implication by the constituting instrument is prohibited, not by any express or implied prohibition of the Legislature but by the doctrine of ultra vires: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 20. See also A.I.R. 1947 Cal. 273.

6. Waiver and estoppel.—See (1953-54) 58 Cal.W.N. 545: A.I.R. 1955 Cal. 338; I.L.R. (1955) Nag. 82: A.I.R. 1955 Nag. 67; A.I.R. 1958 Manipur 7.

Per S.K. Das, J.—The generally accepted connotation of "waiver" is that to constitute "waiver" there must be an intentional relinquishment of a known right or the voluntary relinquishment or abandonment of a known existing legal right, or conduct such as warrants as inference of the relinquishment of a known right or privilege. Waiver differs from estoppel in the sense that it is contractual and is an agreement to release or not to assert a right; estoppel is a rule of evidence: (1959) 35 I.T.R. 190: A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 149.

Waiver and estoppel are not one and the same thing. They differ from each other in various respects. Waiver is an intentional relinquishment of a known right or such conduct as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of that right. Waiver is created upon knowledge of all the facts by both the parties; in case of estoppel by representation, the fact that representee has knowledge of the facts destroys the plea of estoppel. Mere silence will not be waiver. A person may waive the provisions made for his individual benefit but he cannot be deemed to have waived in law the statutory provisions which are based on public policy. Where therefore, the plaintiff having nominated another arbitrator in place of his previous arbitrator in contravention of Rr. 62 and 64 of the Hyderabad Stock Exchange Rules, the defendant at the earliest opportunity objected to the right of the plaintiff nominating him and pressed this objection in clear terms and made it clear that it was under protest that he was taking part in the proceedings. Held, that the defendant's objection to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator would not be considered to have been waived by his continuing to attend before the arbitrator and leading evidence. Whatever part he took in the proceedings before the arbitrators must be deemed to have been taken under continuous protests. Thus, neither the plea of waiver nor of estoppel could be maintained. The award therefore, must be held to be void as the arbitrator had no valid authority to make the same: A.I.R. 1958 Andh. Pra. 384.

Waiver is distinct from estoppel; waiver is contractual and may furnish a cause of action; it is an agreement to release or not to assert a right. Thus, a party pleading waiver has to show that there is an agreement whereby the other party had agreed not to press his right in future in consideration of some compromise from some other person; thus, an amendment sought to plead waiver with no allegation of such an agreement could not be allowed in appeal: A.I.R. 1973 Guj. 34 (D.B.).

Rules of waiver and estoppel both are based on the principle that no person should be allowed to approbate and reprobate at the same time. But waiver differs from estoppel in the sense that it is contractual and is an agreement to release or not to assert a right; estoppel is a rule of evidence. In waiver there must be an intentional relinquishment of a known right or the voluntary relinquishment or abandonment of a known existing legal right, or conduct such as warrants an inference of the relinquishment of a known right or privilege. Waiver is a question of fact and it must be properly pleaded and proved. No plea of waiver can be allowed to be raised unless it is pleaded and the factual foundation for it is laid in the pleadings: (1991) 2 Cal.L.J. 188: (1991) 2 Cal.H.N. 234.

The essence of waiver is estoppel; if there is no estoppel, there can be no waiver; the connection between the two is very close. But nevertheless there is an essential and fundamental difference between the two: that is, estoppel is a rule of evidence and waiver is a rule of conduct. The accepted connotation of waiver pre-supposes an intentional relinquishment of a known right, a voluntary abandonment of an existing legal right, or a conduct justifying inference of the relinquishment of a known right or privilege. Despite a tendency to mix up waiver and estoppel as a single idea when they are not, the principle underlying the two maxims is the same: a party will not be permitted to approbate and reprobate or to blow hot and cold on the same matter: A.I.R. 1981 Pat. 1: 1980 Pat.L.J.R. 208: 1980 B.L.J.R. 592 (F.B.).

Having regard to the true legal meaning and the generally accepted connotation of the words "waiver" and "estoppel", it is apparent that the person against whom waiver is to be pleaded must be aware of his existing legal right or privilege which, by his words, deed or conduct, he must be shown to have intentionally and voluntarily given up. In order that estoppel may operate against a person, it must be shown that the existence of a fact, or a certain state of things, is represented by him or his authorised agent, by words or conduct, to another or to some one on his behalf, with the intention that such other person should act upon the faith of the representation and that the action, in fact, is accordingly taken by such person so as to alter his own previous position: A.I.R. 1988 Him. Pra. 39: 1988 Punj.L.J. 48 (D.B.).

Estoppel arises only where one party makes a statement of the existence of certain facts to the other with the intention that the other party should and does, act upon the faith of that statement, that other party is then entitled to plead estoppel against the first party; waiver, on the other hand, is based on contractual relation between the parties whereby one of them or its agent, subject to consideration, agrees to waive its right. Thus, where by a registered deed certain lands were gifted but their mutation was not attested and thereafter the donor, won over by another party, bequeathed to that party his entire estate including the gifted lands but when the donee's suit for possession was resisted on the ground that on the donor's refusal to attest mutation, the donee had declined the gift and was thus deemed, under law, to have waived his rights under the gift deed and was estopped from filing, the suit on the gift-deed and also because the donee had not fulfilled the condition of the gift that he would render service to the donor and his wife, held it was merely the donee's way of protest and did not amount to waiver; such a gift could be revoked only through a properly instituted suit. Under S. 126 of the Transfer of Property Act, and in no other manner, if the donor did not choose to do so, no estoppel could be pleaded against the donee even if it is assumed that the donor did not institute such a suit because of the donee's statement of refusal: 1988 Punj.L.J. 249.

There is no estoppel by waiver. Waiver is distinct and different from estoppel; waiver is contractual whereas estoppel is governed by S. 115 of the Evidence Act. Estoppel is not a cause of action whereas waiver may constitute a cause of action. Waiver is an agreement to release or not to assert a right whereas estoppel is a rule of evidence which comes into operation if a statement as to the existence of a fact has been made by a party or his authorised agent to another party or some one on his behalf, with the object or intention, that the other party should act upon the faith of the statement and the other party does act upon the faith of the statement. Where an agent with authority to make an agreement on behalf of his principal agrees to waive his principal's right, the principal will be bound. [A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 933; A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 79, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1976 Andh. Pra. 205 (D.B.); A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2065.

The rule of evidence governs estoppel but creates no substantive right; it is a matter only of proof of the conduct of the party which by its representation to another induces it to alter its position. Waiver, on the other hand, is contractual; it constitutes a cause of action when the party agrees to waive its right: A.I.R. 1974 All. 296.

Where mutation entries were made by consent but only the plea of estoppel and not of waiver was raised in the written statement and only the issue relating to estoppel was raised and tried, held, the Court could not deal with the question of waiver on the issue of estoppel and hold that there was an estoppel by waiver; estoppel and waiver are not the same thing: A.I.R. 1972 Him. Pra. 20: (1971) 1 Sim.L.J. 1 (D.B.).

Estoppel and waiver—Charge decree for maintenance—Execution—Failure to mention charge for future maintenance in sale proclamation—Does not necessarily operate as estoppel or waiver of right to claim future maintenance from same property: (1962) 75 Mad.L.W. 444: (1962) 2 M.L.J. 348: A.I.R. 1963 Mad. 144.

7. Res judicata and estoppel.—(See also Note 43, infra). Res judicata and estoppel—Relative scope of: A.I.R. 1958 All. 207.

Where a finding in a previous suit could not operate as res judicata as the point in that suit was not directly and substantially in issue in the latter suit, held, the doctrine of estoppel would also be not attracted: A.I.R. 1971 All. 334: 1971 All.L.J. 614 (D.B.).

Suit for ejectment of tenants—Pending this suit real owner establishing her title to same suit property—Plaintiff's suit for ejectment is barred by res judicata—Rule of estoppel—Its applicability: A.I.R. 1964 All. 82.

Suit for ejectment of tenant based on the ground that premises were used in breach of contract of tenancy—Another ground though open not taken—Suit dismissed—Subsequent suit for ejectment based on the other ground, held, barred by constructive res judicata: I.L.R. (1964) 2 Punj. 231: A.I.R. 1964 Punj. 408.

Where in an eviction petition under the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947, the tenant in his written statement sought fixation of the standard rent for the demised premises but did not press it any further and afterwards the tenant initiated separate proceedings for fixation of the standard rent, held, the tenant was barred from maintaining the fresh proceedings not only by the principle of res judicata but also by estoppel: A.I.R. 1991 Guj. 180: (1991-2) 32 Guj.L.R. 898.

The bar under S. 13 of the C.P. & Berar Letting of Houses and Rent Control Order, 1949 applies only to the landlord who seeks to determine the tenancy; it is not attracted if the tenant, even without delivery of physical possession, surrenders the tenancy to the landlord. Thus, where the tenant had surrendered his tenancy and the matter as to the time to be allowed to him for vacating the premises was referred to arbitration and the award therein had been made rule of the Court and during the execution proceedings the tenant filed objections thereto, held, the tenant having not raised them in the suit, he was precluded by the principles of res judicata to raise them in the execution as well as by the rule of estoppel: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 375: (1987) 4 S.C.C. 585.

Where a suit for declaration and injunction against interfering with the plaintiff's possession in the suit property on valuation then valid under the law of the State of Travancore was decided against the State right upto the stage of the dismissal of its Special Leave Petition by the Supreme Court and thereafter the State sued the decreeholder for the same reliefs on the same valuation of the same properties, held, apart from the bar of res judicata the State was estopped from challenging the valuation as by adopting the same valuation it had waived its right of objection: (1974) 87 Mad.L.W. 333 (D.B.).

General principle of res judicata—Applicability apart from S. 11, C.P. Code: A.I.R. 1958 All. 54.

Res judicata not expressly pleaded will be deemed to have been waived: A.I.R. 1967 All. 423.

Exclusion of evidence in second trial, on ground of issue of estoppel—In previous trial issue must have been distinctly raised and decided: 1965 Raj.L.W. 317: A.I.R. 1965 Raj. 221.

Transferee from a debtor—When can take benefit of the provision—Specific issue raised and decided in prior suit that debtor was not agriculturist—Transferee not entitled to raise the issue again: A.I.R. 1962 Andh. Pra. 425.

Two brothers jointly starting business—Finding that no family nucleus was utilised—Finding does not operate as res judicata or estoppel: A.I.R. 1967 All. 557.

Suit by Municipal Board for restraining enforcement of restitution order against it on the ground that ownership in property vested in it—Maintainability of—Question of ownership was not decided in previous suit against Board—Held, Board was not estopped from maintaining regular suit: I.L.R. (1965) 1 All. 435: A.I.R. 1965 All. 527.

Res judicata and estoppel—Principles do not apply to assessment proceedings: (1964) 51 I.T.R. 131 (Andh. Pra.).

Reference of Industrial dispute, once refused—State Government not barred from referring again—Previous refusal to refer does not operate as res judicata or as an estoppel: I.L.R. (1964) 1 All. 560: A.I.R. 1964 All. 328.

8. Estoppel and waiver qua fundamental rights.—There can be no estoppel against the exercise of fundamental rights on the principle of waiver; the State cannot arrogate to itself the right to commit breach of the fundamental rights of any person by waiver, estoppel or the like; any continuing action violating fundamental rights of any person must come to an end; no law or legal principle can prevent a Court from giving remedy. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 149, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1982 Bom. 135.

Estoppel—Rule of—Does not apply in case of fundamental rights: A.I.R. 1968 Bom. 91; A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 289.

There can be no estoppel against fundamental rights, nor can an erring State or other public authority succeed on such issues as waiver where questions of natural justice and reasonableness of action are in issue: (1992) 2 Cal.L.J. 9: (1992) 2 Cal.L.T. (H.C.) 492.

Question of waiver of fundamental rights does not arise—Constitutional right to equality extends also to procedural matters: 1969 Lab.I.C. 631: A.I.R. 1969 All. 278 (F.B.).

The right not to be discriminated against as enshrined in Art. 14 of the Constitution of India, is one of the fundamental rights. Those have been enshrined as a matter of constitutional policy and for public good and the doctrine of waiver or acquiescence cannot be applied thereto. A citizen cannot voluntarily get discrimination or waive his fundamental right against discrimination: A.I.R. 1982 Gau. 37.

S. 10 of the Divorce Act, 1869 provides for grant of a divorce decree to the Christian husband on mere proof of adultery but it requires Christian wives to further prove cruelty or desertion, besides adultery, to obtain the same relief; the section is, thus, to that extent violative of Art. 15 of the Constitution; the challenge to the vires of the provision, held, cannot be repelled on the ground that wives having voluntarily entered into Church marriages made a representation of not claiming dissolution of marriage on the ground of mere adultery are barred from so claiming afterwards by the principle of promissory estoppel; there can be no estoppel against the Constitution or waiver of fundamental rights; provision declared ultra vires. [A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 180, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1995 Ker. 252 (S.B.).

Where concession of 5 marks granted for admission to the candidates coming from families having no graduates was held to be in violation of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India, held, their admission could not be sustained on the rule of estoppel because there could be no estoppel against the Constitution: (1991-1) 107 Mad.L.W. 113 (D.B.).

In terms of the prospectus for admission to post graduate course in Medicine, some candidates seeking admission to certain specialities were entitled to an outright admission for the 3 year course while for others like the petitioners who sought admission to other specialities at the end of the first year of housemanship, a fresh examination was contemplated to entitle them to take the remaining 2 year course. The petitioners after completing one year course questioned said arrangement on the ground of violation of Art. 14 of the Constitution and the respondent pleaded estoppel. Held, when infraction of Art. 14 of the Constitution is pleaded, estoppel is not an answer. Art. 14 holds out a mandate to the State for regulating its conduct and while the State's conduct is under review with reference to the equality clause, estoppel based upon the performance of a citizen is not the answer to negative such a plea. Therefore, the respondents could not plead estoppel against petitioners: A.I.R. 1981 Ori. 97: (1981) 51 Cut.L.T. 305 (D.B.).

As far as the fundamental rights are concerned, there is no waiver or acquiescence. Thus, where petitioner students were not considered eligible for being admitted to the M.B.B.S. course on the ground that they were not "local students" as defined in the rules for admission to the said course and they challenged the rules on the ground of being violative of Art. 14 of the Constitution but it was argued that since the rules were in force for last about twenty-nine years and, therefore, the challenge to the constitutional validity of the rules should not be entertained, held, the petitioners were not estopped from challenging the constitutional validity of said rules: A.I.R. 1993 Guj. 90.

No question of estoppel or waiver arises where the state lacks the constitutional power to enforce a rule which is unconstitutional and, thus, ultra vires. Where the petitioner who appeared at the pre-medical test was not selected for admission and thereafter he questioned the validity of the reservation of seats made by the State Government for certain classes and groups of candidates which reservation, according to the petitioner, deprived him of being admitted for Medical Course but the State Government pleaded that the petitioner having knowingly signed the form and having agreed to abide by all the terms and instructions incorporated therein was not entitled to any relief on the ground of constitutional invalidity of any of such terms and instructions, held, merely the signing of the form by the petitioner would not confer upon the State a power to discriminate in violation of the constitutional injunction. Thus, no question of estoppel arose: A.I.R. 1975 All. 1: 1974 All.L.J. 779 (F.B.).

Principle of promissory estoppel can have no application to representations made regarding the assertion or enforcement of fundamental rights. No individual can barter away the freedoms conferred upon him by the Constitution. A concession made by him in a proceeding, whether under a mistake of law or otherwise, that he does not possess or will not enforce any particular fundamental right, cannot create an estoppel against him in that or any subsequent proceeding. Such a concession, if enforced, would defeat the purpose of the Constitution. Thus, where the petitioners had conceded in the High Court that they had no fundamental right to construct hutments on pavements and that they would not object to their demolition after a certain date, held, subsequently, the petitioners were not estopped from setting up their fundamental rights in the Supreme Court as a defence to the demolition of the huts put up by them on pavements or parts of public roads. [A.I.R. 1959 S.C. 149, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1986 S.C. 180: (1985) 2 Bom.C.R. 434: (1985) 3 S.C.C. 545.

Waiver of fundamental right under Art. 30—when established: A.I.R. 1969 Ker. 191: 1968 Ker.L.J. 799: 1968 Ker.L.T. 815.

There can neither be estoppel against law nor waiver of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the Constitution. Where the petitioner—Educational Society, a religious minority institution, challenged R. 74(2) of the Goa, Daman and Diu Grant-in-Aid Code for Secondary Schools and Colleges and other Educational Institutions except the Primary Schools (1963), as violative of Art. 30 (1) of the Constitution and the respondent contended that as the petitioner had voluntarily accepted the terms and conditions contained in the said Code as far back as in 1963, it created a relationship of contractual nature and, thus, the petitioner could not be permitted, after a lapse of 14 years, to complain against the agreed terms and invoke Art. 30(1) of the Constitution, held, the petitioner was not estopped from challenging said provision as it was violative of Art. 30 (1): A.I.R. 1980 Goa 1.

The obligation on the part of the Presiding Officers to inform the accused of his fundamental right of free legal assistance at State's cost in case he is unable to engage the services of a lawyer on account of poverty or indigence, is absolute and is not conditioned upon the accused himself applying for such legal assistance. Where in the Courts below it was not the case of the petitioners that being indigent they could not arrange for legal assistance, held, they were not estopped from pleading that they were denied the fundamental right of free legal assistance: 1988 Cr.L.J. 457 (Madh. Pra.).

9. Estoppel by representation.—A mere representation of intention cannot be the basis of estoppel: A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 172. In order that a representation may operate as an estoppel it must be a representation of an existing fact and not of mere intention or future promises: I.L.R. 42 Cal. 254; 39 I.C. 385; I.L.R. 28 Bom. 399: (1905) 7 Bom.L.R. 184; I.L.R. 41 Mad. 315; 34 M.L.J. 463; A.I.R. 1957 Mad. 169. See also A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 402; A.I.R. 1959 Pat. 278; 1975 Mah.L.J. 262.

It must be of an existing fact and not of a future act: (1937) 39 Bom.L.R. 1257: A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 148. Also estoppel does not confer any title but is merely a rule of evidence which prevents one party from denying the existence of a fact which he represented as existing and upon which representation another person had been induced to act to his detriment: I.L.R. 56 Cal. 989: A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 230. See the under-mentioned decision. There can be a good title by estoppel. A Jute Mill sold certain bales of Hessian cloth to B who sold it to K. K in his turn sold the goods to the plaintiff. The Jute Mill issued delivery orders to B. The delivery orders were ultimately endorsed in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff wrote to the Jute Mill stating that the delivery orders were documents of title. Delivery orders were sent to the Jute Mill for registering the name of the plaintiff as holder. The Mill in its reply did not dispute that the delivery orders were not documents of title nor did it dispute that the plaintiff had no title to the goods. The Mill had withheld delivery and refused registration solely on the ground of their alleged lien. Ultimately the Mill returned the delivery orders with an endorsement that the Mill had a lien on the goods. The plaintiff had paid full price in respect of the goods, covered by the delivery orders. Held, that by the acts and conduct of the Mill, the Mill was estopped from denying that the plaintiff had title to the goods or was the owner thereof. The plaintiff, therefore, had title by estoppel to the goods and consequently the Mill by withholding delivery or refusing to deliver the goods was guilty of wrongful detention and conversion of the goods: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 143.

There is undoubtedly a clear distinction between a representation of an existing fact and a representation that something will be done in future. The former may, if it amounts to a representation as to some fact alleged at the time to be actually in existence, raise an estoppel, if another person alters his position relying upon that representation. A representation that something will be done in the future may result in a contract, if another person to whom it is addressed acts upon it. A representation that something will be done in future is not a representation that it is true when made. But between a representation of a fact which is untrue and a representation express or implied—to do something in future, there is no clear antithesis. A representation that something will be done in future may involve an existing intention to act in future in the manner represented. If the representation is acted upon by another person it may, unless the statute governing the person making the representation provides otherwise, result in an agreement enforceable at law. A public body is also not exempt from liability to carry out its obligation arising out of representations made by it relying upon which a citizen has altered his position to his prejudice: A.I.R 1971 S.C. 1021: (1970) 3 S.C.R. 854.

The rule of estoppel is based on equity and good conscience. If a person by representation or conduct amounting to representation induces another person to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation cannot be allowed to deny the truth of his representation to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it: 1969 B.L.J.R. 283.

The basic principle is that a person who makes an unambiguous representation by words, or conduct, of an existing fact, and causes another party to act to his detriment in reliance on the representation will not be permitted subsequently to act inconsistently with that representation. The representator could not subsequently allege in dealing with the representee that the facts were different from those represented. Thus, where in a suit for possession, the defendant-Government represented that the value of the property of which possession was claimed was Rs. 20,00,000 and the plaintiffs paid Court-fee accordingly and thus, altered their position in reliance on it, held, the representator could not subsequently be allowed to act inconsistently with the representation because by so doing the representee will be prejudiced. In a way it was a representation of promise, the Government was bound by its representation: A.I.R. 1982 Del. 290: 1982 Rajdhani L.R. 196.

The burden of proving the ingredients of S. 115 lies on the party claiming estoppel. The representation which is the basis for the rule must be clear and unambiguous and not indefinite, upon which the party relying on it is said to have, in good faith and in belief of it, acted. Under the section the representation which estops a person making it from acting contrary to it is one on the belief of which the other person acts in a manner he would not have done but for it and on believing it to be true: (1969) 2 S.C.C. 1: (1969) 2 Lab.L.J. 554: A.I.R 1970 S.C. 426.

Conditions for—Party must show that a particular representation has been made and that the other party acted upon that representation to his detriment—No representation on the fact of consent terms of an order that the debtor would not apply for extension of time—No estoppel against him in so applying: (1969) 2 Comp.L.J. 145 (Bom.).

Question of estoppel could arise where party to whom representation is made acts on such representation in such manner as to change his position and is likely to suffer irreparably if party making representation is permitted to draw back from such representation: (1966) 1 Mys.L.J. 716: A.I.R. 1967 Mys. 119.

It is true that if there is a representation, by one of the parties to suit or proceeding, of certain facts which would necessitate some other proceeding, and as a result of that representation being accepted the Court passes a certain order, then the party making that representation would be estopped from stating in separate proceedings that the facts represented were not true. No party can, however, be estopped because of a legal argument put forward on his behalf: A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 62: (1943) 2 M.L.J. 508.

If a man, either by express terms or by conduct, makes a representation to another of the existence of a certain state of facts, he is estopped from denying the existence of such a state of facts although the other acts in a way different from the way intended by the maker of the representation: A.I.R. 1949 Cal. 20.

Even though the matter may have passed from the stage of a representation into an agreement, there are cases where the Courts are entitled to entertain a plea of estoppel in order to prevent fraud or circuity of action: (1953) 2 M.L.J. 782: A.I.R. 1954 S.C. 82.

It is not necessary to invoke successfully the defence of estoppel that the representation should be fraudulent: I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 227: A.I.R. 1943 Sind 177.

It is not necessary for the purpose of S. 115 that any fraud or deception should be pleaded. If it is found that any representation was intentionally made by one party and it was acted upon by the other party the rule of estoppel will apply: (1938) 40 Punj.L.R. 848: A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 558.

The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive or knowledge of the person making the representation and it is not essential that the intention of the person representing should be fraudulent. A rule of estoppel is purely personal against the person estopped and does not create any substantive right in rem except against the person estopped or against his representative. No estoppel can ensue on a representation of a mere opinion or of a point of law: I.L.R. 50 All. 885: A.I.R. 1928 All. 459. See also 101 I.C. 803: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 538.

The word "intentionally" in S. 115 does not mean that the conduct of the person making the representation should have been fraudulent or that it should not have been made under a mistake or misapprehension. The motive or state of knowledge of the representator is immaterial. The law only considers the position of the person to whom the representation was made: A.I.R. 1960 All. 164.

S. 115 does not apply when there is no evidence that any representations were made: A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 159: (1943) 1 M.L.J. 219.

Estoppel may certainly arise in consequence of representation by the omission of a party to do or say something but unless there is a duty imposed by law on the party to do or say something, the omission to do that thing or say that thing cannot give rise to estoppel: A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 69.

Representation—Railway Authorities representing that consignment not arrived—Consignee acting on it—Railway cannot later on establish that consignment had arrived earlier. [A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 45, Disting.]: A.I.R. 1970 Ori. 157.

Where a contractor having executed works for the Railways had claimed additional payments occasioned by escalation of costs due to delay on the part of Railways but withdrew the claim therefor whereupon the Railways paid his final bills computed on the agreed rates whereafter the contractor sued the Railways for damages and compensation caused to him by the delay which was resisted by the Railways on the ground of waiver and estoppel, held, the doctrine was not attracted; the contractor had made no representations; the Railways had suffered no detriment; they did not pay anything more than what was lawfully payable by them: A.I.R. 1982 Karn. 50: (1981) 2 Karn.L.J. 276 (D.B.).

Where in a contract for the purchase of the right to cut and remove trees, the Government expressly stipulates and the contractor expressly agrees that the Government will not be liable for the loss occasioned by any shortage in the estimated volume of the trees, it is an express term of the contract and the contractor must be tied down to it. He cannot go back on his agreement simply because it does not suit him to abide by it: 1959 Ker.L.T. 670: A.I.R. 1960 Ker. 94 (D.B.).

Assurance or admissions by Government through affidavits in earlier proceedings or on the floor of the Legislature, which are mere expressions of opinion, limited to the context and also being rather vague hopes are not specific assurances or representations which are binding on the Government so as to create estoppel: A.I.R. 1975 S.C. 2164: (1975) 4 S.C.C. 67.

Whether persons acting on representation made by the Government can claim, in the absence of execution of formal contract under Art. 299 of the Constitution that Government shall be bound to carry out the promises. See A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 718.

Contract between plaintiff and Government on printed forms—Plaintiff to supply bhusa at certain stations, in certain qualities at certain period—Written agreement containing clause that non-supply of wagons not to be excused for non-performance—Oral agreement that Government would supply wagons—Plaintiff led to belief up to last moment that wagons would be supplied—Wagons not made available—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1957 Punj. 141.

Where a contractor was served a notice of demand by the Government for Rs. 21,314.15 out of which the Government claimed to have already realised Rs. 20,574. 64 from his pending bills on the ground that the Government incurred extra expenditure, which was acknowledged by the contractor within 2 days agreeing to the recovery of the balance claimed amount from his security deposit, held, this did not estop the contractor from preferring a counter-claim of Rs. 5,000 for breach of contract and impugn the Government's right to recover the extra expenditure; there was no representation by the contractor which led to any action on the part of the Government to its detriment. [A.I.R. 1965

Where a brother entered into an agreement of sale representing himself to be the property owner, held, he is estopped from contending thereafter that his brother was also a half-owner of the property agreed to be sold: (1991) 43 Del.L.T. 113: A.I.R. 1991 Del. 178 (D.B.).

Where a Santhal woman suing for her share in the estate of her deceased father in her own right had earlier appeared as a witness in another suit instituted by the defendants in the second suit to which she was not a party and deposed in support of the gifts made in her sons' favour by her mother as a limited owner of the properties involved in the second suit was sought to be estopped from prosecuting her suit because, as alleged by the defendants, she had not then asserted her claim to the properties but for which the defendants would have impleaded her in their earlier suit, held, there being nothing on record that the plaintiff had made any representation to the defendants before their institution of the earlier suit that she was not interested in the inheritance of her father, she cannot be estopped from claiming her share in her father's estate in the suit: A.I.R. 1971 Pat. 185: 1970 Pat.L.J.R. 573 (D.B.).

Representation — Sale certificate — Evidence of title—Estoppel. See A.I.R. 1958 Pat. 290.

The doctrine of estoppel by representation is a rule of evidence and except as a bar to testimony it has no particular significance. Thus, where the plaintiff, who had derived title by inheritance alongwith others from original lessor to disputed premises, filed a suit for eviction against the defendant-tenant, held, the defendant was entitled to show that the plaintiff alone was not entitled to relief of eviction. The mere fact that defendant paid rent to the plaintiff was not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff relief of eviction as he represented only a section of the entire body of owners. [A.I.R. 1969 Madh. Pra. 32, Dissent. from]: A.I.R. 1981 Cal. 413: (1980) 2 Cal.L.J. 518 (D.B.).

Defendant erecting building on debutor land—Representation by Receiver that he would become permanent tenant—Receiver is estopped from ejecting defendant: (1941-42) 46 Cal.W.N. 483.

Where in a suit for eviction, there is no recital in the plaint of any plea of estoppel against the defendant, held, that there is no justification for invoking the doctrine of estoppel on the basis of averments in a previously instituted suit by the defendant against the plaintiff, where those averments cannot be the foundation of the theory of estoppel and cannot be said to be consistent only with the theory of any representation by the defendant: (1956) 69 Mad.L.W. (Andh.) 30: 1956 An.W.R. 544.

Rent suit—Appeal—Death of one of the plaintiffs respondents—Representatives not impleaded—Representation by other plaintiffs that they were the representatives—Plaintiffs are estopped from saying that the lower appellate Court's decree was a nullity because of the failure to add legal representatives of the deceased: A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 819: (1928-29) 33 Cal.W.N. 873.

Where a person obtains a release from a liability upon the understanding of foregoing a definite claim against a third party, that person is estopped from asserting or enforcing the claim to the detriment of third party: A.I.R. 1930 All. 434 (2): 1930 All.L.J. 1012.

There is no estoppel where some representation is made in a mistaken view of fact. Where an examination in which petitioner appeared was cancelled as a whole for adoption of unfair means on a large scale, but subsequently the petitioner got a telegram to appear for re-examination which he did but his result was withheld on the ground that as he had been expelled from the examination having been caught red-handed while using unfair means, he was not entitled to appear at the subsequent re-examination and the petitioner pleaded estoppel, held, the examination as a whole had been cancelled, hundreds of telegrams must have been sent to different examinees to appear at re-examination. Perhaps, someone sending the telegram did not know that this petitioner was one of those who had been expelled and could not appear at the re-examination. Therefore, the petitioner could not invoke doctrine of estoppel. [A.I.R. 1975 Pat. 12; A.I.R. 1967 S.C. 1269; A.I.R. 1970 S.C. 150, Rel. on]: A.I.R. 1976 Pat. 301.

Where a large piece of village land was sub-divided into plots for setting up a residential colony and an announcement was made on behalf of the co-owners of the land on microphone that plot No. 19 thereof would be reserved for a dharamsala and in some maps the plot was also shown to be so but without any stipulation in the deed to that effect and it was not proved as to who in fact had made the representation on behalf of the co-owners, held, the representation could not form the basis of estoppel; promises made over loudspeakers are often claptraps of politics; the announcement was a mere puffing up of property put up for sale; the owners, not having been divested of their title in plot No. 19, were free to sell it to any one: A.I.R. 1973 S.C. 814: (1973) 1 S.C.C. 294.

A representation in order to attract the rule of estoppel need not always be a representation of a physical fact, but may as well be the representation of an attitude or a state of mind, inasmuch as, the state of man's mind is as much a matter of fact as the state of his digestion. If a man, either by words or by conduct, has intimated that he consents to an act which has been done, and that he will offer no opposition to it, although it could not have been lawfully done without his consent, and he thereby induces others to do that from which they otherwise might have abstained, he cannot question the legality of the act he had so sanctioned, to the prejudice of those who have so given faith to his words or to the fair inference to be drawn from his conduct. Generally speaking, if a party has an interest to prevent an act being done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous licencee. An arbitration clause in a contract for execution of certain work by A with the Government of India provided that except otherwise provided in the contract, all questions and disputes arising out of or relating to the contract would be referred to the arbitration of the "Superintending Engineer of the Circle for the time being". Disputes arose between the parties and therefore, the Government appointed one M as an arbitrator to adjudicate on the claim made by it against A and informed the A about the appointment. Both the parties knew that M was not competent to act as arbitrator according to qualification prescribed by the arbitration clause. A not only submitted to arbitration of M on the Government's claim but also put forward a counter-claim against the Government for adjudication by the same arbitrator, took part in the proceedings from beginning to end, agreed to extensions of time for filing award and when the award went against him, sought to set aside the award on the ground that M was not competent to act as arbitrator. Held that in the circumstances, although there could be no representation by A as to the actual competence of the arbitrator, the rule of estoppel will still bind him and will still prevent him from contending that M was not qualified under the terms of the agreement to arbitrate in the dispute: A.I.R. 1958 Cal. 415.

It is well established proposition of law that if a man conducts himself in such a way that a reasonable man would take his representation to be true, and acts upon it, then the party making the representation is precluded from contesting the truth. The property was joint and D was the karta of the family. D had knowledge of the sale by his younger brother R. Later on with full knowledge of the facts, he not only attested his signature to the sale deed but he also went with his brother R to the office of the Registrar, where he identified R as the seller. D never cared to inform the purchaser that R had no saleable interest in the property. Held that though D made no verbal representation to the purchaser this was an instance of estoppel by conduct, where under the conditions of the case, representation might be inferred from silence or inaction. In the circumstances of the case, on the finding of the lower Court, it was a legitimate inference that D not only witnessed the execution of the deed, but also consented to the transaction and he was estopped from challenging it: A.I.R. 1956 Madh. Bh. 16.

Where an agent of an Insurance Company acts as a mere channel of communication in regard to certain representations made by the principal and intended to be communicated to the assured, and the latter takes up a policy of life insurance on the faith of such representation, the provisions of S. 115 apply and the company is estopped: A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 152: I.L.R. 20 Luck. 194.

Representation—Pre-decretal agreement against execution of decree made by parties relying on settled case law—Judgment-debtor acting on it, refraining from pressing its contentions—Judgment creditor precluded from challenging agreement: 1960 Ker.L.T. 863: A.I.R. 1961 Ker. 179.

Where a Government servant was allotted Government accommodation but under the Rules he failed to intimate Directorate of Estates of his having been transferred and, thus, continued in unauthorised occupation but on payment of normal rent and when his transfer came to knowledge of the Directorate, his allotment was cancelled and he was charged damages equivalent to market rent, held, he could not invoke estoppel; no representation or conduct amounting to representation could be attributed to the Directorate to make him believe that he was permitted to occupy the flat on normal rent nor was he induced to change his position on its faith or to his detriment; rather it was he who had concealed the fact of his transfer from the Directorate clearly against his duty: A.I.R. 1987 S.C. 808: 1987 Lab.I.C. 627: (1987) 1 S.C.C. 551: (1987) 2 Lab.L.J. 3: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 624.

10. Estoppel by silence.—See 6 Cal.L.J. 601; 7 Cal.L.J. 604; I.L.R. 9 All. 413; I.L.R. 32 Cal. 359. See also I.L.R. 31 Bom. 566 (P.C.). Mere silence cannot amount to a representation so as to give rise to an estoppel, but where there is a duty to disclose, deliberate silence may become significant and amount to a representation giving rise to an estoppel: (1945) 47 Bom.L.R. 470: A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 511.

The law of estoppel draws a distinction between representations and omissions, and omission to speak will furnish a basis for estoppel, only when the circumstances are such as to throw upon the party sought to be bound by estoppel the duty to speak out the truth: 44 Mad.L.W. 859: A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 158.

The duty of bringing the legal representation on the record of a case rests upon the plaintiff in that case. There is no duty upon the legal representative to volunteer. His inaction cannot be used against him because there is no duty on him to speak. His conduct cannot be used as an admission or even as an estoppel: I.L.R. (1950) Nag. 491: 1950 Nag.L.J. 281.

Silence may amount to acquiescence if it is an omission to act according to the circumstances of a particular case. Where a site is sold with a condition attached that it should not be used as a shop, but it is allowed to be used as a shop by the first vendee and his successors and the shop is even re-built without any objection being raised by the vendor, the latter is estopped from raising the objection subsequently: (1940) 42 Punj.L.R. 133.

Silence—No objection taken—Estoppel by conduct: 1959 Jab.L.J. 75.

A representee when remains silent, no estoppel arises by the reason of representation when the person represented does not alter his position and as a corrolary presumption to the fact, there is no scope for invocation of estoppel: (1988) 1 Cal.L.J. 493: (1987-88) 92 Cal.W.N. 999.

Where there was no evidence of any detriment to the appellants as a consequence of the silence of the respondent or which had caused the appellants to alter their position in any way and there was no conduct amounting to a representation intended to induce a course of conduct on the part of the appellants, held, that there was no question of estoppel: 44 Mad.L.W. 128: A.I.R. 1936 P.C. 193 (P.C.).

A mere silence cannot operate as an estoppel unless it is established that there was a duty to speak: 119 I.C. 882: A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 150; 28 Nag.L.R. 227: A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 165; (1933-34) 38 Cal.W.N. 344: A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 83 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1959 Cal. 69. See also A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 158: 44 Mad.L.W. 859 [Case where the Collector sent a letter intimating to the mortgagee that the entire debt has been paid off, the mortgagee did not inform the Collector that a portion of the debt yet remained unpaid]. Estoppel by omission: 1 P.L.J. 16; (1919-20) 24 Cal.W.N. 269: I.L.R. 47 Cal. 446; I.L.R. 15 Mad. 303.

In order to apply the principle of estoppel by silence there must be a duty to speak and a person who is sought to be bound by that principle must be shown to be aware of the transaction. No general rule can be formulated as to when silence may operate as estoppel, but certainly it can apply only when a party fails to make his rights known, where fairness and good conscience require that he should do so to protect the interest of others. Where no duty is cast by law on a person to speak and act, silence does not amount to estoppel. Further, the principle of estoppel would have no application when both parties are equally acquainted with true facts. Where properties were purchased in the names of the partners and their two brothers and other purchase was made up in the name of brothers only and thereafter in a suit for dissolution of firm both the properties were allotted to one partner, the other partner being unaware of the proceedings, held, the other partner could not be estopped from objecting the division of entire property as the principle of estoppel by silence had no application: A.I.R. 1980 Pat. 77: (1979) 27 B.L.J.R. 549 (D.B.).

11. Estoppel by acquiescence—General.—See also under Estoppel by silence. See A.I.R. 1954 All. 447; I.L.R. (1954) Mad. 537: (1954) 2 M.L.J. 486; 23 Cal.L.J. 82; I.L.R. 41 Cal. 771; I.L.R. 2 Lah. 258: A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 110; 2 P.L.J. 600; A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 89; 61 I.A. 18: I.L.R. 12 Rang. 13: 66 M.L.J. 239 (P.C.); I.L.R. 9 Luck. 538: A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 178; I.L.R. 17 Luck. 164: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 611; I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 338: A.I.R. 1943 Sind 221; 1968 Cur.L.J. 674. There is a distinction between acquiescence and mere acquiescence: 1936 A.M.L.J. 81.

It is not merely a positive or active declaration that can be the basis for a plea of estoppel, but also an act or omission can constitute such basis. An estoppel may arise from silence as well as words. However, to constitute an "estoppel by silence" or "acquiescence" it must appear that the party to be estopped must be bound in equity and good conscience to speak and that party claiming estoppel relied upon such silence or acquiescence and was misled thereby to change his position to his prejudice: A.I.R. 1968 Del. 131.

The doctrine of acquiescence is only another phase of estoppel. The foundation of the doctrine of estoppel and acquiescence is that one party has made to the other representations which were intended to be and were in fact acted upon by the other spending money or doing an act which he would not have otherwise done, which involved expenditure or a change of position. In the case of estoppel the material representations are active, while in the case of acquiescence the representations are to be inferred from silence. The doctrine of acquiescence also goes by the name of the doctrine of standing by. If an owner of land finds another person trespassing upon his land and building on it, mere silence or inaction on his part at the time will not be sufficient to support a case of acquiescence. Mere silence or mere inaction cannot be construed to be a representation. To support a case of acquiescence there must be something more than mere silence or mere inaction. Inaction or silence in circumstances which require a duty to speak is the foundation of the doctrine. When inaction or silence would amount to fraud or deception, then and then only can the doctrine of standing by or acquiescence be applied. The party seeking the aid of the doctrine has to prove (1) that he made a mistake of his legal rights; (2) that he expended money or did some act on the faith of the mistaken belief; (3) that the legal owner or possessor of the legal right knew of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the party relying on the doctrine; (4) that the possessor of the legal right knew of the mistaken belief of the other; and (5) that the legal owner encouraged the other party in his expenditure of money or in the other acts, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal rights: (1935-36) 40 Cal.W.N. 1370: A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 711; A.I.R. 1986 Kam. 77: I.L.R. (1986) Kam. 1130. See also A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 158; A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 187: (1939) 1 M.L.J. 75 [Representation as to authority of widow to adopt];

In order to sustain a plea of acquiescence, it is necessary to prove that the party against whom the said plea is raised, had remained silent about the matter regarding which the plea of acquiescence is raised, even after knowing the truth of the matter: (1987) 100 Mad.L.W. 1137 (S.C.).

The doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence comes into play when a party having a right over a property stands by and sees the other person dealing with the property in a manner inconsistent with the first party's rights and which takes no action while the impugned act is in progress; the first party in such a circumstance is deemed to have lost its rights on estoppel by acquiescence: A.I.R. 1980 Gau. 70 (D.B.).

For a defence on the basis of estoppel by acquiescence to be successful it is necessary that the defendant should have acted in good faith believing that he had a valid right to do the act in question and that the plaintiff knowing that the defendant was under this mistaken belief should have abstained from doing anything to prevent him from spending money in doing that act: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 105 (All.).

"Acquiescence" is used where a person on becoming aware of the violation of his rights then not known to him refrains to seek redress; in that sense it is an element in laches; its proper use is, however, where a person having a right sees another person about to infringe or actually infringing that right stands by and gives to the wrong-doer the impression of his assent but for which the wrong-doer would have abstained: (1994) 3 Kam.L.J. 493.

Generally speaking, if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its having been done, and acquiesces in it, so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done by his previous licencee. An estoppel does not itself give a cause of action; it prevents a person from denying a certain state of affairs. There can be no acquiescence or waiver in a case where both the parties are unaware of their rights in the disputed property, and both are labouring under some mistake about their respective rights in regard to such land. Unless both are fully cognizant of their right to dispute them, the parties cannot be said to acquiesce in the claims of the other. Where, therefore, acquiescence is relied on, it must be shown that the person acquiescing was aware of the matter in which he acquiesced and of the effect of such acquiescence. The plaintiff and defendants were neighbouring plot owners. In constructing their house, the defendants made encroachment on plaintiffs land. None of the parties knew their respective rights in regard to the encroached land, and, both were labouring under some sort of mistake about their respective right in the said land. Only when the defendant's construction had progressed for several months, and when a boundary dispute cropped up between the parties, and when the plaintiff measured the land that he learnt that the portion on which the defendants were constructing the building belonged to him, and, immediately thereafter he brought a suit for possession. Held, that no building equity has arisen in favour of the defendants, nor any equitable rights have sprung up in their favour, which can prevent the plaintiff, in the circumstances of the case to claim possession by demolition of the building on the encroached portion of his land. As no finding of acquiescence or waiver can be founded on the finding that both the parties were labouring under some sort of mistake about their respective rights in regard to the encroached portion of the land, the plaintiff is not estopped from claiming vacant possession of the encroached land by demolition of the building standing thereon: A.I.R. 1957 Pat. 308: I.L.R. 36 Pat. 362.

Acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud. A man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights: I.L.R. 17 Luck. 164: 1941 O.W.N. 1021: A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 611.

Acquiescence is a matter of legal inference from the facts established in a case. The mere inactivity of the person concerned for a particular number of years apart from anything else in the case does not necessarily lead to the inference of acquiescence. The question of acquiescence cannot be reduced to a rule of thumb. Where a party relied upon omission or inactivity of the other as depriving the latter of his legal rights, nothing short of conduct amounting to fraud can sustain a plea of acquiescence: I.L.R. (1953) Nag. 601: A.I.R. 1954 Nag. 97.

Mere inactiveness for particular numbers of years is not sufficient. Acquiescence is matter of legal inference of fact proved in each case: 1982 M.P.W.N. 356.

A mere silence to object unaccompanied by any positive act or conduct when there is no duty to speak would not amount to acquiescence and would not debar objection, at a later stage: I.L.R. (1952) Trav.-Co. 960: A.I.R. 1953 Trav.-Co. 146.

Mere non-action against an incorrect settlement entry is not as such an act or omission as will, without more, be sufficient in law to induce or mislead another person to act upon the same and so to act to his prejudice: (1958-59) 63 Cal.W.N. 689.

Acquiescence in an invalid and illegal objection does not bind the plaintiff or prevent him from exercising his right: A.I.R. 1933 Sind 258.

The principle of laches and acquiescence is not an empty principle and if as a result of laches and acquiescence on the part of a party some equities have come into existence, the party guilty of laches would be estopped from agitating the question again and laying the matter open once again for the decision of the Court. It is a settled legal position that a wife can waive her right to a share when a partition takes place between father and his sons. Thus, where the wife not only failed to ask for a share on a partition but also failed and neglected to agitate and establish her right by taking the matter to higher Court even after her application to be joined as a party was rejected and she waited for about two years after the partition suit was ultimately disposed, held, the wife was not only guilty of laches and acquiescence but she had by her conduct waived her right to a share and, therefore, she was estopped from filing a fresh suit: 1980 Hindu L.R. 588: (1980) 21 Guj.L.R. 615 (D.B.).

There is no question of waiver or acquiescence on the part of a person claiming specific performance of a contract so long as the period prescribed by the Limitation Act does not expire. Thus, where plaintiff filed a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale two years after the execution of alleged agreement to sell in his favour when the performance was refused, held, there could be no question of waiver or acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff as the period of three years prescribed under the Limitation Act had not lapsed: A.I.R. 1984 Pat. 277: 1984 Pat.L.J.R. 827.

Where patta holders to the knowledge of the authorities had been paying land revenue, local taxes and raising construction on the lands for half a century, held, they are not liable to summary eviction contemplated under the Settlement Rules framed under Regn. 1 of the Assam Land Revenue Regulations; the authorities are even estopped to take summary proceedings against patta holders: A.I.R. 1984 N.O.C. 308: (1984) 1 Gau.L.R. 474 (D.B.).

12. Acquiescence — Construction by tenant.—Oral lease reserving yearly rent—Tenant building permanent structure—Estoppel—T.P. Act, 1882, S. 53-A: A.I.R. 1957 Cal. 635.

Where landlord at no point of time had ever objected to the construction by the tenant in the suit premises and it was all done with the knowledge of the previous landlord and in fact he himself was supervising some of the repairs and alternations, held, it was not open to the landlord and that too after several years, to turn round and say that after allowing the tenant to make all such repairs and alterations and after incurring sufficient expenditure in that behalf, that he should vacate on the ground that he had carried out the repairs without his written consent: A.I.R. 1990 Bom. 182.

If a lessee of land chooses to make unauthorised constructions on the land even though at his own risk and the lessor does not take any action, the latter cannot, on that account, be estopped from challenging the action of the lessee in a suit brought for his ejectments: 1971 All.L.J. 385.

Landlord acquiesced in the construction and use of latrine by tenant on landlord's land for more than 30 years—Landlord is estopped either from claiming possession by demolition or damages from tenant: 1980 All.W.C. 688: (1981) 7 All.L.R. 153.

13. Acquiescence—Construction by stranger.—A person is not justified in keeping silent when he is aware that another person has encroached upon his land and is erecting a costly building. He will be estopped by his conduct from claiming possession of the area encroached upon by demolition of the construction erected thereon: (1939) 41 Punj.L.R. 573: A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 502. See also A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 164; (1941-42) 46 Cal.W.N. 483.

Where the act of building upon the land of another is not bona fide, a plea of estoppel by acquiescence cannot avail: I.L.R. 15 Luck. 689: A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 164. See also 189 I.C. 735: A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 172; I.L.R. 15 Luck. 619.

Where construction was not under a mistake of ownership and the owner of encroached land immediately took steps for stopping the construction, held, principle of acquiescence could not be invoked: 1982 M.P.W.N. 356.

Where nature of the construction made on a portion of trespassed property clearly showed that it must have taken several months to complete the construction and though the owner of the trespassed land resided only about a mile away from the suit property, he raised objection only after completion of construction, held, the principles of acquiescence were applicable. [A.I.R. 1965 Mad. 318, Foll.]: A.I.R. 1981 Mad. 220: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 617: (1981) 1 M.L.J. 258; A.I.R. 1977 Mad. 342: (1977) 90 Mad.L.W. 531.

Conduct—Plaintiff permitting a wooden platform to be placed before his shop—If estopped from objecting to erection of building: A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 900. See also I.L.R. 17 Pat. 358: A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 569.

Acquiescence by inaction—Co-owner allowing building to proceed considerable extent—Acquiescence implied—Position of the other person altered—Party acquiescing is estopped from challenging the actions of such other person—Party wall alleged to be sold alongwith other property: 1961 M.P.L.J. (Notes) 184.

Where the defendant constructed a wall in a passage used as a lane for passing and re-passing by the plaintiff and the plaintiff filed a suit for mandatory injunction 9 years after the construction of said wall but the prayer for removal of wall on the ground that it amounted to encroachment on the passage land was made 4 years after the institution of said suit for injunction, held, the plaintiff being guilty of acquiescence was not entitled to an order of removal of said wall: A.I.R. 1983 S.C. 452: (1983) U.J. (S.C.) 411.

Defendant's standing by actively encouraging plaintiffs in erecting structures after encroachment on public street abutting defendant's land—There may be personal estoppel against defendants claiming right of way (Obiter): I.L.R. (1966) 1 Mad. 550.

Construction of edifice by A with inscription, on land of another—Present of edifice to owner—Effacement of inscription by owner after some years—A, if can claim right to maintain inscription infact as easement—A whether had licence to display its name—Owner, whether estopped by acquiescence from setting up right to efface inscription: 1962 Ker.L.T. 497: A.I.R. 1962 Ker. 312.

Prior transferee allowing subsequent purchaser to build on land—Negligence of prior transferee to take necessary steps to protect himself—Estoppel to assertion of title: I.L.R. 6 Rang. 643: A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 17.

Where the claimant came into possession by trespass on the property illegally, constructed sheds thereon without bringing any material to show acquiescence of the other party or its knowledge about the trespass or its encouraging the claimant in expending money on the construction either directly or by abstaining from asserting its legal rights, held, acquiescence was not established; the trespasser was not entitled to a temporary injunction: A.I.R. 1986 Karn. 77: I.L.R. (1986) Karn. 1130.

Where a person (who purchases land from person having no title to it) in possession of land, not in mistaken belief of his rights but in assertion of his rights which he correctly believed to be his, builds structures on the land and the person who is entitled to possession know of this, the latter is not estopped by acquiescence from bringing a suit for possession when the person in possession, had he exercised care and diligence expected of a man of ordinary prudence, would have easily discovered where the true title lay: A.I.R. 1960 Pat. 474.

14. Acquiescence—In jurisdiction of Court/Tribunal.—Lack of jurisdiction is a point of law apparent on the face of the record, consent and conduct do not confer jurisdiction on any authority. Thus, where for want of any legal assistance, the petitioner did not object to the lack of jurisdiction, held, he could not be estopped under any legal principle from raising that question afterwards: A.I.R. 1982 Guj. 220: (1981) 1 Guj.L.H. 414: (1982-2) 23 Guj.L.R. 19. See also (1971) 1 M.L.J. 181.

Estoppel against a party cannot confer jurisdiction on a Court when it had none: 1931 All.L.J. 715: I.L.R. 54 All. 25: A.I.R. 1931 All. 490 (F.B.).

In a case where there is a total lack of jurisdiction there cannot be any submission to jurisdiction and any acquiescence cannot operate as an estoppel: 1977 Lab.I.C. 1311 (Cal.); 1983 B.B.C.J. 503.

The doctrine of approbate and reprobate or consent or waiver, which would apply to the conduct of parties, is not applicable to the case of a statute or an order passed without jurisdiction; there being a complete lack of jurisdiction no consent or acquiescence can cure the illegality. An order which is not an order of a Court of competent jurisdiction can never be pleaded as an estoppel: I.L.R. 29 Pat. 318: A.I.R. 1950 Pat. 318; A.I.R. 1971 Mad. 368: (1971) 84 Mad.L.W. 134 (D.B.).

It is well settled that jurisdiction does not originate in the consent of the parties and further that where jurisdiction is absent, it cannot be re-established by consent or acquiescence. This being the position, the petitioner in a petition against an order passed in appeal cannot be shut out from getting relief from the Court on the ground that he had acquiesced in the appeal being taken up and decided by the officer, having no jurisdiction: 1975 Lab.I.C. 947: (1975) 1 Serv.L.R. 234: 1974 B.L.J.R. 869. See also (1981) 2 Karn.L.J. (S.N.) 21.

A party may be estopped from raising the question of jurisdiction, but it does not estop the Court: 1958 An.L.T. 774.

Divorce Court—Principle of estoppel—(Case from England)—Estoppels bind the parties but not Court—Principles of res judicata and estoppel—How far are applicable: (1957) 1 All E.R. 161.

Where a Court has jurisdiction to entertain and try a suit and all the defendants submit to its jurisdiction, held, the decree passed by it cannot be said to be a nullity; the parties thereto are estopped from impugning it as such under S. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure: A.I.R. 1982 Cal. 34.

Acquiescence by parties would not confer jurisdiction on any Court or other authority to hear and determine a matter where such Court or authority lacks inherent jurisdiction to hear and determine the same. Thus, where the petitioners did not raise any point questioning the jurisdiction of the Revenue Minister at the time of hearing of revenue petition by him, held, said omission would not prevent them from challenging the order of the Revenue Minister subsequently for want of jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1976 J.&K. 25: 1976 Kash.L.J. 16.

There cannot exist an estoppel against a statute and jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon the Court by the inaction of parties or even by the agreement of parties. If the original agreement intended to confer jurisdiction upon the Court, when it had none, the agreement would be bad, but no estoppel as such would result. Where in first ejectment application filed by the landlord, the tenant failed to question maintainability of application on account of pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court, held, he was not estopped from raising such a plea subsequently: A.I.R. 1983 Bom. 20.

Parties proceeding before Rent Controller on footing that relationship of landlord and tenant existed between them—No objection raised by tenant in his reply or cross-examination in Courts below—Held, tenant was estopped in revision from raising plea that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant: (1981) 94 Mad.L.W. 343.

An estoppel by judgment arises if the controversy has been finally determined by a competent Court. The judgment must be one within its competence. If the decision of the Court is a nullity there can be no basis for raising the plea of estoppel. Thus, where the earlier order of the Controller was not the kind of order envisaged under S. 4 of the East Punjab Urban Rent Registration Act, 1949 and was thus, a nullity as it was made in terms of the statements of the parties and no enquiry at all was held by the Controller as to what should be the fair rent of the building, held, it was open to the petitioner-landlord to ignore the earlier order and apply afresh for fixation of fair rent and the plea of estoppel by judgment or by conduct was not available to the respondent-tenant. [A.I.R. 1958 Bom. 1; (1962) 64 Punj.L.R. 467 and Civ. Rev. No. 648 of 1960, Dt. 6-4-1961 (Punj.), Dissent.]: A.I.R. 1975 Him. Pra. 43 (F.B.).

Civil suit for payment of wages—Employer acquiescing in jurisdiction of civil Court—New point of law that dispute could be entertained by authority under S. 15 of Payment of Wages Act and that jurisdiction of civil Court was absolutely barred under S. 22 raised for first time in revision—Held, that it being a case of intrinsic or basic want of jurisdiction under S. 22 of the Payment of Wages Act, the defect was not curable by acquiescence: 1962 M.P.L.J. 343: A.I.R. 1962 Madh. Pra. 310.

Claim petition under Payment of Wages Act—Authority holding to have jurisdiction to try claim petition—Subsequently, on perusal of certain Notification in view of which authority had no jurisdiction earlier order reviewed—Review being of order passed without jurisdiction, not barred by estoppel: 1979 W.L.N. (U.C.) 14 (Raj.).

Acquiescence—What constitutes—Held, employer had not acquiesced in the jurisdiction of Industrial Tribunal—Employer held not barred by principles of estoppel or res judicata.

Held, on facts, that it could not be argued that the employer's conduct before the Labour Court in the first dispute amounted to any admission that they were engaged in an industry. Nor could any such admission be spelt out of the objection before the City Civil Court which was not concerned to go into the question as to whether there was an industry within the meaning of the Industrial Disputes Act or not. Hence, the employers could not be said to have acquiesced in the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunal. The doctrine of res judicata or any principle analogous thereto did not apply to the facts of the present case. The former awards would no doubt bind the parties thereto within the limits imposed by the Industrial Disputes Act but the same would not be binding for all time to come and it was very much doubtful whether in the absence of a direct finding on this point the parties could be held to be estopped from raising the same afterwards. The first Labour Court never decided the jurisdictional fact, namely, whether the employers carried on an industry or not. It was, therefore, not possible to hold that the former award operated as a bar to the employers objecting to the jurisdiction of the Industrial Tribunal in the present dispute: A.I.R. 1964 Cal. 80.

Where the petitioner himself called for an enquiry with regard to the election of new office-bearers of the Mazdoor Union and submitted to the jurisdiction of the Registrar, Trade Unions, he cannot be allowed to urge that the Registrar, Trade Unions had no jurisdiction to make an enquiry; once he took a chance of getting a favourable order from the Registrar, he was estopped from challenging the jurisdiction if the result of the enquiry happened to be against him: (1962-63) 23 F.J.R. 43: (1963) 1 Lab.L.J. 60: A.I.R. 1962 Pat. 338.

Acquiescence in jurisdiction—Tribunal not having jurisdiction to decide question referred to it—No objection raised as to want of jurisdiction—Petitioner not estopped from raising objection in writ petition: I.L.R. 42 Pat. 661: (1963-64) 24 F.J.R. 325: A.I.R. 1963 Pat. 118.

Where a Joint Director was redesignated under R. 44 of the Rajasthan Minor Mineral Concession Rules, 1977 as the Additional Director without indicating any change in the jurisdiction of the incumbent and the objection as to the lack of jurisdiction was raised later on, held, the party could not be estopped on the ground of the objection not having been taken earlier; waiver or estoppel must be by conscious act and conduct; the party's appearance and acquiescence was in ignorance of the correct position for which it could not be held liable: A.I.R. 1981 Raj. 315: 1981 Raj.L.W. 391.

Interference in revision—Discretion of High Court—Cross suits—Small cause suit and original suit jointly tried by Court having both jurisdictions on its original side at instance of one party and in spite of objection by other—Revision—Party inviting joint trial cannot raise objection as to Court's jurisdiction—No interference if decree is found to be correct: 1962 Ker.L.T. 319: A.I.R. 1963 Ker. 51.

Estoppel—Acquiescence—Statutory reference to arbitration—Reference invalid—No objection to jurisdiction raised—No question of acquiescence or estoppel arises: 1962 All.W.R. (H.C.) 25.

Application for execution of decree—Notice served on judgment-debtors—No objection to jurisdiction raised—Petition dismissed for non-prosecution—Second execution application—Judgment-debtor cannot raise objection to jurisdiction of Court in second application: 1970 Raj.L.W. 217: A.I.R. 1970 Raj. 246.

Departmental enquiry—Acquiescence and submission to jurisdiction of Enquiry Officer without raising any objection—Petitioner cannot be allowed to challenge jurisdiction of Enquiry Officer: A.I.R. 1965 Mys. 283.

Where on the request of the delinquent teacher, a committee of educationists other than the School Committee was constituted to hold an enquiry against the said teacher and he participated in it and raised no objection as to its jurisdiction, held, subsequently, he was estopped from raising objection as to the jurisdiction of said Committee to enquire against him: A.I.R. 1992 S.C. 717.

Acquiescence—Absence of jurisdiction of certification officer—Acquiescence—No ground for refusing relief: 1969 B.L.J.R. 906.

Acquiescence in jurisdiction—Suit filed in Court of Munsif giving jurisdictional valuation according to S. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act — Dismissal of suit in both lower Courts—Held, landlord was estopped from challenging pecuniary jurisdiction of Munsif Court: A.I.R. 1967 Pat. 246.

Objection to jurisdiction not taken before lower Tribunal—High Court has still power to interfere: (1967) 1 M.L.J. 247.

Appellants, submitting to jurisdiction of High Court—They cannot take exception to such jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1968 S.C. 1286.

Acquiescence in jurisdiction—Effect on right to dispute jurisdiction. See (1956) 2 M.L.J. 288: A.I.R. 1956 Mad. 680. See also 1981 All.W.C. 161: (1981) 7 All.L.R. 298.

Where under a contract between the employer and the contractor, it was stipulated that only the Courts at Delhi would have jurisdiction to determine all disputes arising between them but the contractor filed suits elsewhere when dispute arose, but they were no longer pending and there was nothing to show that the employer had changed his position in consequence thereof, held, mere filing of the suits in another place than what was decided did not amount to waiver to estop said party from filing suit at Delhi subsequently: A.I.R. 1975 Del. 123 (D.B.).

Where the insured instituted an application under S. 20 of the Arbitration Act, 1940 at Simla for reference of its dispute with the insurer to arbitration and the insurer contended that only Courts at Chandigarh had jurisdiction to try the application as per the insurance contract as well as under S. 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, held, the insurer was not estopped in the circumstances to contend that the Courts at Simla had no jurisdiction in the matter: A.I.R. 1977 N.O.C. 332: 1977 Sim.L.C. 456.

Where a creditor objected under S. 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 to adjudication proceedings instituted in the Insolvency Court on the ground of want of territorial jurisdiction but did not, though represented by Counsel, press his objection when the debtor was adjudicated as an insolvent, held, the objector had thereby waived his right to raise the objection; he was, thus, precluded from pressing the same objection at the hearing: A.I.R. 1984 Cal. 213: (1984) 1 Cal.H.N. 142: (1983-84) 88 Cal.W.N. 453.

Where the objection regarding territorial jurisdiction of the Bombay Court in a mortgage suit on the ground that the mortgage-land was situated in Bihar was overruled by the Bombay High Court, which order was not set aside in appeal or revision, held, the judgment-debtor could not raise same objection in execution proceedings before the Court in Bihar: A.I.R. 1985 Pat. 98: 1984 B.B.C.J. (H.C.) 849: 1985 Pat.L.J.R. 119 (D.B.).

Objection regarding territorial jurisdiction—Does not go to root of jurisdiction—Validity of decree cannot be challenged on that ground in execution proceedings—Judgment-debtor held estopped from taking that objection in execution: (1961) 2 M.L.J. (S.C.) 157: (1961) 2 An.W.R. (S.C.) 157: A.I.R. 1962 S.C. 199.

When an ex parte decree passed in a petition filed by a wife under Ss. 10 and 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act is set aside in appeal and the case is remanded and the husband, before, the trial Court, contests the petition on merits, raising also an objection as to the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, by not raising such objection in the appeal against the ex parte decree, the husband has neither waived such objection nor submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court.

It is true that the objection as to the territorial jurisdiction of a Court does not stand on the same footing as an objection to the inherent lack of competence of a Court to try a case and an objection to the territorial jurisdiction cannot be allowed unless it has been taken at an earlier opportunity and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice. When an ex parte decree passed in a wife's petition under Ss. 10 and 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act is set aside in appeal and the case is remanded and the husband contests the petition before the trial Court on merits raising also an objection as to the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, the husband cannot be said to have waived the objection as to the jurisdiction of the trial Court merely on the ground that he had not raised it in the appeal against the ex parte decree. He was then merely concerned with having the ex parte decree set aside.

Further, where an inferior Court has no jurisdiction from the beginning, a party by taking a step in a cause does not waive his right to object to the jurisdiction of the Court. When the wife filed her petition under Ss. 10 and 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, the trial Court could have assumed jurisdiction to try it only if any one of the ingredients of S. 19 of the Hindu Marriage Act had been satisfied and failure on the part of the husband to raise an objection to the jurisdiction could not turn the trial Court into a legally constituted one if otherwise it did not possess the requisite jurisdiction. It cannot also be said that the husband should be deemed to have waived the objection as to jurisdiction as he resisted the petition on merits as well. Thus, the husband in such a case has neither waived such objection nor submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court: 1969 Kash.L.J. 90: A.I.R. 1970 J.&K. 19.

Order declaring property as evacuee property is without jurisdiction—Suit for declaration that the order is without jurisdiction not barred by S. 46—There cannot be estoppel against such order without jurisdiction: A.I.R. 1964 Pat. 338.

Where in 1984 the Supreme Court withdrew two criminal trials pending before the Special Judge and transferred them to the High Court for trial by a sitting Judge which was subsequently found to be violative of S. 7(2) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1952 and Arts. 14 and 21 of the Constitution of India, held, the Supreme Court recalled that order [published in A.I.R. 1984 S.C. 684] ex debito justitiae as no suitor should suffer for the Court's wrong; no Court, however high, has the power to give an order unwarranted by the Constitution: A.I.R. 1988 S.C. 1531: (1989-1) 37 B.L.J.R. (N.O.C.) 19: (1988) 2 S.C.C. 602.

Suit filed in revenue Court prior to Act transferred to civil Court at instance of defendant after Act came into force—Suit exclusively triable by revenue Court—Defendant not estopped from contending that suit is not triable by civil Court because there is no estoppel against statute and parties cannot by consent confer jurisdiction on Court when there is none—Question of jurisdiction must be decided in accordance with provisions of the Act: 1963 Raj.LW. 284.

Where the Minister for Forests had manifestly exercised the powers of the "Jagir Administrator" fully knowing that he had no power or competence to determine the claim of an ex-jagirdar of an abolished jagir, held, even though it is dangerous to allow the State to contend, where it finds convenient to, that its own laws, rules, regulations or orders are invalid, the Court's have nevertheless to determine the contention; the plea of estoppel is, thus, not available against the State's order which is without jurisdiction and illegal: (1972) 1 An.W.R. 170 (D.B.).

There is an estoppel against a plaintiff, who himself institutes a suit in the Small Cause Court although the allegations in the plaint clearly make out an offence punishable under Chap. 17, Penal Code within the meaning of Art. 35 (ii) of Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, excluding the suit from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Courts Act, if the judgment goes against him, from contesting in revision that the Court was acting without jurisdiction in entertaining and deciding his plaint. The parties cannot by consent or by course of conduct or by action or inaction create jurisdiction in a Court where there is none under the law. A decree, order of judgment by a Court in such set of circumstances would be the doctrine of blowing hot and cold cannot cover a case where a Court is asked to decide a point over which it has no jurisdiction. No doubt Court acts on the invitation of the plaintiff but it has
